Q. 1444. So that he is hardly a person who can be supposed to act subordinate to the Magistrate?—(A.) As far as I at present can recollect he exercises extraordinary powers. I presume they are permitted. My belief is that a Superintendent often takes upon himself, at a station house, to hear evidence, of course not upon oath, to go into the case, and to discharge if he thinks fit, and in that event it is never known to the Magistrate what becomes of it, or that such a charge was ever brought in; the Magistrates receive the charges upon a sheet that ought to be signed by the parties making them; those charges, I should say, ought to be entered as the persons come in in succession; but still, the Magistrate never knows, and cannot know, what charges are brought into the station house, and what are discharged; the whole of it rests with the officers at the station house, so that the Commissioners themselves even may be uninformed; that sheet may or may not be written at the time. I have paid much attention to that particular point, but I cannot now make out when the sheet is written, and for this reason the sheet is numbered, say, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. I sometimes find No. 1 a charge of felony; No. 2, another charge of felony; No. 3, a person drunk; and then No. 4, a charge of felony, whence I infer it could not be written in at the time of the charges being made, because as the Superintendent has the power of discharging drunken persons, and, as I understand, he comes at a certain time in the morning and lets them go according to his judgment, if the sheet was written as the charges were taken, it could not be known at the time whether the charge that may stand No. 3, drunk, was one destined to come before the Magistrate or to be decided by the Superintendent. This has always puzzled me, but I have felt a delicacy in interfering or asking any questions where they might not be well received, and I have never been able to ascertain how it is, but my strong impression is that the sheet in many instances is not made out when the charges come in. A great many of the charges are nominally only felonies, and which perhaps the inspector would be authorised in discharging, but in many cases I should be of opinion he has exercised too great an authority. I also see he exercises the power of fining his men, although one constable cannot fine another.

Q. 1445.—The Superintendent is only authorised to discharge in cases of drunkenness?—(A.) I never saw the regulations.

Q. 1446.—Have you heard of any cases of felonies or serious offences in which the Superintendent has taken upon himself to discharge?—(A.) I am placed before the Committee in a most unpleasant situation. I hope they feel that I am not a person to come forward to bring charges or make complaints with any ungracious view, and what I state is from its being my duty to communicate what I observe. My impression certainly is that the Superintendents and Inspectors do very extraordinary things.

Q. 1447.—Are you aware whether any representations have been made of those cases to the Secretary of State?—(A.) Though very little communication was made to any of the Police Magistrates at the institution of the corps, and it was established without any intercourse of any sort or kind, I believe none of us would feel it agreeable to make complaints.

Q. 1454.—In the return that the Committee have of the number of persons taken into custody by the Metropolitan Police, it appears that the persons discharged by the Superintendent are drunken persons only?—(A.) I see it so in the printed statement.

Q. 1455.—There is no return of any persons discharged by the Superintendent without the intervention of Magistrates, except drunken persons; is it your impression there are certain persons whose cases are inquired into by the Superintendent and are discharged?—(A.) It is. I apprehend that those persons who are returned as discharged, having been drunk, are within the knowledge of the Commissioners; but my impression is that persons are taken to the station houses that never come to the knowledge of the Commissioners.

Q. 1456.—Here is a return of 77,543 persons apprehended and 22,702 discharged by the Superintendents as drunken persons, and all the remainder appear to have been accounted for as having been carried before a Magistrate and discharged legally; your impression is that a larger number than 77,543 have been apprehended, of which the Commissioners know nothing?—(A.) Yes, it is; that cases have been investigated by the Superintendent or Inspectors, and discharged.

Q. 1457.—Do you imagine that there are a number more persons apprehended than those that the Commissioners are aware of?—(A.) Yes, I do imagine that such things occur.

Q. 1458.—Is not that rather inconsistent with that strictness of discipline you suppose to exist in the police force, that such things should take place as that a man should be apprehended without it being communicated by the Inspector or Superintendent?—(A.) It is my impression that that very system of discipline confirms the possibility of the thing; it is impossible for the Commissioners to see the inferiors of the corps; the Superintendent, I assume, has access to them, and the subordinate officer coming to make such a complaint against a Superintendent, though the Commissioners would, I am sure, be ready to investigate it, has a bad chance, and my impression is, that it would end, in a very few months, in his leaving the corps.

Q. 1545.—Suppose such jealousy hereafter to exist, have you at all turned in your mind what would be the proper and advantageous limits to which to apply the Metropolitan Police; whether to the full extent of the duties that they now take upon themselves, or to assume other duties, or to limit them in the execution of a portion only of the duties that they now undertake?—(A.) I have been speaking without any contemplation of a change being made in the duty performed by the Metropolitan Police; the present question involves so much that, not having prepared any suggestions to that extent, I could only offer a very imperfect outline of what might be considered a very great alteration, but which I should think would be one tending to the safety of the public, and more likely to lead to the detection of offences. I hold it very essential that there should be some person in the different station houses not connected with the Metropolitan Police Force, who should receive the charges brought there; it would operate as a great check to any possibility of misconduct or mischief there; that officer should be under the direction of the Magistrates exclusively, and responsible to them. In order to have such a description of men, a number of constables, say 20, should be attached to each police office, making, with the present numbers, from 28 to 36; the present pay of the constable is 25s. per week; it should be made 35s. per week, which is about £90 a year, and something less than the Inspector of Metropolitan Police, but they would have other advantages; all these men should be selected, and their vacancies filled up from the Metropolitan Police on every ground, and more particularly as it would tend to prevent jealousy on the point I am about to mention respecting the inquiry into robbery, as every man in the corps might hope by his activity and intelligence to be promoted to such an appointment. The duties of these men should be, that one of them in turn should sit night and day at each station house in the district of the office to which they belonged, that he should take all the charges, and attend before the Magistrate at the hearing of them. That it being laid down as a rigid order, that every felony reported at the station house or known by any Metropolitan Police constable, should be immediately reported to the police office of the district. One of them should, immediately on such communication being made, without application by any person, and without reference to condition of life, or means of rewarding, proceed to inquire into it, and use every effort to discover the perpetrator; and whatever might be the result, report what steps were taken to the Magistrate. That he should ask for no remuneration, though there would be no doubt that activity would frequently ensure it from people whose means did not make it an object. The result of this would be, at all events, that every robbery which occurred in the Metropolis, and of which any information was given anywhere, would be attended to, which has never yet been attempted by any system of police. That all other matters of the ordinary duty of constables attached to the Magistrates would be also performed by these men. This plan would enable the Metropolitan Police Force to be more confined to that species of service for which I think so numerous a body, organised as it is, is best calculated, and which they are certainly found to perform exceedingly well, viz., the duties of watching, prevention, preservation of the peace, maintenance of good order in the town, and everything connected with outdoor and street duty, while they would be relieved from following up the more intricate cases and crimes, not falling necessarily into their hands while in the execution of their duty; which, as I have previously observed, I do not think the organisation of the corps permits their being so well qualified.

Q. 1550.—You think it of great importance that the person who receives the charges at the station house should be independent of the control of the Commissioners?—(A.) Of the greatest, that he should be under the Magistrate.

Q. 1551.—Might it not, then, if that system was adopted, be unnecessary to have the same number of Inspectors for the performance of those duties which you would take from the inspectors and give to the men so appointed under the Magistrates?—(A.) Except that I feel a delicacy in making any suggestion upon a corps that I have no business to meddle with, I should say, I should do away with all the Superintendents, and I should do away with some of the Inspectors.

Q. 1552.—With reference to taking the charges, would not the Inspector then be an unnecessary officer?—(A.) I think there should be somebody to check the officer on the Magistrate's side; I do not like either side being without a check. They have four Inspectors at present; perhaps you might reduce one in a division; the Superintendents I should certainly reduce. I should have in their place four or five migratory Superintendents, who should go about to the different divisions; and I should permit none of that discharging of drunken persons without bringing them before the Magistrates, which I see by the return amounts to 25,700; I think it is a much safer thing to have the person who has been taken up drunk brought before the magistrates than before the constables, where it is possible he may give half-a-crown or 5s. and thus get off.

(Evidence of R. E. Broughton, Esq., Police Magistrate.)

Q. 1660.—Generally speaking, what do you find to be the conduct of the Metropolitan Police, first, with respect to their conduct as individuals?—(A.) As individuals, we find them temperate and their conduct good. I have seen instances where there have been cases of assaults and a great deal of violence, but not many; and in those cases we have always tried the case at once, and disposed of it; and frequently complaints have been made against them, which have proved groundless; but certainly the demeanour of the men individually is satisfactory, and intelligent generally.

Q. 1661.—With regard to their conduct at the station-houses, is the mode in which they carry on their business there such as is satisfactory to you; and do you think that the Superintendents discharge their duties with correctness in those stations?—(A.) I think there is one practice which appears of very considerable importance, upon which I have had some conversation with the Commissioners themselves, and also with the Under Secretary of State; it is a question which appears to me very materially to involve the administration of justice. A practice has lately been introduced among them of suffering an Inspector or sergeant, or even an inferior officer, to examine witnesses and occasionally to take the responsibility of discharging persons given into custody. It being perfectly new, and having led to inconvenience in many instances, I took an opportunity of talking the matter over with the Commissioners, Mr. Mayne and Colonel Rowan, and I learnt from them that they had introduced the practice lately; that when introduced it was objected to by Lord Melbourne and by Mr. Phillips; but they, thinking it was a wholesome practice, persevered, and at last it was consented to by the Secretary of State.

Now, I have seen several instances in which great inconvenience has arisen, and it is a practice, in my opinion, which opens a door to serious consequences, and I stated to the Commissioners. It has always appeared to me that if an inferior officer, such as an Inspector or an acting sergeant, or a Superintendent, a man perhaps raised from the ranks, have any discretionary power, as to discharging a man once taken into custody, without bringing him before a Magistrate, it may lead to very great abuses. I pointed out to the Commissioners, that with such an extended circle as they had to act upon, with such a dense population, pretty nearly equal to the whole Kingdom of Holland, even if they had eyes like Argus, they could not see what is going on in every point, but must depend, in great measure, upon their inferior officers for information. A. and B. may give very fair reports, but other persons may be appointed, who may not do so; therefore it appeared to me that a great door to abuse would be opened, if an officer took upon himself the responsibility of discharging prisoners without going before a Magistrate, because the real ground of discharge may never be known. All cases that come before us are known, and publicly inquired into; but of the persons that are taken into custody and discharged without coming before us, it is otherwise. But it appears to me only one part of the inconvenience. I have always found that another very considerable inconvenience arises from the practice, as connected with the administration of justice, and the subject has been mentioned by some of the authorities of the Mint, who say that they have found men discharged who never ought to have been discharged at all, without being brought before a Magistrate. I will just mention a Mint case, which will throw some little light upon the point. I was examining into a case connected with the Mint, in which a child of very tender years had to give evidence. I examined the child, and asked the usual questions as to the child's knowledge of a future state, and then I administered the oath and examined the child, and upon her evidence I was going to commit the man for trial. He was a very dexterous person, and he waited very patiently. As soon as it was over, he said, "Your Worship, that child has given you a very different account from what she did when this was tried before." I was a little astonished, and I said, "What do you mean by being tried before?" Upon which the mother stepped forward and said, "Your Worship, this whole case has been investigated at the station house." "One of the constables," she said, "came and took the child out of bed at two o'clock in the morning, out of its sleep, and examined the child, and asked the child a great many questions, and other witnesses were examined at a late hour of the night at the station house." I was a good deal astonished at this, but the man proved, by cross-examination of the child and other witnesses, that she had given a different account before. The mother explained it, and I have no doubt that the correct account was the one given when the child came before me, but there was such a variation in the two accounts given by the child that I did not send the man for trial, and I sent for the Inspector (I think it was), and pointed out the impropriety of the conduct pursued.

Q. 1662.—Have you subsequently made any communication of that to the Commissioners?—(A.) I forget whether it was a sergeant or an Inspector that had made the investigation, but I sent for him, and pointed out the impropriety of what he had done; but, as I said, I was bound to give the man the benefit of this variance, because a jury would of course have done so.

Q. 1663.—Did the officer at the station house acknowledge the fact of his having so done?—(A.) He acknowledged that he did so, and he said he had done it as part of his duty; it is now, I understand, a part of the system.

Q. 1664. Did you ascertain whether this person was entered in the book of charges?—(A.) He was entered in the book of charges.

Q. 1665.—Has this case ever come to the knowledge of the Commissioners?—(A.) I mentioned this, amongst other cases, to the Commissioners, but as the Commissioners are distinct from us in a certain degree, one feels some difficulty in doing anything that may savour of a complaint, and therefore I have rather mentioned it to them in the way of a friendly intimation than in the way of complaint.

Q. 1666. How long ago was it that this occurred?—(A.) It occurred some months ago, and I discharged the man, and it was upon mentioning that discharge to one of the authorities of the Mint that he said this is carried to a great extent, and that the Inspectors often discharge cases that ought to be brought before a Magistrate. I told the Commissioners at the time, if you give a sanction to a practice of this description, how can you tell but what men would be corrupt and take a bribe, and say this is not a proper case to bring before a Magistrate?

Q. 1667.—Can you state any case in which a prisoner was discharged by the police without being brought before a Magistrate?—(A.) There was a case, which was one of those ordinary cases of robberies, in which a prostitute was prowling about the streets, with her man lurking in a corner to be ready to assist her. She meets exactly the very person she wants, which is an old gentleman; she makes up to him, flattering him by making love to him, and doing acts of indecency; and in the midst of all this she snatches his watch from his pocket and attempts to escape. Finding that he was tricked, he seized fast hold of her, and called out, "Police, police!" "Murder!" as loud as he could. She instantly called out, "Jem, Jem!" Jem was close at hand, and instantly stepped in and knocked the old gentleman down upon the ground, upon which the girl and Jem both escaped with the watch, but fortunately he had called "Police" loud enough to bring a police officer and, I think, a watchman to the spot. The girl and the man were both caught, and conducted to the station house, with the usual train of idle people that follow in such cases. At the station house the Inspector, at a late hour of the night, went into an investigation of the matter, as though he had been a Magistrate, hearing evidence upon the subject, and he said that Jem's offence was not a felony, and he discharged him. When it came before me in the morning the old gentleman complained that the man was discharged out of custody. I at once said that it was wrong, and I called upon the Inspector to give some account why he discharged him. He told me that he thought the woman was the person to bring, and not the man. I told him that he had no responsibility in it whatever beyond detaining the prisoners; that the police officers had done extremely well in taking both, and that their duty had ended, beyond that of bringing the case before a Magistrate, and I added that "I must request that you will immediately send out some of your men and let this Jem be retaken." He was a notorious thief, well known; in two or three cases Jem was retaken, and brought before me. I then went into the whole case, and committed them both to Newgate for a highway robbery, and I believe they were both convicted. That case I also mentioned to the Commissioners.

Q. 1668.—Do you conceive that this practice on the part of the police is likely to produce inconvenience, or otherwise?—(A.) The number of cases discharged at the station houses is very great; last year the drunken cases exceed 25,000, which is about 2,000 more than it was the year before. My own opinion is that this practice opens a door to abuse, and my opinion has always been that if a man is really taken into custody, the safe course to prevent abuse is that there shall be no person that shall be considered responsible for discharging him but a Magistrate in a public office, after a public investigation.

Q. 1669.—Do you think that the addition of so great a number as 25,000 cases to the duties discharged by the Magistrates would produce material inconvenience to them?—(A.) I should think of those 25,000 persons a great many must be persons who never could be said to be taken into custody. Now, in cases where they have done nothing, but are merely picked up, to prevent their being injured, then I should say the constable ought to pass them on towards their homes, if they can find them, and not to consider them in custody.

Q. 1670.—Would not the same inconvenience that you have just described, though in a minor degree, attend the release of any persons brought into a station house in a state of drunkenness?—(A.) I think it would; I think if they were actually carried to the station house, and remained there all night, they should be carried before a Magistrate; but I was alluding to cases where persons are picked up drunk, and where they need not be taken to a station house at all, if they can be passed on.

Q. 1671.—Would it not be necessary that every person brought into a station house by the police, should be carried before a Magistrate before he was discharged?—(A.) It was always the practice, and, in my opinion, it is the safest course.

Q. 1672.—By the Act of Parliament have they not the power of bailing persons in custody?—(A.) They have the power of bailing in all petty misdemeanors; but they do not bail when persons are taken very drunk.

(Evidence of W. A. A. White, Esq., Police Magistrate.)

Q. 1812.—Then with reference to the Metropolitan Police, is there any alteration you think desirable as to them?—(A.) No; I really do not know much of the constitution of them, and therefore I cannot point out alterations. I think it is a good police. I think they are a little over-zealous, and there will be some of the individuals among them, as there must be, that will misconduct themselves, as in the old establishment of watchmen, and therefore that observation does not apply to the force, but to the individuals.

Q. 1813.—Do you think these inconveniences are less than under the old system?—(A.) I am sorry to say I do not think they are.

Q. 1814.—Have you heard of instances of misconduct in the police as frequently as under the old system?—(A.) I have heard of them giving way to their own passions, and taking up people who ought to be left at liberty.

Q. 1815.—Have you reported those instances?—(A.) Yes, where the parties required it, I have; but I do not know what has been done upon it, nor do I know what they can do.

Q. 1816.—Have they not the power of discharging the men?—(A.) Yes, they have.

Q. 1817.—Would you recommend a greater power to be given to the Commissioners?—(A.) No, I do not know that I should; they might have a greater power, but it is no compensation to an individual injured that a man is turned away.

Q. 1818.—Are police constables liable to actions from false imprisonment and assaults?—(A.) Yes; but what damages could a police constable give to a man so imprisoned, or what kind of action could a poor labourer, who has been locked up all night and got his head broken, bring against the police?

Q. 1819.—Would not that apply to any system of police?—(A.) I have said so.

Q. 1820.—You are not aware of any system free from that objection?—(A.) No.

Q. 1821.—Do you not think there is more security afforded to person and property than under the old system?—(A.) Yes, I think so.

Q. 1822.—And greater security to persons generally?—(A.) Yes, to some kind of persons, not to all; I think there is no security to the poor, because I think they are very much ill-treated by the police. I have had many cases of ascertaining that; and yesterday morning a man was brought before me, whom it was stated by the police officer that he had taken the night before to the police office at the man's own request. He saw him looking at two girls that were fighting, and he took him to the station house, and was afterwards willing to let him go, but the man insisted upon staying. When I asked the man what he had got to say, he said, "So far from going at my own request, the man fastened my arms behind me, and punched me on with his knee, and compelled me to go; and when I was there, though a housekeeper offered to bail me, they would not let me go."

(Evidence of H. M. Dyer, Esq., Police Magistrate.)

Q. 1917.—Have you had much opportunity of seeing the conduct of the Metropolitan Police since their institution?—(A.) I have.

Q. 1918.—What is your opinion of their general conduct?—(A.) I think it has proved itself a valuable institution for the public service, and that their conduct, taken altogether, has been extremely good; there may be occasional exceptions of individuals, but I have been led to observe that, considering the shortness of time since the corps has been established, it is remarkable how well they have conducted themselves.

Q. 1919.—As compared with the old force of watchmen and street-keepers, do you think it is an improvement upon the police of the metropolis?—(A.) I think that cannot admit of a question; it has been a decided improvement.

Q. 1923.—Have you heard any complaints made against the police for discharging persons from their station-houses, that they ought to have carried before magistrates?—(A.) I have heard such things said, but no authentic complaint has been made. I have heard it spoken of in one or two instances, but without my being aware if it was correct. With regard to persons taken up for drunkenness, it is distinctly avowed that many are discharged at the stations without being brought before the Magistrates. I have some doubt about the legality of this proceeding.

Q. 1924.—Supposing it to be strictly legal that they should do so, do you think it a wholesome power to allow them to exercise?—(A.) No; I disagree as to the advantage of the Inspectors having that power, because, though I admit the selection of them to be exceedingly good in the cases I have seen, I do not think them altogether the class of person to whom such a discretion should be confided.

Q. 1925.—You are aware that the number of persons they avow to have discharged without the intervention of a Magistrate is about 25,000 last year?—(A.) Yes, it is very large.

Q. 1926.—Do you think, if it was necessary they should bring up those persons to the office before a Magistrate, that the increase of business would be attended with inconvenience?—(A.) The increase would be very great, and any increase would, of course, be inconvenient by enlarging our labours; and therefore it is evident I speak from no personal feeling, but upon constitutional grounds.

Q. 1928.—Does not the power of the police to discharge in cases of drunkenness, open a door to the corrupt exercise of such power in the discharge of cases that ought to have been brought before the justices?—(A.) I think there is a chance that it may; but I am quite sure, if it really does not, it at least lays the police open to the imputation of possible corruption.

Q. 1929.—Supposing a policeman to have acted improperly, not criminally, in the execution of his duty, and that fact came to your knowledge, what would be your course, supposing him to have used violence in the apprehension of a person beyond the due degree?—(A.) Our common course has been to represent the misconduct to the Commissioners.

Q. 1930.—Do you frequently do it?—(A.) We have had but few occasions.

Q. 1931.—If the occasion required it, you would invariably do it?—(A.) Certainly; or we may take upon ourselves to apply the law at once; if a policeman commits an assault, he is amenable to the law as another man.

Q. 1932.—Have you ever taken upon yourself so to administer the law?—(A.) At the present moment I have no recollection of having done so, except where the Commissioners have requested us to investigate.

Q. 1933.—Have you had occasion to make representations to the Commissioners of the misconduct of the men?—(A.) Yes, we have.

Q. 1934.—What has been the consequence?—(A.) I think we have commonly found the Commissioners ready to punish the offenders.

Q. 1935.—You have not thought it necessary in such a case to substantiate the representation by sending the parties preferring the charge against the policemen to the Commissioners?—(A.) There are cases in which we have recommended the parties complaining to go before the Commissioners, and we have made a memorandum in the column of the daily paper brought to us, of our doing so.

Q. 1936. In cases where you have not thought it necessary to send the parties to the Commissioners, have you found that they attended to your intimation?—(A.) The cases have been very few, but as far as I have any recollection of such few as have occurred, I think they have commonly done so.

Q. 1937.—Do you find that the making of representations of that sort produces any considerable addition to the labours of your office?—(A.) No; for from the very reason which I have stated, of our having had few occasions to make them, it follows that it has not added much to our labours.

Q. 1938.—In what way do you make the representation?—(A.) If it was anything very serious we should write to the Commissioners; if not, we should send a communication through the principal officer in attendance, and make a memorandum in one of the columns of the charge-sheet, which is left on purpose for the observations of the Magistrates, if they think fit to make any.

CHAPTER 6

An Act to facilitate the proceedings of the Commissioners appointed to hold an Inquiry respecting the Duties of the Metropolitan Police in dealing with cases of Drunkenness, Disorder, and Solicitation in the Streets. A.D. 1906

[22nd June, 1906]

WHEREAS a Commission has been issued by His Majesty whereby the Right Honourable Alfred Lyttelton, K.C., Willoughby Hyett Dickinson, Esquire, M.P., Rufus Daniel Isaacs, Esquire, K.C., M.P., David Brynmor Jones, Esquire, K.C., M.P., and Charles Algernon Whitmore, Esquire (herein-after referred to as "the Commissioners"), have been authorised and directed to inquire into and report upon the duties of the Metropolitan Police in dealing with cases of drunkenness, disorder, and solicitation in the streets, and the manner in which those duties are discharged with power to make recommendations thereon:

And whereas it is desirable to make provision for the more effective conduct by the Commissioners of any inquiry which they may be authorised to make:

Be it therefore enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

Powers of Commissioners.

1.—(1) The Commissioners shall have all such powers, rights, and privileges as are vested in the High Court, or in any judge thereof, on the occasion of any action, in respect of the following matters:—

(i) The enforcing the attendance of witnesses and examining them on oath, affirmation, or otherwise; and

(ii) The compelling the production of documents; and

(iii) The punishing persons guilty of contempt;

and a summons signed by one or more of the Commissioners may be substituted for and shall be equivalent to any formal process capable of being issued in any action for enforcing the attendance of witnesses and compelling the production of documents.

(2) A warrant of committal to prison issued for the purpose of enforcing the powers conferred by this section shall be signed by one or more of the Commissioners, and shall specify the prison to which the offender is to be committed, but shall not authorise the imprisonment of an offender for a period exceeding three months.

(3) Every person who on examination on oath or affirmation before the Commissioners wilfully gives false evidence shall be liable to the penalties for perjury.

(4) Any person may appear before the Commissioners by counsel or solicitor, if authorised to do so by the Commissioners.

Indemnity to witnesses.

2.—(1) A person examined as a witness by the Commissioners shall not be excused from answering any question put to him, or from producing any document, on the ground that the answer thereto or production thereof may criminate or tend to criminate him.

(2) Every person examined as a witness, who, in the opinion of the Commissioners, makes a full and true disclosure touching all the matters in respect of which he is examined, shall be entitled to receive a certificate signed by the Commissioners, stating that the witness has, on his examination, made a full and true disclosure as aforesaid.

A.D. 1906.

(3) If any criminal proceeding is at any time thereafter instituted against any such witness in respect of any matter touching which he has been so examined, the court having cognizance of the case shall, on his application, and on proof of the certificate, stay the proceeding.

(4) Nothing in this section shall apply to the case of proceedings for having given false evidence before the Commissioners, or of having procured, or attempted or conspired to procure, the giving of such evidence.

Short Title.

3. This Act may be cited as the Metropolitan Police (Commission) Act, 1906.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE THE ROYAL COMMISSION

UPON THE

DUTIES OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE

WITH REGARD TO

CASES OF DRUNKENNESS,

DISORDER AND SOLICITATION IN THE STREETS.

FIRST DAY.

Tuesday, 17th July 1906.

PRESENT:

Sir DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, K.C., M.P. (Chairman).
RUFUS DANIEL ISAACS, Esq., K.C., M.P.
WILLOUGHBY HYETT DICKINSON, Esq., M.P. (Barrister-at-Law).
CHARLES ALGERNON WHITMORE, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law).
J. W. ST. LAWRANCE LESLIE, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law), Secretary.

The Secretary read the Royal Commissions.

(Chairman.) The Commission thinks it will be desirable that the following statements as to its method of procedure and conduct of the Inquiry should be made. We have decided for the present to sit and take evidence in public. We feel, however, having regard to the nature of some of the cases into which it may be necessary to inquire, that possibly persons may be reluctant to come forward and give evidence, and accordingly we shall, if, in our opinion, it should become necessary or expedient, take evidence in private. We shall upon application allow any person directly interested in the Inquiry to appear by counsel or solicitor, but as we have to conduct an inquiry and not to decide questions between litigating parties, we shall examine the witnesses ourselves. If, however, as the Inquiry proceeds, there should arise a direct conflict of testimony between two or more witnesses, and it becomes necessary for us to decide which of two or more persons are to be believed, we will consider any application for leave to examine or cross-examine witnesses by counsel or solicitor on its merits when it arises. It will be observed that the scope of our Inquiry is limited to investigating the duties of the police in regard to three classes of cases—namely, cases of drunkeness, cases of disorder, and cases of solicitation in the streets, and the manner in which those duties are discharged. We are anxious to have the fullest information concerning these matters, and shall be glad if any person wishing to give evidence before us or to supply us with information will communicate with Mr. John Leslie, the Secretary of the Commission, at 31, Great George Street, Westminster.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes, K.C.) I do not know, Sir, whether I may be allowed to state that I am instructed with my learned friend Mr. Muir on behalf of the Commissioners of Police, and I desire to say at the outset our instructions are to give you and your colleagues any assistance in any matter, and it is the desire of the Commissioners to bring forward any information which you may desire them to bring forward, and which it is within their power to bring forward. May I make this one request that in the event of any charge being made against any member or officer, the Commissioners should have a reasonable opportunity of investigating the circumstances before they should be called upon to deal with it?

(Chairman.) You have heard the statement that I have made, and, of course, upon the application, then we shall allow you and Mr. Muir to appear as counsel for the Police Commissioners.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes, K.C.) I am much obliged to you, Sir.

(Chairman.) And as to any particular charge against any particular constable due notice will be given to the Commissioners of Police of the day upon which we shall take evidence with regard to the cases.

Sir EDWARD RICHARD HENRY sworn.

Sir E. R. Henry.
17 July 1906.

1. (Chairman.) You are the Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police?—I am.

2. How long have you occupied that office?—I have been Chief Commissioner for the last three years and four months.

3. I understand that you are willing to give us general evidence to-day as to the duties of the Metropolitan Police in regard to the matters covered by our Inquiry, and as to the manner in which those duties are discharged?—Yes.

4. The classes of cases coming within the scope of the Inquiry are solicitation in the streets, drunkenness in the streets, and disorder in the streets. Take solicitation first. Will you give us information as to what the existing law is as to these cases?—Solicitation is provided for under two statutes. Section 54 of the Metropolitan Police Act of 1839, 2 and 3 Victoria, cap. 47, enacts that: "Every person shall be liable to a penalty not more than forty shillings, who, within the limits of the Metropolitan Police district, shall, in any thoroughfare or public place, commit any of the following offences, that is to say," and then in Clause 11 it is provided "Every common prostitute or night-walker, loitering or being in any thoroughfare or public place for the purpose of prostitution or solicitation, to the annoyance of the inhabitants or passengers," and "It shall be lawful for any constable belonging to the Metropolitan Police force to take into custody without warrant any person who shall commit any such offence within view of any such constable." Then the Vagrancy Act of 24 George IV., cap. 83, Sections 3 and 4. Section 3 provides: "Every common prostitute wandering in the public streets or public highways, or in any place of public resort, and behaving in a riotous or indecent manner, shall be deemed an idle and disorderly person within the true meaning and intent of this Act; and it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace to commit such offender (being thereof convicted before him by his own view, or by the confession of such offender, or by the evidence on oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses) to the house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding one calendar month." Then Section 4 recites that: "Every person committing any of the offences hereinbefore mentioned and having been convicted as an idle and disorderly person" shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond within the true intent and meaning of this Act, the punishment being imprisonment with hard labour not exceeding three calendar months. With regard to these sections it will be observed that there is one common feature, the woman amenable to them must be a common prostitute. In addition, the Police Act requires proof of being in a thoroughfare or public place for the purpose of prostitution or solicitation to the annoyance of the inhabitants or passengers to constitute an offence, while the Vagrancy Act requires that the prostitute must behave in a riotous or indecent manner before she can be charged. Solicitation in the streets by persons not known to be or believed by the police to be prostitutes must, as a rule, be dealt with, if it becomes necessary to take action, under the provisions of Section 64 according to the special provisions—that is to say, they are proceeded against for disorderly conduct.

Sir E. R. Henry.

17 July 1906.

5. Which Act are you referring to now?—The Police Act of 1839, 2 and 3 Victoria, cap. 47. Clause 13 says: "Every person who shall use any threatening, abusive, or insulting words or behaviour, with intent to provoke a breach of the peace, or whereby a breach of the peace may be occasioned." And Clause 12 says: "Every person who shall sell or distribute or offer for sale or distribution, or exhibit to public view, any profane, indecent, or obscene book, paper, print, drawing, painting, or representation, or sing any profane, indecent or obscene song or ballad or write or draw any indecent or obscene word, figure, or representation, or use any profane, indecent, or obscene language, to the annoyance of the inhabitants or passengers." Section 64 of the same Act recites: "That it shall be lawful for any constable belonging to the Metropolitan Police to take into custody, without a warrant, all loose, idle, and disorderly persons whom he shall find disturbing the public peace or whom he shall have good cause to suspect of having committed or being about to commit any felony, misdemeanour, or breach of the peace, and all persons whom he shall find between sunset and the hour of eight in the morning lying or loitering in the highway, yard, or other place, and not giving a satisfactory account of themselves." Should there be any use of indecent or obscene language there is no difficulty in proceeding under Section 54, Clause 12, but it will be observed that the actual occurrence or the possible occurrence of a breach of the peace must be testified to or assumed under Section 54, Clause 13, or under Section 64; while proceedings under the latter section are further complicated by the introduction of the words "loose, idle, and disorderly persons," particularly when it is sought to apply those words to a person not known to be a prostitute. These, however, are the only statutory powers given to the police with which to undertake the difficult and delicate task of keeping the streets moderately under control in respect of solicitation.

6. Will you give us the law with regard to drunkenness in the streets so far as it affects your duties?—The law with regard to drunkenness in the streets is laid down by the Police Act of 1839, Section 58, which reads: "That every person who shall be found drunk in any street or public thoroughfare within the said district, and who while drunk shall be guilty of any riotous or indecent behaviour, and also every person who shall be guilty of any violent or indecent behaviour in any police station house, shall be liable to a penalty of not more than forty shillings for every such offence, or may be committed, if the magistrate before whom he shall be convicted shall think fit, instead of inflicting on him any pecuniary penalty, to the House of Correction for any time not more than seven days." Secondly, the Licensing Act, 1872, 35 and 36 Victoria, Cap. 94, Section 4, which extends the power of the earlier Act to persons who while not necessarily disorderly are incapable of taking care of themselves, or who may be a source of danger to others. Section 12 is as follows: "Every person found drunk in any highway or other public place, whether a building or not, or on any licensed premises, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding ten shillings, and on a second conviction within a period of twelve months shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 20s., and on a third or subsequent conviction within such period of twelve months to be liable to a penalty not exceeding 40s. Every person who in any highway or other public place, whether a building or not, is guilty while drunk of riotous or disorderly behaviour, or who is drunk while in charge on any highway or other public place of any carriage, horse, cattle, or steam engine, or who is drunk when in possession of any loaded firearms, may be apprehended, and shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 40s., or in the discretion of the Court to imprisonment with or without hard labour for any term not exceeding one month. Where the Court commits any person to prison for non-payment of any penalty under this section the Court may order him to be imprisoned with hard labour." The first quoted section it will be noted gives no power to apprehend any person incapably drunk. It was always the custom, however, for the police to take the charge of him for his own protection, releasing him on his own recognisances when sober. The Licensing Act, 1902, made two changes in respect of drunkenness in the street, since in Section 1 provision is made for the first time for the apprehension of a person drunk and incapable of taking care of himself, and it provides also for the apprehension of a person found drunk while in charge of a child under the age of seven.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Sir Edward ought to give the reference to the Act of 1902—2nd Edward VII., Chapter 28—and the sections to which he referred are Section 1 and Section 2.

7. (Chairman.) Now as to disorder in the streets?—This heading covers a multitude of offences, all affecting more or less seriously the amenities of life in a great city, and many specific offences are dealt with by special enactments, by bye-laws and rules. The principal Act under which general disorder is dealt with, however, is the Police Act of 1829, 10 George IV., Cap. 44, Section 7:—"It shall be lawful for any man belonging to the said Police Force, during the time of his being on duty, to apprehend all loose, idle, and disorderly persons whom he shall find disturbing the public peace, or whom he shall have just cause to suspect of any evil designs." This section is repeated and expanded by Section 64, of 2 and 3 Victoria, Cap. 47, which is the Police Act of 1839, which provides:—"It shall be lawful for any constable belonging to the Metropolitan Police to take into custody, without a warrant, all loose, idle, and disorderly persons whom he shall find disturbing the public peace, or whom he shall have good cause to suspect of having committed, or being about to commit, any felony, misdemeanour, or breach of the peace, and all persons whom he shall find between sunset and the hour of eight in the morning lying or loitering in any highway, yard, or other place, and not giving a satisfactory account of themselves." That section is to be read with 10 George IV., Cap. 44, Section 7, which it enlarges. The words "loose, idle and disorderly persons" control the words "whom he shall have cause," etc. There is a reported case of Bowditch v. Balchin (5 Exchequer, page 378) dealing with that. Section 54, Clauses 12 and 13, previously quoted, give the remaining power possessed by the police for dealing with general disorder, while Section 64 gives a power to apprehend which is not limited by the restriction imposed by Section 63, which reads as follows:—"That it shall be lawful for any constable belonging to the Metropolitan Police district, and for all persons whom he shall call to his assistance, to take into custody, without a warrant, any person who, within view of any such constable, shall offend in any manner against this Act, and whose name and residence shall be unknown to such constable, and cannot be ascertained by such constable." It may be said, however, that the police avail themselves as fully as possible of procedure by summons instead of by apprehension in suitable cases when the name and address of an offender is known.

8. I understand that certain rules and regulations are framed for the guidance of police officers?—That is so.

9. Can you give us some evidence about them?—With regard to the rules and regulations framed for the guidance of the police officers in dealing with cases within the above classes, I have to point out that under the present system regulations have been drawn up and framed from time to time subject to the approval of the Secretary of State for the Home Department. These regulations are being constantly modified in the light of experience gained. They may be said to be always more or less under revision, so as to bring practice up to the requirements of the moment. It may be said here for the information of the Commission with reference to the hours of duty of the police and the variation of beats that, according to the practice of the Metropolitan Police, the day is considered to be from 6 in the morning until 10 at night, and the night from 10 p.m. to 6 in the morning. The constable does eight hours duty in the twenty-four. In the inner area the day duty is done in two four-hour shifts, there being a four-hour rest interval between.

10. What do you mean by the inner area?—The inner area really takes in such divisions as St. James's, Westminster, Bow Street, and that portion of London where the traffic is heavy and the work is rather strenuous, in all some ten or more divisions and portions of outer divisions; in the outer area they are allowed to do it in eight-hour shifts. It is considered where the strain of work is very great that these men could not on a traffic point for instance, continue for eight hours at a stretch.

11. Is the distinction between the inner and the outer area described in any regulation?—No, it is varied from time to time. If the work becomes more strenuous in any portion of what you may describe as the outer area you might probably introduce the four-hour shift and make a change.

12. Then it is you who determine whether an area shall or shall not be considered to be inner or outer?—That is so, so far as length of duty is concerned.

13. Will you please continue?—The reason for dividing the hours of duty in this way is because of the greater strain of duty in the interior districts during the day. Elsewhere the day duty is done in one tour of eight hours. Night duty everywhere is done in one eight-hour tour. In the inner area the constable goes on duty at 6 in the morning and comes off at 10, to go on again from 2 in the afternoon to 6. He keeps these hours for a week, and then does duty between 10 in the morning and 10 in the evening in the same way—four-hour shifts. He does night duty for a month at a time, and invariably at the end of each month his beat is changed, and he comes under another sergeant, so that under no circumstances can the constable be on the same beat for longer than a month, and even when on the same beat his hours during the day are changed from week to week. In addition to active beat duty, he may be employed on a fixed point or traffic point, or sent out as a patrol, or be required to fill a vacancy caused by leave or sickness, all of which makes it unlikely that he will be on the same beat even for so long a time as a month continuously. To illustrate this, I have caused to be shown in the Return which has been marked A the actual variations of duty during the six months ending the 30th April, 1906, of a sergeant and 21 constables from the list of men who arrested prostitutes, particulars of which are given on another Return marked B. I think, sir, you have a copy of those Returns.

14. Returns A and B have been handed to the secretary. Can you explain a little more fully the significance of Return A. You say, "The actual variations of duty during the six months ending April 30th," and so on?—If you turn to Return B and take the first constable, you will see how it is worked out.

15. I think you had better begin with Return A, and take us through one of these instances?—The first-mentioned is a sergeant, so perhaps I had better proceed with the second. The second constable, as you will see, arrested in November two prostitutes, and he arrested in December twelve prostitutes.

16. I am looking at Return A, "Fixed point"?—This is in A. In November there are two arrests, and in December the same constable made twelve arrests, and in March he made six arrests. In November he was on a fixed point in the day time, High Street, junction of Charing Cross Road and Oxford Street. In December he was taken off day duty and put on night duty, and he was in High Street, Denmark Street, and Charing Cross Road, and while on night duty he made twelve arrests. In January he was kept on duty at the station. In February he was on a fixed point at Wardour Street, the junction of Old Compton Street. In March he went on night duty again. He was at Soho Street, Oxford Street, Charing Cross Road, and Soho Square, and while on night duty he arrested six women. Then in April he came on day duty again, and was in Charing Cross Road, Shaftesbury Avenue, High Street, and New Compton Street. There are 21 constables shown in this particular return, with full particulars of their duty for six months, and it is meant to justify what I have said that they are on night duty for a month at a time only.

17. On what principle have you picked out these 21 cases?—I believe they were picked out on the principle that they were specially active in making arrests. If you turn to Return B, and take these men, you will see they have been fairly active. Take No. 55—Mead. He arrested 20 women. Then Gilchrist, a sergeant, arrested 27; Cole arrested 41; Lucas arrested 14; Tilley arrested 23; Page arrested 14; Sawyer arrested 6; Dewsbury arrested 11, and so on. I did not pick them out at all. I told them to prepare a return, and I understand from the Superintendent who prepared it that he picked out men who had been generally most active, because it was thought to be most illustrative.

18. Then Return B had been prepared before Return A?—Yes.

19. I gather Return B is a return showing the number of prostitutes arrested by officers of the C and D Divisions during the six months ending 30th April, 1906?—That is so.

20. Is this an exhaustive return?—This is an exhaustive return of all the apprehensions of women made in those two divisions during the six months.

21. It is exhaustive?—Yes.

22. This return is limited to cases of solicitation?—Yes, prostitutes for being in any thoroughfare for the purpose of prostitution or solicitation, or for wandering in the public streets and behaving in a riotous and indecent manner, or for being loose, idle, disorderly persons disturbing the public peace. It is a return of the number of women who were arrested in those two divisions during the six months ending the 30th April.

23. The total apprehended in the C Division was 761?—761.

24. And the total number of women apprehended in the D Division was 255 for the six months?—Yes.

25. One of the Commissioners would like to know why have you limited it simply to the C and D Divisions?—Because that is the particular area in which this subject gives most trouble; but I have another return for the whole Metropolitan Police area. It is marked C.

26. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Could you tell us before you go to that what area are you dealing with when you give us the Returns of the C and D Divisions? Can you delimit it in any way?—Yes, I can tell you roughly the boundaries of the C and D Divisions. The D Division extends on the west down Edgware Road, and it would come along Oxford Street, and be bounded by

Sir E. R. Henry.

17 July 1906.

Oxford Street on the south, and on the east it would be bounded by a line drawn, we will say, through Gordon Square, and on the north it would run round Regent's Park down St. John's Wood Road; on the east it meets another division, the E Division. The C Division runs along Oxford Street to Park Lane, and then it runs down the east side of the Park, along the Green Park, down St. James' Street, along Pall Mall East, then it goes roughly past the National Gallery, and up Wardour Street to Oxford Street. If it will be of any assistance to the Commission, I would put in a map showing it more accurately.

27. (Chairman.) Yes, I think we should like a map showing the limits of the C and D Divisions?—I can put in a map showing all the divisions.

28. That would be very convenient?—The only thing I might mention as regards this return is that the Commission will see that a very considerable number of men were employed in enforcing these provisions of the law, and there was no special selection made. There must have been 150 constables dealing with these 1,050 cases.

29. Are you dealing with Return C?—No, with Return B. I have not been able to give you in a return the names of all the constables for the metropolis, because it would be too voluminous, but I give them for a portion of the area in which there is the heaviest incidence of this particular duty, and I have given a list of all the constables who deal with these cases.

30. Would you like now to give us the numbers of the men employed in the C and D divisional areas and the particulars of the force in those areas? Is this a convenient point to have it, or would you prefer to explain the Return C to us before you go to that?—I have given in Return C the numbers and nationalities of prostitutes charged at each station under Section 3 of the Vagrancy Act of 1824, or Section 54, Clause 11, of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839, and of females, including those not known to be prostitutes, charged with acts of gross indecency in thoroughfares during the same three years with the result of the charge.

31. Have you a Table showing the total number of charges and the total results?—I have a Table showing the total number of charges and the total results year by year. The total number charged in 1903 was 3,756.

32. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That is on the last page?—Yes.

33. (Chairman). That is for the year 1903?—Yes, 3,756, of whom 964 were sentenced to imprisonment, 2,365 were fined, 264 were bound over, 46 were discharged with a caution, and 113 were discharged without any remarks and without comment.

34. What are the total figures for 1904?—In 1904 4,186 prostitutes were charged; 1,059 were imprisoned and 2,764 were fined; 271 were bound over; 46 were discharged with a caution, and 122 were discharged without any comment by the magistrates. In 1905 the numbers went up. 4,929 prostitutes were charged, of whom 891 were sentenced to imprisonment, 3,622 were fined, 215 were bound over, 60 were discharged with a caution, and 127 were discharged without comment by the magistrates. That is for the whole of the Metropolitan Police districts.

35. I see you also ascertained with regard to these cases the nationalities of the defendants?—Yes.

36. (Mr. Dickinson.) I should like to understand this. You have just been telling us about two Acts of Parliament under which these women are proceeded against. If you look at the first page, you will see Vine Street 544 were proceeded against under the first Act of 1824. Then at Tottenham Court Road there is only one under that Act and 437 under the other Act, the Police Act of 1839. Can you explain why one Act seems to be used in one court and the other in another?—It is not the fact that this shows how they were dealt with in court; this only shows how the police charged them. Some magistrates have difficulty in putting a construction upon the Police Act Section, and others have some difficulty about the Vagrancy Act. Many magistrates are not satisfied that solicitation to the annoyance can be proved unless some person comes forward to say he is annoyed, but they are willing to convict under the Vagrancy Act. The magistrates do not show on the charge sheet the particular section under which they convict, and so we have, more or less, to assume that they have been convicted under the section under which the police have brought the prisoner before them.

37. (Chairman.) We should like to know, if you will kindly give it to us, the number of officers employed in the area of Division C. Do you call the area the divisional area, or what?—It is the area I have indicated by boundaries.

38. But what name do you give it—do you call it a divisional area?—It is a division.

39. Then divisional area is a good name for it?—Yes, very good.

40. How many men are habitually employed in the divisional area; is this a convenient time for you to give us that evidence?—I can give you the total police force employed in that area, and I could no doubt make out for you a statement showing the number that are employed on beat duty, and fixed point and patrols, but I could not give it to you at once out of my head.

41. Perhaps you can give us now the total number of men employed, and see how they are organised, how many inspectors, sergeants, and so forth?—The area of the C Division is about three-quarters of a square mile. The strength of the force there is one superintendent, 19 inspectors, 51 sergeants, 435 constables, making a total of 506. I am taking these figures for the end of 1904. There may be some slight variation since then, but I have not got the variations here.

42. That is about the number employed now?—Rather more; a few more, probably. The D Division, also known as the Marylebone Division, which is in area something less than a mile and a half square, the strength of the force is one superintendent, 23 inspectors, 54 sergeants, 464 constables, making a total of 542 men all told.

43. You have referred to the force being moved from time to time, and given us the details of their career in regard to some months. Does the variation take place only in the same division or from one division to another?—Only in the same division.

44. That is to say, the officers employed in the C Division continue to be employed in the C Division unless some special order is made in their case?—That is so. They might be promoted out of it, or they might be transferred.

45. What force do you have in attendance at the respective police-courts in the divisions?—There are always inspectors on duty inside the court.

46. Day and night?—Only in the day time when the Court is sitting.

47. In the police station and the court—I wished to include both?—I will give you the particulars of the station duty. For the station duty in Vine Street, that is the C Division, six inspectors, besides the constables who are employed in connection with the telephone and telegraph, and generally for reserve duties. There are six station officers.

48. What officer is at the station to take down any charges made by constables against persons whom they bring up in custody?—The officer in charge at the station. There is a sub-divisional inspector who is in complete charge of the station area, and then each of these station inspectors does a tour of duty. Three are required for the day and three for the night. During half of his tour of duty he is inside the station, and the other half he would be outside the station. If, owing to sickness or absence from any cause it should be necessary to have his place filled, another inspector would be brought in from some other duty and put on to station duty.

49. What are the duties of the inspector when he is on his outside duty?—His business is to see that the men are on their beats and doing their duty properly. He would know whereabouts a man should be at a particular time if he went regularly round his beat, and he would expect to find him somewhere within reasonable distance of that point. That does not apply so much to a station like Vine Street or Bow Street, where the beats are very small, but in the outer area where the beats are larger it is necessary to have some such system, so that the inspecting officer may have a chance of knowing where to find the beat constable.

50. What are the duties of the inside inspector when he is on duty in the station?—He would have to attend to all charges that are brought and he would have to visit the cells; he would have to see persons who come to make inquiries, or it may be to lodge complaints, and he would have to attend, in fact, to any business that may occur during the time he was on duty there.

51. Can you tell us how many beats there are in the C Division; perhaps I ought to ask you first whether each of these areas is divided into beats?—The whole Metropolitan Police district is divided into beats.

52. Will you define a beat for us?—A beat is an area consisting of streets or roads on which there is residential property, along which streets or roads the constable practically patrols.

53. How many beats are there in the C Divisional area?—The beats vary between the day and the night. They are much more numerous at night than in the day time. I will give you the day beats for the C Division first. There are 31 day beats and 109 night beats, but in addition to the day beats there is a considerable number of fixed points where a constable stands—stationary posts, you may say. There are about 33 fixed points in the division.

54. Is one officer allotted to each beat at night, or are two officers allotted to the same beat?—The beat area is divided into sections. There are a certain number of sergeants, known as section sergeants, and under them are a certain number of beat constables. The number of sections for the day on the C Division is five.

55. With a sergeant in each, superintending each?—Superintending the men on each section. The number of sections at night is 10. I can give you the average time that it takes for a man to go round his beat, if that would be of any interest to the Commission.

56. I think not at present. Could you tell us something as to the rules of promotion in the force?—I think it material in this connection that the Commission should be informed as to the rules under which promotion is made. I have often seen it stated that a constable's activity in prosecuting cases affects his promotion. This is quite incorrect. A constable's activity or otherwise with regard to arresting or prosecuting persons is not taken into account at all in considering the question of promotion. Our rule is that no promotion is given except as the result of an examination held at New Scotland Yard, written and oral, by an Examining Board, consisting of a Chief Constable and four superintendents, supplemented by an examination independently held by the Civil Service Commissioners. During the time that I have been Commissioner I know of only two instances in which promotion was given without such examination, and in one of these the candidate passed in his professional examination but failed before the Civil Service Commission. The number of promotions each year, I may add, would aggregate about 400. So that during the time that I have been Commissioner there have probably been about 1,400 promotions made, and I can only call to memory two cases in which the examinational test was foregone.

57. Who are eligible for promotion according to the rules?—Every constable with five years or more blameless service to his credit (formerly it was a little higher, but we have recently promoted men of shorter service) is eligible for promotion and can apply to be promoted to compete at these examinations. I may mention here incidentally that in order to satisfy himself that constables possessed the necessary education the superintendent causes a preliminary examination to be held in the division, and if a man anxious for promotion fails at that preliminary examination he would be told it would be no use his appearing at New Scotland Yard until he had improved his education. I may add that there is no special record kept of the cases in which constables are concerned. If I wanted to know what work in connection with cases any individual member of the force had done, I should have to call for a very lengthy and tedious search to be made amongst the registers in order to arrive at the information. Our rule is well known to all the men engaged in the Police Force, and no inducement of any sort or kind is held out to them to be unduly active in relation to arrests or prosecutions of individuals. On the contrary, it is well recognised that the bringing of charges involves much inconvenience to the officers concerned at the time and subsequently, and frequently entails loss of rest. For instance, if a man arrests a person while he is on night duty he goes off that night duty a little after six in the morning, and he has to be at the police court at 10 o'clock, so he practically loses his rest.

58. I understand that regulations have been framed to give effect to the Statutes to which you have called attention?—I do not know whether it will interest the Commissioners, but I have a note of the average length of service of men who get promotion. I can say from memory that the average period of service of men promoted from constables to sergeants is about 8 years and 3 months. The average service of sergeants promoted to be station sergeants is 14 years and 7 months. The average service of station sergeants promoted to be inspectors is 15 years and 11 months. The average period of service for inspectors promoted to be sub-divisional inspectors is 18 years and 5 months, and the average service of sub-divisional inspectors appointed to be chief inspectors is 20 years and 5 months.

Sir E. R. Henry.
17 July 1906.

59. Now with regard to these regulations framed for the purpose of giving effect to the Statutes?—I now come to the regulations which have been framed to give effect to the law above referred to, relating to solicitation, drunkenness, and disorder in the streets. The general regulations which guide the conduct of police are contained in a rather bulky volume, much of the matter of which would be of no assistance to constables, but for their information an abstract of those portions of the regulations which immediately concern them has been compiled, and is issued to them in what is known as the "Instruction Book," a copy of which every man in the force possesses. I produce a copy. I also produce an abstract of the regulations dealing with these specific offences, referring in the first place to those relating to solicitation, which I will read, if the Commission so desire. (1.) Solicitation in the streets.—The regulations issued for the guidance of the police in respect of solicitation in the streets are as follows:—"117. Prostitutes cannot legally be taken into custody simply because they are prostitutes; to justify their apprehensions, they must commit some distinct act which is an offence against the law."

60. Then you set out the section of 2 and 3 Victoria, Cap. 47, which you have given us?—Yes. Then the regulation goes on: "In a prosecution under this section, there must be some evidence sufficient to satisfy the magistrate that the woman is a prostitute, next there must be evidence as to the actions of the woman, showing she was loitering in a thoroughfare or public place for the purpose of prostitution or solicitation. And, lastly, there must be evidence that her action was to the annoyance of the inhabitants or passengers. In the first instance, the woman should be cautioned by the police on duty, and told to move on and conduct herself properly. Should she refuse, and persist in misconducting herself, she should be taken into custody, and charged with such offence as she may be guilty of, provided some inhabitant or passenger will attend at the police station and testify that he has been annoyed, or the constable himself has witnessed conduct by the woman which was evidently an annoyance to an inhabitant or passenger." Then the next is 119: "In taking the charge against a prostitute, the following regulations will be observed:—(a) Column of charge sheet showing address and occupation. The occupation should be entered as obtained from the person charged; if the person declines to state occupation, the words 'nature of occupation not tendered' should be recorded." That is a material point, because the police would not enter on the charge sheet the woman as a prostitute unless she herself stated that that was her occupation. Then (b) "Column of charge sheet showing nature of charge." When the charge is under 2 and 3 Victoria, Cap. 47, Section 54, Clause 11, the words "any thoroughfare or public place for the purpose of prostitution or solicitation to the annoyance of the inhabitants or passengers" are to be recorded. Then Regulation 120: "By the 5 George IV., Cap. 83, every common prostitute wandering in the public streets or public highways, or in any place of public resort, and behaving in a riotous and indecent manner is liable to one month's imprisonment. Prostitutes committing an offence against this Act are to be taken into custody and charged by the police." Then Regulation 121: "Care is to be taken that the duty of dealing with prostitutes in the streets is entrusted to experienced and trustworthy men, who can be relied on to use discretion, and at the same time prevent disorder and annoyance to passers by." Then 122: "The police have no power to interfere with men and women talking in the streets so long as they behave themselves properly and are not assembled together in such numbers as actually to cause obstruction of the thoroughfare, but if it is absolutely necessary to interfere, it is then to be done civilly and firmly." 163: "The Vagrancy Act of 1824, 5 George IV., Cap. 83, as amended by later

Sir E. R. Henry.
17 July 1906.

Acts, gives certain powers of apprehension. Some offences are better or more completely mentioned in the Metropolis Police Acts or other Statutes, but the following provision should be borne in mind." Then 164: "Any person may be apprehended who shall be found offending in any of the following ways: (a) Every common prostitute found wandering in the public streets or public highways or any place of public resort and behaving in a riotous or indecent manner." That is under the Vagrancy Act. "It will be necessary to produce evidence that the woman was a common prostitute and also of her behaviour." Regulation 166: "Every constable is expressly required to use his best endeavour to apprehend every person he finds offending against the Vagrancy Act, and express provision is made for the punishment of constables neglecting their duties in this respect by Sections 6 and 11 of the Vagrancy Act of 1824." The material parts of Sections 6 and 11 of the Vagrancy Act of 1824 are as follows: (Section 6) "In case any constable or other police officer refuse or wilfully neglect to take any person offending into his custody and not use his best endeavours to apprehend and convey before some justice any person that he finds offending against this Act it shall be deemed a neglect of duty," and Section 11, "a penalty of £5 is imposed upon any constable neglecting the duty so placed upon him." Then Regulation 169. "The Vagrancy Act, 1898 (61 and 62 Victoria, Cap. 39) provides that: "(1) Every male person who (a) knowingly lives wholly or in part on the earnings of prostitution, or (b) in any public place persistently solicits or importunes for immoral purposes shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond within the meaning of the Vagrancy Act, 1824, and may be dealt with accordingly. (2) If it is made to appear to a Court of Summary Jurisdiction by information on oath that there is reason to suspect that any house or any part of the house is used by a female for the purposes of prostitution, and that any male person residing in or frequenting the house is living wholly or in part on the earnings of the prostitute, the court may issue a warrant authorising any constable to enter and search the house and to arrest that male person. (3) Where a male person is proved to live with or to be habitually in the company of a prostitute and has no visible means of subsistence, he shall, unless he can satisfy the court to the contrary, be deemed to be knowingly living on the earnings of prostitution." These orders, which are necessarily of a general character are repeated in the Instruction Book which is held by every public constable. Perhaps it would save the time of the Commission if I referred you to the pages in the book—234, 236, and 338.

61. What books do you hand to the individual officer?—We give him the instruction book.

62. That is the white book, a copy of which you have handed in?—Yes. With reference to the regulations which I have read out to the Commission it will be observed that they direct firstly, that a woman is not to be apprehended because she is a prostitute, but only when she commits some specific offence; secondly, that a woman is to be cautioned before she is taken into custody; and, thirdly, that her occupation is to be entered on the charge sheet for the magistrate's information in accordance with her own account of herself, whether the police know her to be a prostitute or not. It may be added that the charge is, as a rule, formulated in accordance with the known practice at the different courts, which necessarily varies.

63. Do you find that greater difficulty has arisen latterly in regard to these cases of solicitation in the streets than formerly was the case?—Until comparatively recently there was little trouble from this cause except in a limited area in the West End. The tendency to-day is for these women to extend into localities hitherto untouched, possibly owing to the greatly increased facilities of locomotion, but notwithstanding this the trouble is still most acute in an area which may be stated to be bordered on the east by St. Martin's Lane, on the north by the Euston Road, on the west by the Park, and on the south by the River Thames. The greatest difficulty is experienced in the neighbourhood of Piccadilly, Regent Street, Oxford Circus, and the streets in the immediate vicinity.

64. What are the difficulties that the police have to encounter with regard to this class of cases which distinguish them from other cases?—It will be sufficient, perhaps, without labouring this point too much, to proceed to state some of the difficulties. It is well known that a very large number of women frequent this area at night for the purpose of prostitution, and it is also well known that numbers of men frequent or pass through this area at night who would not be annoyed by the solicitation of a woman, or, if annoyed, would be in most cases unwilling to give information to the police on such a matter, or, if they made actual complaint, would on account of the publicity involved, be unwilling to attend the court. Little, if any, assistance, is therefore forthcoming from the persons who are solicited by women frequenting this area. A constable is therefore compelled in the execution of this very difficult and anxious branch of his duties to rely and act mainly upon his own observation. Before acting, he has to satisfy himself that the woman who may come under his observation is (a) A common prostitute or night-walker; (b) that she is, or is loitering in, a thoroughfare or public place for the purpose of prostitution or solicitation, to the annoyance of the inhabitants or passengers; (c) or that she is behaving in a riotous or indecent manner. He can only judge of these matters, in the majority of cases, by what he has heard her say or may hear her say. For instance, if a constable has frequently seen a woman within this area at night, walking up and down the streets or any particular street, and accosting male passers-by either by look or gesture, entering into conversation with them, and occasionally going off with them, he would, I consider, be justified in inferring that she was a prostitute; and if on any particular night he saw her accosting a number of men he would, I consider, be justified in inferring that she was in the thoroughfare for the purpose of prostitution or solicitation to the annoyance of the inhabitants or passengers, or that she was behaving in an indecent manner. It is, however, a question what evidence would be deemed sufficient to prove annoyance when the person annoyed has not complained, and also as to what constitutes riotous or indecent behaviour, and whether the mere fact of a woman continuing to solicit is in itself riotous or indecent behaviour. These are points upon which Summary Courts of Justice might, and do, take different views. All I need say, in conclusion, is that unless a constable is justified in taking action when honestly convinced upon the points I have indicated above, it would appear that this branch of the law must be a dead letter within the area in question.

65. I think that some remark was made in the Regulations about cautioning a woman. Have you anything further to say upon that point?—One other point in this connection I desire to refer to, and that is with reference to the provision of Regulation 118, that a woman should be cautioned before any action is taken against her. I consider this a wise precaution, owing to the possibility of mistake occurring as to the nature of a single conversation with a man and the serious consequences of any such mistake. At the same time, it is obvious that the Regulation gives practical immunity to large numbers of women who are habitual frequenters of the place for the purpose of prostitution, because if warned they take care to remove themselves from the observation of the particular constable who warned them, and take care not to solicit again whilst in his sight or under his observation.

66. Would you like to give us one or two illustrations of the difficulties that the police are under with regard to these matters?—Many illustrations could be given of these difficulties, but I may perhaps instance one which at the time gave us much anxiety. At the hearing of a charge against a woman for disorderly behaviour, in April, 1901, a solicitor appeared on her behalf, and explained that she was a woman of irreproachable character, who had been married for thirteen years, and who was the daughter-in-law of a well-known local personage. She denied on oath the circumstances alleged against her, asserted that she was married and respectable, and in support of this called her husband as a witness. The man named by her went into the witness-box and swore that he had been married to her for thirteen years. The magistrate upon the evidence felt constrained to dismiss the case, and the constable in consequence was actually being dealt with by the Police Authorities for his assumed improper conduct in the case when it was ascertained that the supposed husband was in reality a disreputable person, who for years had lived upon the earnings of prostitutes, that the woman herself was a notorious character well known in the north, and that they had never been married, but had lived together. Proceedings were in this instance taken against the man, who was ultimately sentenced to five years' penal servitude for perjury. I may also quote a more recent case. In September last a woman was charged under the Vagrancy Act with being a prostitute, soliciting, etc. In court she contested the charge, asserting herself to be a respectable married woman, and called as a witness a man who on oath stated himself to be in respectable employment and the defendant to be his wife, and in consequence the case was dismissed. Three months afterwards, in December, the same woman sought the aid of the police against this man, whom she charged with assault and living on the earnings of her prostitution. In court she swore she had known the prisoner as a brothel keeper for fifteen years, and had lived with him without being married to him, and had assisted to support him by her immoral earnings. He was convicted on the charge of living upon her immoral earnings, and was sent to prison.

67. There is another class of street cases which do not, perhaps, strictly come under anyone of the heads you have been mentioning, but about which, perhaps, you would like to say something?—There is another class of case which comes under the notice of the police which has to be dealt with in the present state of the law in a somewhat roundabout way. I refer to certain violations of decency of a gross kind, such as sexual intercourse committed in a public place. Police apprehend offenders on the charge of having committed a common law misdemeanour by violating public decency; but they are not dealt with in the court for this offence, the procedure being too cumbersome and lengthy, as they would have to be committed for trial. They are actually dealt with, therefore, under County Council bye-laws, which confer no power on the police of arrest, but only of demanding names and addresses with a view to a summons, an altogether useless power in such cases where wrong names and addresses would invariably be given. As considerably over 1,000 of these cases were successfully prosecuted in the past year, the necessity of having some effective police intervention is indicated.

68. I think that completes what you wish to say in general about solicitation cases?—That is so.

69. Will you now come to cases of drunkenness?—Drunkenness in the streets? Until 1902 the police had no power of apprehending persons who were drunk and incapable, but that power was conferred by the Licensing Act of 1902. The police deal with over 60,000 cases of drunkenness in a year, and as a rule without any special trouble; but there always occur, and will always occur, a certain number of cases in which it may be contended that police action is not justified. This leads me to point out what the difficulties are that an ordinary constable may experience in dealing with a case of drunkenness and disorderly conduct. Apart from incapacity or disorderly conduct, the police cannot arrest for drunkenness. The police, therefore, now have to deal with two classes of offences in connection with drunkenness, namely, cases of persons being found drunk and incapable, and, secondly persons found drunk and disorderly. In respect to the first, difficulty arises owing to the similarity of some of the symptoms which characterise the alcoholic poisoning known as drunkenness and epilepsy and other obscure diseases. Instructions to police in cases where any doubt arises as to the cause of the symptoms observed give them ample discretion as to calling in the divisional surgeon: in fact, they are strictly enjoined to call in medical advice in all cases where there is any suspicion of illness, whether the person complains or not.

70. Is a doctor called in in many cases?—I am putting in a Return marked D which shows that a doctor was called in during 1905 in 4,316 cases. The total is shown on the last page in column 14. That heading, "Number of cases in which a doctor attended the police station at the prisoner's request," is not quite correct, because it should be the number of cases in which the doctor was called in, not only at the prisoner's request, but also at the request of the police.

71. Then the column that is numbered 14 in Return D should be the number of cases in which a doctor was called in?—Yes.

Sir E. R. Henry. 17 July 1906.

72. Whether by the prisoner's request or not?—Yes. The total number of cases dealt with was 62,759, of which 22,205 were cases of simple drunkenness and incapacity, and 37,322 were cases of drunken and disorderly conduct. There were 3,232 cases in which drunkenness was charged in addition to some other distinct offence, such as assault, making a total of 62,759 cases. The results were as follows: 3,289 persons were imprisoned, 52,800 were fined, 955 were bound over, 3,152 were discharged under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, Section 16, Sub-section 1, which, I think, says that the offence is too trivial to necessitate anything more being done. Then 721 were discharged with a caution, and 1,585 were discharged without any comment being made by the court.

73. (Mr. Dickinson.) It does not give the number of persons arrested?—The number of persons arrested would be the number of persons charged minus the refused cases. As regards that, I can put in a return if the Commission desires it, but I may say to my knowledge that between six and seven per cent. of the total number of charges taken to a police station by constables are refused, that is to say, the station officer, on the result of his own investigation, declines to take the charge. Many of those are cases in which a person is given into the constable's custody by another private person, but it, of course, also indicates cases in which the constable has arrested of his own accord, and his arrest is considered by the station officer not to be justified. In all cases of drunkenness, whether the charge was that of being drunk and incapable or being drunk and disorderly, when the person is brought to the station the need to summon a doctor may arise, and the instructions as to how such cases should be dealt with are given in the extracts from the Police Regulations, which perhaps you will allow me to read. The following are the Regulations issued for the guidance of the police, both as regards apprehension for drunkenness, medical aid in cases which may be cases of illness, whether arising from drink or otherwise, also the release of prisoners, and instructions as to the constant observation to be maintained over drunken persons in the cells lest illness should supervene. Regulation 195: "Constables are required, on the demand of a person licensed for the sale of intoxicating liquors, or of his agent or servant, to expel, or assist in expelling, from the premises any person who is drunken, violent, quarrelsome, or disorderly, and any person whose presence on his premises would subject the licensed person to a penalty, and who, upon being requested by such licensed person, or his agent or servant, or by any constable, to quit such premises, refuses or fails so to do. (The Licensing Act, 1872, 35 and 36 Victoria, Cap. 94, Section 18)." The note to that is: "The person, although not expelled, is liable to be convicted on summons for any offence involved in his misconduct, and the landlord may be liable for permitting the misconduct, if he has not availed himself of his power to expel the offender." Regulation 196: "Every person found drunk in any highway or other public place, whether a building or not, or on any licensed premises, is guilty of an offence, punishable by fine not exceeding 10s. for the first offence, and if incapable of taking care of himself, he may be apprehended. (35 and 36 Victoria, Cap. 94, Section 12, and 2 Edward VII., Cap. 28, Section 1)." Regulation 194: "Every person who in any highway or other public place, whether a building or not, is guilty, while drunk, of riotous or disorderly behaviour, or who is drunk while in charge on any highway or other public place, of any carriage, horse, cattle, or steam engine, or who is drunk when in possession of any loaded firearms, should be apprehended. (The Licensing Act, 1872, 35 and 36 Victoria, Cap. 94, Section 12)." Regulation 196a: "Every person found drunk in any highway or other public place, whether a building or not, or on any licensed premises, while having the charge of a child apparently under the age of seven years, may be apprehended, and is liable to a penalty not exceeding 40s., or to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for any period not exceeding one month. (2 Edward VII., Cap. 28, Section 2)." Regulation 197: "A person found drunk in any highway or other public place, or on licensed premises, and incapable of taking care of himself, is to be taken to the station, charged with the offence, and subsequently dealt with in the same manner as a person charged with a bailable offence." Regulation 198: "When police find a drunken person on licensed premises he is to be summoned or charged for the offence as circumstances admit, whether turned out of the premises or not." Regulation 199: "A constable may demand the name and address of any person found on any premises licensed for the sale of intoxicating liquors during the closing period; and if the constable has reasonable grounds to suppose that the name and address given is false, may require evidence of the correctness of such name and address; and may, if such person fail upon such demand to give his name and address, or such evidence, apprehend him (35 and 36 Victoria, Cap. 94, Section 25)." Regulation 295: "If prisoners are insensible, from drink or any other cause, or appear to be ill or injured in any way, although they do not complain, the divisional surgeon is to be sent for immediately. This duty is imperative in all cases where a prisoner appears to be ill, whether or not he has been recently under medical treatment at a hospital or elsewhere." Regulation 296: "It is to be thoroughly understood that in all cases in which persons come into the hands of police, whether as prisoners or in any other manner, and there is any appearance of their being ill or suffering from injury, or it is known or believed that they have hurt themselves by falling down while drunk or otherwise, the divisional or other surgeon is to be invariably sent for to see them, although they may make no complaint. The Commissioner trusts that there will be no neglect in carrying out this order. He desires that a liberal interpretation may be placed on all orders and regulations with respect to the attendance of divisional surgeons in cases of illness, accident, injury, or drunkenness. Each officer who performs station duty is to distinctly understand that he is expected not only to attend to any complaint of illness or injury that may be made to him by a prisoner or other person in his hands, but to make close personal investigation in each case, and to exercise care and discretion with a view to the surgeon being sent for to attend on such persons when there is any appearance or suspicion of illness or injury, whether complaint is made or not." Regulation 297: "When the interference of police becomes necessary a drunken person may be taken into custody and charged at a police station, and under no circumstances is a constable to leave his beat to conduct such a person to his home or elsewhere." Regulation 298: "Persons are frequently found insensible in the streets, and as they may be suffering from apoplexy or other natural causes, the symptoms of which give them much the appearance of persons under the influence of drink, in all such cases the police should first try and arouse them by gentle shaking; if that fails, the neckcloth and collar are to be loosened and the head raised a little, by which means breathing is made easier, and a message is to be sent to the station for the ambulance and further assistance." Regulation 299: "The police are strictly cautioned to be very careful in conveying persons apparently drunk or insensible to the station. When a person in this condition is conveyed on the ambulance, or placed in a cell, the head is to be kept slightly raised by canvas pillows." Regulation 300: "Drunken prisoners are not to be sent to a workhouse unless the surgeon recommends it on the ground that there is reason to apprehend serious danger to health from confinement in a police cell." Regulation 316: "Prisoners are to be visited in the cells at least once every hour, and, if drunk, every half hour. In the latter case they are to be spoken to and aroused on each visit."

74. (Chairman.) Have you anything to tell us about the facilities which are given to persons to obtain release upon bail?—I may say that all possible facilities are given to enable persons charged with the commission of any bailable offence, including solicitation, drunkenness and disorder, being released either on their own recognisance, or on the surety of someone else. It is specifically pointed out in our instructions that cells are intended to be places of detention for use only when no other means exist of ensuring the appearance of the incriminated person before the Court.

75. Is there any provision made for the obtaining of refreshments by persons so detained?—Oh, yes, refreshments are either provided free or they can obtain particular refreshments at their own expense.

76. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Could you give us a reference, if it is in the White Book, to what you have just said, as to its being specifically pointed out that cells are intended to be places of detention only?—It would be in the Bail Order. If you will allow me, I will read out that paragraph that has reference to the station officers, and not to the constables under Regulation 415: "Police officers must realise that police cells are intended to be places of detention, for use only when no other means exist of ensuring the appearance of the incriminated person before the Court. Their object must be not to confine in cells any persons whose release upon personal recognisance or recognisances by surety can be arranged for, and is under the circumstances of the case an arrangement that may reasonably be adopted." Then, as regards the facilities, I would turn to 419: "Everything possible must be done to assist a person in custody, who desires to send for bail or to communicate with friends. The police telephone or telegraph may be used. If a prisoner is willing to pay for a messenger or postal telegram or cab, the station officer must arrange for this without delay. In short, he is to do all in his power to enable the prisoner to communicate with his friends or to obtain bail, in the most expeditious manner practicable. It often is practicable for a person charged to give corroborative testimony as to the correctness of the name and address he has tendered by producing a letter or letters addressed to himself, a visiting card, or some other paper which he may have about him. Failing this, he can be questioned with the aid of the Post Office or Local Directory, and when the address is situate in another district, verification is to be at once obtained by wire through the station concerned. Post Office Directories are supplied to chief stations, and superintendents are to arrange for the periodical supply of a copy of the local directory to each station, and they are to be kept in the inspector's office. If prisoners have no money, and are desirous of being bailed, the necessary expenses of sending for bail will be allowed by Commissioner." I read that out because I think it indicates that every conceivable facility is by our rules given to persons to get bail. Then, page 260, paragraph 252 deals with refreshments: "Necessary refreshment for prisoners may be purchased out of the money taken from them, provided the charge against them does not relate to the money; the amount expended for refreshment is to be entered in the prisoner's property book. When it is necessary for prisoners to have refreshment, either at their own or the public expense, no beer or spirit is to be given to them or admitted into the cells, but only tea or coffee, with such eatables as are usually given in those cases. When prisoners are provided with refreshment at the cost of the receiver"—that is the officer who has to find the money for all these charges—"the amount is not to exceed 3d. for each meal, except in special cases of destitution. When prisoners receive more than one meal, or other than ordinary refreshment, the cause is to be stated in the proper column of the printed form of voucher. In exterior sub-divisions where necessary refreshment cannot be obtained for less than 4d. for each meal, that amount will be allowed." I will put in the Bail Order, which is marked E.

77. (Chairman.) Have you any remark to make about cases where disorder is alleged as well as drunkenness?—I say that our standing orders, as I have already said, are always being revised and modified, and this merely tkes the place of the revised paragraphs 408 to 426, that were previously in force. Where disorder is alleged in addition to drunkenness, an officer would, of course, have to exercise discretion in not at once releasing the person, who might then and there go out again into the streets only to repeat the disorder. We have made the facilities for a person getting away from the police station very great, but a caution is given to officers that if a man is arrested for disorder they must not let him out if he might then and there go and repeat the disorder. A constable has to decide upon his own observation whether the behaviour of any particular person that he sees in the street justifies the opinion that it is due to drunkenness. Drunkenness is always a question of degree, and when the dividing line is approached, it is often impossible to determine when a person ceases to be sober, or when his condition should be described as one of drunkenness. Drink affects people in various ways. In some it causes loss of brain power, in others loss of motive power, in others it produces intense excitability, in others it produces a form of lethargy, and experts say that any great stimulus or shock may suddenly sober a man. The state of drunkenness becomes less and less marked with the lapse of time. The best practical safeguard has been adopted by requiring the station officer who deals with the case at the station to satisfy himself that the facts warrant his accepting the charge. If he has any doubt, he has authority to fortify himself by calling in a doctor, or he can refuse the charge. Any person brought in on a charge of drunkenness can apply to see his own doctor, or, if he is not accessible, he may see the divisional surgeon, at his own expense. Drunkenness and disorderly conduct are dealt with by Section 58 of the Police Act, 1839.

78. That, I think, completes what you have to say about the charges of drunkenness?—Yes.

79. Now, as to the charges of disorder in the streets apart from drunkenness. Have you any evidence to give about them?—Disorder in the streets (apart from that associated with drunkenness or solicitation for prostitution) requiring Police intervention, arises from many causes. It would be difficult, and it is unnecessary to give an exhaustive list of these; but some of the most obvious may be mentioned. They are: Street trading; rowdyism of young men of the so-called hooligan class, and, occasionally, of young women; loafers and street corner men, the occurrence of special events, such as the University Boat Race. When any act of assault is committed these persons can, of course, be dealt with, or if there is good cause to suspect them of having committed or being about to commit a felony, they can be apprehended under the Larceny Act, the Malicious Injuries (Person) Act, or the Malicious Injuries (Property) Act. If they use profane indecent or obscene language to the annoyance of the inhabitants or passengers, they may be arrested under Clause 12, Section 54 of 2 and 3 Victoria, Cap. 47. When they use threatening abusive or insulting behaviour, whereby a breach of the peace may be occasioned, the procedure will be under Clause 13, Section 54 of 2 and 3 Victoria, Cap. 47. When, however, the disorder arises from some act not expressly coming within one or other of these categories the police are in a difficulty owing to the wording of the sections unless the offenders are known to be loose, idle, and disorderly persons. A legal definition of the term idle and disorderly person given in the Vagrancy Act, 1824, Section 3, includes able-bodied persons neglecting to maintain their families, persons becoming chargeable to a parish after legal removal therefrom, pedlars trading without a license, common prostitutes wandering and behaving in a riotous or indecent manner and beggars. When the disorder is caused by any person known to fulfil these conditions there is no difficulty in deciding that he should properly be arrested under 10 George IV., Cap. 44, Section 7, or under the enlarged powers conferred for dealing with the same class of persons by 2 and 3 Victoria, Cap. 47, Section 64. When, however, young men of the so-called hooligan class, in effect terrorise a locality without committing any act expressly bringing them within the Statute, or when, as on Boat Race nights, other young men of exuberant spirits and labouring under unusual excitement, though not drunk, parade the streets in the West End, it is a debateable point whether the police have power to arrest them. Often such conduct is associated with the use of indecent or obscene language or the use of insulting words and behaviour, and then Clauses 12 or 13 of Section 54 of the Police Act of 1839 apply; but when there is no such Statutory offence and the disorder consists of marching up and down, singing songs, shouting, etc., the question arises can the offenders be legally designated loose, idle, and disorderly persons? They are unquestionably disturbing the public peace in the sense referred to in Section 64 of the Police Act of 1839; but there is some uncertainty as to whether they can be dealt with under this section, the doubt being whether they are loose, idle and disorderly persons within the legal meaning of the section. The actual practice of the police when such offenders are arrested is to charge them with disorderly conduct at a specified place, and to leave the magistrate to decide the section under which they may be convicted. I am not able to give any comparative particulars of the results, the Act under which a conviction is made not being entered up on the charge sheets, but I am informed that the magistrates are occasionally in such difficulty that they have to fall back upon an Act of Edward III. to justify their decisions, and simply bind the offender over to keep the peace. In certain neighbourhoods the presence of loafers at street corners and outside public houses brings about what must be termed disorder of a serious kind, in dealing with which the police have on occasion to resort to force, and are themselves exposed to very rough treatment. Each year, on an average, between 250 and 300 constables are so severely handled by resisting or drunken persons that they have to go on the sick list for a period of over a week, many of them receiving injuries of a grave and permanent nature, while nearly ten times as many receive injuries of a less serious character. As regards that if the Commissioners desire it the Chief Surgeon who deals with these cases will be able to express an opinion.

80. I think it would be very desirable for the chief surgeon to attend and give those particulars if he would be kind enough to do so. Have you any suggestion to make as to the possible alteration of the law with regard to the matters upon which you have given evidence?—If you please I will put in a return of the total number of apprehensions for disorder likely to cause a breach of the peace which I have marked F.

81. This is Return F, "Disorder in streets." Will you explain the Table and give us the totals?—This is a return showing the number of persons apprehended by the police for disorderly conduct, that is to say, for having committed offences under Sub-sections 12 and 13, and also against males and females, the latter not being known prostitutes for acts of gross indecency in the streets. The Table shows how those cases were disposed of. The total number apprehended during the whole of 1905 was 11,375 persons. The results were: Charge dismissed, 2,093; discharged under the Summary Jurisdiction Act of 1879, Section 16, as being somewhat trivial, 1,201; convicted, 8,078. Fourteen of these were sentenced to over fourteen days' imprisonment; sixteen were sentenced to fourteen days' imprisonment or less; 7,302 were fined, and there is a note to this return that it includes such offences as fighting, obscene language, threats, etc.

(Witness.) I have a map here and I will show the Commissioners the boundaries of the divisions. (The Witness explained the map to the Commissioners.)

82. (Chairman.) I think if Sir Edward Henry will lend us this map we will keep it at the office?—I think you have some suggestions to offer to us as to the amendment of the law. Would you like to give them to us now or would you like us to recall you when the Inquiry has proceeded further, and we have had some specific instances as to the actual working of the law put before us from another point of view?—I will do as the Commissioners please.

83. Perhaps you will kindly make what suggestions you have to offer to us now, and then we can recall you if necessary?—I understand I am invited to offer suggestions as to possible alterations in the law and in the Police Regulations to be made with a view to rendering them more applicable to the conditions of the time. As regards the Regulations, inasmuch as they are based on, and are intended to be explanatory of the law, I do not see how they can be amended with advantage until the law is altered. As already stated, they are revised from time to time whenever the occasion seems to demand it. I am responsible for the Regulations, my recommendations regarding them being submitted for the consideration and approval of the Secretary of State for the Home Department. As regards the law I may say that the task of the police in dealing with women in the streets might possibly be rendered easier if the law was so altered as to make persistent solicitation an offence whether by a person known or not known to be a prostitute, and without requiring that annoyance to the residents or passers-by shall be proved. But this would be tantamount to deciding that the woman who offers herself for prostitution does a criminal act, whether she annoys or inconveniences others or not, and public opinion might or might not approve of so drastic an innovation.

84. What do you say as regards disorder?—As regards disorder, I may point out that in Section 54, Sub-section 12, the words "To the annoyance of the inhabitants or passengers," in Sub-section 13 the words "With intent to provoke a breach of the peace or whereby a breach of the peace may be occasioned," and in Section 64 the words "Loose, idle, and disorderly," import an element of difficulty and uncertainty into their application. I put forward these suggestions not as recommendations, because as an executive officer it seems to me that it is not within my province to propose an alteration of the existing law, but as points which might receive consideration if an alteration of the law is held to be required. I have no suggestions to offer as regards the law which deals with drunkenness in the streets. There is one point, perhaps, but I do not know whether the Commissioners would wish me to say anything about it, and that is as regards the allegation that sometimes has been made as to the police receiving money from these women. Would the Commissioners desire me to say something with regard to that?

85. Certainly, we shall be very glad to hear what you have to say on that point?—I have often since I have been Commissioner received letters, sometimes anonymous and sometimes authentic alleging that bookmakers gave money to the police, but I have not received a single letter and no complaint, oral or written, has been made to me during the three and a half years I have been Commissioner charging the Police with levying blackmail from women of the unfortunate class. From what I know of the tone of the men themselves, I am satisfied that if any individual man were to take money from these women it would certainly come to the knowledge of his comrades, and I am also satisfied that his comrades would look upon him as an unmitigated blackguard, and that he could not remain in the Force for long. I do not of course say that individual instances of taking money may not occur, but the whole Force know that any proved misconduct of this sort would be dealt with with severity. I think, too, that the system which I have endeavoured to explain to the Commission makes it quite impossible that there should be any systematised form of blackmailing like this, because the variation in the beats is so great, and in a street like Regent Street, where, I suppose, on either side you would have parts of ten beats, it would not be of the slightest use a woman bribing the first constable she came to, because she would only go a few yards before she came to another beat; and then, besides that, there is continual patrolling by superior officers. Therefore it seems to me that anything like a system of blackmailing these women is more or less impracticable, and certainly it could not exist for many days without becoming known to the authorities. I have had many allegations of the Police being corrupted at times by bookmakers, and I have had to deal with those cases where they have occurred. There have been cases, of course, of men charged with taking money from these women in the past, but they have been extremely rare, and none have come under my personal cognisance.

86. In the cases of drunkenness do persons who are apprehended for drunkenness in the street often attempt to bribe constables, to your knowledge?—It has not come to my knowledge.

87. You have had no letters complaining that the Police have endeavoured to extort money?—I have had no letters. I have had letters complaining that money is paid by bookmakers.

88. The only letters you have received during your term of office have been with regard to the Police being bribed by bookmakers?—As to money taken from bookmakers.

89. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You have given us a Return of Convictions and Acquittals. Will you tell us what would happen in this case. Suppose a constable charges various persons, and the result of his charges is that there are a number of acquittals, what would happen in that case?—I should know nothing about it myself. I know nothing about the individual casework of a constable. You mean what would his immediate superior officer know?

90. Yes. Would it be brought to your notice at all?—Not unless the magistrate commented upon it. If the magistrate commented upon it in any way it would be at once brought to my notice, but if the matter was a mere comment by the magistrate and there was no reason to doubt the constable's conduct, I should know nothing about it.

91. Supposing it were proved that a constable arrested persons and brought them before the magistrate, and it turned out that in the cases he brought before the magistrate there was an undue number of acquittals compared with the number of charges?—I think the magistrate would comment upon his conduct.

92. The magistrate would do it?—Certainly.

93. Would there be nothing to direct your attention to it unless the magistrate commented upon it?—No, unless the superintendent brought to my notice that a particular constable had been taking wrong charges, and then his conduct would be inquired into; it would be taken up at once.

94. That is what I want to know. Who would inquire into it?—The superintendent or the sub-divisional inspector.

95. As a result of the inquiry would he report to you?—If it were found that there was any reason for believing that the man had been acting improperly he would be dealt with as a defaulter, he would be entered upon the Defaulter Sheet, and he would be put upon his defence for having taken improper charges.

96. I think I have followed from what you have said that there is a proportion of something like 6 or 7 per cent. of the charges referred to the inspector which he refuses to take?—Yes.

97. Suppose the inspector found that a constable was preferring a number of charges which he was refusing to take, and which therefore would bring to the inspector's mind that the police constable was preferring charges where it was not necessary, what would happen then, and what would be the ordinary course?—He would make an inquiry into one of those charges at once, if he had any reason to suspect that it was not a proper charge, but amongst that 6 or 7 per cent. there are a considerable number of cases in which persons are given into custody by private persons, and then they do not attend at the station, or will not proceed with the charge, and the charge is refused. I could get a return of those cases showing exactly how many were due to that cause and how many were due to the constable's own initiative. Of course he is not responsible when persons are given into his custody. He is obliged to take them to the station.

98. I think it might be useful, if you could, without too much labour, let us know what proportion of that 6 per cent. is represented by private persons refusing to proceed with the charge?—Yes, I will get that information for you.

99. If an inquiry is held, how is it held?—You mean an inquiry in a case where a constable is suspected of having brought an improper charge?

100. I do not mean in the sense of its being false to his knowledge, but a charge which he ought not to have made?—In a case where a station officer was of opinion that the constable had acted indiscreetly or improperly he would make a report to the superintendent, and the superintendent would then proceed to make further inquiries: he would possibly ask the person aggrieved whether they could come to his office and assist him with a statement, or, if they would not come to his office, he would, if necessary, go to their residence and take their statement, and if he found that it was sufficient to justify the opinion that the constable had certainly acted improperly, he would put him upon his defence, and he would then be dealt with according to the gravity of the charge, either by the superintendent himself or by the Chief Constable, or, in serious cases, the papers would be sent on to the Assistant Commissioner. All statements would be reduced to writing, including the statements of the constable and of the person accused, and all questions that might be put would be reduced to writing and filed with the officer who was competent to deal with them. I will give you an extract from the General Orders, if you will allow me to do so.

101. It is rather important to know what does happen?—Perhaps I may read this: "Complaints against Police Officers by private persons are, if possible, to be made and recorded in the presence of the accused officer, who will then have an opportunity of questioning the witnesses, if he desires. The statements made by the complainants and witnesses are to be reduced to writing by the police officer dealing with the case, and the persons complaining are to be required to sign their statements. Any questions the accused may wish to put to witnesses are to be put through the officer conducting the inquiry, and with the answers thereto are to be taken down. When the complainants or the witnesses cannot attend at the police station, their statements must be made or taken down in writing at their residence, or elsewhere, by the officer charged with the inquiry. In those cases where the complainant prefers a complaint in the first instance in a letter to the Commissioner, the superintendent is, if on investigation satisfied that there are grounds for inquiry, and the accuracy of the complaint is denied, to ascertain if the complainants and witnesses will attend at his office and formally prefer the complaint in the presence of the accused officer. If this is objected to, the superintendent is to arrange for the complainant and the witnesses being seen at their residences, unless there is, in his opinion, some reason for not doing so, in which case he should report to the Commissioner and ask for further directions. The accused officer is to submit his reply to any complaint in writing, and any verbal statement made by him in reply to questions or in addition to his written statement are to be taken down and submitted." That is in paragraphs 56 to 60 of Section 4 of the Regulations.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) It is in the White Book at page 33. I am not sure that it is verbatim in the White Book, but the substance of it is in the White Book.

102. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I am not quite sure that I fully appreciated what you were saying with reference to charges made by a constable that fail. Is it no disadvantage to a constable to make a charge which fails?—No, it might be a disadvantage if it were shown that he had acted indiscreetly or improperly, but otherwise it would not be of any disadvantage to him.

103. Would it in any way affect his promotion or position if it were found that the proportion of convictions to the charges was less than usual?—Some inquiry would be indicated; I certainly think it would be looked upon as a danger signal.

104. You gave us some instances (three, I think altogether) of women arrested?—Two cases of women arrested.

105. Yes, and one, I think, was for something else; for being disorderly or for drunkenness—I do not know which. You gave us two cases, and we know certainly of one other which has given rise to considerable discussion in the House of Commons with regard to the d'Angeley case. First of all, when a case is remanded for inquiry, who would be the officer who would make the inquiry. To whom would it be entrusted?—If the magistrate directed inquiry to be made?

106. Yes. It sometimes happens that a magistrate remands a case for inquiry for a week, or whatever the time may be. Who would be the officer at the particular police station who would make inquiry?—It would probably be the sub-divisional inspector or some other inspector appointed for the purpose, but in an important case, where the sub-divisional inspector is in charge of only one station, for in some areas he is in charge of more than one station, it would probably be made by the sub-divisional inspector, that is to say, if he were there, because he might be away on some other duty or on leave, with a man acting for him.

107. Does he make any report in writing, or does he merely make inquiry and give his evidence at the Police Court of the result?—He would report probably to the superintendent.

108. In writing?—I do not know. It would depend upon the nature of the inquiry. In any particular case a man would make inquiry and report.

109. In such a case as that he would report in writing?—I should think so; but I cannot say. If the magistrate said: "I should like to know something about the history of this person," the sub-divisional inspector would make inquiry and report it verbally to the magistrate. I do not know whether that would be reported in writing to anybody else. I do not quite know what particular papers it could be added to.

110. I do not want to ask you about specific instances to-day, because we shall have to go into that later. I only want to get a general view as to what the practice is.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) There is one Regulation (No. 244) which deals with one particular class of offences, "In all cases where prisoners are charged by the police with unlawful possession inquiry within the Metropolitan Police district is to be made as far as practicable by telegram, and the officer engaged in the case and who charges the prisoner is not to be employed to make such inquiries, unless the circumstances are very exceptional. If he be so employed the reason is in all cases to be fully reported. This order will not interfere with any existing duty of constables to report to their superior officers."

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That is limited to a case of unlawful possession?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) It is in that particular regulation, but Sir Edward knows whether that is general or not.

111. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That regulation to which Mr. Muir has made reference is one that is limited to unlawful possession?—Quite so.

112. (Chairman.) On page 266 there are regulations concerning inquiries as to the antecedents of prisoners, and they appear to apply when prisoners are committed for trial?—Yes.

113. Where are the regulations for making inquiries about persons apprehended for the offences with which we have been dealing this morning?—As a rule there would not be any special inquiry. The person arrested would be brought up the next morning before the magistrate, and it would only be in the event of the magistrate remanding him that further inquiries would be made. I think perhaps what you want as regards evidence in connection with the charge is at page 252 of the White Book—Regulations 199, 200, 201, and 202.

114. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That does not deal with the point I am asking about. That would deal with the case itself, and I will ask questions about that later on when the case is before us. What I was seeking to ascertain was what the course would be when a case of this kind arose (and it is better to confine ourselves to a case of this character), say of solicitation, or of a woman being charged with loitering under the Act, and then the magistrate remands the woman for inquiries. What course would then be pursued, and what rank would the officer have who would have charge of the inquiries to be made?—Perhaps I can give you a concrete illustration. In one of these cases the inquiry was made by the Assistant Commissioner, who got together all the different witnesses, took their statements, cross-examined them, and did what he could.

115. What case was that?—That was a case of drunkenness and disorderly conduct. As I say, that is an illustration.

116. Are you quite on the point on which I was putting the question to you, and that is as to inquiries which are made by direction of a magistrate in order to assist him, presumably, in determining whether or not he shall convict. That is the kind of inquiry I am referring to. The answer you made to me is not in relation to that, is it?—No.

117. That is an inquiry which arose after a question had been raised with regard to what had taken place in a particular case?—Quite.

118. I did not want you to tell me that now. What I did want to ascertain was the practice with regard to such inquiries to assist the magistrate in determining whether or not he should convict?—Whether the officer puts down the result of his inquiry in writing?

119. Yes, whether he would report in writing?—To the magistrate?

120. To the magistrate. I presume not. He would give his evidence, would he not?—He would give his evidence, but occasionally I think they merely mention to the magistrate what they have found out. They do not necessarily go into the witness-box and swear to it.

121. Is that so?—I should think so. In cases at the Central Criminal Court, when some information is required regarding an accused person, it might be as to whether he had been trying to lead an honest life or something of that sort; then I think the information is given without the officer going into the witness-box.

122. You do not suggest that at the Central Criminal Court the officer makes statements in connection with inquiries which are referred to him without going into the witness-box?—I think he may state what he has found out without going into the witness-box.

123. Of this character?—Yes; but we have an officer who has more experience as to that, and he will be able to tell you as regards that point. I have no actual personal knowledge of that myself.

124. I am surprised at the statement you make, but I think it would be very desirable that we should know whether that is so. I understand from what you said just now that at the Central Criminal Court a police officer would, as the result of making inquiries, communicate the result of those inquiries without going into the witness-box and giving evidence on oath?—I did not quite put it in that way. I say before sentence is passed it might be ascertained whether a particular person had been doing his best to earn a decent livelihood.

Sir E. R. Henry.
17 July 1906.

125. (Mr. Whitmore.) But not in a case where there is the same sort of charge as there is in this case?—No. It might be ascertained after the verdict had been given, only with a view of determining the sentence.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) My experience is that the officer has always gone into the witness-box and given his evidence on oath.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) May I say that at the Central Criminal Court the police invariably go into the box to give evidence, and on oath.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Yes, that is my impression.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Probably what Sir Edward Henry has in his mind are the Regulations which deal with the compiling of information for the purpose of an officer giving evidence. There, of course, it is all done outside and reduced to writing, and some of it is communicated to the gaoler to be put upon the Calendar. That, of course, is all done privately.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Of course, that we are all familar with.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) So far as evidence is concerned as to character, that is invariably given on oath in the witness-box.

126. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) The question I was putting to you was rather a different one from that. What I am asking you about is a point which, I think, actually arose in the d'Angeley case. I am not putting that question to you to ascertain what happened in that particular case, which we will deal with later on, but I am putting the question to you to ascertain what is the usual course. If a magistrate remands an accused person for the purpose of inquiry being made then inquiry would be made, I understand, by a sub-inspector, I think you said?—Yes, by some inspector—by an inspector or by the sub-divisional inspector.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) If I might make a suggestion, if you would inquire what the duties of the inspector are as to reporting with regard to any questions asked by the magistrate, that would probably assist you.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I think, if you will forgive me, I prefer to get the information in the way in which I desire it.

(Chairman.) We cannot contemplate the interference of counsel, although I do not wish to be discourteous, Mr. Muir.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) I must apologise. I thought I was helping, because I have personal experience of what takes place in police courts.

127. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That is what I am trying to ascertain. As I understand, an important matter takes place, and the magistrate remands the accused in order that inquiries may be made, and that is for the purpose of determining whether that person is known or whether it can be ascertained by the police that he is a person either of good or bad character. It is that inquiry that I want to know about, because then there is a report made, a statement is given to the magistrate, and that statement assists the magistrate in determining whether or not there should be a conviction. It is that inquiry to which I am directing attention. What I want to know with regard to that is, if you can tell me, this—if such an inquiry is made—by the sub-divisional inspector, for instance—which you referred to just now, whether he would make his report in writing, and, if so, to whom?—Whether he would make his report in writing in addition to making his statement?

128. Yes?—I should think in an important case he would, but I cannot specify the particular Regulation which requires him to do so.

129. I rather understood, from what you said before, and I am only anxious that we should be quite clear about it, that in a case of any importance what would happen would be that the officer would make a report to some one—to the head superintendent, I suppose, of that particular division—and that then that would go on the file with the rest of the papers in connection with that case. That is what I understood?—Yes, but the case, until the magistrate had disposed of it, would not be under our special consideration at all. Once the magistrate had disposed of it it might come again under our special consideration.

130. Certainly. But if that report were made it would be filed with the papers?—Yes. There would not necessarily be any papers in the case, because the person might have been arrested at night and charged in the morning, and the only paper before the magistrate would be the charge sheet, so that there would be no papers, probably, in the case. We should deal with the case again when once the magistrate had finished with it, if we had to deal with it at all.

131. In the case I refer to, merely for the purpose of bringing your attention to the point—the d'Angely case—a considerable amount of discussion took place with regard to that very shortly after the event. In such a case as that a report would be made, presumably in writing, would it not?—Yes. Probably afterwards the officer would be called upon to report as to any inquiries he had made in the case, but the statement he gave to the magistrate he probably would not have reported to us.

132. When you say "to us" whom do you mean?—To his superiors. If he made inquiry at the instance of, and by direction of, the magistrate, I do not know whether he would or would not report it to us. It did not come before me at all at that time.

133. (Mr. Whitmore.) That is before the case leaves the magistrate's court?—That is before the case leaves the magistrate's court. When it leaves the magistrate's court then any inquiry made would, of course, be reduced to writing and forwarded to the police authorities.

134. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) But before the case leaves the magistrate's court if he has made a report in writing I suppose it would be in court?—If he made a report in writing to the superintendent it would be there, and it would be forwarded and we should have it, I suppose.

135. I am anxious to know whether a report which was made by Inspector McKay was made in writing, and, if so, whether it is in existence?—That I do not know.

136. I will tell you why I am asking the question. Inspector McKay did make a report, or rather, to use a more neutral term, he made a communication as to the result of his inquiries. What I am anxious to know is whether in connection with those inquiries, he made a report in writing, and, if so, whether it is in existence?—I do not know, but I can find out. The superintendent is here, and he can tell you, I think.

137. I think, perhaps, we will deal with it when we come to the specific case. I only mention it in order that you may clearly understand what it is I am referring to. Now, will you tell me one other matter with regard to what you have described as the general course of conduct by the police. You said they give a warning to a woman. Would that be so in every case before a woman is arrested—that on that particular night or on that particular day she would receive a warning?—No, I think it would be at some previous time. I should think so, certainly.

138. She might have had a warning a month ago?—Quite. Of course, the magistrate when he is dealing with the case has to satisfy himself upon that as upon every other point.

139. Upon the question of "disorder," if I understand correctly what you have told us, magistrates have taken different views with regard to what it is necessary to prove in order to come under that particular section of 2 and 3 Victoria?—Quite so.

140. Then when a charge is made you do not always know whether the magistrate has convicted under that Statute or under another Statute, do you?—No, I do not.

141. That I want to be clear about?—I do not think the magistrate makes a return in the charge sheet showing under which Statute he has convicted.

142. Perhaps it makes no difference?—I think none whatever.

143. Otherwise, it is rather difficult to understand why you get so many convictions under one Statute at one police court and comparatively none at another, whereas there are a large number of convictions for the offence under another Statute. That is the explanation, is it?—Yes, that is the explanation.

144. And this is, so far as you can gather, the surmise of your officials as to what the magistrate intended to do when dealing with the case?—That is so.

145. You have given us Returns A and B. I want to be clear as to those. Piccadilly and Regent Street would be places in which this class of offence would be most likely to occur, would they not?—Yes, I should think so.

146. I gather that from what you said before. Have you ascertained what is the number of charges that were made for offences committed of this character in Regent Street and Piccadilly? I am not sure that we can get it from the return?—No, but I can get it from the charge sheets.

147. I have not examined it in detail, but it occurs to me on running through it that most of these offences were at other places?—Are you speaking of Return B?

148. Returns A and B?—They are the same thing, perhaps.

149. The only difficulty in taking Return B is that B does not show where the offence was committed, but Return A does. Return B is only, I gather, a summary of what we find in greater detail in Return A.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Return A has reference to a certain number of constables. Return B is the full return.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) We have much greater detail in Return A than we have in Return B.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Because it is the history of where the particular offence was committed.

(Witness.) If you take the first Return (A) you will see it deals with cases in Regent Street, Beak Street, Oxford Street, Wardour Street, Broad Street, Poland Street, and Argyll Street.

150. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I will tell you what I was going to suggest that you should do. You might supply us, if you see your way to do it, with the number of offences of this character in respect of which charges have been made during this period in Piccadilly and Regent Street?—Yes.

151. (Mr. Dickinson.) The Tables give the total under A Division and the total under B Division. Can you give us the Tables for all the divisions?—If you wish it.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I think it only applies to C and D.

(Witness.) C gives it to you, I think.

(Mr. Dickinson.) No, it does not give the divisions. C gives the total.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) In the very first column it shows the stations.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) You have the full information there.

152. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) If you would let us have that information which I have asked for I will not trouble you about other streets, but I should like particularly to know about Piccadilly and Regent Street, and to know what the particular number of charges were?—For six months?

153. Yes, for six months, if you will kindly do so. There is a question about the Bail Order I wish to ask to clear up something which otherwise is not quite plain. This Bail Order which you put in is dated June 16th, 1906, and you refer in particular to Sections 415 and 419 of that Bail Order. Had there been any change during the preceding two years, before June 16th, 1906, of those Orders?—Those are the original ones.

154. You will see why I am asking you the question. Those two sections would only enable us to deal with what has happened since June 16th, 1906. It may be the Orders were exactly the same, in which case we have the materials before us. If not we should like to know what the change is.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) We will check that for you.

155. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I suggest, as a simple way of doing it, that it should be checked, and if you would tell us any changes that have been made, tracing back from this date for the last two years, and limiting it to the two years, that would be of assistance to us?—Yes.

156. There is one other matter I want to ask you about in connection with payments. First of all, during the time that you have been Chief Commissioner, with the exception of those instances which you have given us of bookmakers, have there been any instances which have been brought to your notice of members of the Force receiving money?—No cases have actually come before me. I am quite prepared to say that there may have been a few cases in which the Assistant Commissioner may have thought the men may have taken money. As to that I cannot say; but the Assistant Commissioner who deals with those cases will be able to give you specific instances.

157. He knows more about that?—Yes. It has not come to my knowledge. The point I wish to make is this. I did not think that such a thing as a system with respect to it existed. I think the administrative arrangements are such that you could not have a system existing.

158. I quite understand that; but, apart from a system, as to which you have told us your view, suppose such a thing does happen, an isolated case, what I desire to know is, how would it be brought to the notice either of the Assistant Commissioner or of the Superintendent?—It might come by way of an anonymous letter.

159. Then would it be inquired into?—Certainly.

160. Presumably if such a state of things existed at all (I do not mean systematically), and if a woman were in fear of a particular constable or constables on a particular beat, of course she would be the last person to make a complaint?—She could complain anonymously.

161. Then you do get anonymous notes?—Yes, and we invariably take notice of anonymous letters.

162. Do you make the same inquiry into it, so far as you know, as you would in any other case?—I should certainly say so. It would go out to the Superintendent, and he would make an inquiry, and report to the Commissioner. The report would come to me.

163. Suppose such a letter went to the Superintendent of a division, would he communicate with you or would he hold an inquiry?—He would probably hold an inquiry and submit the papers to me.

164. If, in the result, he thought it was necessary?—Yes, if he thought it was necessary.

165. But suppose he came to the conclusion that there was no foundation for it, I suppose he would not communicate with you then, would he?—I certainly should not get the papers if he thought there was no foundation for it, but the result of his inquiry would be sent to the Assistant Commissioner.

166. During your time, during the last three and a half years, there have been such cases of anonymous complaints in connection with matters of this character, apart from bookmakers?—They have not come to me.

167. No; but have you heard of them?—I do not know that I have heard of them, but I understand that there have been some cases in which men have been got rid of for that or suspected of that, but very few; and they are so few that I really cannot remember when I last heard of one.

168. It is important to the Force and to the public generally that one should know how many of such cases there have been?—I can get you a return at once.

169. I think it is important. If you could get us a return, such as you have been kind enough to give us in connection with the other matters, of the complaints that have been made, and of the complaints that have been inquired into, and the result of the complaint in each case, throughout the metropolitan area, I think it would be desirable?—Certainly, we can get it out easily within a few days.

170. I think it would be of very great assistance?—For two years or for one year?

171. I should suggest for the last two years. I do not know whether I mentioned it. I think I did, but we want the result of the inquiry, that is, as to the judgment that was formed on it, and what happened to the particular constable with reference to whom we will assume for the moment that the charge was found to be true, or, at least, he was so seriously suspected of it that it led to some change in his situation?—Yes, I can get that information for you.

172. I do not wish to press you unduly upon this, but I gather from what you say you are naturally as anxious to give as we are to get the information?—Yes; but we were not told of this beforehand, so we have not got it ready. We have put in those returns because we thought they might be of use. We shall be only too glad to get any indication from the Commissioners of any information they want, and to get it as quickly as possible.

173. There may be cases in which constables have been so strongly suspected without proof being actually brought home that there has been some change made in their position?—I cannot call it to memory, and I think I would rather leave it until the return comes in.

174. Quite so. We will inquire into it then.

175. (Mr. Dickinson.) You said just now in answer to Mr. Isaacs that you thought there might be cases in which men have been got rid of. Can men be got rid of without your knowledge?—They could not have been got rid of without my knowledge. Every man who has had more than fifteen years' service cannot be got rid of without my special permission. Men with less than fifteen years' service can be dealt with by the Assistant Commissioner, whose proceedings I would subsequently see. With regard to men after fifteen years' service my approval would have to be obtained for them to be got rid of. They would always have a right to appeal; but my permission has to be obtained for the removal of a man.

176. Men with less than fifteen years' service can be dismissed by your subordinate?—By the Assistant Commissioner.

177. But not by anybody below him?—A superintendent has only power to impose punishment of two days' pay, and the Chief Constable can impose punishment of four days' pay, except in cases of drunkenness. The Assistant Commissioners have full powers of punishment subject to obtaining my sanction in certain cases.

178. Will you inform me what is the process that is gone through when a person is brought up? Take the case of a prostitute who is brought into a police station. Of course the constable is with her. That is the first process. What is the next process? What kind of inquiry is gone into?—The constable makes a statement and the station officer, who is responsible for refusing or accepting the charge, puts the questions to him which he thinks necessary in order to test his veracity in the matter. He then asks the person accused what he or she has to say, and upon that the station officer either takes or refuses the charge.

179. Who takes the charge?—Generally it is an inspector. It depends on the station.

180. That kind of inquiry takes place at once?—Then and there.

181. Can a person charged with drunkenness give an explanation?—Yes, except when he is in the cell.

182. Can he do so afterwards?—I do not think they invite him to do so.

183. What happens the next morning? The case of course has to be prepared in some way for the magistrate. Who does that?—I do not think there is any preparation of the case. The Charge Sheet is placed before the magistrate, and the constable gives his evidence.

184. The constable who arrests the accused person?—Yes.

185. Is there no organised arrangement?—No.

186. Is there no inquiry of any formal character at all as to how the case should be put?—No, it is put in that form. There is no time. The accused person is arrested at night, and comes before the magistrate at 10 o'clock in the morning.

187. The magistrate at that time has only the story of the two individuals—the policeman and the prostitute?—Unless a man at the station has made inquiry.

188. If the accused person is remanded, who is the man who investigates and formulates the case the next time it comes before the magistrate?—It is quite a new departure, but if it is likely to be a contentious case the superintendent now is instructed to get legal aid. Before there was no such arrangement.

189. You do in certain cases get legal assistance?—We are doing so now, but we have not done so in the past; or very seldom. There was no system, and the superintendent did not understand that he was authorised to apply.

190. The question of system has not been considered, except by the individual Commissioner?—Once the case is before the magistrate it is out of our hands. You cannot withdraw from the case then.

191. No case is considered by yourself or by the Assistant Commissioner at all?—Not with reference to the night charges.

192. Are any charges considered by you at all?—It would depend. In the case of a summons that would be considered, because a report has to be made, and the Assistant Commissioner would consider on reading the report whether he ought to apply for a summons.

193. In these cases you have an independent person who inquires into the case?—Yes.

194. Now, I want to ask you about the change of beat. You say that your system is that a constable should have a different beat every month. That does not mean that they move out of their particular area?—No, not one of the Divisional area.

195. For how long a time do constables remain in the division?—There is no rule as to that.

196. Is your principle rather to keep them in the same division or to move them about?—I think, as a rule, it is to keep them very much in the same division, unless a man gets promoted or is transferred or otherwise, on account of the expense.

197. Do you think that is a wise system?—Yes, as long as they are not brought back on to the same beat. I suppose it would take a man a couple of years before he would get back on to the same beat, even if he was always in the same division.

198. I understand that the beats in the division are so small that a man's round may be from one end of the street to another?—Some are like that. I suppose there are twenty beats, or something like that, next to each other, or portions of beats.

199. Are they changed on promotion?—Yes, they are changed on promotion.

200. Have they sections?—Yes.

201. Do they change their sections?—They are changed.

202. The inspectors are practically fixed?—No. They are transferred in the interests of the Service.

203. If the beats are changed about like this, how do the police get to be in a position to say that a particular individual is a prostitute. I understand that you have to prove, first of all, that a woman is a prostitute?—Yes.

204. That can only be done, I suppose, on the knowledge of the police constable?—You cannot say it is knowledge, because, if put to the proof, he might find it extremely difficult to prove: you can only infer.

205. But I suppose you can have proof?—The way he proves it, I suppose, is by noticing the woman's conduct. I do not know how you can give proof except by giving some sort of description of what they do.

206. In the case we have before us, the d'Angely case, was any proof given?—I suppose the officer said he had cautioned her before. I suppose he said he had seen her walking up and down Regent Street accosting people, and that he had cautioned her before.

207. And that is all the proof?—That is all the proof you can give absolutely.

208. With regard to the police stations, have you women attendants in all of them?—Yes.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) There are regulations about that.

209. (Mr. Whitmore.) I want to be quite clear as to the system of promotion, because it seems to work out in the end that there are hardly any officers except those who have been originally constables. Are you quite clear that all officers are promoted from the ranks?—Yes.

210. Would you mind describing the system of promotion?—From being a constable his first promotion would be to section sergeant, and he would get that in a little over eight years; and from being section sergeant he would be promoted to be a station sergeant, and from being a station sergeant he would be promoted to inspector.

211. All inspectors have originally been sergeants?—Yes. Then, being an inspector, he might be promoted to be a sub-divisional inspector, and from being a sub-divisional inspector, he would be promoted to chief inspector, and from being chief inspector he would be promoted to be a superintendent.

212. Every superintendent has risen from the ranks?—Yes, then there is the Commissioner, the Assistant Commissioners and Chief Constable.

213. Under the Chief Constable a Superintendent is the highest position?—Yes.

214. Is every superintendent a man who has started from the rank of constable?—Yes.

215. And the only men who have not been in that position are the Commissioner, the Assistant Commissioner, and the chief constable?—Yes.

216. I do not wish to express any opinion upon the matter, but do you think it would be desirable that there should be additional officers imported from outside to fill the office of the superintendent or other offices?—No.

217. The matter seems to have been one deserving of consideration, and by-and-bye I shall certainly try to find out which would be best. I have no opinion of my own about it, but I should like to know sooner or later whether it would not be well that there should be a large number of superior officers who have not risen from the ranks?—I have had experience of police elsewhere where officers such as you contemplate have been brought in, and what I found there to some extent was that they had not the same actual knowledge, and they did not gain the same knowledge (I cannot tell why) as the men who had themselves been constables and had worked right up from the ranks, and, in consequence of their not having the same knowledge, they were not so effective in preventing abuses as the men who were in the know with regard to what was going on. To that extent there is a great advantage in having a man who has been right through the mill, and if 20 or 22 men come right through their horses and become superintendents they must be exceptional men and have strong qualities, and, of course, they have great knowledge and experience. They have seen police work in all its phases, and they know how a constable in the street ought to behave if he behaves properly. If it is a question of shirking duty or anything else they are much more skilful and experienced in detecting that than any man who could be brought from outside, or however cute he might be. Those are all advantages.

218. Then I gather you are really distinctly of opinion that the present system works well?—If I were a dictator I should not be prepared from my knowledge at the present moment to change it.

219. As the system is worked does promotion go according to the Division? Is the Superintendent of Division A probably a man who has been a sergeant in Division A?—No. For instance, if there was a vacancy to-morrow I should look through the list of chief inspectors, and I should select the officer who by service and by merit in my opinion was the most qualified for promotion, and he might or might not come from that division, I could not say, or he might come from any other division. He might never have served in that division.

220. Do you think it would be an advantage that a superintendent should have had experience in the lower grade in that particular district?—No; his experience would have been so remote if he had been there as a constable, and he would have spent so many years in the higher grade as inspector, and so on that I do not think it would matter very much. The Force changes very rapidly, and after five years' service there is continual change.

221. As regards not shifting constables from one division to another I suppose the reason for that is because of the fact that many of the men are married men and householders?—Yes.

222. And they would have to move?—Yes; perhaps they may have taken leases. It is a very difficult matter to move them about.

223. (Chairman.) I have only one or two questions to ask you, and the first is with regard to solicitation in the streets. The evidence you have given to us only deals with solicitation by women and men. Are there any cases brought to your notice in which women are molested by men?—No, it does not take that form. There are cases in which men solicit men for immorality.

224. That I follow, but the case I was thinking of was the case in which this may be taken as a type. A woman walking up Regent Street, a man follows her and talks to her several times; would a constable noticing that kind of conduct, and noticing that the lady was visibly embarrased take any action?—He might.

225. Under what Statute would he act in that case?—He would act under the Vagrancy Act of 1898, I think. It is an amendment of the regular Vagrancy Act.

226. The words are "(1) Every male person who (a) knowingly lives wholly or in part on the earnings of prostitution, or (b) in any public place persistently solicits or importunes for immoral purposes"?—I do not know the history of that amendment, but I think it was really framed to deal with such cases as you refer to. As a matter of practice, it is used for the other class of cases.

227. Then if a constable simply saw a man speaking to a lady under the circumstances I have taken as typical, unless he knows that the man is persistently doing it, he sees no duty cast upon him to apprehend the man?—No, unless he is persistently doing it, I suppose.

228. You mean the adverb "persistently" there refers to some particular occasion, or some particular day, time, and place?—Yes. I do not know what interpretation the particular court would put upon the word persistently.

229. The words are "Every male person who (a) knowingly lives wholly or in part on the earnings of prostitution, or (b) in any public place persistently solicits or importunes for immoral purposes." That may indicate persistent solicitation by a man who habitually frequents the thoroughfare for that purpose. It may be limited to that class of case?—As far as I know, that particular section is hardly used at all for the purpose for which it was framed, but it comes in very useful to deal with the other class of cases. It is summary procedure.

230. What happens in a case if someone goes to a police station and complains that a constable has been inactive, or that a constable has been discourteous to him or to her? Suppose, for instance, in the case I have indicated, a lady goes up to a constable and says, "Observe that man. He has been following me; he has been talking to me," and the constable refuses to take any action, and the lady then goes to the police station. Would any formal notice be taken of her complaint. I assume she would be received with courtesy?—Yes, certainly. I know of cases where ladies have complained of a constable being discourteous. We have made inquiry, and we have punished the constable.

231. Such cases have, in fact, arisen?—Yes.

232. Is the complaint by the person coming to the police station taken down in writing?—Yes.

233. The complaint by the person complaining?—Yes.

234. Then an inquiry is made by the station inspector?—Yes.

235. And, if need be, the complainant is not called upon to come there again. That is all I will ask you about that topic. Now, supposing a person has been apprehended for drunkenness and is taken to a police station and put into a cell, supposing he asked for a doctor, or that his own doctor might be sent for, what does happen according to the Regulations?—His doctor would be sent for.

236. In that case, of course, he would pay his own doctor?—Yes.

237. But supposing that course is not taken, and that the divisional surgeon is called in to inspect the prisoner and form an opinion as to whether he is then or has been drunk, who has to pay the doctor?—If the private person asks to have the divisional surgeon called in he would pay for him.

238. What is his fee?—I think it is 7s. 6d. for a night and 3s. 6d. for a day visit.

239. Then there is a regular fee?—Yes; there is a regular scale fee.

240. The doctor cannot charge what he likes?—No.

241. There is one matter which I think we did not exhaust, and that is the question of the discipline exercised over police constables. What are the grades of punishment? Supposing no punishable offence has been committed at common law, but a constable has been found guilty of impropriety as a constable, and is no longer a fit man to remain in the Force, I suppose the ultimate penalty is dismissal from the Force?—Yes.

242. Is there any other punishment?—He might be punished by fine, or by stoppage of leave, or he might be transferred, which would entail a certain amount of expense.

243. (Mr. Dickinson.) Could we have a Table prepared showing the total number of persons who have been accused over the last twenty years, with a certain amount of detail?—Yes.

244. Table C shows an enormous increase during the last four years?—You want a Table over a period of twenty years?

245. Yes, and for drunkenness, too?—Yes.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Do you want the whole of the information, or only the totals?

246. (Mr. Dickinson.) The totals?—The totals for the Metropolitan Police District.

(Chairman.) If convenient to you, Sir Edward, we shall now adjourn to Monday, at 12 o'clock, when the case which has been referred to by Mr. Rufus Isaacs, the d'Angely case, will be heard. I mean we shall issue summonses to all such persons as we think can throw light upon the case that was heard before Mr. Denman. Perhaps the surgeon might be able to give us evidence as to the actual injury sustained. Perhaps he might come on Monday.

(Witness.) Very good.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) There are two questions I am asked to mention. One is with reference to the case you will hear on Monday. Do you wish that the Police should supply you with the names of persons in this country who they think might possibly throw light upon it? We can supply you with the names, if you wish it.

(Chairman.) I think the course to be adopted is that the Police should send the names of those persons to Mr. Leslie, and of course it will be of assistance to him and to us if a short statement is made as to what the persons whose names are given are prepared to prove.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) If you please. There is another matter I might mention, and that is this. We have information outside this country which we are desirous of placing before you, if you desire it to be placed before you.

(Chairman.) I think it had better be communicated to Mr. Leslie. Then we shall hear of it and will come to a decision with regard to it.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Some gentleman has asked to be supplied with a copy of the Commissioner's Statement and Returns. I do not like allowing that to be done without your sanction. A statement has been given here.

(Chairman.) All the evidence to-day has been taken in public, and any document handed in is open to the public.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) If you please.

SECOND DAY.

Monday, 23rd July 1906.

PRESENT:

Sir DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, K.C., M.P. (Chairman).

RUFUS DANIEL ISAACS, Esq., K.C., M.P.

WILLOUGHBY HYETT DICKINSON, Esq., M.P. (Barrister-at-Law).

CHARLES ALGERNON WHITMORE, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law).

J. W. ST. LAWRANCE LESLIE, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law), (Secretary).

(Chairman.) Mr. Eldon Bankes, I believe your clients have been informed that Mr. Booth, the Clerk of the Commission, delivered to Mme. D'Angely and M. D'Angely on Thursday night, the 19th inst., in Paris a letter requesting them to attend here to-day as witnesses, and they said they could not do so to-day, but they would do so later in the month. Under those circumstances the Commissioners have determined not to proceed with the D'Angely case to-day, but we understand Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette, who also have a complaint to make against the Police are here, and I am informed by the Secretary that your clients are ready to take that case to-day.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes, that is so, Sir.

(Chairman.) Is Dr. Gerothwohl here?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) Yes, Sir.

(Chairman.) Is Mr. Lavalette here?

(Mr. Lavalette.) Yes, Sir.

(Chairman.) Are you prepared to go on with your complaint against the Police?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) We are, Sir.

(Chairman.) I may say for your information, Mr. Bankes, and for the information of the Police, that we have asked M. and Mme. D'Angely to come here on Monday next. They told Mr. Booth, the Clerk, that they were ready to come later in the month, and Monday next will be the 30th.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Very well, Sir.

(Chairman.) Are Messrs. Gerothwohl and Lavalette represented by counsel or solicitor?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) We have a solicitor, Mr. Paice, assisting us, but we are not represented by counsel.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) On the last occasion, Sir, you asked for some returns with reference to injuries to police, and Dr. Dent, the Chief Surgeon, is here, who prepared the returns. I do not know whether you would propose to deal with that first.

(Chairman.) No, we do not propose to take that general evidence at present. We shall be very glad if the Chief Surgeon will attend later, at a date to be fixed by us, to give us the general evidence that we indicated.

Dr. MAURICE ALFRED GEROTHWOHL, sworn.

247. (Chairman.) Where do you live now?—I am residing for the present at 8, Alma Terrace, Kensington.

248. Where do you ordinarily reside?—I divide my time between Dublin and London. I reside about six months in Dublin.

249. You are a lecturer in French?—I am honours lecturer in French at Trinity College, Dublin.

250. Are you a member of the Royal Society of Literature?—I am.

251. And an examiner in French to the Welsh Educational Board?—I am.

252. You are staying at 8, Alma Terrace with Mr. Lavalette?—Yes.

253. Were you staying with him there in April last?—I was.

254. On Saturday, the 7th April, you went into Piccadilly in the evening?—Yes.

255. And a few minutes past midnight you were arrested?—We were arrested about midnight, or five minutes past.

256. Would you kindly tell us your story in your own way?—Shall I tell it from the very beginning of the evening or from midnight?

257. You had better start a little earlier than that?—On coming out of 8, Alma Terrace at about 7.30 that evening I intended to go to dine in town as I usually did. I met Mr. Lavalette, who was coming from his office. I asked Mr. Lavalette to join me, as I had nothing to do that evening, and we took a 'bus in Cromwell Road to Knightsbridge, and then another to Piccadilly, and we went to dine at the Monico. In the course of that dinner we had one glass of lager beer each; that was all the drink we had. I produced the bill at Marlborough Street.

258. Showing what you had in the place there?—I handed the bill to Mr. Denman at Marlborough Police Court. We remained at the Monico slightly over an hour, and shortly after 9 o'clock we left and proceeded towards Soho. On Saturday evening the Soho Market takes place, a most interesting cosmopolitan sight. I told that to Mr. Lavalette, and suggested that we should visit it. Before going there we passed through Dean Street, and stopped at a little Greek coffee-house, and there we had a cup of coffee, and later on a lemonade or syrup. We remained there between thirty and forty minutes, and then we walked through the Soho Market.

259. Before that had you been into a café where you got the coffee, or where did you go to get that?—In Dean Street at the Greek coffee-house. On leaving that coffee-house we went through Soho Market, and when we got to the end of the market in a sort of square there was a temperance missioner, who was preaching, and we remained there for half an hour, very nearly three-quarters of an hour, listening to his speech. It was rather an amusing scene. I remember one man was complaining of toothache, and there was quite a scene, the poor temperance missioner trying to get away from this individual. On leaving this temperance meeting we came back towards Piccadilly, and about 10.45 under the Regent Street arcades we met Mr. Sherrington, a barrister, a friend of Mr. Lavalette. I had met Mr. Sherrington before. We talked under the arcades for about ten minutes or a quarter of an hour, and then Mr. Sherrington suggested that he had left his bag at the Trocadero, where, I believe, he had dined, so we all proceeded to the Trocadero, and there we remained about another half an hour. Mr. Sherrington happened to mention that he had a friend, or had had a friend, living with him who was a Trinity man, and so we started discussing the question of Trinity with very great detail, about the various men at the University, and so forth, and we also got on to a wider sphere of educational questions. I remember very well discussing the question of compulsory Greek, and telling him that I owed my appointment at Trinity to the abolition of compulsory Greek, and that nevertheless I was against that abolition. Also, I remember Mr. Lavalette discussing the question of a commercial university in connection with a technological institute which it was proposed to erect in London. That is the kind of topic we discussed till about 11.30, and then Mr. Sherrington parted company from us to take his 'bus, and we then walked down Coventry Street to Leicester Square, and about. Then we went down Lower Regent Street, keeping in the middle of the road as the pavement was very rowdy. There were a great many people coming out of the theatres who also were walking down in the same way to have a look at the students, who were rather rowdy, as is usual on that night. On coming back towards Piccadilly we came back on the pavement, and then proceeded down Piccadilly in order to take our 'bus home. That was about midnight. Just shortly before reaching St. James's Church, although people were very rowdy behind, there was no crowding just around us. There was a crowding a good many yards ahead, some young men in a ring, and between that crowd and ourselves there was a youth walking very quietly by the side of the kerb. At that moment a police constable, whom we found afterwards was 43 C R, pushed past us this way—(describing)—and pushed the young man forward, and then shoved him this way—(describing)—and the youth fell against a hansom cab which was standing there. Then he pulled him up and took him in charge and crossed the road with him. I then said to Mr. Lavalette: "This is really too bad, let us go and give our cards to the inspector." I said that or its equivalent to him in French. We together crossed the road a good way behind them, and we noticed at the corner of Swallow Street and Piccadilly another constable, who was coming from the Sackville Street direction take hold of young Timmings on the other side. There was Police Constable No. 43 C, there was Timmings, and there was the other constable, and they all went up Swallow Street. We followed, gradually gaining on them, and towards the middle of Swallow Street we were nearly abreast, when Mr. Lavalette stooped forward to look at No. 43, who was on the extreme left, to take his number. We then turned the corner of Swallow Street and Vine Street, and just as we were turning I just glanced round like that—(describing)—and I saw a man in blue—of course it was a policeman in his blue uniform. I did not stop to look at him, but I saw there was a policeman standing there. Then we proceeded behind them very closely towards Vine Street Police Station. Just before we reached the station I noticed there were two policemen standing one on each side of the entrance. There was No. 43, there was Timmings, and the police constable, who turned out to be No. 427 C, all in front, we following. Just as I put my foot on the first or second step I was seized from behind, shoved forward up the steps, and on the staircase Police Constable 43 let go of Timmings, turned round, and facing me this way he seized me, twisted me round, and flung me on to another constable. That constable flung me back. I was again seized by No. 43, and twisted into the dock. As I was twisted into the dock I saw Mr. Lavalette following, spinning round from one policeman to another. It reminded me rather of a game of skittles with human nine-pins, in which, I am afraid, the ball suffered more than the nine-pins. Timmings was already in the dock when I came. I immediately protested.

Dr. M. A. Gerothwohl.
23 July 1906.

260. What did you say when you protested?—I did not protest then; I protested about half a minute afterwards, when the inspector came in. The inspector came in walking from the room in front of Vine Street Police Station. The charge-room is here, and there is a room here (describing). I saw Inspector Berry emerge from that room, and walk to the desk, which is there. About half-way between the opening leading to that room and the desk he stopped a minute, and just turned round and looked at us, and then he sat down at the desk. Then I immediately began protesting and flourishing my card. I said, "I want it to be given to the inspector." It was dealt with in this sort of way: "We do not want your card." I remember even the inspector said that himself. I went on flourishing my card, and mentioned that I should write to the Provost of my University, and of course I was in a great fury. At that moment I was holding the rail of the dock, and with my stick alongside. I was flourishing my card with the other hand. Police Constable C.R. 43 pulled my stick away, and broke it deliberately across his knee. The pieces were produced at Marlborough Street. Then my card was eventually taken. I was asked my name and address, and so forth.

261. That was by the inspector, I presume?—Yes.

262. Had a charge been made against you then? Had any one of the policemen spoken to the inspector?—The policeman spoke to the inspector, but there was such a row at the station that I really did not hear what he said.

263. What did the inspector say to you?—I do not remember him saying anything to us. He read the charge to us.

264. Had he been writing in the book then?—I do not think so. The charge was read out. I heard something about drunk and disorderly.

265. When you were in the dock, before the stick had been taken away from you, I understand that you protested?—Very strongly.

266. What did you say?—I said we had come about this third man, Timmings.

267. Then that stick was taken away from you?—Yes. The thing went on. While I was protesting like this, the policeman pulled my stick away and broke it, and I turned round and saw him break it.

268. Then the inspector read from the book?—The inspector read from the book the charge.

269. That you were drunk and disorderly?—Yes. I did not hear where, because there was an uproar in the place. There were a great many police constables in the station, and a great deal of chattering going on.

270. Had the inspector said anything before he spoke to you or charged you?—I do not remember that he did.

271. Did he charge you before he charged Mr. Lavalette?—No; we were charged together, as far as I remember. We were in the dock together, the three of us.

272. He did not speak to you separately?—He did not speak to me separately, although I insisted on my card being taken, and although I thought when he took it he might have noted who I was, and asked for an explanation which I offered to give.

273. Is that all that took place while you were in the dock?—I think that is all, except that as soon as we were in the dock, just before the inspector came in, I took out a piece of paper and wanted to take the numbers of the constables, and Mr. Lavalette did the same.

274. What happened next?—When the charge had been read out, the bar of the dock was raised, and I walked up straight to the desk where Inspector Berry was sitting, and said to him, "Do you really think we are drunk?" He replied, "Yes." Then we were searched. I was searched by Policeman C.R. 43, somewhat roughly. I do not want to emphasise that point, but I remember him saying to me, when he was putting his hands into my trousers pockets, "I am not going to rob you." Then we were marched off to the cells—that is to say, shoved off at the beginning by these police. The warders were quite different; I beg to say that.

275. Were you taken to separate cells?—No; we were placed in the same cell, and two other men were afterwards brought into that cell. There was another point I forgot to mention. When I was still in the dock I asked to communicate with my friends, and said, "I wish to write to my friends," and I was told that I should certainly have that opportunity. I asked that again when we were led off by the police, and a young constable promised to bring pens and paper, but it was never brought. Then we were left in the cell for something between 20 minutes and half an hour, and then a warder came along with a man in civilian clothes. I imagined that man might be possibly a superintendent, and wishing to appeal to him I said to the warder, "Who is that?" He said, "Never mind that gentleman." Then he asked me if I wanted to send for a friend, and I said I wanted to send for a friend of mine who was a doctor—Dr. Stewart—and he seemed very averse to send for the doctor. He said private doctors do not like coming, but I insisted. He also wanted to know why I wanted to send for Mr. Charles Graves. I said I wished to send to him for private reasons, because he knew the people at my University. He again called it excessive, but still he promised to send for them. I wanted to write, but he said the police would send the message themselves. Then we were left over an hour.

276. Did you give Dr. Stewart's address?—Yes.

277. And Mr. Graves' address?—Yes.

278. Verbally?—Yes, they were taken down on a slate—either a piece of paper or a slate, but I am almost sure it was a slate. The warder had a slate. Then we were left for an hour or an hour and ten minutes, and about 2.15 Inspector Berry came and informed us that Dr. Stewart had declined to attend, and they had not sent for the other gentleman. Then he suggested we should see the Divisional Surgeon, to which I and Mr. Lavalette readily assented.

279. Was that almost immediately after the names had been written on the slate? How long elapsed between the writing the names on the slate and the next conversation with the warder?—As I say, from an hour to an hour and a quarter.

280. Then after about an hour you saw the warder again?—No; Inspector Berry came himself.

281. Did he say anything about Dr. Stewart?—Yes; he said Dr. Stewart had declined to attend. He would not come.

282. Then it was this inspector who suggested the Divisional Surgeon?—It was this inspector who suggested the Divisional Surgeon.

283. And you assented?—We assented readily. Then we were brought into the charge-room again, and I was brought back into the corridor leading to the cells by Dr. Mitchell, who was there, and Police Constable C.R. 43 and a young warder—the one, I believe, who had promised to bring us pens and papers. Then Dr. Mitchell examined me, and looked at my eyes with an instrument. I said, "Surely you cannot say I look drunk," to which he said, "Well, perhaps; but you may have had time to recover by now." Then he examined my eyes with an instrument, and asked me what I had had to drink. I said I had had one lager beer at dinner and a whisky and soda later. Then he called Police Constable C.R. 43, and asked him what was the charge, and then for the first time I heard Police Constable C.R. 43 say, "Brawling in Piccadilly, and shoving people off the pavement," and two or three other sentences which I cannot recollect textually. Dr. Mitchell after that made me walk to and fro in the corridor. After the examination was ended I noticed one thing. Just after the examination was closed, Police Constable C.R. 43 made a sort of movement as if to lead me back to the cells. I stood just between the doctor and the warder, and proceeded towards the charge-room, and went towards the inspector's desk when I saw the inspector nodding to me to come along. Then Mr. Lavalette was called in for his examination. While he was being examined I had a talk with another inspector, who had not been there, I presume, when the affair occurred, and I related to him the affair. I told him about this poor youth, Timmings, who was weeping in the other cell and apologising to the police—I do not know for what offence—and so forth; and the inspector said to me, "Why interfere?" He said, "Of course, I was not there."

284. Then Mr. Lavalette was examined?—Yes.

285. Were you present?—No.

286. Then Mr. Lavalette joined you?—Yes, and Dr. Mitchell went and said a few words to the inspector, and then we were asked, "Can you prove to us where you live?" and I produced my British Museum card and various other papers, and then we were made to sign a book, which turned out to be a recognisance in £2 to appear, and then we were let out.

287. You went to Alma Terrace?—No, we went immediately down Piccadilly, and a little before reaching Hyde Park Corner we took a cab to Dr. Ivor Davis, of 3, Drayton Terrace, who made a very, very thorough examination of us, and kept us at his house three-quarters of an hour or forty minutes talking to us after his examination. Then after that we left and went to another doctor, Dr. Walker, of 5, Marloes Road, whom we reached about 4 o'clock. He also saw us for some time, and made us talk, and so forth, and then we went off to Alma Terrace, and appeared on Monday at Marlborough Street.

288. The case was remanded, I think?—The case was remanded for two days.

289. It came on on Wednesday, April 11th?—Yes.

290. And the magistrate discharged you?—The magistrate discharged us.

291. That is your story?—That is my story.

(Chairman.) Do you wish to cross-examine, Mr. Eldon Bankes?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I should like to ask some questions, if you will allow me.

(Chairman.) Certainly.

Cross-examined by Mr. Eldon Bankes.

292. I understand you do not live in London?—I do not now; I divide my time between Dublin and London.

293. On the occasion when this happened you were staying with Mr. Lavalette?—Yes, for six weeks on my Easter vacation.

294. When did you come to London?—About the 23rd March.

295. You had been in London from the 23rd March up to this day, the 7th April?—Yes.

296. Had you been to the boat-race?—No, I do not take much interest in the boat-race.

297. How had you been occupying yourself during the day?—In the morning I was working, probably at my editorial work that I have to do.

298. Do you remember what you were doing in the morning?—I cannot absolutely guarantee, but that was my most likely occupation that morning. I do not know.

299. Did you lunch at home or out, do you remember?—I lunched at home, I should say.

300. Do you remember?—I could not swear, but it is very likely. I generally lunched at home and dined out.

301. Do you remember what you did between lunch time and 7 o'clock?—Yes, I had a friend to tea.

302. Were you in the whole afternoon?—I was in the whole afternoon after 4 o'clock, at any rate.

303. What were you doing between lunch and 4?—I believe I was over at my mother's house.

304. Do you remember or not—I am only testing your recollection. Do you remember what you were doing?—No, I could not tell you exactly.

305. Then I understand about 7 o'clock you went with Mr. Lavalette, intending to dine somewhere in the West End?—That is so.

306. Had you been in London on a previous occasion on boat-race night?—I have been in London on several boat-race nights, but I never pay any attention to the fact. I have never been out on a boat-race night.

307. I think you know there is considerable disorder in the neighbourhood of Piccadilly Circus on boat-race nights?—Yes, I have been told so, but I did not go to see the boat-race night.

308. At the time you went to dine with your friend you knew?—I did not. I never thought of the thing in that way.

309. When did you first become aware it was boat-race night?—Just as we were coming back from Soho, when we saw the crowd beginning to be rowdy.

310. You have told the Commissioners what you did, and what you had to drink. You were represented by counsel, were you not, on the first occasion of the hearing before the magistrate?—We were.

311. Did you go to a solicitor early on the Monday morning that you appeared before the magistrate?—No, we wired on Sunday to our friend Mr. Paice to be present. He was in the country.

312. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You said you were represented by counsel on the first occasion. Was it only on the first occasion?—No, we were represented by counsel on the second occasion, too.

313. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) You saw your solicitor about this matter on Sunday?—Yes.

314. Did you tell him the whole story of what had happened?—Yes.

315. And what you had to drink?—And what we had to drink.

316. I suppose he instructed your counsel?—Yes.

317. The reason I ask you is this: do you remember your counsel cross-examining Dr. Mitchell?—Yes, on the second day.

318. Your counsel asked this question of Dr. Mitchell: "I asked Dr. Gerothwohl what liquor he had had. He said he had had one beer and one whisky. I do not remember his saying he had it at dinner. I do not remember his saying he had a brandy and soda about 11." Did your counsel ask Dr. Mitchell whether or not you told him that you had had beer and whisky at dinner and a brandy and soda about 11?—Would you mind repeating that question?

319. I will read it to you. This is the cross-examination of your counsel on the second occasion: "I asked Dr. Gerothwohl what liquor he had had"—that is in answer to your counsel's question. "He said he had had one beer and one whisky. I do not remember him saying he had it at dinner." That was in answer to your counsel's question whether you had not told him that you had had beer and whisky at dinner—"I do not remember his saying he had had a brandy and soda about 11"?—I know Dr. Mitchell said that.

320. That was in answer to your counsel's question. Your counsel asked him: "Did Dr. Gerothwohl tell you that he had had beer and whisky at dinner"?—No, pardon me, I do not find that in my notes, and I have a verbatim note.

(Chairman.) What are you reading?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) From the cross-examination of Dr. Mitchell.

(Chairman.) But from what are you reading?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) From the depositions—the magistrate's clerk's notes is the correct name really.

(Witness.) I have here a verbatim report. "(Q.) Did he tell you he had one glass of beer at dinner?—(A.) I forget whether at dinner; I did not take a note of that at the time."

321. (Chairman.) What do you say to that?—I do not know how the brandy came in.

322. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Did you hear your counsel ask Dr. Mitchell whether you had not told him you had a brandy as well as whisky?—I do not remember the brandy as well as whisky, and I cannot find it on my verbatim notes.

323. You say you have a verbatim report. What is that taken from?—The shorthand notes. The shorthand writer is here, and he will swear to it.

324. (Chairman.) You say that what Mr. Eldon Bankes has read to you is not in the shorthand note?—It is not in the shorthand note that we are going to prove.

325. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) We will see the shorthand note when it comes. I can only deal with such materials as I have got. I understand you went up to Soho?—Yes.

326. Did you take any note of the time at which you left the Cafe Monico or the time you went to Soho?—Yes, we left the Cafe Monico between 9.10 and 9.15. I looked at the clock, and I remembered that.

327. Did you take any note of the time at all between that time and the time you met your friend in Regent Street?—I do not remember doing so.

328. With regard to the time, you are speaking to the best of your recollection?—Yes.

329. Before you met your friend in Regent Street did you see the crowds collected in Piccadilly Circus?—Yes, when we went down Coventry Street.

330. Was that before or after you left your friend?—That was after.

331. And before you met him did you see the crowds there?—No, I noticed the crowd when we were with him at the Trocadero—just about there.

332. You noticed the crowd there?—Yes.

333. You realised what crowd it was, I suppose?—Yes.

334. A crowd collected on Boat Race night, and from your previous experience you knew that it was a disorderly crowd?—I beg your pardon, I said I had no previous experience of Boat Race nights.

Dr. M. A. Gerothwohl.

23 July 1906.

335. Perhaps "previous experience" is the wrong phrase. Let me say previous knowledge. You knew that disorderly crowds did collect there?—No, not worse than at the C.I.V.'s or on most Saturdays—or on some Saturdays.

336. Realising that, you walked down Coventry Street in the first place?—I did.

337. Was there a crowd proceeding in that direction?—There was rather a crowd coming down as we were coming up.

338. Were they shouting and booing, and behaving generally in a disorderly way?—The crowd was not very bad at that spot.

339. Then you came back down Coventry Street and went down Regent Street?—Yes.

340. Was there a very considerable disorderly crowd there?—There was a disorderly crowd as the people emerged from the Continental Hotel.

341. Did you walk with the crowd down Regent Street?—We did not. We were in the middle of the road looking at the crowd emerging. There were a number of people, respectable elderly people, looking at these young men coming out.

342. Did you go down to the bottom of Regent Street?—We went as far as Charles Street.

343. And then you turned back and came back again?—We stood for a short while with these other people, who were in the middle of the road.

344. And then you walked up again towards Piccadilly Circus?—Yes.

345. Was there a considerable crowd then at Piccadilly Circus?—Yes, there was.

346. Did you see the Police endeavouring to move them on?—Yes, as usual—that crowd approaching from that restaurant.

347. Were the Police endeavouring to get them to pass on down Piccadilly out of Piccadilly Circus?—I did not notice it to be so bad once we were in Piccadilly. I did notice it at the Circus, but once we had passed the Circus and went down Piccadilly it was not so bad. We went down on the pavement.

348. I think you said this to the magistrate—I am speaking again from the magistrate's clerk's notes: "There was a great deal of rowdyism"?—I was speaking generally, of course.

349. You mean a great deal of rowdyism in Piccadilly Circus and the adjoining streets?—In the adjoining streets. As I have said, all down Regent Street it was very bad.

350. Then you and your friend proceeded to walk down Piccadilly westward?—Yes, where we wanted to take our 'bus.

351. Was there a considerable crowd all round you—both behind you and in front of you?—There was a crowd behind us in the beginning of Piccadilly, and then the crowd lessened and when we got towards St. James's Church we were almost alone for say, ten, fifteen, or twenty yards.

352. Was there a considerable crowd coming behind you westward down Piccadilly?—Yes.

353. Were they booing and shouting?—A little I should say.

354. Were you and your friend and this young man Timmings at the head of that crowd?—We were not at the head in any way. What do you mean by "at the head"?

355. In front of it?—Simply in front?

356. Yes?—Yes, we were in front, but I do not think they were just behind us. I did not turn round to see.

357. Just when you got to about St. James' Church did some police come and first of all ask the crowd generally and yourselves and everybody there to desist from making a noise?—They did not ask us, and I did not notice whether they asked anyone else.

358. Did you hear them ask?—I did not—not just at that spot.

359. Did you notice two constables?—You are speaking, of course, of the crowd behind us.

360. I am now speaking of the place opposite St James' Church. Did two constables then come and stand in front of the crowd, and in the first place ask them to stop making a noise?—Do you mean behind us?

361. No, in front of you?—I stated in my evidence that in front of us about ten yards ahead at the further side of St. James' Church there was a crowd of young men collected.

362. Do you mean in front of you?—Yes.

363. Westward of you?—Yes.

364. Were those men arm in arm?—Yes, they formed a circle, and they seemed to be arm in arm entirely—in fact, I am sure they were.

365. How many were there should you say?—Not more than ten, I should say.

366. Were they booing and shouting and yelling?—They were.

367. Did you see or hear any police in front of them?—How could I see? They would have been between the police and myself.

368. Could you not see if there had been any police in front of them?—Do you mean the front towards the south?

369. No, further westward, and there standing facing them?—I could not see through them.

370. You do not suggest to the Commission that if there had been police there you could not have seen them because of these men in front of you?—I was not attaching great importance to these men at all.

371. I suggest to you that there were a number of men arm in arm across the pavement on the west side, that is to say, next the church?—I do not recollect it.

372. And that you were one of those men?—I deny that absolutely.

373. And the two constables got in front of you, faced you, and asked you to desist from making a noise?—I deny that absolutely.

374. Was the man Timmings arrested there and then on the pavement opposite St. James's Church?—Yes.

375. Which constable do you say arrested him?—Constable C.R. 43.

376. His name is Isaacson, is it not?—Yes.

377. Let him stand forward. (A police constable stood forward.) Do you recognise him?—I do.

378. Is that the man who arrested Timmings?—That is the man who arrested Timmings.

379. When he arrested him, what did he do with him?—When do you make him arrest him? Do you mean after he had been thrown down, or as soon as he pushed him?

380. I asked you whether you saw him arrested, and you said "Yes"?—I saw the constable pull him up, after he had shoved him, and drag him away.

381. Do you suggest that Timmings was thrown down?—I do—thrown against a hansom cab.

382. And thrown to the ground?—Yes, like this (describing)—in a slanting way. He could not fall completely to the ground because the wheel of the cab was there.

383. Did Timmings ever make any complaint of the way in which the police had treated him?—Timmings was weeping and apologising to the police very much

384. That is not an answer to my question. Did Timmings ever in your hearing make any complaint about the way the police had treated him?—Yes. He said when he was put into the cell that he felt very ill because he had been thrown. He was ill before, but that made him worse—something to that effect; I cannot tell you the textual words.

385. When do you say that took place?—In the cell.

386. Who did he say that to?—I think he said that to us generally. We asked him how he felt, and he said he was ill.

387. There was no doubt that he was the worse for drink?—I am not of that opinion at all.

388. You do not think so?—No, I do not think so.

389. Timmings has never himself suggested that he was not?—I suggest that in a police court a poor undefended fellow of that age, who is uneducated, is in a very difficult position.

390. You do not require much education to know whether you are drunk or not?—I fancy in the notes I have here that he said it was more illness than drunkenness. I have the reporter who took that note down, and who will come and swear to it.

391. I only ask you whether or not you ever heard Timmings ever make any complaint of the way in which the police had treated him, because, of course, I shall call evidence about this?—I heard him simply say that he had been hurt by his fall. I heard him say something to that effect in the cell.

392. (Chairman.) Did Timmings complain in your hearing of any of the police constables?—No; he was weeping all the time, and I heard him apologise.

393. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Who did he apologise to?—He was apologising to the police constables.

394. (Chairman.) Have you got Timmings here to-day?—No, I do not know where he is. I think Mr. Lavalette has his address.

395. I dare say we can find him, if necessary?—Yes, they must know it at the police station.

396. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I was asking you what happened after Timmings was arrested, and you interposed by saying he had been thrown against the cab?—Police Constable 43 took him in charge.

397. That is Isaacson?—Yes, and crossed Piccadilly with him.

398. Do you say that Isaacson took Timmings across the road?—I do.

399. Himself?—I do.

400. That is your recollection of what happened?—That is my recollection of what happened.

401. Was there anybody else holding Timmings besides Isaacson?—When he was crossing the road, do you mean?

402. Yes?—No.

403. You are quite sure of that?—My recollection is pretty distinct.

404. I accept your recollection. That is your recollection?—It is pretty distinct.

405. Will Police Constable Divers stand forward? (Police Constable 427 C. stood forward.) When Timmings was arrested was he then and there on the west pavement of Piccadilly handed over by the man who arrested him to Police Constable Divers?—What do you call the west pavement?

406. The south side?—I have never seen this Police Constable 427 on the south pavement myself.

407. Your recollection is that Isaacson took him across the road?—Yes.

408. Let us pursue your recollection. Then you say Isaacson took this man from the pavement across the street?—I do.

409. Was he joined by any other constable?—He was joined by another constable on the north pavement.

410. Do you know who that was, or would you recognise him?—I could not recognise him, because he had his back turned to me, but I conclude naturally after the evidence that was called that it was Police Constable 427 C.

411. You conclude that it was 427 C.?—Yes.

412. That is Divers?—Yes.

413. Do you know of your own knowledge, or are you merely concluding this? Did you see him?—At that moment, do you mean?

414. At any time?—I saw a policeman.

415. You are not able to identify who it was?—No.

416. Is it your recollection that the two policemen walked up Swallow Street, one on either side of Timmings?—It is.

417. And is it your recollection that, the policemen being on either side of him, they turned up Swallow Street into Vine Street?—Yes, it is.

418. And they did so proceed up to Vine Street Station?—They did.

419. A man on each side of Timmings, and Isaacson being one of them?—Yes, Isaacson being one of them.

420. Did they turn afterwards into the police station in that way?—They did.

421. A man on each side of Timmings?—A man on each side.

422. And Isaacson being one of them?—Yes.

423. Do you say that there were two policemen standing at the door of Vine Street Station?—I recollect just before reaching it that I saw two policemen standing one on each side.

424. That, again, is your recollection. You pledge your recollection to that?—Yes.

425. Should you recognise either of them?—I am afraid not.

426. But your distinct recollection is that there were two, one on each side?—Yes.

427. We have now got, so far as you recollect, Timmings up the steps into the station, with Isaacson on one side and a policeman whom you did not recognise on the other?—We have got them on to the staircase.

428. Now let me deal with yourself and your friend. Do I understand you to say that your recollection is that you were following behind these two policemen and Timmings?—Yes.

429. You were not personally known to any of the policemen, so far as you knew?—So far as I knew.

430. You cannot suggest that any of the policemen had got a personal spite against you?—No.

431. And you had not said anything that would indicate to any policemen that you were going to take Timmings's part?—I had not said anything to any policeman, because I consider that in a crowd like that it is very unwise to interfere with the police in the execution on the spot of their duties.

432. There was nothing to lead the police to suppose that you were going to the station for the purpose of taking Timming's part?—Except seeing us follow so closely.

433. I will deal with that in a moment. There was a very considerable number of persons going in the direction of the station as well as yourselves, was there not?—No, I do not recollect that there were many; there may have been a solitary person here and there; but, on the contrary, I noticed that the street was very empty.

434. On the first occasion, when you were represented by counsel, did you hear your counsel tell the magistrate that a bonâ-fide mistake had been made by the police?—I did, and I was rather sorry for it.

435. You heard your counsel say that?—I heard my counsel say that.

436. Did you also say that to the magistrate yourself?—No, I did not.

437. The statement you have now made to the Commissioners is entirely inconsistent with the police having made a bonâ-fide mistake, is it not?—I do not judge, but I am afraid it is difficult to reconcile it.

438. In spite of that, on the very first occasion your counsel appeared that was what he said to the magistrate?—That is what my counsel said to the magistrate.

439. And you did not contradict it or interfere in any way?—I cannot contradict my counsel in open Court, can I, even if I do not agree with him?

440. This is the first occasion before the magistrate. Then on the second occasion you gave evidence yourself, did you not?—Yes.

441. You said this: "As I put my foot on the steps I was caught from behind and pushed in by 43 C., who shoved me about till I found myself in the dock"?—I have here in my copy of the notes: "Just as I was putting my foot on the first step at the police station I was seized from behind and shoved forward, when I was caught by Police Constable 43 C., who twisted me round."

442. I am now reading from the note that I have. Do you suggest that note is wrong? I will read the note to you again. "As I put my foot on the step I was caught from behind and pushed in by 43 C., who shoved me about till I found myself in the dock." Did you say that or not?—I certainly did not say I was caught from behind by 43 C.R.

Dr. M. A. Gerothwohl.

443. According to your present case that would not have been possible, because 43 C.R. was already in the station. So that if that note, taken by the magistrate's clerk, is right, that is quite inconsistent with the story you have just told the Commissioners?—If the note is right. I have the shorthand note here.

(Chairman.) The note I have got is this: "I was caught from behind and pushed in by Police Constable 43 C., who shoved me about till I found myself in the dock." Somebody else may have pushed him from behind, so far as that goes.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) No. "I was shoved in by 43 C."

444. (Chairman.) "Caught from behind." Then supposing you put a full stop there?—I have the notes from the Home Office, in which I find this: "As I put my foot on the steps I was caught from behind and pushed in by Police Constable 43, who shoved me about till I found myself in the dock."

445. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) That is what I have got?—You did not say I was caught from behind by Police Constable 43.

446. Yes, I did. I will read it again. Just follow it. "As I put my foot on the steps I was caught from behind and pushed in by 43 C., who shoved me about till I found myself in the dock"?—It is not in the verbatim note that I was caught from behind. It does not mean that I was caught by Police Constable 43 and pushed in by Police Constable 43. It is a quibble on a sentence. I have the verbatim report here.

447. I do not want to discuss with you whether this is accurate for the moment, because we shall have the verbatim report no doubt proved in due course, but if this is read in the sense in which I thought it ought to be read that is inconsistent with your present story?—It is, but you should remember these are not verbatim notes.

448. Your story is that Timmings was taken into the station by Police Constable 43, who you were following, and that you were pushed into the station by some constable whom you do not know, but who was not Police Constable 43?—No, but whom I presume to be one who was at the door.

449. That is your present suggestion to the Commissioners?—That is my present suggestion to the Commissioners.

450. Why they should have pushed you into the station at all, not knowing why you were going to the station, or whether you were going there at all, you cannot conceive?—Unless, on going in, Police Constable 43 should have nodded to them.

451. But he had gone into the station, had he not?—But before he went in he passed them, and knew we were following behind.

452. Your present suggestion is that Police Constable 43 indicated to these men that if you came you were to be pushed in?—I do not make that as a suggestion, but that is one explanation that suggests itself to me. There may be others.

453. You had given no indication to Police Constable 43 that you had either got any complaint to make or that you were going to follow?—He must have seen us when he shoved Timmings and took him up, and, seeing us follow all the way up, he must have guessed, and coming towards the police station he may very well have guessed why we were coming if he knew he had made a mistake.

454. Your present suggestion is that he by some sign indicated to the men at the door that when you came you were to be pushed into the station?—You asked me for an explanation, and I have given one that suggests itself to me naturally.

455. Now you got into the station. I am bound to suggest to you this, that you were in fact arrested on the south pavement of Piccadilly by Police Constable Wallington?—I know that is what they said before.

456. (Chairman.) You say you were not arrested?—I say distinctly I was not arrested on the south pavement in Piccadilly.

(Chairman.) You mention some police constable.

457. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Police Constable Wallington 6 C.R. You have seen Wallington?—Yes, I have seen Wallington.

458. A word about what happened when you got in the station. There is no doubt when you got into the station you were very excited?—No doubt whatever.

459. After you got into the station did you sit down anywhere, or were you put straight into the dock?—We were put—that is a mild term—straight into the dock.

460. You and Timmings and Lavalette?—Timmings was in there long before us, I presume. I found him there. I did not see him put there, because I was probably on the staircase.

461. Immediately you were put in the dock did the inspector come in?—Almost immediately; not immediately.

462. Had you got a stick in your hand?—I had.

463. And had Mr. Lavalette got a stick in his hand?—That I could not remember. I think he had a stick or an umbrella.

464. Was Mr. Lavalette asked for his stick by the constable?—I do not remember that, but it is very possible.

465. Did he give it up?—If I do not recollect whether he was asked I should not recollect that.

466. Were you asked for your stick by the constable?—I do not remember being asked.

467. Did he ask you twice, and did you refuse to give it up?—I certainly did not refuse, and I never heard him ask. I explained the position.

468. After the police constable had asked you twice, and you refused, did the inspector ask you to give it up?—I do not admit the constable asked me twice—not in my hearing.

469. Do you remember the inspector asking you?—No, I certainly do not.

470. You do not recollect anything about that?—No, except that as I was flourishing my card asking that it should be given to the inspector, the stick was pulled away.

471. Had you got your card and your stick in the same hand?—How would that be possible? I should have been prodding my stick in the air.

472. That is what you were doing according to our suggestion that you refused to give up your stick, and were flourishing it in the air?—It would be very extraordinary, flourishing the card and the stick. How was the card seen if I had the stick?

473. Was the stick taken from you?—The stick was taken from me; it was pulled from me.

474. Which constable do you say did that?—I say that C.R. 43 did that, although his comrade has sworn the contrary.

475. That is Isaacson?—Yes.

476. Your recollection is that Isaacson did that?—My recollection is pretty distinct that Isaacson did it.

477. You have given as your recollection to the Commission that Isaacson took it from you and broke it across his knee?—Yes.

478. That is your present recollection?—Yes.

479. I suggest to you that what really happened was that you refused to give it up when you were asked three times, that you flourished it about, and that it was Wallington who endeavoured to take it from you, and it was broken in the course of the struggle?—My recollection is distinctly opposite, as I have said.

480. You took your stick to the police court?—Yes.

481. The pieces were given to you when you left?—Yes.

482. Have you got it still?—No, they were left at Marlborough Street, and I remember a remark I made to the magistrate that for a stick of a very fibrous nature it was snapped clean, which would hardly be the case in a struggle when it would be snapped in lengths.

483. It depends upon the struggle?—That is a matter of opinion.

484. It was a thin walking cane, was it not?—It is the same type of stick as this. (Producing a walking stick.)

485. (Chairman.) What kind of wood is it?—It is a cane, I think.

486. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) After the stick incident you were protesting, were you not?—Oh, yes, very warmly.

487. And protesting that you had not been disorderly, but that you had come to the station of your own accord to give information about Timmings?—Yes.

488. That was the substance of your protest?—That was the substance of my protest.

489. I suggest to you that the only ground of your protest was that you had not been disorderly in Piccadilly, and that you had come to the station of your own accord to assist Timmings?—I did not put it at such length. I said we had come about this third man. I had not heard the constable's charge of being drunk and disorderly in Piccadilly at that time.

490. When you said that, did the inspector turn to the constables and ask them as to where they had arrested you?—It is very possible that he did. I would not swear that he did turn to them, but I think it is possible. He did say something to them—I do not know whether it was at that moment.

491. Did they say in your hearing you had been arrested on the pavement by St. James's Church in Piccadilly?—I could not hear owing to the uproar there was.

492. Who was creating the uproar?—I was trying to flourish my card and give it to the inspector, and there were four policemen round this dock, and so on.

493. There was nobody there creating an uproar except yourself?—Possibly, perhaps, I had some ground.

494. I am only trying to find out what the uproar was?—They joined in.

495. You really suggest that to the Commission that the policemen joined in the uproar?—I am putting it strongly, but when I was giving my card they talked as loud as I did.

496. You say you did not hear what the constable said?—No, because I was in such a state wanting my card to be given to the inspector.

497. After the inspector had questioned the constable about this point about which you were protesting, did he sit down then and take the charge down in writing?—I could not say that; I do not know; I do not remember; very possibly he did

498. After he had taken something down on the charge sheet did he read it out to you?—He read out the charge. I confess that in all this turmoil I did not hear much of it.

499. You repeat again that there was a turmoil, but I suggest to you there was nobody making any turmoil there at all except yourself. This is what he wrote down at the time as the charge. He first of all gives your name. Had he taken the name from you?—Yes, he asked us our name and addresses.

500. Then he said: "All drunk and disorderly in Piccadilly, Parish of St. James's"?—I only heard the words "drunk and disorderly."

501. Is it not the fact that when he read that out to you you said nothing?—I should think if I had I should have been howled down.

502. Who by?—By their refusing to take my card and pooh-poohing, and saying "we do not want your card." I am trying to give you an impression of the sort of uproar I mean to imply. I saw it was useless.

503. The fact is that when the Inspector read that out to you you said nothing?—I said nothing then because I thought it was absolutely useless from the way they had been treating us.

504. Up to that time you had not been charged by anybody with being drunk. That was the first time the charge had been formulated against you?—That is the first time I had heard anything.

505. When that was done you said nothing?—Oh yes, when it was read out I looked at the inspector and challenged his statement as I said before. I said: "Do you really think me drunk?" I said that with great emphasis.

506. Did you say anything about that before the magistrate?—Yes, I have got all this in my notes that I challenged the inspector, and I have it here in the notes of evidence sent me by the Home Office.

507. (Chairman.) When you say the notes sent you by the Home Office I understand that is the copy of the depositions taken by the clerk of the court?—Yes, which Mr. Gladstone very kindly requested the magistrate to send to me.

508. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Let me deal with one thing at a time. Can you find anything of that sort in the copy of the notes taken by the magistrate's clerk? You said just now that that appeared in the notes forwarded by the Home Office. Can you find anything of the kind?—Yes, in my depositions.

509. I mean confining yourself to the notes sent to you by the Home Office?—"I challenged the inspector's decision that I was drunk." It is there.

510. Yes, you are quite right about it. The note says, "I was excited and furious, and offered my card. I was charged with being drunk and disorderly. I challenged the inspector's decision that I was drunk." Then I think you were taken to the cells?—Yes.

511. And at about 12.45 I think it was Inspector Smith on his round asked whether anybody had any complaints to make?—I do not know if it was Inspector Smith, but it was the inspector in charge of the cells.

512. Let Inspector Smith stand forward. (Inspector Smith stood forward.) Is that the person who spoke to you?—I think so. I remember speaking to this inspector.

513. There were other persons in the place besides yourself and Timmings and Mr. Lavalette, were there not?—Yes; I do not know whether there were at that time—whether they were brought in after or before—but there were two other people.

514. The inspector asked you generally, and everybody there, whether they had any complaints to make?—I do not remember that. It is quite possible.

515. Then it was that you went up and spoke to him?—Yes.

516. You asked that a certain doctor in Chelsea should be sent for?—In South Kensington.

517. Did the inspector say, in his experience, that private doctors objected to come?—He did.

518. He said that perfectly civilly?—He was most courteous. I made that remark in court.

519. In spite of that, you asked for that gentleman to be sent for, and you know now that he was sent for?—He was sent for, and he wrote a letter to the magistrate explaining why he did not come. I have that letter in my pocket.

520. So far as that is concerned, the police carried out your request?—As far as that gentleman is concerned.

521. There is another point about which there is a difference of opinion. Do you say you mentioned to Inspector Smith anybody else's name, except this doctor, who you desired?—I mentioned the name of Mr. C. L. Graves, of 50, Iverna Gardens, Kensington.

522. We know he was not sent for?—He was not sent for.

523. Did you ever make any complaint to the police that they had not sent for him?—I made a complaint in court.

524. But at the time?—I do not recollect making a complaint at the time when the inspector came to release us, but I asked whether he had been sent for.

525. Then, when it was known that the doctor whom you desired to come would not come, they offered you to see the Divisional Surgeon, who they told you was there?—I do not know whether they told me that he was there, but they said the Divisional Surgeon, and I afterwards found it was Dr. Mitchell.

526. Then you were seen by Dr. Mitchell?—Yes.

527. You say that you gave the inspector the name of Graves. That is in dispute?—I absolutely swear to that.

528. But you did not suggest to them that he was a doctor?—No. I find he is put down as a doctor in the notes further on, but I never suggested anything of that kind. I was asked why I wanted him, and I said for private reasons, and I am almost sure I added, "Because he knows the people connected with my University," or something of that kind.

529. Dr. Mitchell came and examined you?—Yes.

530. Have you any complaint to make of the nature of the examination?—Do you mean that it was objectionable—no.

Dr. M. A. Gerothwohl.

23 July 1906.

531. Or that it was not complete?—I do not think it was very complete, to tell the truth.

532. What do you suggest he ought to have done that he did not do?—I am not a medical expert.

533. Are you complaining without knowing whether he ought to have done anything more than he did do?—I think he might have made us talk a little more than he did. I did not notice him approach very near to smell my breath.

534. It may not be necessary if it is perceptible at some distance?—Of course.

535. Is there any other suggestion you can make?—I will make a suggestion as to his certificate.

536. I am now asking as to whether he omitted to do anything which, in your judgment, he ought to have done?—I think there are several other tests he might have applied afterwards. He might have made us hold a sheet of paper at some length to see if the hand was very shaky; that is one thing he might have done. He might have felt our pulses, and there are various other things which, although I am not a medical expert, I suggest he might have done.

537. Now you say you complain of his certificate. What is the matter with his certificate?—There are two points on which I complain of his certificate.

538. (Chairman.) What certificate? Did he give you any document?—No, but the certificate I have heard of.

539. Are you referring to the doctor's evidence, or did he enter in a book something, or give you a certificate?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) He gives what he calls a certificate.

(Chairman.) What I have got is an extract from a book.

540. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) That is what it is. Dr. Mitchell enters in the book the result of his examination, and that, I believe, at the police court was called a certificate. You heard it read there?—Yes.

541. And you now desire to make some complaint about it?—Some remarks. One strange thing, I think, is that when you find two people absolutely sober, and you find no symptoms of anything, it is natural that you should say they are both sober, and give one certificate; but when you find that the symptoms are symptoms of such a subtle nature as Dr. Mitchell found ours were, then it is very extraordinary that when you have exactly the same symptoms, especially symptoms, as I say, of so subtle a nature that they should be exactly the same with men of very different temperaments, and that a doctor should be content to say one was like that, and the other's condition was exactly similar, I contend that that is a very extraordinary coincidence.

542. Is there anything else you have to say about it?—I think that the words "Not drunk, but apparently recovering from the effects of excessive drinking," require a little explanation as to where drunkenness ends and where it begins.

543. You do not expect the Divisional Surgeon to give that upon his certificate, do you?—I think when he cannot find anything definite he should refrain from damaging people's characters.

544. (Chairman.) Your point is that the words "excessive drinking" are wholly ambiguous?—Yes, wholly ambiguous, and that the whole thing is ambiguous.

545. He does not say you are recovering from drunkenness?—No; but what is the difference between "excessive drinking" and "drunkenness"? It is very ambiguous.

546. It is a mere matter of degree, I suppose?—Yes.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) It is my desire that we should know all the matters about which this gentleman has to complain, in order that we should deal with them when our turn comes.

547. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You object to the certificate saying that you had been guilty of excessive drinking?—Yes; and I think, from a public point of view, when a man is certified to be not drunk that the Divisional Surgeon should abstain from further comment.

548. (Chairman.) What I meant by referring to ambiguity was this—that there might have been symptoms that you had been excessively drinking a year ago, or three months ago, or a week ago. The whole thing is ambiguous, and that is your complaint?—Yes, that is my complaint. As Mr. Bankes has had permission to cross-examine us, may I ask that we should be at liberty to put a few questions later on to the Police witnesses?

(Chairman.) Certainly, as Mr. Bankes has done it to you, you will have liberty to cross-examine the Police witnesses in the same way.

Mr. Charles Henry Denyer sworn.

Mr. C. H. Denyer.

549. (Chairman.) Are you Clerk at the Marlborough Street Police Court?—Yes.

550. Did you take down notes of the evidence given by the witnesses in the case against Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette?—On the first day only—on the 9th April.

551. Do you produce the notes you took?—Yes.

552. Were they signed by the respective witnesses?—No.

553. Is not that the usual custom?—No. Depositions in cases for trial are signed, but not the notes in summary cases.

554. Will you hand in the notes?—May I hand in a corrected copy. The notes are involved in a number of other things, and the book is in somewhat constant use. I have corrected a copy this morning, and perhaps you will take that copy.

(Chairman.) Mr. Bankes, have you any objection?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Not at all.

555. (Chairman.) What are the corrections?—I do not mean that there were any corrections.

556. If they are material corrections it might be necessary to leave the book?—There are no corrections. I mean I compared the copy which was made with the original notes this morning to see that it was correct.

557. And the copy you are going to hand in is an exact reproduction or copy of what you took down?—Yes, except that words which are abbreviated are written out in full.

558. You swear that that is a true copy?—Yes.

559. Will you hand that copy in?—Yes—(handing)—I also produce the register. I do not know whether the Commission wish to see the Magistrate's register which is signed by him.

560. The charge is taken from the charge sheet?—The charge is copied into this from the charge sheet, and the Magistrate puts his decision on the register and signs it.

561. I suppose he writes "Discharged," or whatever it may be?—Yes.

562. What is the exact entry in this case?—The final entry on the second day?

563. Yes. On the first day they were remanded?—The entry is simply "Remanded seven days." The second entry is "Discharged—Discharged—10s. or seven days."

564. Do you mean discharged as against Dr. Gerothwohl?—Yes, against Dr. Gerothwohl discharged; against Mr. Lavalette discharged; and against Mr. Timmings 10s. or seven days.

565. Are we to understand that Timmings in this case was remanded as well?—Yes.

566. In fact, the cases against the three defendants were taken together?—They were taken together.

MR. HENRY WITHRINGTON sworn.

567. (Chairman.) Are you second Clerk at Marylebone Police Court?—Yes, but I sometimes sit temporarily at Marlborough Street to oblige a colleague.

568. On which day did you sit at Marlborough Street?—On the second hearing, on the 11th April.

569. Did you take down in the usual manner notes of the evidence given by the witnesses on that day?—Yes.

570. In the cases of these two gentlemen whose names we have heard this morning and Mr. Timmings?—Quite so.

Mr. H. Withrington.

23 July 1906.

571. Do you produce the notes?—Yes; I produce my original notes, and this is a certified copy of my notes—(handing).

572. Is that an accurate copy?—Absolutely.

DR. MAURICE ALFRED GEROTHWOHL, recalled.

573. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Are you clear in your recollection that you did not have anything to drink from the time that Mr. Sherrington left you?—I am certain.

574. You did not have anything —Nothing.

575. Were you then simply walking about in the streets?—Yes.

576. For about 40 minutes?—I was speaking with Mr. Lavalette. I said: "Look how the English people enjoy themselves," and so forth.

577. But you did not go into any place?—We did not go into any place whatever.

578. When you saw this crowd that you have told us of, were you at any time arm in arm with Timmings?—Never.

579. Were you at any time arm in arm with Mr. Lavalette?—I might have been once or twice. I believe going down Coventry Street we walked arm in arm.

580. You are quite sure you were not walking arm in arm with Timmings?—Never.

581. Had you seen anything of him at all until you saw him, as you say, just a few yards off?—Just before reaching St. James's Church.

582. You did not know anything of him at all?—I had not seen his face when I saw him pushed.

583. What attracted your attention to Timmings?—He was the only person between us and the crowd standing a little distance in front.

584. What was he doing?—He was walking quietly along the pavement.

585. As a sober man?—Yes, to my mind. He was not tottering or doing anything of that kind. Then I saw a policeman charge him.

586. From where?—From behind.

587. From the east?—Yes, from the east.

588. You saw which policeman charge him?—C.R. 43—Isaacson.

589. You have told us what you saw of the push?—Yes. A push like this first, and then very sharp sideways (illustrating).

590. If that were the case it would be towards the west, would it not?—Yes, towards the west.

591. And then he shoved him towards the kerb, where there was a hansom, and he fell against the wheel?—Yes.

592. At any time did you see Timmings arm in arm with anybody?—No, I had not seen him, of course, before we were walking towards St. James's Church.

593. You did see a great many people arm in arm?—Yes, a great many all the way, and in Coventry Street.

594. It seems to be plain that the police had a position of considerable difficulty to deal with that night?—No doubt.

595. There was a good deal of disorder?—There was a fair amount or a good deal.

596. They had a good deal of trouble, I suppose, in order to keep people quiet?—Yes. Coming up from the "Continental" they had a good deal of trouble up to the Circus.

597. Did they appear to be patient?—They appeared to be very patient.

598. And doing what they could to restrain the people?—Yes, they were smiling; they had the genial smile which is characteristic of the London bobby.

599. They were taking it very indulgently so far as they could?—Yes.

600. You say you saw them push Timmings against the wheel. What happened next?—He fell against the wheel sideways, and then he was dragged off, and they took him across the road.

Dr. M. A. Gerothwohl.

601. Across the road to the corner of Swallow Street?—Yes.

602. Up to that time, if I understand correctly, Isaacson was alone?—Isaacson was alone.

603. Then you followed with Mr. Lavalette?—Then I followed with Mr. Lavalette.

604. Did you cross over to the same side of the street?—Yes.

605. Did you follow along on the same side of the street?—We crossed Piccadilly.

606. Then if I follow correctly what you have told us, Isaacson, with Timmings, walked up Swallow Street?—He had already been joined by another constable.

607. Divers?—Divers. Of course, I could not see Divers' face to identify him.

608. Did they walk on either side of Timmings?—Yes. Isaacson was here, Timmings was here, and the other constable there (illustrating).

609. Then you followed up Swallow Street?—We followed up Swallow Street.

610. I do not know whether you can tell us, but do you remember where you walked into Swallow Street; what I mean is, did you walk on the same side of the road as the constable, or on the other side of the road or where?—It would be difficult to say. I know the side of the road we walked on, but whether we walked on the pavement or in the middle of the road I do not know. The position was this. Isaacson was here, Timmings was here, and the other constable was there (illustrating). And then there was myself and Mr. Lavalette.

611. Walking up Swallow Street?—Not all the way. We caught them up, and in the middle of Swallow Street we were almost abreast.

612. You mean in the middle of the length?—In the middle of the length, between Piccadilly and Vine Street.

613. Vine Street is the turning to the right in Swallow Street?—Yes.

614. Had you caught them up before you got to Vine Street?—Yes, we had—shortly before reaching Vine Street.

615. As they turned into Vine Street you followed immediately behind. Is that it?—A little way behind.

616. Now it is said that you were arrested at St. James's Church?—I was not.

617. Can you in any way account for that statement?—I cannot.

618. Is there any possibility of a mistake about that?—There is no possibility of a mistake. It could not have been at that point.

619. It is said that at St. James's Church you were arrested, and were taken hold of, I think, by the right arm?—By Wallington.

620. Yes?—Yes. I can absolutely contradict that statement.

621. Did he say anything to you about his intention to arrest you?—I never saw him; I never noticed him.

622. When was it you first knew you were to be arrested?—I never knew that I was to be arrested. I was arrested at the entrance to the station.

623. Why I am putting this to you is because it has been said by Wallington that he took hold of your right arm, and that he told you what he was arresting you for?—Yes.

Dr. M. A. Gerothwohl.
23 July 1906.

624. What do you say as to that?—I absolutely contradict it. I will not use another noun.

625. Up to the time when you got to Vine Street (correct me if I am wrong), I understand you to say you had said nothing at all to the Police?—Nothing whatever.

626. You had not intimated what you were going there for?—No.

627. So far as your version is concerned, there was nothing to intimate to the Police that you were going to give evidence, or to complain in any way?—Excepting the fact that we were following them, and, to my mind, Isaacson knew the mistake he had made of throwing Timmings about in that way.

628. Do you mean Isaacson thought he had made a mistake in pushing Timmings against the wheel?—I do not think that is exactly the thing to do.

629. I do not quite follow the mistake you say you think Isaacson had made?—Isaacson seized this boy, who was very harmless, and flung him about in that way. That was the reason for my interference. I thought it was too bad.

630. But Isaacson apparently was very busy at this time. He had a crowd on the side coming from the west, and he had got this young fellow Timmings?—But there was no crowd in Swallow Street.

631. Before you got to Swallow Street. As I understand, your suggestion is that Isaacson knew he had done something wrong and thought you were following up to complain of that something wrong?—But he may have noticed us only in Swallow Street.

632. How would he know that you had seen anything at all?—Because he came from behind. He must have seen us. We were here and Timmings was there (illustrating), and he probably saw us when we came forward, especially as he says he had been all the way following up from Piccadilly Circus and had cautioned us, as he says, at Church Street.

633. I understand from the story you have told us that it is quite wrong to say that any caution had been given to you; it may have been given to others for rowdyism, but not to you?—Not to us. Of course, he may have made a mistake.

634. I do not understand. How do you suggest that Isaacson knew or thought that you had seen what had happened to Timmings?—Because being behind us he probably knew us by sight. We were the only people near at that time.

635. Do you think Isaacson in that time would have had an opportunity of noticing that you and Mr. Lavalette were close to Timmings when he was occupied in what he was doing at the time?—I do not see why not. We being the only people he might have thought, those are the people coming after me, and if he knew that he had made a mistake he might have guessed why.

636. That is a suggestion of yours?—Yes.

637. It is your explanation of what happened?—Yes; just as I suggest he might have nodded to the other constables in going into the station.

638. That is your attempt to explain what happened?—That is my explanation.

639. It is conjecture on your part?—Of course.

640. You have no other means of accounting for what happened?—I have no other means of accounting for it.

641. When you got up Swallow Street?—He must have noticed us then.

642. He noticed you following up. You mean in Vine Street?—Yes, also. Then Mr. Lavalette stooped forward to take his number.

643. He had his back to you?—That was in Swallow Street, but on nearing Vine Street we had caught him up, and Mr. Lavalette stooped forward to catch the number on his collar.

644. At that time had Isaacson his back to you?—No, he was in a horizontal position. Mr. Lavalette was with his head just bending a little forward.

645. Do you mean that according to your view Isaacson saw Mr. Lavalette looking at his number, and then guessed that some complaint was going to be made?—He may have guessed it then or he may have guessed it later.

646. Then when you got to Vine Street Station you have told us your recollection is very definite that there was a constable on either side of the doorway, and that there were steps leading up to the station. You saw that quite distinctly?—Yes.

647. So far as your observation goes, you saw nothing which would account for your having been pushed from behind into the station?—Nothing whatever.

648. You were following up, I presume, at the back?—At the back.

649. You saw no signal of any kind given by him?—No.

650. Then you were pushed from behind (correct this if it is wrong) by one of the constables outside Vine Street?—I presume so, because I was here at the door, and constable Isaacson then was here. Who else could have pushed me in that way?

651. However, you were pushed by somebody at the back?—I was pushed by somebody at the back.

652. In the meanwhile Isaacson had gone in with Divers?—They were at the top of the staircase.

653. They were ahead of you?—They were ahead of me.

654. Then it cannot have been either Isaacson or Divers?—No.

655. Therefore, it must have been one or other of the constables at the door?—Yes, I should say it was the one on my side.

656. When you were pushed you say you came to another constable?—I was pushed on to another constable.

657. Do you remember to whom he pushed you?—No, he shook me in this way; he shook me like this (illustrating). My collar was almost torn off. He twisted me round and shoved me on to another constable. I was absolutely dazed.

658. Then you say you found yourself in the dock?—Yes, I remember him also putting me in the dock.

659. At the time you were put in the dock was an inspector at the seat. Was there anyone there?—At the desk, do you mean?

660. Yes?—No.

661. There is a desk a few yards away from the dock?—No, there was no one there. Then Inspector Berry walked in.

662. He came in after you were in the dock?—Yes, that is my impression

663. When he came in did you at once tell him why it was that you were there?—Yes; I protested very loudly. I said: "We came about this man."

664. Indicating Timmings?—Yes, I said I wished my card to be passed to him. He said he did not want it. He pooh-poohed the idea.

665. Apparently you were under considerable excitement at this time?—Very great, indeed.

666. Do you remember with any precision what happened about it?—I do with a fair amount of precision. I was, as I was saying, flourishing my card with one hand, and I was clutching the rail like that (illustrating), and my stick was alongside of me. I was looking towards the inspector's desk. Then the constable tore my stick away, and I turned round, and I saw him break it across his knee.

667. You have no doubt as to who it was who broke the stick?—I have no doubt; I can almost remember the expression on his face.

668. That was Isaacson?—Yes.

669. Did Inspector Berry come to help you?—No, I do not remember him doing anything at all.

670. Then the charge was read over to you. Did you notice what the charge was when it was read?—Yes; I heard them read something, and I heard "drunk and disorderly." I did not hear the rest of the sentence.

671. A good deal is made of the fact that you did not make any denial of that?—As I was saying, I do not like to use strong expressions, but I mean we were being howled down in everything we said. I attempted to say something, and I was not allowed to say it. I was in the attitude of a man who was being howled down. What could I do?

672. I do not know whether you can explain to us what this "howling down" means. You were in the police station, Inspector Berry was at this time at the desk, there were several constables in the room, and there were yourself, Mr. Lavalette, and Timmings in the dock. Was there any noise outside?—No, I do not recollect any noise outside at that moment, but when I say I was howled down I was using a rather strong expression. When I presented my card there was a sort of general chorus: "We do not want it; we do not want it."

673. There was a general chorus from whom?—From the Police standing next to the dock.

674. Do you mean from constables as well as from the inspector?—Yes. There were a few constables between the inspector and myself, and when I wanted one of the constables to take my card to the inspector they pooh-poohed it.

675. How many constables do you think there were in the room where the dock was. There is a room where there is a dock and a desk?—I should think altogether there were quite fifteen constables.

676. And nobody else but yourselves?—No. I noticed some men in evening dress sitting on benches behind on the other side—probably prisoners.

677. Let me understand it, because I visited the place this morning—Inspector Berry would be sitting at the desk, and the dock would be on his right?—Yes.

678. And on the left there is a bench?—Yes.

679. On that bench, as I understand you, there were some people in evening dress?—Yes, I noticed one in evening dress.

680. Except those people there would be nobody but policemen in the room?—No.

681. It is said that Inspector Berry came to the three of you and smelled your breath. Is that correct?—No, I do not recollect him coming to me.

682. You do not recollect it?—I do not recollect it. I recollect seeing him walk from a sort of opening leading to the outer room to the left and just stopping between the opening and the desk, and looking at us like that (illustrating).

683. Between what opening and the desk?—From the room.

684. From the room in which he enters to take his place at the desk?—Yes.

685. Then he would not be any nearer to you than he would be at the desk?—No.

686. The dock would be some few yards to the right of the desk, and that would be a position in which according to you he would close to you?—Yes. I never saw him come round and look at each of us.

687. Supposing this is the dock, here would be his desk. He came out of this room here. I saw him walk like that to his desk and just saw him hesitate here and look round at us from there—(illustrating).

688. He did not know up to that time, I suppose, what the charge was?—No, I presume he did not.

689. After this had taken place as you have told us in the station room you went to the cell?—Yes. It was a sort of public cell.

690. It was not a cell in which you were alone?—No, there were three of us, and two other men were brought in afterwards.

691. Before you went there, when you were in the dock, do you remember which of you was closest to Inspector Berry?—There was a double position. When Inspector Berry came in Timmings was closest, then Mr. Lavalette, and then myself, but, to give my card, after that I passed behind them and went to the other end.

692. When you went to the cell you were there for some time. What were you doing whilst you were there?—I was walking about like a lion in a cage.

693. You were in a state of great excitement?—I was, I can assure you.

694. Afterwards, when you were liberated, you went to two doctors, Dr. Davis and Dr. Walker. I do not know whether you can tell us, but are they coming before us?—They are here to-day. Dr. M. A. Gerothwohl.

695. (Mr. Dickinson.) When you walked up Swallow Street can you tell us approximately how many people there were in the street. There was no crowd, you say?—There was no crowd whatever. I cannot say I noticed any people. I believe further up Swallow Street I noticed either two men or a man and a woman talking. 23 July 1906.

696. That is all you saw in the street?—That is all I saw in the street. There may have been others.

697. There were also the five—yourself, Mr. Lavalette, Timmings, and two policemen?—Yes.

698. Were the two policemen holding Timmings?—I do not know whether the two policemen were holding him at the time, but he was between the two, and certainly I think they were holding him.

699. I am not quite sure whether you told us who the two policemen were?—One was Isaacson on the extreme left, and the other was Divers according to his own evidence.

700. When did you first see Wallington?—I never saw Wallington myself—I mean not to recognise his face—until I was in the dock; but on turning from Swallow Street into Vine Street I saw a policeman following us. I did not recognise his face as Wallington, but I concluded (and we put a query on the diagram) it was Wallington. I did not see Wallington to identify him until I was in the Police Station.

701. That was when he was in the Police Station?—Yes.

702. And you were charged?—Yes.

703. Did he do anything at all in the Police Station?—To whom?

704. To you?—I do not remember his touching me or ever laying his hand on me.

705. At any rate, you say he never arrested you?—He never arrested me; he never touched me as a matter of fact.

706. When you were in the cell I understand that you asked to be allowed to communicate with Dr. Stewart and Mr. Graves?—Yes.

707. Who was it who first told you you could not see Dr. Stewart?—Do you mean when he said he could not come?

708. Yes?—That must have been Inspector Berry, when he came to have the cell opened for our delivery.

709. Did you say anything about Mr. Graves?—I would not swear to it, but I almost remember asking whether Mr. Graves had been sent for. I do not remember his answer.

710. You had already asked for Dr. Stewart?—Yes, I had already asked for Dr. Stewart. The warder asked why I wanted another gentleman. I said I wanted him for private reasons, and I am quite sure I added because he knew people connected with my University.

711. You did not press for Mr. Graves at all?—No, I did not press for him afterwards. I pressed for him on the warder, but subsequently, when it was said we could see the Divisional Surgeon, and Dr. Stewart did not come, then I do not remember pressing for him, but I think I asked Inspector Berry whether he had been sent for.

712. (Chairman.) Can you fix the time approximately at which Timmings was thrown against the cab?—I should say about 12.5 or 12.10.

713. At what time did you leave Mr. Sherrington or Mr. Sherrington leave you?—About 11.30 or 11.35.

714. When you observed the constable push Timmings forward and throw him against the cab was Timmings in the road or on the pavement?—He was on the pavement.

715. On the south side?—On the south side.

716. How far were you from Timmings?—Like from here to the end of your desk.

717. In approaching Timmings did the constable come from the direction of the north side, or did he pass you?—He passed us.

718. Did you notice whether he turned to look at you as he passed?—No, I did not.

719. Did he pass hurriedly?—Yes.

Dr. M. A. Gerothwohl.

23 July 1906.

720. Did he seem to be making for Timmings, so to speak?—It is very difficult to say, but he did seem to be rather making for Timmings.

721. He passed you hurriedly?—Hurriedly. It was more violently than hurriedly. He seemed to be rather in a state of excitement.

722. By "more violently than hurriedly" do you mean he was throwing his arms about?—No, but in a jerky sort of way.

723. Did he approach Timmings?—He approached Timmings.

724. You were just behind him, and you saw him seize Timmings or push him forward?—Yes.

725. Did you stop?—I stopped walking when they crossed the road.

726. Did you say anything?—Nothing whatever. I have already said that I consider it is wrong to interfere.

727. Did the constable who had thrown Timmings against the cab turn and look at you?—That I could not say. He must have seen us passing behind.

728. He must have seen you, but you are not prepared to say that he turned and looked at you?—No, I could not swear to that.

729. And then he took Timmings across the road, I understand, to Swallow Street?—Yes.

730. Did you follow at once?—We followed at once. We were a good way behind him then. We were half across the road when they were already on the pavement.

731. What do you mean by a good way?—We were in the middle of the road at Piccadilly, when they were already on the pavement and Constable Divers came and joined them.

732. Was there any policeman following you, so far as you know, at that time?—Not at that time. I had not noticed any.

733. When did you first notice that there were some policemen following you?—Myself?

734. Yes, following you was Mr. Lavalette?—I noticed it myself on turning Vine Street corner.

735. At the other end of Swallow Street from Piccadilly?—Yes.

736. You did notice one then?—I did.

737. Was he walking fast?—I could not say. I think he was walking at a good pace. I did not pay any attention to him except that I saw a man in blue, because I was sideways.

738. Did you speak to Isaacson or Timmings?—I never said a word to Isaacson.

739. Did he say anything to you?—Not a word.

740. Did you see him turn when his back was towards you in Swallow Street?—I think I saw him turn once.

741. Can you mention any act on your part, or on Mr. Lavalette's part which would have been likely to attract the attention of Isaacson?—Nothing, except the fact that we followed. He might have asked himself why we were going there.

742. You passed between two policemen at the foot of the steps leading into the Police Station, and as I understand your story, you were seized from behind with very considerable violence?—I was seized from behind with very considerable violence.

743. You were seized?—I was thrown forward.

744. You were thrown forward by the first constable, and twisted by the second?—Yes.

745. Did any third constable touch you?—No. Then I was thrown back to Isaacson.

746. How many constables do you think touched you from the time you were first assaulted?—The one at the door, Isaacson, another one, and Isaacson again.

747. This was entirely sudden?—Absolutely.

748. And from behind?—I have never in my life had such a sensation. I was dazed with the shaking.

749. There was a sudden violent assault you say, and from behind?—Yes.

750. And the first thing you recollect when you were comparatively quiet was when you were in the dock?—Yes. I recollect seeing Isaacson at the top of the stairs turning round.

751. About howling down, you say in that room there were about 15 constables and other people, and one man, at any rate, in evening dress. Were they all talking?—The people?

752. Were the five constables near the talking that you have mentioned?—They practically said together: "We do not want your card." I cannot recollect the exact words.

Mr. Edwin Rudge Pearce, sworn.

Mr. F. R. Pearce.

753. (Chairman.) Were you in attendance at Marlborough Street Police Court on April 11th?—Yes.

754. Were you there for the purpose of taking a shorthand note?—Yes.

755. Who instructed you?—Messrs. Paice and Cross.

756. Did you take a shorthand note?—Yes.

757. Have you got the shorthand notes you took here?—Yes.

758. Are they a correct report of what took place at the Police Court?—Yes.

759. Have you made a transcript from those shorthand notes?—Yes.

760. Is the transcript correct?—Yes.

761. Do you produce the original transcript?—Yes (producing); but the pencil notes on it have been made since.

762. It is your transcript and it is correct?—Yes.

Mr. George Lewis Denman, called.

Mr. G. L. Denman.

763. (Chairman.) You were the Magistrate at Marlborough Street Police Court on April 9th, and April 11th, I think?—I was.

764. And among other cases you tried a case in which one Timmings, Mr. Lavalette, and Dr. Gerothwohl were charged with having been drunk and disorderly in the early morning of Saturday, the 8th April?—Yes.

765. Did you make any special notes of the case?—Yes, I always take a rough private note of my own but I do not for one moment intend it to be complete, because the Clerk's note serves all usual purposes.

766. The note you made was simply for your own use?—I always take a note of any particular point that occurs to me as being important contemporaneously with the Clerk's note.

767. You mean important to you in giving your decision in the case?—For that purpose.

768. You did hear the case, and you gave your decision. I think the decision was 10s. or seven days against Timmings, and you discharged the case as against the other two defendants?—Quite correct.

769. Now I will read your decision from the shorthand note, and perhaps you will follow me, and correct anything you think is wrong, if anything strikes you as being wrong. "The Magistrate:—I do not think I need put you to the necessity of calling further evidence. This is one of the cases which illustrates a good many things, amongst other things, the very great difficulty that the police have in this neighbourhood especially on occasions such as that as everybody knows which occurred last Saturday"?—Might I just interpolate there that it was the night of the University Boat Race. That is what is alluded to.

770. "There are thousands and thousands of people all bent on amusing themselves, and they throw an intolerable amount of work on the shoulders of the police. I have listened very carefully to the evidence given by the two defendants, Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette and their friend who has been here, who is not likely to mislead me in a matter of this sort. I feel

I must accept their statements, and I am glad to do so. They had not had any amount of drink which would cause them to be in a state of intoxication without some more exciting cause than is accounted for. I must remember what the circumstances were on this special night with all these great disorders occurring. They chose that occasion for amusing themselves by perambulating this thickly-crowded and noisy neighbourhood on the last night of the week. I think that two educated Englishmen in the same position as themselves would have been specially careful, if they remembered the particular night it was, to keep out of such rowdy scenes which, unfortunately, as they conceded, occurred on that occasion. They themselves have stated there was a great scene of riot, and that the police were under great provocation. It seems to me they would have been wiser, therefore, to have kept entirely aloof from that, or, at any rate, to have left the police entirely to manage their own affairs, but they seem to have taken upon themselves to more or less interfere by following up one of these cases in which a constable was obliged to arrest a person for disorderly conduct, when they themselves had seen only a portion of what had occurred. They identified themselves more or less with the person who was being charged. That person has not disputed the fact that he was drunk in any way, nor did he at the time. He does not dispute that he was behaving in a drunken and disorderly manner. It was identifying themselves in that manner with him and the scenes that were taking place that got them into the trouble in which they are. I have said already, if they had been wise they would have kept out of it altogether. In that sense they have only themselves to thank for having got mixed up with it. They have behaved so handsomely in stating the difficulties under which, in their opinion, the police were placed that I am only too glad to be able to accept their account of the matter so far as that goes. It certainly strikes me as most agreeable that though in difficulties themselves they have paid a tribute really to the behaviour of the police in the matter. It is unfortunate that they should in any way have got mixed up in this matter. I feel bound now to discharge them. Timmings will be fined 10s. or seven days." Is that an accurate report of your judgment in the case?—As far as I can remember it is quite accurate.

771. Is there anything you would like to add to it here?—I do not think there is anything.

772. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Did Timmings put forward any defence of any sort?—None, whatever. I was very careful to ascertain that, because I thought it had a great bearing on the case, and I was very careful, as he was not defended by counsel, to see that he had in every way the same advantages as the others had who were defended by counsel. I pointed out to him, as each witness was called (I remember that perfectly well) that he was entitled to ask as many questions as he liked, and I rather encouraged him to do so, because I thought, unless I was satisfied about that, I had not got to the bottom of the case. I gave him every opportunity, and I asked him at the end of the case whether he wished to say anything or to deny in any way the case against him. I can only repeat what I said in my decision that I was quite satisfied he had no defence of any kind, and that he did not desire to make any.

773. Are you quite satisfied that he understood if he had a defence he could put it forward?—Quite. That is one of the points. I make it my business to see that every prisoner who is not defended by counsel has the opportunity.

Cross-examined by Mr. Eldon Bankes.

774. Did Timmings make any complaint before you with reference to the way in which the Police had treated him?—No, I have already said none at all. I might also add this. According to my note, which I have here, one of these two gentlemen (I think it was not Dr. Gerothwohl, but Mr. Lavalette) himself said: "The thing that attracted our attention was that Timmings had been thrown against the wheel of a cab," but he went on to say that he made no complaint against the Police in respect of that at all. Neither Timmings nor he made any complaint.

775. (Mr. Whitmore.) You think it was Mr. Lavalette?—Yes, I think it was Mr. Lavalette. They described that they had met Mr. Sherrington, and that there was a great scene of riot in Piccadilly, and they said: "We saw the police constable push Timmings along, and he fell against the wheel of a cab. We throw no blame on the police constable for that." Neither Timmings nor Mr. Lavalette complained of that.

776. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) One other point. I have a note here from the "Daily Telegraph" of what counsel is alleged to have said at the first hearing. It says that counsel said a bonâ fide mistake had been made by the Police?—I remember that quite well.

777. What I want to know is this. Did Mr. Lavalette or Dr. Gerothwohl say anything in your presence in the Police Court with reference to that matter?—Yes. Mr. Scott was counsel, and I have a note here of what his defence put forward was. After Mr. Sherrington had been called and had retired, my note (it is only a short one, and it is really all the means I have of refreshing my recollection of this, because no note would be taken of it by the Clerk) goes on to say: "Mr. Scott—Great disorder, great confusion—I ask you to say this led to a mistake." That is all I have about it.

778. Do you remember whether Dr. Gerothwohl said anything in his evidence about its having been a mistake?—Yes, quite well. Counsel put the question to him: "Do you invite the Magistrate to say there was a mistake?" or words to that effect. I think he showed a little reluctance about adopting that; he hesitated for a moment, as if he did not understand it. Then Mr. Scott put it to him, so that he could not fail to understand it: "What I wish to put to you is, do you now invite the Magistrate to say that the disorder in the street led to a mistake being made?" and then he said: "Yes, I do." The whole defence put forward was to that effect. If it had not been, I think I should have thought that the case perhaps had not been run upon the proper lines. That was the defence put forward, and I considered whether I was justified in discharging them or not. Counsel enlarged very much upon the very great amount of disorder in the streets owing to its being the night of the University Boat Race.

779. Do you remember whether they said anything about there being a crowd in Swallow Street or in Vine Street?—I think I have some notes about that: "We went along Piccadilly about 12. There was a great deal of rowdyism outside St. James' Church." That is from my note of Dr. Gerothwohl's evidence.

780. It does not carry the question as to whether or not there was a crowd of people in Swallow Street?—Swallow Street leads into Piccadilly, just opposite St. James' Church. I do not find any mention of Swallow Street. "A lot of young men arm in arm; Timmings was walking quite close to me," and so on.

(Chairman.) Do you, Dr. Gerothwohl, wish to ask Mr. Denman any questions?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) I have a few questions to ask Mr Denman. May I have the verbatim report?

(Chairman.) Yes.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) I have already stated, I think, that I disagreed entirely with the line of defence adopted by counsel. I believe he did put the question to me, but not exactly as Mr. Denman put it.

(Chairman.) Will you put any question you wish to Mr. Denman, suggesting any alteration of his evidence?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) If you please.

Cross-examined by Dr. Gerothwohl.

781. Did you think a bonâ fide mistake at the place of arrest was possible?—I am afraid I cannot answer that question. I cannot go beyond stating the facts that occurred.

782. From the legal conclusion which you drew towards me may I ask whether you meant to imply that on festive occasions people who do not remain indoors are seriously to blame?—I must take the Commissioners' opinion as to how far I can go beyond saying what I have said.

(Chairman.) I do not think the Magistrate can be cross-examined upon his judgment, but if you wish to suggest now that he has not recollected rightly what was said by your counsel you can do that.

(Witness.) I shall be only too glad to say that I never meant to imply any such thing as that, but I think I am bound to take the objection, not from any disinclination to answer the question, but having regard to the position which a Magistrate occupies who has to decide cases judicially, of course there must be a limit to the extent to which he ought to be asked questions about a case after he has decided the point.

Mr. G. L. Denman.

783. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) A question as to a mistake was put to me. In the verbatim report I see this: "There was a considerable amount of rowdyism going on, and the Police were keeping order," and I answer "Yes, they were under great provocation." I do not find myself saying anything with regard to a mistake. I find counsel saying to you what you have said, but I do not find myself admitting a mistake?—No. All I point out is that when counsel's turn came to make his speech for the defence, that was the ground on which he put it.

784. May I ask you whether you remember on the 9th April that Timmings, when he was first asked a question, made the following statement: "It was more illness than drunkenness. I do not know those gentlemen"?—I do not remember that question being asked.

785. Do you remember his saying: "I do not know those gentlemen." It appeared in all the papers?—I do not find that in the depositions.

786. I can. I do not think you find your conclusions there?—I cannot remember whether that was said or not at this period.

787. You do not remember after that either you or the inspector telling him: "You can make a statement later: put questions"?—Are you not referring to something that took place at the Police Station?

788. In Court?—I cannot remember.

789. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) You never had an opportunity of looking at that verbatim report?—No.

790. (Mr. Dickinson.) Just to clear up what might be a misapprehension, I have a note here of the two days' proceedings, and I notice it was on the first day that Mr. Scott seems to have argued the case as being a bonâ fide mistake. Would you mind referring to your notes and seeing whether that is not the case. It was on the 9th April?—No, it was after the evidence had all been given.

791. (Chairman.) That is to say after Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette had both given their evidence?—Yes.

792. (Mr. Dickinson.) I do not find in the notes we have that counsel's speech was addressed to a mistake?—I remember his reminding me of this: "You remember the evidence that was given about the enormous size of the crowd and the great confusion that existed and the terrible riot," and words to that effect, impressing upon me, after all that had taken place, how difficult it was for people to be certain about what happened under such circumstances.

793. When you stated in the words you have read that they had behaved so handsomely in facing the difficulties in which, in their position, the Police were placed, you were referring to the words that their counsel must have said, and to nothing that they themselves had said?—Very likely. Of course they were responsible for their counsel's defence. I am quite clear in my recollection, and in fact I do not think anybody disputes it, that they did both make use of the expression that there was a great crowd and a great disturbance, and that the Police were under great provocation from the people, not including themselves. I think they both gave their evidence very fairly and very openly, and I had no reason to doubt that they did do their best to give an honest account of the matter.

794. (Chairman.) I have a shorthand note of the first day's proceedings, and it does appear that Timmings did say in answer to you: "It was more illness than drunkenness with me. I do not know these prisoners"?—That is quite likely. It is quite possible that he may have said that it was more illness than drunkenness. I did my very best to see whether he really meant to say that anything wrong had been done to him, and I was quite satisfied that he had no such complaint.

795. The note also says: "Counsel defending said Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette followed to the Station when Timmings was arrested to give evidence, and they themselves were then arrested. I have a doctor here who will say that when he examined them they were not drunk. He examined them as soon as they could get to him after they were released. I shall call the doctor and the defendants, and after their evidence I shall ask you to believe that there has been a bona fide mistake on the part of the police, and ask you to discharge the defendants." Is that in substance what counsel said?—Exactly. There was nothing to alter that so far as I remember throughout. According to this note you are reported to have then said: "As that is the line the defence takes I shall adjourn the case for the attendance of the inspector who took the charge and Dr. Mitchell, who examined two of the prisoners."

796. Is that an accurate report?—Quite accurate. I thought the importance of that was this. One of the prisoners was charged with being drunk, and inasmuch as this doctor, according to the evidence, had not been called upon until two hours afterwards it became an important question which it had not been before whether they were or not. On the second day I think the evidence rather directed itself to that.

797. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I should like to refresh your recollection about this so that we may get the evidence. The Chairman has now read what took place on the first day, which would be on Monday, the 9th, when the defence was set up of there having been a bona fide mistake, and then there was an adjournment according to your direction for the purpose of enabling the surgeon to attend, and then that you might decide after hearing his evidence?—Not only on that account, but there were more than a hundred prisoners into custody as a result of that Saturday night, and there really was not time to go further with it.

798. All I want to do is to refresh your recollection about it. Mr. Scott suggested that the evidence was a bona fide mistake. That appears to have been on the first day from what has now been read.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) And on the second.

799. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It appears to have been on the first day that Mr. Scott made this definite defence. The line of defence indicated a bona fide mistake on the part of the police, and then came an adjournment according to your direction. On the next day, the 11th, I find this in the note: After the evidence for the prosecution had closed Mr. Scott said: "I do not know, sir, whether you would allow me to state shortly what I propose to prove before calling my witnesses, or whether I should call my witnesses and address your Worship afterwards. I propose to call Dr. Gerothwohl, Mr. Lavalette, Mr. Sherrington, a barrister, who saw them shortly before, and I propose to call two doctors." And then you said: "In a case like this I think you had better defer your remarks." Then Mr. Scott says: "I shall call substantive evidence." Then, apparently, the evidence was called, and I find this at the end of Mr. Sherrington's evidence. If you would look at page 30 of the note, Dr. Gerothwohl, Mr. Lavalette, and Mr. Sherrington having been called, you apparently, as I read here, came to the conclusion that there was no necessity to go further, and you were satisfied, and, as I read from the note, no further observations were made by Mr. Scott, because I see as soon as Mr. Sherrington's evidence was at an end you said this: "I do not think I need put you to the necessity of calling further evidence," which would show that Mr. Scott could not have addressed you again. You said you had heard the two defendants and you had heard Mr. Sherrington, a member of the Bar, whose evidence had evidently impressed you, and then you said there was no necessity to call the other evidence, because they said they had the doctors there?—I cannot say exactly when it was. My recollection was very distinct that it was impressed upon me, but at what time I cannot say.

800. I call your attention to that for the purpose of showing what had happened. What I did want to put to you is this. From first to last was there ever any defence put forward to you, either on the first or on the second day, other than that there was a bona fide mistake on the part of the police?—No, I cannot remember anything.

801. (Chairman.) But there was a direct conflict of evidence before you, was there not?—Distinctly.

802. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) May I ask you to look a little further into that point. I am not sure that this shorthand note is complete. We do not know.

You did read from your note just now a statement as though Mr. Scott had addressed you after the defendants had given their evidence?—Yes, that is so; but, as I say, I do not wish to set this note up against the other note.

803. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Have you any objection to the Commissioners seeing your notes?—Not in the slightest.

804. (Chairman.) Perhaps you might leave these notes?—Certainly. Those are merely loose sheets of foolscap paper which were lying on the table. Very often I take no note at all in a case, but at other times I take a very full one.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Of course, it is accurate, as far as it goes, but I do not know whether it is complete.

805. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) This note is made, I suppose, in order of time as things happen?—That I could not say. What I do it for is merely to take the exact expressions. In some cases it is not necessary to take any note, and sometimes I do not take any note, but when I see that there is going to be a case in which it is important to have the time, the date, and the exact expressions I do it as I go on.

806. Will you look at the penultimate statement on the last page—(handing). Is that evidence, or is that your note of what your view was?—That is merely my note before I disposed of the case, made whilst I was listening, I think, to Mr. Scott's remarks. It is merely a note of how the matter struck me. The other, of course, is the actual decision. Mr. G. L. Denman. 23 July 1906.

(Chairman.) I do not think we need keep these notes.

807. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Can you, Dr. Gerothwohl, tell me this. On the second day, I understand, there was a shorthand note taken by your instructions?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) Yes, verbatim.

808. (Mr. Rufus. Isaacs.) We have had that proved. On the first day you had no shorthand writer there?—No, but I got a very full report from a reporter, Mr. A. C. Dean, of the "Daily Telegraph."

(Chairman.) Is he here now?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) I do not know.

(Chairman.) Is Mr. A. C. Dean here?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) Apparently he is not.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Perhaps, Mr. Bankes, you will look at that and see whether you want that proved.

Mr. Henri Lavalette, sworn

809. (Chairman.) You live at 8, Alma Terrace?—Yes. Mr. H. Lavalette.

810. You have heard what Dr. Gerothwohl has said as to his relations with you, and as to his living with you?—Yes.

811. Do you confirm his statement?—Yes.

812. You are a journalist?—Yes.

812.* Do you remember the 7th April last?—Yes, I do.

813. Would you like now to tell your own story. I think you met your friend shortly before dinner?—I met him at Alma Terrace.

814. You went out after dinner?—Yes. We took an omnibus at Cromwell Road to Knightsbridge, and then we changed at Knightsbridge and took another omnibus to Piccadilly. Then we went to dine at the Monico, where we had one glass of lager beer each.

815. With your dinner?—Yes. On leaving the Monico, just after 9 o'clock, Dr. Gerothwohl suggested that we should go and see the Soho quarter, and it being Saturday it was market day. Then later we went to look at the shops and see the people, and we waited about three quarters of an hour listening to a temperance lecturer.

816. Was that after you had been to the café?—I beg your pardon. On leaving the Monico we went to Shaftesbury Avenue and on to Dean Street to a little place where they sell coffee, and we had some coffee and one glass of lemonade. On leaving that café we went to the Soho quarter, as I have stated.

817. What did you do after listening to the temperance lecturer?—We looked at various shops and listened to the salesmen selling their wares. Then we came back to Shaftesbury Avenue, and went on to Piccadilly Circus, and under the Regent Street Arcade we met Mr. Sherrington, a friend of mine.

818. You had known Mr. Sherrington before?—Yes. I had met him at a friend's house. We talked together about ten minutes, and then we proposed to go to the Trocadero, where Mr. Sherrington said he had left his bag, so we decided to go to the Trocadero. We went, and there we had one glass of whisky each. I had whisky and water, and the others had whisky and soda.

819. How long did you remain at the Trocadero?—About half an hour. We left about 11.30.

820. What became of Mr. Sherrington?—Mr. Sherrington took an omnibus to go home. We left him and walked down Coventry Street to Leicester Square and back, and then we walked down Lower Regent Street. We had seen the crowd in Regent Street, and we walked in the middle of the road, so as not to become mixed with the crowd, which was thrown out of the "Continental." We stopped there, and then we went to Piccadilly Circus to take an omnibus home.

821. Did you walk in the direction of St. James' Church?—We walked in Piccadilly in the direction of St. James' Church.

822. Now, will you tell us in your own way what occurred and what you saw?—Yes. When we were nearing St. James' Church, I noticed we were alone. There was a little crowd of people in front and a little knot of people behind. We were quite alone. We saw Timmings walking along with his hands in his pockets. Then we heard a noise in front and we saw a constable, Isaacson, pass behind a cab standing there, and push Timmings, and Timmings fell against the wheel of the cab. Then Timmings was taken in charge. Dr. Gerothwohl wished to give his card on behalf of Timmings, who was being taken in charge. In the meantime, Timmings was lifted up by Isaacson and brought across to the west corner of Swallow Street. We followed, and we went straight to Swallow Street towards the east corner of Swallow Street. They crossed to Swallow Street from the west to the east, and we went on to the east side, and therefore in the middle of Swallow Street we joined them. At that time we were all five quite alone. I stooped over to look at Isaacson's number, as I thought he had been treating Timmings wrongly. I have forgotten to say that at the corner of Swallow Street the constable Isaacson was joined by another constable from the other side, and Timmings was marched off between the two to Vine Street.

823. Then you got to the top of Vine Street?—Then looking over for his number I noticed a man walking behind about 10 ft.

824. You noticed a man?—A constable.

825. Was that a third constable?—That was a third constable in the street. We then crossed to Vine Street, and in the middle of Vine Street we may have fallen back a few paces. I was walking along, but it was rather dark, and I wanted to make my charge founded before I charged him. Just as I was doing that the policeman who had been following us seized me by the arm and pushed me against the wall, then another policeman took hold of me and I was pushed against another policeman on the steps, and finally I found myself in the dock. I was absolutely dazed. In the dock I found Timmings and Dr. Gerothwohl. I was in the middle, between the two. Then I heard Dr. Gerothwohl say "Allow me to explain," and he took his card and he passed me and he took hold of the railing like this—(illustrating)—and held it as he passed. He was rather nervous, naturally. I saw constable 43 get near the dock, and he took the stick and broke it across his knee. I tried to explain why we had come, and that at the door of the Police Station we had been set upon by the police. I said that at the station. I was so excited that I may not have heard what was said, but I know there was some noise in the Court. There were about eight to twelve policemen there. We heard Constable 43 say something and we saw Inspector Berry taking down notes. Finally Inspector Berry said: "Mr. Lavalette, Dr. Gerothwohl, and Timmings, you are charged with being drunk and disorderly." Dr.

Mr. H. Lavalette.

Gerothwohl said: "Do you really think me drunk?" and the reply was "Yes." I spoke French at the time. We were then put out of the dock. I may say that the idea of taking a card was not very favourably looked upon by the Inspector, who said: "We do not want the card—All right—Who are you—what is your name?" and so on; in fact, we were not treated as we should have been. Then we left the dock. Dr. Gerothwohl then said to the constable: "I want to see a doctor." Then I heard him say something, but there was very great excitement at the time, and I cannot say exactly what he said. Then I went first with CR 6; he took my knife and he took my matches and threw them into the fire, saying: "We do not allow matches here." Then we were again shoved. We said we were walking quite quietly. After about half an hour a young warder came along with a man in civilian clothes, and Dr. Gerothwohl said we wanted pens and paper in order to communicate with our friends, and said that we wanted to see a doctor. I cannot say whether the two men in evening dress were in the cells when we came in, but I think they came in immediately after. Then we were left for about half an hour, and then the inspector came (I think he is in the room now), opened the door and said: "Do you want to see somebody?" We said: "Yes, we want to see Dr. Stewart and Mr. Graves." The paper was not brought and the door was closed. Timmings was complaining of pain in the side owing to the fall, and we advised him to ring the bell; he rang and I rang too, but apparently the bell did not work. Afterwards Inspector Berry came and said Dr. Stewart would not come, and upon Dr. Gerothwohl asking him whether he had asked Mr. Graves to come he said "No." No explanation was asked, as we were too excited at the time and too eager to get out of this cell. After that the inspector asked us if we would see the Police Surgeon, and we accepted it as we could not get anyone else. I spoke to Inspector Berry and said: "Surely you are not going to say that we are drunk," and Inspector Berry said: "Well, you ought not to interfere with the police." In the meantime we went back to the Charge room, Dr. Gerothwohl going with me, and in the Charge room we saw Dr. Mitchell. Dr. Mitchell took Dr. Gerothwohl alone, and he saw him in the passage and examined him there. I was alone with Dr. Mitchell when I was examined. The doctor asked me my name. I told him my name. He said: "What have you had to drink?" I said "I have had a whisky and water." I forgot at the time to say that I had had a glass of beer—it was a long time ago, and I had forgotten it. I said I had a whisky and water. Then he said: "I thought you had had a lot of beer." I said: "No, I had one glass of lager beer at dinner, and that is all I have had besides a cup of coffee and a glass of lemonade." He made me walk down the passage, and he made me spell my name, but in the excitement I spelt my name according to the French pronunciation. On hearing this CR 6 spelt it in the English way. We were then led back to the Charge room, where they made me sign a book. I wanted to read it first, but I could not read it, because it was such small print. Then I signed it. After I had signed it I was told: "You have to appear at Marlborough Street on Monday." Then we were let off. I may say that when I complained to the inspector of my matches being thrown into the fire he gave me two or three. Then we left. That would be about 2.30. We then walked to Hyde Park Corner, where we took a cab to Dr. Davis, who made a very thorough examination of me which lasted at least half an hour, and he is prepared to say, after his careful examination, that we could not have been intoxicated. Then we went to Dr. Walker, who examined us. Then we went home.

826. You attended and gave evidence at Marlborough Street?—Yes, I did, and the charge was dismissed.

Cross-Examined by MR. ELDON BANKES.

827. Had you lived in London for some time?—I have lived here for six years.

828. Did you know that scenes of disorder take place in this neighbourhood on boat race night?—I did not.

829. So that when you went with your friend, Dr. Gerothwohl, to dinner you did not know that anything of the kind takes place on that night?—No.

830. Then you dined and you went to Soho?—We dined and we went to Soho.

831. Coming back from Soho you saw these crowds in Piccadilly Circus?—We saw some crowds, but not in Piccadilly Circus—it was more or less right along.

832. It was before you met your barrister friend that you saw these crowds?—Yes, we saw people going along.

833. And shouting?—There was no crowd where we were.

834. You were on the north side and you saw crowds passing and re-passing below you who were shouting?—Yes.

835. And there was considerable noise and disorder going on even then?—Not at that time.

836. There was a good deal of shouting?—I did not notice it.

837. What were the crowds doing then?—They were walking along. It did not strike me very particularly because I did not remember it was Boat race night. I did not pay any attention to the fact that there were people going down.

938. Then you had this conversation with your barrister friend and he left you, I understand, some time after 11 o'clock?—About 11 o'clock, I suppose.

839. Do you know the time precisely?—No, but it is fair to state that it was about 11.30.

840. Then you and your friend, Dr. Gerothwohl were free to go home if you had wanted to, but instead of going home you walked up Coventry Street?—Yes. I had never seen the sight. He spoke of Boat Race night quite incidentally.

841. Then you went up to Soho to see what was going on in that neighbourhood?—Naturally. I was curious.

842. So you deliberately stood to see what was likely to happen in that neighbourhood?—Yes.

843. And you very soon realised that there was considerable disorder going on?—Not in Coventry Street. Young men were coming out of the Empire.

844. That was not lively enough for you, so you turned back into Regent Street?—We did not want life.

845. You found plenty of disorder in Regent Street, did you not?—The only real disorder we saw afterwards was when people were pushed out of the "Continental."

846. That was in Regent Street?—That was in Regent Street.

847. There were very considerable crowds in Regent Street booing and making a noise?—There were crowds in Regent Street. I think I have said in my statement that we kept to the middle of the road.

848. Instead of going down Pall Mall and getting out of it, as you might have done, you turned into Regent Street, and then went down Piccadilly?—Yes, and looked out for a 'bus.

849. No doubt considerable disorder was going on then, and the Police were endeavouring to disperse the crowds?—We did not go into Piccadilly Circus. We walked on the pavement across Piccadilly.

850. You skirted the Circus?—We skirted the Circus.

851 Then you say the Police were endeavouring to disperse the crowds and to preserve order?—Yes.

852. I understand from what has been told us by your friend that your opinion then was that the Police were doing their work well and patiently?—Yes.

853. Then you passed down Piccadilly until you got to St. James' Church. I have now the verbatim statement of what took place before the Magistrate, and what your counsel asked was this: "Opposite St. James' Church in Piccadilly was there a scene of considerable rowdyism"?—There was great noise. We will call it rowdyism.

854. You answered: "There was a great scene and much shouting." Was that taking place in front of St. James' Church when you were there?—That was taking place in front of St. James' Church—in front of us.

855. How far from you would that be, do you say?—About five to six yards.

856. As far as from me to you?—Perhaps a little further, but about that.

857. So that a scene of rowdyism and of great disorder was taking place about as far off as from me to you?—Yes, but they seemed to all congregate together. There were no people between.

858. According to your account, was Timmings between you and the people who were making the noise?—We saw Timmings pass us, and then he was between the crowd and ourselves .

859. Then you say: "We saw a few people arrested"?—Yes.

860. Was that behind you?—Yes.

861. Immediately behind you?—About five yards.

862. So that there were people five yards in front of you making great disorder, and people five yards behind you making great disorder and being arrested?—Yes.

863. Then you say: "We saw a few people arrested, in fact there was a little knot of people in front of St. James' Church. There we saw Timmings walking towards the railings of the church." Was he walking towards the railings of the church?—Yes.

864. That means that he would be crossing the foot pavement. If he was walking towards the railings of the church he would be crossing the foot pavement, would he not?—More or less. We were on the pavement. I expect he passed us between the wall and ourselves.

865. Then you say: "We saw Constable CR 43 push him." You are not throwing any blame on the constable. Had you discussed the matter with your counsel before the hearing took place as to whether or not you attribute blame to the constable?—No, we did not say that.

866. Did you discuss it with your solicitor?—No, we did not say we were going to follow the line of conduct not to throw blame on the Police.

867. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You have put that question to him, but there is one other thing which follows immediately. I do not think because you have got that answer that it is an answer to the question you put. You mean he was not throwing any blame on the Constable?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) There was a great row going on.

868. The question I asked you was whether you discussed with your solicitor and counsel the line you were going to take up with reference to your defence?—No, we did not discuss the line of conduct that we should not throw blame on the Police; in fact we had no time. We were arrested at 12 o'clock on Saturday and we saw the counsel on the Monday, and we had no time.

869. You had plenty of time between the time you were arrested and the second hearing?—We saw him for about an hour and a half, or an hour.

870. Had you arranged that you were going to take the line of defence that you were not going to throw any blame on the Police?—No, we had not been committing any disorder, but when the Police made the statement they did make, then we changed our opinion.

871. And elected and decided not to throw any blame on the Police?—No. It was after the hearing of the case on the second day. We did not know what the line of conduct was of the Police, and therefore we could not arrange our own.

872. The Police had given their statement on the first day?—Yes.

873. Then you saw your solicitor for an hour and a half between the first and the second occasion?—Yes.

874. Did you make any arrangement with him as to the line of defence you were going to adopt?—No, we did not.

875. Not any line?—No. The important thing for us to prove was that we were not drunk, and not committing any disorder.

876. This was a question put by your counsel: "You are not throwing any blame on the constable? There was considerable rowdyism going on? (A.) Yes. We thought he had been rather unjustly treated." That was Timmings?—Yes.

877. I understand you to suggest that Isaacson took Timmings right across the street?—Yes.

878. And that he was then joined by another constable?—Yes.

879. Up to that point you do not suggest that you had said or done anything which would lead the Police to think that you were going to take any part in the matter?—Not at that time.

880. Then you went up Swallow Street?—Yes.

881. Did anybody else turn up Swallow Street?—One constable, and I looked at his number, and from the fact of my looking at his number he concluded, perhaps, that we intended giving in our cards.

882. Do you know who the constable was who was following behind?—I think the constable who pushed me into the Station was the constable who followed me.

883. Did you recognise him before he pushed you into the Station?—In the gaslight I recognised him. I thought he had rather a light complexion.

884. Is that Wallington?—Yes.

885. You recognised him?—I recognised him when I was pushed right into the Police Station.

886. Do you say there were two constables standing at the door at Vine Street Police Station?—Yes.

887. One on each side?—One on each side.

888. Not any of the constables whose names have been mentioned here?—No.

889. It was not Isaacson, and it was not Wallington?—They were in Piccadilly.

890. Your recollection is that there were two men standing there, one on each side of the door?—Yes.

891. Is it your suggestion that it was Wallington who pushed you into the Police Station?—It is.

892. He had had no opportunity of having any communication with Isaacson at all, had he?—No. He was behind me.

893. And Isaacson was walking in front of you, and walking straight, as you say, with Timmings through Vine Street into the Station, and this other man was, according to your account, behind him?—Yes.

894. Could Isaacson have given any signal to this man?—He may have without my seeing it. I told you just now that at one time I was in a line with the three of them. Therefore I could not see what Isaacson was doing.

895. If you were in a line with them, you were by his side, and quite close to him?—In a line. There was Timmings, there was the other constable, there was Dr. Gerothwohl, and there was myself. I was to the extreme right, and Isaacson was to the extreme left. I looked over naturally like that (illustrating).

896. Do you tell the Commissioners that you think at that moment Isaacson took the opportunity to tell the constable who was following you to arrest you?—I do not want to make any suggestion. I tell you that on my entering the station I was seized and very roughly handled.

897. And by a man who, so far as you know, had had no opportunity of communicating with Isaacson?—I do not say that. The man who was following me got hold of me and pushed me into the station.

898. When you got into the station we have heard there was a good deal of uproar, and so forth. How many constables do you say there were in that room?—I dare say there were about 10.

899. Is that your recollection?—Yes, between 10 and 12.

900. That was in the charge room?—Yes.

901. Did one of them ask you for your stick?—No. I lost my stick. I do not know where my stick went. In the struggle the stick disappeared.

902. You had a stick when you went in?—Yes, I had a stick.

903. You do not recollect being asked for it?—I was seized so suddenly.

904. When you were in the dock do you recollect being asked for it?—No. The stick was on the table when I got into the dock.

905. It was in the station. Did you see it there?—I did.

Mr. H. Lavalette.

23 July 1906.

906. If you were asked to give up your stick, and you handed it to the constable when you were in the dock, you may have forgotten all about it. You do not remember being asked to give up your stick, and you do not remember giving it up?—No, I was not asked. It was not in my hand when I got into the dock.

907. Were you also very excited when you were in the room?—Very.

908. With regard to the incident about the card, there was nothing on your card more than your name and address?—And my title as the London correspondent of a Belgian paper. My address was not on that card.

909. (Chairman.) What is the name of the paper?—"La Libre Critique."

910. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) The inspector asked you for your name and address and description, did he not?—I offered my card, as he could not catch my name.

911. There was nothing more on the card than what you had already given?—On the card was my name as the London correspondent of the "La Libre Critique."

912. Do you think that would have been of any importance to the inspector?—It was the only card I had.

913. If you had already given all the necessary information to the inspector as to your name, your address, your occupation, and your nationality, do you think it at all extraordinary that he would have said he did not want your card?—May I tell you this? When he asked me my name I certainly pronounced my name with a foreign pronunciation, but they never understood it here. Then he asked me for my card.

914. They did take your card?—They took my card. Inspector Berry at the station would not take it although I passed my card.

915. Then is your complaint merely that he took Dr. Gerothwohl's card?—I passed my card after Dr. Gerothwohl had given in his card.

916. Did they take Dr. Gerothwohl's card?—They took it after he had insisted on giving it.

917. So they took both your cards?—They did, but they did not take them at once, as Dr. Gerothwohl has said.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I do not wish to put a direct conflict. You know what the position is.

918. (Mr. Dickinson.) I want to understand exactly what happened when you went into the station. You were walking five in a row up to the corner of Vine Street?—We were five in a row in the middle of Swallow Street, and on turning the corner of Vine Street we may have fallen back two or three paces.

919. You, as you told us, were on the right?—On the right.

920. And the turning into Vine Street is to the right?—Yes.

921. Do I understand that you and Dr. Gerothwohl being on the right dropped back and allowed the others to come round you?—As they were going very fast we dropped back for a yard or a yard and a half in the middle of Vine Street.

922. It is a very short distance from the corner of Vine Street to the Police station?—Yes.

923. Then you had got into Vine Street, and you were still walking in a row?—When we got into Vine Street we were walking in a row.

924. Then before you got to the Police station the other three went on and you dropped behind?—Yes.

925. I noticed you said that when you went into the Police station you did not know what had happened to Dr. Gerothwohl at all?—No. I said I did not know what had become of Dr. Gerothwohl at all when I was seized.

926. I think you said, "At the time we walked along towards the station we may have fallen back a little, and at the time we entered the Police station I was abreast of the three"?—Yes.

927. Does that mean that Dr. Gerothwohl had fallen behind?—Yes, he was behind.

928. Then you said, "I did not know what had happened to Dr. Gerothwohl at all"?—Perhaps I did not put that rightly. I should have said I did not know what had happened to Dr. Gerothwohl after I was seized.

929. At that moment he was behind you?—At the moment I stooped to make quite sure of Isaacson's number Dr. Gerothwohl fell behind, and I suppose we could not be five in a row.

930. As you were turning into the door you went forword to look at the number on the policeman's collar?—Yes.

931. Then I understood you to say Dr. Gerothwohl went into the dock before you did?—Yes.

932. Can you explain how that happened. He was behind you as he was going into the door, but he was in the dock before you got there?—It was a very short distance, and you must remember the thing was done so quickly—in a moment.

933. Have you any idea what policeman had hold of you when you were put into the dock?—No, I could not say.

934. Was it another policeman?—Yes.

935. Not one of those three?—Not either Isaacson, nor Wallington. It was not one of those two.

936. You have just told us that when you got into the dock you said you had come to speak on behalf of Timmings?—Yes.

937. I do not notice that you mentioned that before?—No.

938. As to Dr. Gerothwohl, I find something to that effect on the notes. At page 31 you will find this: "Finally I found myself in the dock; Mr. Timmings and Dr. Gerothwohl were there. We protested, and Dr. Gerothwohl wanted to send in his card." I want to know what you said. Dr. Gerothwohl has told us he said he had come to speak on behalf of Timmings. What did you say?—I said, "I have come here to give my name in favour of this fellow, when I was seized by that gentleman," meaning Wallington. "Then I found myself here, and I designated Wallington as that gentleman who pushed me into the Police station as he got hold of or set upon me. I said to Inspector Berry that I had been assaulted at the door of the station.

939. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I want you to direct your mind to one very important point in this matter. First of all when you saw Timmings, when Timmings was arrested, in your view was he drunk or sober?—He was sober, in my opinion.

940. Quite sober?—Yes.

941. No indication of drink of any kind?—I could not say. In my opinion he was sober.

942. Did it ever occur to you when he said, apparently in the cell, that he was more ill than drunk?—He said: "I am not drunk."

943. Did he say that?—He said that to me.

944. That is the first time we have heard of that. Had he ever said that before?—No.

945. You say he said to you he was not drunk. Just think a minute?—I think he said something to that effect. I would not swear it, but I think he said something to that effect. He complained of being dazed.

946. Of feeling bad?—From the fall. Then I went next him, but I did not notice that he was intoxicated.

947. You saw him in the Police Court, of course?—Yes.

948. You then had an opportunity of asking him questions?—We did not ask questions.

949. I say you had an opportunity given to you to ask questions?—No.

950. You have heard what Mr. Denman told us happened?—Yes, but we had counsel.

951. Of course you had your counsel representing you and Dr. Gerothwohl, but Timmings was not represented?—He was not represented.

952. Is it your view now, after the evidence you have heard, and do you wish to convey to us, that Timmings was perfectly sober?—In my view he was not drunk.

953. That is not quite the question I am putting to you. Is it your view that Timmings was perfectly sober when he was arrested?—I think he was.

954. After the evidence, and after all that we have heard, you still think that?—I do.

955. Have you ever had any communication at all with Timmings since. Do you know where he is still?—No, I may have his address at home.

956. What I want to understand from you is this: Was not your view that what Timmings had to complain of was being pushed against the wheel?—If he had a complaint I should have thought he would have complained of that.

957. Then he would not have had a complaint of being arrested, but his complaint would be of being pushed against the wheel. Of course the complaint that you and Dr. Gerothwohl were going to make was not of Timmings being arrested, but of the way he was treated when he was pushed or shoved against the wheel?—Yes.

958. That is what you meant when you said at the Police Court that you and Dr. Gerothwohl thought that he, Timmings, had been rather unjustly treated?—Yes.

959. And you went on to say that the constable pushed him, and that he fell against the wheel of a cab, and then Dr. Gerothwohl said that was rather unjust, and that he was going to stand as a witness for Timmings, and you accompanied him?—Yes. In following the constable our intention was to go and protest against the brutality that he showed to Timmings.

960. You mean your complaint was to be not about the arrest, but about the brutality?—Yes.

961. When you crossed over to Piccadilly and walked up Swallow Street do you remember at all on which side of the road you walked?—On the right side, the east side.

962. Do you mean the east side of Swallow Street?—Yes.

963. Where did you, the constable, and Timmings walk?—At the time Isaacson was joined by the other constable they were on the west side of Swallow Street.

964. That would be on the left-hand side going up?—Yes.

965. You were on the right?—We were on the right. We started behind the cab and walked straight across to Piccadilly, and kept to the right of Swallow Street.

966. They were going up on the left, and you were going up on the right. What was the next thing that happened to bring them together?—They crossed to the right of Swallow Street. This is Vine Street, and this is Swallow Street; they were here; to come here they would have to cross the street; we were coming here (illustrating).

967. They joined you while you were on the right side?—Yes.

968. It is said that when the charge was read over to you, neither you nor Dr. Gerothwohl demurred to it. You have told us of the protest which you and Dr. Gerothwohl made. What I want to know is this: Could anybody have thought you were admitting the charge by your not denying it, so far as your view goes?—No, they could not have thought we admitted the charge by our behaviour. Of course we did not. We had not been in a Police Court before—at least I had not, and I did not deny it. We had already explained the reason why we were going to the Police Court. Mr. H. Lavalette. 23 July 1906.

969. (Chairman.) When you first saw Timmings, how far was he from you?—Two or three paces.

970. Had he passed you?—He had passed us.

971. Walking?—Walking.

972. Alone?—Alone.

973. You are perfectly sure he was not arm in arm with anybody?—No, he had his hands in his overcoat pockets.

974. Was he shouting out?—No.

975. Was he walking erect?—He was walking erect.

976. Not swaying at all?—No.

977. Did you notice the constable, P.C. 43, as you found out afterwards, assist him?—The first time I saw P.C. 43 was when he pushed Timmings.

978. Did he pass you?—Yes, he passed us.

979. On which side of you did he pass you—on the wall side of the street or on the street side?—On the wall side, I should say.

980. Was he going fast?—Yes, he walked fast.

981. He caught Timmings up?—Yes.

982. Did he speak to Timmings?—No, he did not speak to Timmings. We saw him push Timmings. I may say that Timmings is an absolutely helpless sort of man; he is very weak; he was crying and apologising, and he did not dare say anything.

983. He was not speaking, crying and apologising before he was thrown against the cab, was he?—No.

984. He was saying nothing?—No.

985. He was walking quietly with his hands in his pockets?—Yes.

986. And then the constable passed you hurriedly?—Yes, at a fair pace.

987. Then he pushed Timmings, and threw him against the cab?—Yes. We all went at a good pace, and the constable went at the same pace that we did. Of course Timmings is a very short man.

988. Can you suggest any reason for the constable picking out Timmings for that treatment from among so many men?—I cannot. I have no reason to suggest.

989. You think the conduct of the police-constable was absolutely unjustifiable?—Absolutely.

990. You think Timmings ought not to have been arrested?—He should not have been pushed as he was. The Police arrested him. He had said nothing.

991. For aught you know there might have been some reason other than drunkenness?—There might have been, but we did not think of that at the time. We thought there was no reason for pushing him or throwing him against the wheel of the cab. He might have been killed. We did not go to speak about the arrest, but about the brutality of the constable.

Mr. William S. Sherrington, sworn.

992. (Chairman.) What is your address, if you please?—I live at Hampstead Heath.

993. And you are a barrister-at-law?—Yes.

994. Are you acquainted with Mr. Lavalette and Dr. Gerothwohl?—Dr. Gerothwohl I had never seen previously to this evening.

995. That is the 7th April?—The 7th April. But Mr. Lavalette I had met altogether on about five or six occasions. I had met him dining at the house of a friend of mine on two occasions, and I was staying in a country house last autumn where he was a visitor, and we were there together for two or three days.

996. It appears from the evidence given to us that you met these gentlemen on that Saturday evening?—Yes.

997. Will you give your account, if you please, of the meeting, and tell us about the time and the place? Perhaps I might begin a little earlier as to how I came to be out.

998. Yes?—I left my chambers in Lincoln's Inn soon after seven o'clock, carrying a brief bag with papers inside. I walked down intending to dine at the Trocadero and then to go back home to Hampstead. I had to wait; I found the Trocadero was very full, and I left my bag in the cloak room there. Then I went in to dinner. The place was very full, and I was rather a long time dining there. I left soon after 10 o'clock. I came out and walked down to my club in Pall Mall, and then I wrote a letter. Having done that, I walked back to pick up my bag at the Trocadero and then to go to Hampstead. I know the time I left my club was about a quarter to 11, and not later. The streets were comparatively empty, as far as I can recollect; that is to say, I remember the people had not come out of the theatres, and I remember I had a question in my mind as to whether I should catch the 11.9 train at Camden Town Station, which is a train I sometimes catch, and I remember thinking that I should not do it. The next train was at 11.39. I walked up towards Piccadilly, and then near the Café Monico, as I was crossing on the north side of Piccadilly Circus to get round to the Trocadero I met Mr. Lavalette and a Mr. W. S. Sherrington.

Mr. W. S. Sherrington.

friend. Mr. Lavalette greeted me. I had not seen him since the previous September, and he introduced me to his friend, Dr. Gerothwohl. One of them said: "We have just been looking at the French Market in Soho." Then I passed some remarks to them as to how London had altered, and so on. I said it was an interesting sight, or something of that sort. Then Mr. Lavalette told me that Dr. Gerothwohl was a professor at Trinity College. I rather pricked up my ears at that, because I was interested in the college in a certain way; and we proceeded to talk about the college. I asked after various people there, and I remember I asked him how they liked Mr. Bryce's new Commission, what the effect of it would be, and how it was received there; and he went into a longish discussion as to who approved of it, and who did not approve of it, and what the feeling was generally. I stayed talking, I should think generally, ten minutes. I remember I asked him whether he knew anyone at Cambridge, and he told me he knew a gentleman who happened to be at my own college there, and that rather interested me. We stood talking together, I should think, ten minutes, then I think I made a move rather to go towards the Trocadero. Mr. Lavalette then turned to me and said, in a foreign way rather: "Shall we not have a whisky together before we part?" I think I hesitated a little because it is not customary, but I thought he, being a foreign gentleman, would not like it if I demurred at all, and as there was no time to go to my club, or to his house, I said: "I am going into the Trocadero to fetch my bag," and we moved across the street, and went into the Trocadero. There Mr. Lavalette ordered three whiskies and soda. I think it was, or rather I think one of the three was whisky and water, but I had whisky and soda, one of the others had a whisky and soda, and one of them, I think, had whisky and water. We stood talking, we again spoke of university matters. We got talking about the abolition of compulsory Greek. Then Dr. Gerothwohl said that he owed his appointment at Dublin to the fact that they had abolished compulsory Greek, and substituted some form of modern language instead. Then he said although that was so he was in favour of compulsory Greek, and I remember saying I thoroughly agreed with him. Then I remember Mr. Lavalette asked whether we had Commercial Universities in England, and I said I thought we were attempting to have them in the present day. He then asked me what was the training for the Consular service, because he said he had a relative in Belgium who was in the Consular service, and that there was a special course of training at a Belgian university for the purpose of training people for the Consular service. He asked me whether it was the same in England, and I said no. He then asked me how the Consular service was appointed, and I said I really could not say, but I thought perhaps it was rather a haphazard affair. Then I asked Dr. Gerothwohl, I remember, whether the journal "Kottabos" was still published in Dublin, because when I was at the University I always used to read it with great interest, as it had some very witty and amusing classical jokes. Then I proceeded to tell him one, I remembered, and he told me one or two amusing examination stories. We stood talking, I should think, some long time, and I think I remember hearing some cheering outside, and I think I said to them, "This is Boat Race night," or something of that sort. I remember distinctly hearing the cheering of some noisy people outside. Then I said "I must be off," and Mr. Lavalette said: "Perhaps we shall meet next autumn. I said, "Perhaps we shall" or something of that sort, and then I left them inside there standing. I went to get my bag, and I do not know what became of them afterwards.

999. When you left them were they both sober?—Absolutely. I have not a shadow of doubt about it.

1000. Did they appear to you to have been taking any drink beyond drink in the most strict moderation?—No, they had no sign of drink at all; in fact, the trend of the conversation was such that they could not have been in drink.

1001. What was the time?—I can fix the time pretty accurately when I left them, because I remember thinking it was just too late to catch the 11.39 at Camden Town, and I took a cab. That would mean that it was certainly over twenty minutes past eleven. I can also remember that there were people still coming into the Trocadero, and I met them as I went out.

1002. Still coming in?—Still coming in, I think the place closes at 12 o'clock. As I went out the place was just full of everybody coming out of the theatres. I should say as nearly as possible it was half-past 11.

Examined by Dr. Gerothwohl.

1003. May I ask you whether, quite apart from the question of drunkenness, you considered that we were out for a hilarious evening?—I have told all I know, and there was no sign of anything of the kind as far as I saw.

1004. There was no mention of high jinks, and that sort of thing?—No.

Dr. Ivor Davis, sworn.

Dr. I. Davis.

1005. (Chairman.) What are your qualifications?—I am a doctor of medicine.

1006. What is your address?—3, Drayton Terrace, South Kensington.

1007. (Chairman.) Dr. Gerothwohl, I think you had better ask any questions you have to ask of this witness, if you please, as I have no proof?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) If you please.

1008. Do you remember my waking you up at your house?—Yes.

1009. About what time would that be?—About ten minutes to three.

1010. You spoke to us through the speaking-tube?—Yes.

1011. And then you came down and saw us?—Yes.

1012. (Chairman.) On what day was this?—This was on the Sunday morning following Boat Race day.

1013. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) Do you remember our general attitude as we came?—Yes.

1014. What was it?—These two gentlemen knocked me up at about ten minutes to three on Sunday morning, and I saw them first of all in my consulting-room. After giving me a description of their arrest, and so forth, they asked me if I would give them a certificate as to whether they were drunk or as to whether they were not drunk. The first thing that struck me when I saw these two gentlemen was this, and I explained to them at the time: "You do not look to me drunk, in fact I see nothing the matter with you, but if you have been arrested on a charge of drunkenness the charge is a serious one for you, and you must undergo an examination." I made a very exhaustive examination of both these gentlemen. I came to the conclusion that they were not drunk, and I gave them a certificate to that effect before they left the house.

1015. Will you tell us what examination you made?—I made a very exhaustive examination. I commenced with the eyes. I saw there was nothing unusual in the eyes. They acted to light and they were not dilated. There was a little congestion of the mucous membrane of conjunctiva, but you may have that at any time. You may take a dozen men in this room and you would see a little congestion in the whites of their eyes.

1016. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Was this in both or in only one?—A little in both.

1017. Was it in both eyes of both Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette?—Shall I give you the examination I made of the two together, or of both separately?

1018. (Chairman.) You had better give the examination of them both separately. Whom did you examine first?—I examined Dr. Gerothwohl first.

1019. Will you give us the result?—I examined the eyes, and I found them quite normal and also the pupils, in fact the whole eye was normal—both eyes. Then I examined the breath, and I could detect no fumes of whisky or of any spirits. I inquired if he had been sick or if he had been feeling sick, and he told me no. I then examined his hands with a paper held between the fingers, to see whether there was any tremor of the hand or of the arm. There was none. I also got him to put his two feet together, then close his eyes and then turn round in a circle as on a pivot. He did that perfectly. I then got him to walk, and he walked perfectly straight. His pulse was normal. I think it was said in the Police Court that he lisped, but that is likely to occur to anyone at any time who is excited. Again, there is a most important point, and that is this. I got him to repeat sentences after me, and also to pronounce very difficult words, which he did perfectly. All through I had conversational remarks with him, and I came to the conclusion that he was not under the influence of drink.

1020. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) With regard to the question of the breath-smelling, generally, do you consider that is of importance?—Of no importance at all. It is most fallacious.

1021. For instance, a man who has had a glass of whisky may smell of that for some time?—Yes.

1022. But that, of course, does not show that he is drunk?—No.

1023. I ask you this question from the point of view of the public. The Police apparently regard people as drunk because they smell of drink which they may have had a quarter of an hour previously. May I ask you another question with regard to the certificate of not drunk, but recovering from the effects of excessive drinking. May I ask you if it is possible to say anything definite about such a subtle question?—The certificate is very indefinite, and if there is any doubt whatsoever as regards a man being drunk, I think it ought to be given in favour of the man charged, naturally.

(Chairman.) I think you must confine yourself to asking questions, Dr. Gerothwohl.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) Do you think, according to your examination, we might have been drunk two or three hours before?

(Chairman.) I suppose you are examining for Mr. Lavalette and for yourself?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) Yes.

(Chairman.) Then in the natural order of examination we should expect you to ask Dr. Davis with regard to Mr. Lavalette.

1024. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) Will you tell us whether the result was just the same with regard to Mr. Lavalette?—I found no symptoms of drunkenness. I applied the same tests to Mr. Lavalette and found nothing.

1025. (Chairman.) You applied the same tests with the same result?—Yes, in fact I was nearly half an hour going through the tests.

1026. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) I have only one question to put to you, and that is whether, in your opinion, we might have been drunk two hours before?—No, it is impossible.

Cross-examined by Mr. Eldon Bankes.

1027. Can you fix the time when these gentlemen came to you?—I think I was rung up about ten minutes to three.

1028. About 3 o'clock?—Yes.

1029. Whereabouts do you live?—At Drayton Terrace, South Kensington.

1030. Some considerable distance away from Vine Street?—Not very far from Queen's Gate.

1031. Do you know how they came. Did they come in a hansom?—I have no idea how they came.

1032. Supposing they had driven to your house in a hansom, would that tend to remove any traces of drink if they had been taking drink? Would exposure to the air for such a distance as that remove any traces of it?—It is only about a quarter of an hour's drive.

1033. Does exposure to fresh air tend to take away the smell of drink from a person?—Yes, it would have a tendency to do so. Dr. I. Davis 23 July 1906.

1034. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) The evidence is that they walked to Hyde Park Corner and took a cab.

1035. (Mr. Bankes.) I did not hear that. If they were bailed out at 2.45 they could not have got there by ten minutes to three?—I think that is so. They were there, I know, before three o'clock.

1036. It does not very much matter. Just a question about testing a person's breath. Nobody would say that was conclusive, would they, unless there was an entire absence of smell. If there was an entire absence of smell you would then say that the man had not been drunk?—Yes.

1037. So that it is useful from the police point of view to test a man's breath?—No, not at all—not as a test. It may be of slight assistance, but I think if you tested the breath of all the people present here this afternoon you might have a considerable majority whose breath would smell.

1038. It is a very useful test, because if you find an entire absence of smell of drink you would come to the conclusion that the man is sober?—Yes.

1039. To that extent it is a useful test?—Yes.

1040. As has been pointed out by Dr. Gerothwohl, if a man had had a glass of whisky at half-past eleven his breath would smell at 12.10, would it not?—No, not necessarily.

1041. 11.30 and 12.10?—I could not detect it in these cases.

1042. Assuming a man had a glass of whisky from 11 to 11.30, would his breath be likely to smell at 12.10?—Yes, it may.

1043. An examination of the eye is one of the usual tests for drunkenness, is it not?—Yes.

1044. Are you in the habit of examining people for drunkenness?—No; I examine people for other things.

1045. It is only occasionally, I suppose, that anybody would ask you to examine a person for drink?—Yes, I have had to do it on several occasions—in three or four cases.

1046. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You told us that there was no indication of their having been drunk two hours before. Take the time we have in this case, namely, from 11.30 to 12.10. Was it possible at the time you saw either of those gentlemen that they could have been drunk between 11.30 and 12.10?—They could not possibly have been.

1047. Was it possible that they might have been not drunk, but under the influence of drink?—No, I do not think so.

1048. If they had been under the influence of drink during that time, would you have been able to detect it by the examination you made at three o'clock?—I think so; in fact, the odour would have been distinct if they had been drinking steadily, but if they had had one drink I should very likely not detect the odour of that at all. I tested particularly for the odour that night, but unless I got quite close to them I could not detect it.

1049. (Mr. Dickinson.) Did you know either of these gentleman before?—I had never seen Mr. Lavalette before, but I had met Dr. Gerothwohl on one or two occasions.

1050. Did you attend him?—I attended him once before.

Dr. Henry George Walker, sworn.

1051. (Chairman.) What are your qualifications?—I am an M.D. and Licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians. Dr. H. G. Walker.

1052. What is your address?—5, Marloes Road.

(Chairman.) Now will you, Dr. Gerothwohl, examine the witness?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) If you please.

Examined by Dr. Gerothwohl.

1053. Dr. Walker, do you remember my calling you up on Sunday morning the 8th April?—Yes.

1054. Do you remember about what time it was?—4 o'clock.

1055. Do you remember our general attitude?—Yes. Shall I describe it?

1056. If you please?—They came in and they told me that they had been examined by a surgeon at Vine Street, and also by another doctor in South Kensington; I do not think they told me the name then; and they said they simply wanted me to see them and confirm his opinion as to whether I thought they were under the influence of liquor at the time.

1057. (Chairman.) Did you examine them?—I examined them so far as to notice the way in which they were speaking.

Dr. H. G. Walker.

1058. Did you examine each of them separately?—They were taken separately. I noticed the way in which they walked into the room, and I noticed there was no smell of spirits in their breath. They told me that they had had Lager beer in the evening and one whisky and soda.

1059. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) You did not detect any signs of drink?—None at all.

1060. Nor any sign of having been under the influence of drink?—No.

1061. Do you agree with Dr. Davis that if we had been under the influence of drink some two or three hours before probably some symptoms would have been noticeable?—Yes, certainly.

1062. (Chairman.) You had better put to him the exact time, as Mr Rufus Isaacs put it. Supposing they had been drunk or under the influence of liquor between 11.30 and 12.10, would their condition have been the condition that it was when you saw them?—No, I think not.

1063. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) You live near to us, do you not?—Yes.

1064. I think as far as I am personally concerned you have on some occasions met me on my way home?—Yes.

1065. I ask you whether on such occasions you have noticed the slightest symptom or sign of being under the influence of drink?—No, none whatever.

(Chairman.) As to Mr. Lavalette, was his condition the same as that of Dr. Gerothwohl?

1066 (Dr. Gerothwohl.) You found us both perfectly sober?—Yes, in my opinion.

1067. In talking to us you got very near to us, did you not?—Yes.

1068. That would give you the best opportunity for smelling our breath?—Yes.

1069. You were quite satisfied with regard to that were you not?—Yes.

Cross-examined by Mr. Eldon Bankes.

1070. Something has been said about testing a man's breath. That is a course you would always take, would you not? If you were asked to examine whether a man was drunk or sober you would always test his breath?—Yes.

1071. That is one thing amongst others?—Yes.

1072. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) What would be the symptoms you would have detected supposing these gentlemen had been under the influence of drink, say at midnight, and they had come to see you at 4 o'clock in the morning. What should you have detected?—I should have detected some thickness in their speech, or some hesitation, and from the clear way in which they spoke to me and from the way in which they walked into the room it struck me that they were perfectly sober.

1073. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) Did you detect anything unusual about our clothes. That is very often a sign with regard to the person who has been under the influence of drink?—No.

1074. (Chairman.) Did you notice the damaged collar that we have heard of already?—No.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) I had put that right. I have no more technical witnesses to call as to sobriety, but I can if necessary call a number of witnesses as to character. In my interview with the Secretary on Friday morning I understood that the police were dropping entirely the charge of drunkenness, and that they would not argue the question as to sobriety in any way. Of course, if the Commissioners would like to hear evidence as to character I should ask them to allow the witnesses to be called.

(Chairman.) What do you say, Mr. Bankes, to Dr. Gerothwohl's suggestion that you are giving up the charge of drunkenness against him?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I did not know that any communication had been made. Of course, as you will have gathered from my attitude these gentlemen have been acquitted, and I do not desire in the least to go behind that. But the police here are charged with an offence, and I desire that the facts should be brought before the court so far as they can be consistent with the acquittal which has been given. So far as this gentleman's general character is concerned, I do not in the least desire to put you, or him, to the trouble of calling evidence as to general character.

(Chairman.) Will that satisfy you, Dr. Gerothwohl?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) It is a question which I leave entirely to the Commissioners.

(Chairman.) As far as general character is concerned it is quite unnecessary for you to give any further evidence.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) If the learned Counsel wishes to argue the question of impropriety of action I would rather call the witnesses.

(Chairman.) I do not think we can press Mr. Bankes to make any statement beyond the statement he has made. There is no attack whatsoever on your general character for sobriety. That is what I gather from Mr. Bankes' cross-examination, and he hardly suggested that you were drunk on that occasion.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) If necessary I will reserve the right to call witnesses as to character.

(Chairman.) Mr. Bankes, which witness will you call first?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I am entirely in your hands. I will take them in the order in which they appeared before the magistrate if that will suit you?

(Chairman.) Very well.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Do you require me to address you?

(Chairman.) No, I do not think so at present.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Do you desire to examine the witness, or do you desire that I should do so?

(Chairman.) You had better examine him.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) If you please.

P.C. Aveley Isaacson (C.R. 43) sworn; Examined by Mr. Eldon Bankes.

P.C. Isaacson.

1075. I think you are stationed at Vine Street Police Station?—Quite right.

1076. Have you been nineteen years in the force?—Nineteen years last February.

1077. On the night of Saturday, the 7th April, were you on duty in Regent Street?—I was.

1078. Were you on a beat or at a point?—I was on patrol duty from the Circus to Air Street on the south side of Regent Street.

1079. Were you alone, or was there any constable with you?—I had another constable with me at the time from 11.15.

1080. What was his name?—P.C. Wallington (CR 6).

1081. Was there a considerable crowd in the neighbourhood of your beat that night?—Yes, in Piccadilly, shortly after 12, midnight.

1082. Was there a good deal of booing and noise?—A great noise.

1083. Did you see the crowd proceeding down Piccadilly?—I did.

1084. When you saw that what did you do?—In company with P.C. Wallington I went to Piccadilly.

1085. Which way did you go?—Through Air Street.

1086. When you got into Piccadilly where did you go?—We crossed over just by the Cafe Popular to Church Place on the right side.

1087. That brought you on to the south pavement?—On to the south pavement.

1088. What was the condition of things with regard to Piccadilly when you got there?—There was a great noise, shouting and booing by a great crowd of people, and there were a number of persons arm in arm leading the crowd. I spoke to them and cautioned them to conduct themselves in a gentlemanly manner. They took no notice of me, but they passed on. I got in front of them again at St. James's Church, and I spoke to them again.

1089. You say that you crossed to the south pavement. Did you then face the crowd with your face to the East?—Yes.

1090. Was P.C. Wallington with you?—Yes.

1091. I understand you spoke to the persons then and asked them to be quiet?—Quite right.

1092. And as they did not pass on you faced them again at St. James's Church?—Yes.

1093. You are speaking of the crowd?—Yes.

1094. When you got to St. James's Church did you notice anybody in particular there?—Yes, I saw a man named Timmings, Gerothwohl, Lavalette, and two others. There may have been a third, but I will not be certain as to a third one. There were five people walking arm in arm, causing people to go off the footway going east. After speaking to Timmings, and when he refused, I arrested him. He was drunk.

1095. Was Timmings walking arm in arm with anybody?—He had hold of Gerothwohl's right arm.

1096. Which of them was next to the kerb?—Timmings.

1097. Where was Mr. Lavalette?—Third from the kerb.

1098. When you spoke to Timmings what did you say to him?—"Why don't you be quiet and behave yourself?" He took no notice.

1099. What did you do then?—I arrested him at once.

1100. When you arrested him what did you do with him?—P.C. Divers appeared on the scene, and I said "Take this man to the Station." I immediately turned round and arrested Lavalette.

1101. Did you hand Timmings over to Divers on the south pavement of Piccadily by the Church?—Yes, within a foot from the place where I arrested him.

1102. Did Divers take Timmings off by himself across the road towards Swallow Street?—He did as far as I know. I did not go with him.

1103. After arresting Timmings in that way, and handing him to Divers, what did you do?—I immediately arrested Lavalette.

1104. What did you do with him?—I took Lavalette to the Station. At the same time P.C. Wallington arrested Gerothwohl.

1105. Were they both arrested on the south pavement of Piccadilly, close to the Church?—On the south pavement, almost a yard from where Timmings was arrested.

1106. Which way did you go?—I went up in the centre of the road to Swallow Street with Lavalette.

1107. Did you go straight up to the Station?—I did.

1108. Did you see Divers go into the Station?—I saw him when he turned round in Swallow Street. There was traffic going east and west, and we had to stop before we could get over on account of the traffic with cabs and omnibuses.

1109. How far were you behind Divers when he turned into the Station?—When I got across the road, and into Swallow Street, Divers had just turned the corner into Vine Street—it might have been half a minute after.

1110. Where was Timmings when you got Lavalette into the Station?—In the dock.

1111. Did you place Lavalette in the dock?—I did.

1112. Was he the second man to come into the Station?—He was the second to come into the Station.

1113. Then was Dr. Gerothwohl brought in immediately after?—Following almost immediately on my heels.

1114. When they were all in the dock together did the inspector come in?—He was in the Charge room at the time, I think.

1115. What was the first thing that happened after they got into the dock?—The inspector asked what the charge was. I told him "Drunk and disorderly in Piccadilly, walking arm in arm, sweeping the footway, and causing passengers to get off the footway into the road."

1116. Did you hear any of them say anything?—I did. The inspector asked me where they were arrested, and I told him. They could both hear it. All three could hear it. P.C. Isaacson. 23 July 1906.

1117. But before that had Dr. Gerothwohl said anything as to how they had come to the station?—Not before that.

1118. Did you hear Dr. Gerothwohl say anything to the inspector?—He spoke to the inspector about coming on behalf of Timmings.

1119. I want you to tell the Commissioners the incident about the stick. At what stage did that happen?—Just before they were charged Gerothwohl was asked for his stick, but he refused to give it up, and raised it like that (illustrating).

1120. Who asked him?—P.C. Wallington.

1121. Did Dr. Gerothwohl give it up?—No. There was a struggle, and it was broken in the struggle by Wallington.

1122. Dr. Gerothwohl did not give it up?—No.

1123. What did he do?—There was a struggle to get it away, and in the struggle between the police-constable and the prisoner it was broken.

1124. Did you touch the stick at all?—Yes.

1125. When was that?—When the pieces were handed to me by P.C. Wallington so that they might be tied up as his property.

1126. Did you take the stick from Dr. Gerothwohl and break it over your knee?—No, I did not touch it.

1127. Did the inspector write the charge down?—Yes.

1128. Did you hear him read the charge over to them?—He read it over in a plain and distinct manner.

1129. Did any of them say anything to it?—There was no reply.

1130. I think then they were taken off to the cell, and you had nothing further to do with the matter. Is that so?—They were taken to the cell.

1131. Did you have anything further to do with them after that?—I heard as I was going home about half-past two that a doctor was going to be called in.

1132. You had nothing to do with them in the cell?—No.

1133. I just want to go back with reference to one or two incidents that they have spoken to. It was said that Timmings was walking just by the church, and that you rushed at Timmings and pushed him against a cab?—Nothing of the kind.

1134. Did you come up behind Timmings, or did you go round in front of him?—I came along the roadway, and came in front of them near the church, and I was not on the footway at all until I stepped on it off the road.

1135. Were there any members of the crowd in front of Timmings and these gentlemen, or were they leading?—Timmings was the leading person in front of the crowd. The crowd was following on.

1136. Is that the reason why you spoke to them?—Naturally, if you speak to the leading one you stop it in the bud, and if they refuse you generally arrest the leaders if they are committing themselves.

1137. It is said that you led Timmings across the road, and were joined on the other side of the road by Divers. Is that true?—False.

1138. Was any attempt made by any of them to get your number so far as you were aware before you got to the station?—Not that I was aware of, because I had Lavalette in custody, and he could have seen my number if he had looked over my shoulder.

1139. How many constables did you see standing at the door of Vine Street Police Station?—One policeman.

1140. Do you know his name. Is he here?—Yes. I think his number is 333.

1141. Is that the man standing up?—That is the man.

1142. How many constables were there in the charge room while these three men were in the dock?—The three police-constables were there and another police-

P.C. Isaacson. constable on reserve duty. One police-constable was attending to the telegraph.

23 July 1906. 1143. How many were there in the charge room?—Four police-constables.

1144. And the inspector?—And the inspector.

1145. A suggestion has come from one of these gentlemen that there were fifteen there, and the other says that there were ten?—A short time afterwards an inspector and another sergeant came in with a prisoner. That would make seven.

1146. Was that after the charge had been taken against them?—While they were in the dock.

1147. Was their charge discussed before the other charge was taken?—Yes.

(Chairman.) Would you, Dr. Gerothwohl, like to ask P.C. Isaacson any questions?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) I should like to put a few questions to him.

Cross-examined by Dr. Gerothwohl.

1148. You did not mention just now that you were present at the medical examination?—I was told a doctor was there. I was not asked the question or I should have answered it.

1149. Were you present?—Yes, I was there.

1150. You say you cautioned us. Where?—At Church Place, and also in front of the church.

1151. Whom did you caution specially?—Not one person in particular, but I cautioned all those in front to behave like gentlemen.

1152. I am not asking your opinion——.

(Chairman.) He said, "I cautioned all to behave like gentlemen."

1153. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) I beg your pardon. I am sorry. You said in Court that I was the ringleader?—I did not say you alone, but the whole five in front.

1154. Who was the ringleader?—You were all as bad as one another. I do not say that I made any distinction between the five of you, if five of you were leading.

1155. If we were all ringleaders, why, instead of taking hold of Timmings first, did you not seize upon me. I think I am rather bigger?—The nearest one to me was Timmings, and I handed him over to P.C. 427, and he was taken into custody momentarily.

1156. You say the police-constable was there?—I do say so.

1157. Are you aware that he was stationed at the corner of Sackville Street?—He was, but he crossed over the road to the church where I was, and as soon as he came on the scene I handed him over to him.

1158. Where did you let go of Timmings?—I suppose a yard would cover the distance from the time I arrested Timmings to Lavalette.

1159. Are you sure you did not take him?—Positive. I took Lavalette.

1160. You do not remember seeing me on the stairs?—I never saw you after I left Piccadilly until you came into the charge room with Wallington.

1161. You took part in taking my stick?—I never touched your stick until the pieces were handed to me, and as I was senior officer I tied them up.

1162. Why did you take those pieces?—Because it is the duty of a police-officer to tie them up.

1163. But they were not tied up?—They should have been tied up. I tied them up when I left them.

1164. I did not find them tied up?—They must have been. When I left them they were tied up.

1165. Did you tie them up afterwards?—No, I did not.

1166. Constable Wallington was with you in Piccadilly?—Yes.

1167. Therefore he saw all that occurred?—Yes. He arrested you.

1168. You saw all that occurred according to your statement?—Yes.

1169. In your statement to the Court you did not say that we mentioned anything; in fact, I believe you denied that we said anything about coming on behalf of Timmings once we were in the charge room?—I did.

1170. I think in the verbatim report there is something to that effect?—You may have said so.

1171. At the Court you say "Decidedly drunk"?—You were all three drunk.

1172. Will you kindly tell us how you distinguish between people who are drunk and people when they are not particularly drunk?—There is one stage of drunkenness when a man is entirely incapable of taking care of himself and he loses the use of his legs. Another stage of drunkenness is when a man is very drunk in his head and he gets it over like that (illustrating), but he can walk without assistance. There is a third stage of drunkenness when a man gets more than he should take, which makes him become quarrelsome, and wishes to kick up a row with everyone he meets, and that is the stage you were in.

1173. How do you know it was the third stage?—There are several stages. By your appearance, by your manner, your speech, your eyes, and how you walked.

1174. Did I speak to you?—When in the station you did.

1175. But before that I mean?—I spoke to you.

1176. We said nothing?—No, you did not speak a bit.

1177. Then how could you tell by my speech?—By your appearance, by your general behaviour, and by your general conduct in the street. A gentleman dressed as you were, in his sober senses would not behave in the manner in which you did.

1178. Do you remember anything about the other two who you say were arm in arm with us?—Yes.

1179. What became of them?—If I had had more assistance they would have been in the dock too along with you. You being only one man I could only arrest one.

1180. I thought you had Wallington with you?—Yes, but he had you in custody.

1181. And Divers?—He had the other man in custody.

1182. Could not you manage to take two. You were a big man?—I could if I had you, and another man; but you were a big man, too.

1183. (Mr. Dickinson.) I understand from you that when you were in the Police Station these gentlemen were very noisy?—Excited. They were violent in the dock.

1184. Was Lavalette excited?—He was very excited. He threw himself about, and was very excited.

1185. You took him into custody?—I did.

1186. Was he violent and excited the whole time you had him in custody?—He went quietly to the Station. I never spoke to him after I told him I should take him to the Station for acting in a disorderly manner.

1187. You took him up on the south side of Piccadilly?—Opposite the Church gates.

1188. I suppose you had to hold him?—I took him with my right hand, and I took hold of his left arm up to the elbow, which is the usual way to take them if they go quietly.

1189. Why did you say you were unable to take another man?—It is always the case with police officers, one man to one man. He has to be a very strong man to take two.

1190. This man, you say, went quietly?—Yes, but I could not go after the others. If they had seen me coming they would have got away.

1191. Do you say, as a policeman, he did not make any objection to going to the Station—not until he was in the Station?—Not until he was placed in the dock.

1192. I understand from you that Timmings did not fall against the cab?—No, neither did he fall on the ground, as alleged, and he made no complaint.

1193. You took Timmings up?—I arrested Timmings, and then P.C. 427 appeared on the scene immediately, and I handed Timmings over to him. Then I arrested Lavalette.

1194. You sent Divers across the road?—He went of his own accord.

1195. How is it you did not follow Divers?—Divers had just got across the road when the traffic was going west with cabs and omnibuses, and we waited until the traffic going east again.

1196. Had you got hold of Lavalette before Divers went to Timmings?—I turned round to meet him, and as soon as I handed Timmings over to him he moved off and I took the other man.

1197. I understand Divers in his evidence to say that he did not see you with Lavalette?—I do not think he did see me.

1198. Was Swallow Street full of people or not?—A number of people followed us to the Station. There was no one in Swallow Street, only P.C. Divers with Timmings going along, and they went from my view when they went round the corner.

1199. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) When you saw the prisoners for the first time did you think they were drunk?—I did not at first. I think I saw them a second time and cautioned them, and then I knew there was something by the way they were behaving, and by their general conduct in the streets.

1200. When was the first time you saw them?—In Church Place.

1201. There was a great crowd there?—There were a thousand or 1,500 people.

1202. Is it possible that you made a mistake between the first time you saw them and the second time?—No.

1203. Are you sure?—They were leading when they passed me at Church Place, and they were leading when I got in front of them again.

1204. Could you identify them all?—I saw them all. They were all arm in arm.

1205. How long elapsed from the first time to the second time?—Not a minute.

1206. Was there much light?—There was plenty of light. There was electric light in the centre of the street.

1207. When you saw them the first time was there a great crowd?—Yes, a great crowd, the same as there was the second time.

1208. Did you turn round at all between handing over Timmings and arresting Lavalette?—After I took Timmings, P.C. Divers came on my left. I held him like that, and I turned round and took hold of Lavalette.

1209. What was Lavalette doing?—He was arm in arm with Gerothwohl, and another one on the left-hand side. When I arrested Timmings they broke arms.

1210. What was Lavalette doing when you arrested him?—He was shouting and booing. He was arm in arm with the other four. I cautioned him once at Church Place, and I cautioned him again at the front of the Church.

1211. When did you form the opinion that they were drunk?—When I saw them behaving in that manner, after I had cautioned them a second time.

1212. There was not much time?—I thought they were the worse for drink. I do not say they were rolling drunk, or beastly drunk. P.C. Isaacson. 23 July 1906

1213. Why did you think they were the worse for drink?—From the appearance of their eyes, and from the appearance of their faces—the colour of their faces—and the way in which they were acting.

1214. Do you say their faces were coloured?—Their faces were red and flushed.

1215. Both of them?—Yes, as though they had been drinking.

1216. You would expect that they would have been drinking a good deal before their faces became flushed, would you not?—They were all sufficiently drunk and under the influence of drink to make them quarrelsome, and when men are in the state of drunkenness that they were in they are inclined to be quarrelsome.

1217. It depends entirely on the condition they are in. I understand when you and the other constable arrested them they were making a noise, and you thought their faces were so flushed that they must be under the influence of drink?—That was my opinion at the time I arrested them—that they were drunk.

1218. When you got them to the Station did you think they were drunk?—I still think it now.

1219. Not under the influence of drink, but drunk?—Drunk. There is no doubt whatever in my mind about it.

1220. When you got them to the Station you found them very excited, no doubt?—They were very excited.

1221. I suppose that would to a great extent account for their flushed faces, would it not?—Yes, it might do. Some people get more excited than others.

1222. What made you think they had been drinking was the way in which they acted, shouted, and made a noise?—A sober man, if he had been asked for his stick, would have given it up.

1223. Sometimes men get very excited. Is what you have told us the whole reason you have for saying they were drunk?—In my opinion they were drunk. I say they were drunk, and creating a disturbance, and I arrested them

1224. You formed the opinion that they were drunk, and you took them to the Station. When you got there you found plenty to account for the only condition you had noticed, and that was their flushed faces?—Their general appearance, and their actions, would have convinced me that the men were drunk.

1225. But what action was it that made you think they were drunk?—The noise, and the way in which they behaved.

1226. They could speak all right, could they not?—They could speak, but not the same as they can now.

1227. Do you mean to say their speech was affected by drink?—Their speech was affected that night.

1228. In what way?—Their speech was thick.

(Chairman.) The Commission will now adjourn until 2 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon, when it will sit at the Middlesex Sessions House, Westminster.

THIRD DAY.

Wednesday, 25th July 1906.

PRESENT:

Sir DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, K.C., M.P. (Chairman).
RUFUS DANIEL ISAACS, Esq., K.C., M.P.
WILLOUGHBY HYETT DICKINSON, Esq., M.P. (Barrister-at-Law).
CHARLES ALGERNON WHITMORE, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law).
J. W. ST. LAWRANCE LESLIE, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law), (Secretary).

(Earl Russell.) I have an application to make to the Commissioners. I understand that at the first meeting an intimation was given that persons interested would be allowed to be represented by counsel. I am instructed to appear for the Police and Public Vigilance Society, and I presume that when the cases they present are taken the same latitude will be allowed to counsel on their behalf of cross-examining or otherwise eliciting the facts. I ask to be allowed to appear for them.

(Chairman.) Do you appear as counsel, do I understand?

(Earl Russell.) Yes, as counsel.

(Chairman.) For this society?

(Earl Russell.) For the Police and Public Vigilance Society.

(Chairman.) I understand that you simply wish to appear here on behalf of that society as a society of persons interested in our investigation?

(Earl Russell.) Yes, Sir, but I suppose when we present our cases I shall be allowed the same latitude as to cross-examination of the witnesses as is allowed to counsel for the Police. That is all I ask.

(Chairman.) We will decide that matter when it arises in each particular case on its merits then.

(Earl Russell.) If you please.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) May I make an application as to one of our witnesses as to character, Mr. Thomas Dolling Bolton, M.P., that he be heard as soon as possible, because he wishes to get away to attend to his Parliamentary duties.

(Chairman.) Does Mr. Bolton only speak as to character?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) As to veracity, and he has also a certain importance from the point of view that he was at the second hearing before the magistrate.

(Chairman.) We will hear what Mr. Bolton has to say when we have finished with the witness who is at present under examination.

Police-constable ISAACSON recalled.

P.C. Isaacson.

1229. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) When you saw Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette at the police station, and you heard what they had to say, I think you told us last time that Dr. Gerothwohl said that he wished to speak on behalf of Timmings, or something to that effect. Did you understand from what he said that he was disputing the charge of being drunk and disorderly?—No; I was busy writing down the names at the time. I heard him say something, but I did not notice what it was. I was busy writing down the names of the three men.

1230. Then at the end of it were you under the impression when they were taken to the cells that they were not disputing the charge?—They did not make any reply to the charge at all.

1231. I understand that when it was read over to them, but they may not have made a reply to the charge for various reasons. What I wanted to know was whether when they went to the cells you thought they were not disputing the charge?—That is quite right. I did think they did not dispute the charge.

1232. Why I called your attention to it was that you made a report to one of your superiors, and in your report what you said was that they made no reply to the charge when read over to them?—Quite right, they did not make any reply.

1233. But you did not say anything about the protest or observation that Dr. Gerothwohl had made?—I did not know exactly the words that were used. I was busy writing down at the time. I heard him say something, but I did not know what it was.

1234. Did you not understand that the effect of what he was saying—I do not mean the words, but the effect—was that he had come to the station to speak on behalf of somebody?—No, I did not. I did not know the meaning of it. I was busy writing the names down.

1235. I want to ask you about another matter not connected with this case of Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette. How long have you been in the C Division?—Nineteen years the 7th February. I joined the service on the 7th February, 1887.

1236. I want you to tell us from your experience have you ever heard during the whole time you have been in the Force of any of the Police Force taking money from women?—Never in my life.

1237. Never heard of such a thing taking place?—I have heard rumours such as reports, but never among the men that any such thing occurred.

1238. Did you ever hear of them taking money from betting men?—No, I do not know that I have ever heard of such a thing mentioned.

1239. (Chairman.) What time did you begin your duty on Saturday the 7th April?—At 6.45 we paraded.

1240. 6.45 in the evening?—Yes.

1241. Where did you go then?—We were paraded and we went out of the station about 7 p.m., as near as I can say to a minute.

1242. You say "We were paraded." Do you mean all the men in the C Division who were going on duty for that night?—At that particular time.

1243. When the parade was over where did you go—I was posted from Air Street to Piccadilly Circus on the south side.

1244. At what time did you begin?—At 7 p.m. as near as I can say to a minute.

1245. Were you on duty continuously from 7 until the time that you arrested Timmings?—Yes.

1246. That was for five hours?—Yes.

1247. You had been walking about continuously?—Yes.

1248. Had any additional constables been told off for Regent Street and Piccadilly Circus and St. James' Street on that evening?—There were a number of men posted out at 7 p.m. as usual.

1249. No addition made to the Force for that evening?—I could not say whether there was any addition. There may have been. I certainly could not say. I know there were a number of men paraded at 6.45 on that particular parade.

1250. You were there on that evening in the ordinary discharge of your duty?—No, I had a shorter patrol than I should have on an ordinary night.

1251. And you, as I understand, continuously paraded those streets from 7 o'clock till the time of these occurrences?—On that side of the street from 7 p.m. till the time of the occurrence.

1252. When did anything unusual attract your attention?—Shortly before I made the arrest, when I heard the noise of the crowd coming from all parts. It passed up along Coventry Street from off Shaftesbury Avenue, and so on, to the Haymarket, and a number of persons meeting, who were going west after the public-houses closed.

1253. When you heard that where did you go first of all?—To the corner of Air Street and Regent Street.

1254. Did you look about Regent Street first down towards the Circus?—We could see them and hear the noise coming from Piccadilly.

1255. Then you walked down Air Street?—Down Air Street.

1256. Into Piccadilly?—Yes.

1257. When you got into Piccadilly what did you first see?—A large crowd of people booing and shouting.

1258. Was the crowd standing still for the most part?—It was moving slowly on the south side of Piccadilly, going westwards.

1259. When did you first see the five men arm in arm?—When I got in front of the crowd at Church Passage.

1260. Were the five men singing anything?—They were shooting and booing. I spoke to them.

1261. Did you gather from the shouting and the booing whether they had any purpose in doing so. Were they booing at someone?—They were simply booing for the sake of booing I should say; creating a noise and making this noise which was not necessary.

1262. Did the five form part of a very much larger number of persons booing and shouting going in the same direction?—I never saw any in front.

1263. Then the road was fairly clear in front?—Only the persons who were coming southwards.

1264. When you first saw the five arm in arm were you on the Air Street side of Piccadilly?—I crossed over to the crowd and got in front of the crowd, and that is when I saw them at Church Place.

1265. Were there many people behind the first five who were arm in arm?—There was a great crowd following on.

1266. Did you gather there was any purpose in it at all?—I could not see but they were making a great disturbance, and I thought it was not necessary, and I cautioned them about their behaviour, and they took no notice.

1267. Were they booing at anybody?—They were simply making a booing noise, the same as you generally hear when there are a number of persons booing in the streets. There is nothing that they are booing at, but they are doing it for pastime, or something else. There was no one to boo at.

1268. Did you make any note at all after you got to the police station?—I only took their names and addresses as they gave them to the inspector.

1269. That is what you meant when you told Mr. Rufus Isaacs that you were busy writing down?—Yes.

1270. Why were you writing down?—I was writing the names down so that I should know their names.

1271. In a book?—I had it on a piece of paper.

1272. Had you your note book with you?—Yes, I put it in the book almost the same time.

1273. Where is the bit of paper?—I have the book here. (Producing book.)

1274. Where is the bit of paper?—I have not got it. I destroyed it as soon as I entered it in the book.

1275. When did you make the entry in the book?—Before I left the station; almost as soon as I put it on the paper.

1276. Who supplied you with those books?—I suppose the Commissioners supply them.

1277. Did you arrest any other person on that night?—No.

1278. Neither before or after the arrest of Timmings?—Only Timmings and Lavalette.

1279. Were you in Court when Inspector Walter Berry gave his evidence?—Yes.

1280. Did you hear him say that prisoner No. 1, that is Dr. Gerothwohl, said he and his friend were on their way to the station to give in their cards when the constable arrested them?—I heard Inspector Berry say that in Court.

1281. Did you not hear Dr. Gerothwohl say that when he was in the dock?—No, I did not. That was while I was writing.

1282. Did you hear Timmings say anything?—No.

1283. Did you hear him at the Police Court say anything?—No, I do not think he made any reply whatever.

1284. Did you hear Mr. Denman say to Timmings "Have you any question to ask the witness"?—The magistrate asked him.

1285. What did Timmings say?—I think he said no or shook his head; I could not say.

1286. Did he not say "It was more illness than drunkenness with me; I do not know these gentlemen"?—I did not notice it. He may have said that, but I did not notice it.

1287. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Before you arrested these two men you had seen them, and cautioned them a little while before?—At Church Place.

1288. Did you notice how they were dressed?—No, I did not take that notice. I think they had bowler hats on.

1289. So had a number of other people. That would not help you to identify them?—No, I could not say how they were dressed.

1290. Then when you saw them again, as you say, half a minute or so afterwards, there was nothing to identify them so far as the dress was concerned?—But I knew the men by the appearance. They were all five together, and they had not time to get out of my sight.

1291. You recognised them by their faces?—By their appearance and their faces. It is only a few yards from Church Place.

1292. Just tell me about this book that you have handed up. This is not a book which continues from day to day?—That book is kept by me for any occurrence that occurs in the street.

1293. Is it the book that you had with you on that night?—Yes, I always carry that book.

1294. Is it the book which you had been carrying from day to day before?—Yes. I have had it since it was served out to me. I could not say what date it was served out to me, but when that is full I have another one.

1295. You make the entries from day to day as they occur in the book?—Yes.

1296. Are these the entries which you say you made in the police station?—Yes, except the word I have written since—"Discharged."

1297. That would be after the Police Court?—Yes.

1298. Are you quite clear that you made this entry?—Quite clear, within a minute from when they were put back in the cells. We always do that in case anything occurs a few minutes after, and then we would not be able to put it in.

1299. I notice the entry on the page before is the 24th February?—The 24th February.

1299*. 24/2/06—I suppose that is the 24th February?—Probably I had nothing that occurred from that time until then.

1300. From the 24th February to the 8th April?—It is quite probable I had nothing occur. If I had anything occur between then I should have put it in.

1301. Did you arrest anybody else on that day?—Not to my knowledge.

1302. Will you look at this book a moment for yourself, and you will see what I mean. First of all you tell me whenever you arrest anybody you make a note in your book?—I generally put their names in the book.

1303. I suppose there are things you enter in the book which are not arrests?—Such as a collision or anyone being called anywhere—just to make a note.

1304. Were you on duty from the 24th February till the 8th April?—Yes, except the days when I was on leave.

1305. Do you mean that nothing occurred of the character as you have described from the 24th February to the 8th April?—It is quite probable I never had anything during that time. If I had I should have put it in the book.

1306. Are you able to pledge yourself as to that?—No, I could not swear that nothing took place.

1307. It seems a long time?—If anything had occurred I should have put it in the book.

1308. Just think for a moment. That is six weeks?—Yes.

1309. Have you got another book?—No.

1310. The next entry that you have is on the 20th April?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Does the book show when it was issued to him?

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I do not think it does, but it is 1906.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) You will see over what period of months and weeks the book lasts?

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I have an entry here which begins in 1903.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes, those entries are very, very occasional.

1311. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) 1903 it starts, but then there is no entry from the 11th March, 1903, till the 20th April, 1905?—It is quite probable I never had anything to put in.

1312. From the 11th March, 1903, to the 20th April, 1905?—Quite right; that is very likely.

1313. No collisions?—It is quite probable I had not.

1314. No disturbance of any kind to enter?—No, if I had I should have put it in.

1315. No arrest made?—Probably I should have had an arrest and not put it in, but I was a divisional police constable and I did not come in contact with the public so much.

1316. Were you on duty the year before on Boat-race night?—No, sir, not on street duty. I was on special duty.

1317. You would not be in the streets?—I was on special duty at the Empire Theatre, inside.

1318. I see such an entry as this: "20th April, Hansom cab, No. so-and-so, badge No. so-and-so"?—Yes, I may have taken that just for my own information when I happened to speak to a driver, and I put it down for my own information in case that man committed himself after being cautioned.

P.C. Isaacson.

25 July 1906.

1319. You never made such an entry even as that between the 11th March, 1903, and the 20th April, 1905?—I had no occasion, or else it would have been put in.

1320. Does it not occur to you that you must have had another book?—No. I had another book, but it was filled up and it was given in, and I had this one put out.

1321. I notice looking at it on the 20th April, 1905, there are two or three entries and then the next entry is on the 22nd April. There are several entries, and on the 22nd April there is a whole page. On the 22nd May there are entries, and again on the 27th May. On the 29th May there are several entries. I suppose when you write and make an entry in this book it is after the event has occurred and after the arrest has been made, for example, after an arrest. What I want to know is how long after it would you make it?—As soon as it is possible for a man to put it down. That is just to think of the name.

1322. Look, for example, at this entry, which begins on the 29th of May and goes over to the other page. There is quite a long story written there. How long after the occurrence would that have been written?—That was done almost at the time when the gentleman was standing there. The gentleman's name and address were given to me, and I wrote it out as soon as it was possible for me to write it out.

1323. Do you mean that was written in the street?—That was written in the street and handed to the inspector, and he signed it.

1324. And the next two pages?—That is my report, that I was spoken to by this gentleman, and I took the name and address of the proprietor of the place, and I reported what it was and his answer to me.

1325. Then it goes on to June. It does not seem to be kept in order of date?—There may be a space that we leave out, and anything that is not particular we might put in if there are a few lines left. There may be half a side.

1326. There are a great many notes continuing right the way through July and August and October and November and December of 1905?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Is the constable's number stamped on the face of that book?

1327. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) C R. 43. That is on the cover. Taking the months of June and July of this year, I find a number of entries one after the other in connection with your work. Just look again at the book and tell me, do not you think, on looking at it, when your attention is drawn to it, that the book had been laid aside from February, 1903, or March, 1903, until you took it up again some time after?—No, it has never been laid on one side. It has always been in my possession except when I left it at the station to be signed by the inspector.

1328. Look at it for yourself. Do you mean us to understand from you, when your attention has been called to it, that that book has been kept by you from day to day from March, 1903, to 1905, when there is not a single entry in it of any kind from March, 1903, to sometime in March, 1905?—In those two dates there may have been a mistake in putting a 3 instead of a 5. There are only those two, and it may be I put down 3 instead of a 5 by mistake. If you look at it, there are only those two, and it is quite possible I may have made a mistake in putting the figure 3 down instead of the 5. I think you will only find those two figures.

1329. (Chairman.) Mr. Whitmore would like to know when the book was issued to you?—I could not say the date. I am not certain what date it was.

1330. It is not stamped with any date?—No.

(Mr. Whitmore.) Would not that be known to somebody else?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I was just asking, and we will make inquiries. The witness's inspector would probably know something about it, but as to whether a record is kept showing the actual date of the issue to each constable of these books, I am making inquiries. I am not able to say at the moment. I am told what happens is that the constable always keeps the cover and he is given what is called a refill. That would be fresh pages to put in.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) What we are dealing with is the refill.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes. Any information I can get for you you shall have.

1331. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Just think of the explanation you have given. You notice these two dates which I have called your attention to in 1903. Look at the first page. One of them is the 3rd of March. It is 3/3/03, is it not?—I think it is 14. I cannot exactly make it out.

1332. It is not 3, certainly. It is the month of March, 1903, at all events, but what the figure is I cannot quite tell. It says "At 12.20 p.m." Then on the next page there is the other entry 11/3/03?—Then the other would not be 14.

1333. They may relate to the same incident—yes, they do. There can be no difficulty about that. It appears that both these dates relate to the same incident, although they are on different pages, but apparently they are put in afterwards, are they not?—After the first copy is taken down. This would be the number and the name. Then I should have to write it on there again.

1334. There can be no difficulty in checking whether that is a mistake or not in that entry of yours of the 11th of March, 1903, because I suppose we should find some corresponding entry of the occurence?—Yes, there would no doubt be an entry somewhere, because it is signed by the inspector.

1335. Where would the inspector enter it?—In the "Occurence Book."

1336. We can tell if we look at the Occurence Book whether that is correct, that it happened on the 11th of March, 1903, or whether it is a mistake for 1905, could we not?—That would be the answer I have given you, that it is the wrong figure, and that the figure 3 is put in instead of 5.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) We can trace it by the Occurence Book, I have no doubt.

1337. That will be very easily seen.

(Mr. Muir.) Does the day of the week happen to be mentioned in the entry?

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I am afraid it is not.

1338. (Mr. Dickinson.) Which is the order in this White Book about constables entering the things in their note books?—It is an order to enter a thing in the street as soon as it occurs almost—as quick as it possibly can be done.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I will have the reference to the order found.

(Chairman.) While you are looking for the order I should like to ask you why were you out so long as five hours this evening? I understood from the Chief Commissioner that four hours at one time is the length of time the constables are on duty.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Not at night. The Commissioner's evidence was that they had two shifts, if I may use the word, of four hours in the daytime with four hours between, but at night it was not so.

1339. (Chairman.) Supposing this occurence had not taken place, and that you had not found it necessary to go to Vine Street with Timmings and afterwards with Dr. Gerothwohl, how long would you have been out? What was the length of time that you would have served on this beat?—We should have been going off at one o'clock that morning, the extra duty being done previously.

1340. At what time is the night duty supposed to commence?—They parade at 9.45.

1341. How was it that you were paraded at 7 o'clock on this occasion?—It is different duty.

1342. What do you mean by that? Is yours a special duty?—We paraded at 7 o'clock till 3 on the relief that I belong to.

1343. What does that mean?—That is the eight hours of night duty.

1344. I undersood the night duty commenced at 10 o'clock?—That is the ordinary night duty.

1345. What was your night duty?—Our reserve duty is from 7 o'clock in the evening until 3 in the morning.

1346. You were on reserve duty?—Yes.

1347. (Chairman.) But I do not remember it being told us by Sir Edward Henry that the word "Reserve" there necessarily led to this consequence of different hours of service. Is not six hours at one time rather ordinary tour of duty?

1348. Without any refreshment whatever?—If you are on night duty you have a can of tea, if you like to take it out.

1349. With you?—Yes, you are allowed to take a can of tea or coffee, as the case may be, but on our duty we do not take any.

1350. You had had no food or tea, or any other thing?—Yes, I had had a glass or cup of water at the fountain, which we always go to.

1351. You had been, when this took place, five hours and ten minutes on duty?—Yes.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) The order for which the reference was asked is at page 16 of the White Book.

1352. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It is plain to you, is it not, that if that entry is correct as entered there as occurring on the 11th of March, 1903, that the book must have been lying by unused by you for some time?—No, it is a mistake evidently, in a figure.

1353. I understand that. You say you made a mistake by putting down 1903 instead of 1905?—That is the only explanation I can give. I should certainly have had something occurring between that date and 1905.

1354. It is quite plain that something must have occurred between that date of the 11th March, 1903, and some time in the beginning of 1905, is it not?—Oh yes, I am quite certain of that. It is a mistake I made in putting that one figure down.

1355. Why did you tell me before when I asked you about it that you thought it was quite likely there was nothing to enter during that period?—I could see, as soon as I saw the following dates that it must have been a mistake.

1356. I called your attention to that. However, when I call your attention to the book again you say in your view the only explanation is that that is a mistake in putting down 1903 instead of 1905?—It must be a mistake in the book.

1357. (Mr. Dickinson.) What do those words that are written across the entries mean. For instance, in this particular case you have "Discharged" written across the entry about Dr. Gerothwohl. Did you write that?—Yes.

1358. Who wrote those other entries. They are rather illegible?—It is all my writing in this book, except the initials of the inspector at the end of the report.

1359. How often does the inspector see this?—Whenever we have a report to give, such as a collision or an occurrence that occurred in the street, except those that we put down for our own advantage, to think of the names and the results of the case. We just mark it up.

1360. When you write an entry like this: "14th September, 1905; Isaacson reports at 4.50 p.m., 14th inst., being called by Dr. So-and-so, etc. Did you write that?—Yes, that is my writing in there, whatever is in the books, except the initials of the inspector.

1361. Why do you put it in that form: "Isaacson reports at 4.50 p.m." ?—"P.C. 43" you will find there.

1362. Yes?—That is the way we make the report.

1363. Whenever you report you put that in?—Yes. "P.C. 43 reports so-and-so."

1364. That, of course, is written after the event?—Yes, that would be the name and address of the person who calls us, then the name and address of the sick person would be taken as soon as we possibly could get it, and also the doctor who saw him.

(Chairman.) I suppose there is no reason why this book should not be left with the Commission?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Not the slightest reason.

(Mr. Muir.) We should like a copy of the first entry, so that we may compare it with the Occurrence Book.

(Chairman.) We will hand it down, and you can hand the book to the Secretary later on.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You said you would verify the reference in the Occurrence Book. You can easily see whether it is a mistake in the entry of 1903 by referring to the Occurrence Book?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes. If the Commissioners have no objection, I was going to ask leave to put one or two questions.

(Chairman.) Certainly.

1365. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) What date were you appointed to the Reserve. Perhaps you do not remember exactly, but was it in December, 1904?—Yes, I think so, but I would not be certain what the date was.

1366. Would that book be issued to you as a fresh cover, or would it be passed on?—The cover would be issued, but I should keep my book.

1367. It may have been passed on from somebody before. With regard to the form of the entry, are you familiar with the rule in the White Book about making entries. What it says is this: "A book is provided for you to enter at the time dates and other particulars respecting incidents or occurrences, and to which they can always refer"?—Yes.

1368. And a report of such particulars is to be made as early as practicable, and will be entered in the Occurrence Book for information and reference?—That is quite right.

1369. And therefore in your book you wrote it in the form of a report—"P.C. Isaacson reports," and so on?—Yes.

1370. And you show that to the officer at the station?—Yes.

1371. And then from that he makes an entry in the Occurrence Book?—Yes.

1372. Does he initial your book?—Yes.

1373. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Page 16, Order 90. Have you had previous experience of similar crowds in the street to the one that you saw and heard that night?—I have had similar experience during my service of great crowds in the West End at different times.

1374. Have you heard them making similar noises before?—Yes.

1375. Is booing the kind of noise that a crowd like that indulges in?—Yes, that is quite true. You see four or five gentlemen in a cab who will start booing and shouting.

1376. It is a peculiar kind of noise that people congregated in that sort of neighbourhood make without any apparent reason?—Yes.

1377. For the purpose of making a noise?—Yes.

1378. It is not booing at the police or any individual or booing at anything?—No, I do not think so.

1379. Was it part of your duty to take the names of those persons when they were in the dock?—Oh no, it is not part of my duty, but you take them down so that you know the names of the persons.

1380. You would have to give evidence the next day before the magistrate, and it is for that purpose of informing yourself that you were taking the names down?—For my own information.

1381. You were occupied in doing that and you did not overhear what Dr. Gerothwohl said?—I was occupied in taking those names and addresses down, as I have said.

1382. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Do not you usually listen to the explanation that is given by a prisoner whom you have arrested?—Oh, yes, we generally listen to that.

1383. I do not understand how you came to be writing down when the prisoner is put into the dock, whom you have arrested, and who is giving his explanation of the occurrence?—I was writing these three names down as the inspector was taking the names and addresses down at the time.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) He was taking them down at the same time as they were giving them to the inspector.

1384. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) So I understand, but that was not the point of the question I was putting. When the names are given I quite understand that you may be taking them down in your book at the same time as Inspector Berry is taking them down. That I understand; but that does not account for your answer to the question that I put to you before, because, what I want to know is, when Dr. Gerothwohl was in the dock, we have got it in evidence that he protested by saying some such words as these, that he had come to the station to speak about this man, indicating Timmings. What I want to know is, Did you not hear him say that?—He said something, but I did not catch all, because I was writing the names down.

P.C. Isaacson.

1385. The names had been written down?—I only heard him mention Timming's name, and I was busy writing the names down. That is all I heard.

1386. (Mr. Whitmore.) Was the inspector listening to what he was saying at that time?—I suppose he was.

1387. Was it his business or yours?—His business. The inspector's business was to look after it and mine too.

1388. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) What occurs to me is, you are the man who arrested, and on whose evidence he is being charged, and what I do not quite follow is that you say when he is giving his explanation in the dock, you did not hear what it was?—I heard him say something, but I was busy writing the names and addresses, as I have said.

1389. (Chairman.) Does it not strike you that before that final step is taken of entering the name of Dr. Gerothwohl, in this case, on the charge sheet, that you should listen to what he is saying in the dock. Observe the circumstances: you have arrested this man; he is in the dock, there being still time to withdraw, then comes the time for the entry to be made on the charge sheet. Was it not your duty to listen carefully to what he is saying?—It may have been my duty to notice that, but I did not hear it, as I was writing down the names when the names were given. Had he said it after the inspector asked him, probably I should have heard it.

1390. That is exactly what, according to his evidence, he did?—His name was given, and I was taking it down.

1391. There had been nothing beyond the arrest that had taken place then. There had been no formal entry on the charge sheet up to that moment?—Only he was taken to the charge room.

1392. I am talking of when he is in the dock. There was the time, when Inspector Berry was at the desk, when he was about to enter something on what is called the charge sheet. Was it not your duty to listen carefully to what the man you had arrested was saying?—The inspector was speaking to him and I was there, but I did not hear what he said.

1393. You are the constable who had arrested the person in the dock?——

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) One of them.

1394. (Chairman.) One of them?—I cannot account for that at all.

1395. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Just let me read to you what Inspector Berry says about this: "In the dock Dr. Gerothwohl said that he and Mr. Lavalette were on their way to the station to hand in their card on behalf of Timmings, and that they were arrested on their way to the station." Did you hear that?—I did not hear that. I heard him say something about Timmings, but I did not hear what it was.

1396. Do you wish us to understand that this man was sent to the cells, and that the charge was taken against him without you, who had arrested him, ever having known of the explanation which he gave of how he came to be at the station?—The inspector asked me what the charge was, and my explanation, and where he was arrested, and I told the inspector he was arrested in Piccadilly for being arm-in-arm with a number of other persons drunk in Piccadilly in front of St. James's Church.

1397. That we understand. Just follow this series of events for a moment. He is arrested and he is put in the dock, and you are the man who took him to the station. When he is in the dock he makes this statement which I have just read. What I am asking you is, you are the man upon whose evidence he is going to be charged and arrested and detained at the station. As far as I understand, you do not seem to have heard what he had to say in his defence?—I cannot account for that at all. I cannot remember that at all. I only heard him say something about Timmings as I was writing the names down.

1398. Do you mean that Inspector Berry, if you did not hear it, would not have asked if that was true?—He asked me where I arrested those men, and I told him I arrested them in Piccadilly in front of St. James's Church, where there were five or six men arm-in-arm—I would not say whether there were six or not, but I know there were five—and I cautioned them at Church Place. I also cautioned them in front of the church, but they took no notice, and I made the arrest. Inspector Berry said to him: "You have heard what the constable said," and the charge is taken.

1399. This is what Inspector Berry said about it. "Upon this statement being made by Dr. Gerothwohl, I closely questioned the two officers before I reduced the charge to writing"?—Yes, he questioned me as to where they were arrested, but I told the inspector what I have said now, that it was in front of St. James's Church, and after being cautioned in Church Place, and they took no notice, and they were arm-in-arm, and on that the inspector told them what the charge was and it was taken.

1400. When the inspector put the question to you, did the inspector convey to you and make you understand that what Dr. Gerothwohl was saying was that he and Mr. Lavalette were on their way to the station to hand in their cards on behalf of Timmings. Did you understand that?—I did not understand that. I only heard him say something about Timmings, and that is all I can remember about it. I cannot remember anything else.

1401. Did you not hear the inspector say of either Dr. Gerothwohl or of Mr. Lavalette that they were on their way to the station to hand in their cards on behalf of Timmings?—I did not hear that then.

1402. Where did you first hear that?—At the police court.

1403. On the Monday?—Yes.

Police Constable CHARLES WALLINGTON, C. R. 6; sworn.

P.C. Wallington.

1404. (Mr. Muir.) Are you a police constable No. 6 Reserve of the C Division?—Yes.

1405. Were you on duty on the night of the 7th April with the last witness?—At 11.15.

1406. Did you hear a noise coming from Piccadilly?—I saw a crowd and heard shouting and booing.

1407. Where were you when you first saw the crowd?—At the corner of Air Street, Regent Street.

1408. Which corner?—The south corner.

1409. Had you heard any noise before you got to the south corner?—Yes, there was more or less noise during the evening, but nothing to take much notice of.

1410. You walked down Air Street to Piccadilly. Is that what you mean by the south corner?—The south side of Regent Street.

1411. That is not the south corner of Air Street. You heard the noise and saw the crowd from the Regent Street corner of Air Street?—That is so.

1412. You walked down with Police Constable Isaacson?—Yes.

1413. Where did you go?—I went down Piccadilly in the roadway.

1414. How far down did you go—in which direction, east or west, of Air Street?—West of Air Street.

1415. In the roadway with Isaacson?—Yes.

1416. Will you tell the Commission what you saw?—I saw several lots of men arm-in-arm together. I did not think it was necessary to go into the centre of them, so we went ahead of them, and there I saw Dr. Gerothwohl, Mr. Lavalette, and Timmings, and two others not in custody, and they were arm-in-arm together, pushing people off the footway. They were spoken to and cautioned, and they still persisted, and at St. James's Church I saw Isaacson arrest

Timmings, and he handed him over to Police Constable 427 C. He then arrested Mr. Lavalette, and I arrested Dr. Gerothwohl and took him to the station.

1417. Where was Dr. Gerothwohl when you arrested him?—On the pavement.

1418. Which pavement?—The south side of Piccadilly, by the church.

1419. How did you arrest him?—I took hold of his arm.

1420. Did you say anything to him?—Yes, I told him I should arrest him for being drunk and disorderly.

1421. What did he do upon that?—He went to the station with me.

1422. At the times those arrests were made was there any crowd westward of the persons who were arrested?—There were several people about, but not to say a crowd. There was a large crowd the east side of where we were.

1423. But not to say a crowd westward?—No.

1424. Several people, but not a crowd?—Several people, but not a crowd.

1425. Was anything said between you and Dr. Gerothwohl on the way to the station?—Yes, he wanted to know what I was arresting him for, and I told him I had told him once and I should have no conversation with him; he must see the inspector.

1426. Where did that take place?—Crossing Piccadilly, and also we kept in conversation up Swallow Street.

1427. Is that all the conversation that took place on the way to the station?—That is all I said to him there.

1428. Was it all he said to you?—No, he did say one or two other things—that I should lose my coat, and so on.

1429. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Why?—He did not give any explanation. We often hear that if we arrest anyone.

1430. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Does it mean being unfrocked?—It means that you are going to be dismissed

1430*. It means that you are to be unfrocked as a policeman?—Yes.

(Mr. Whitmore.) Did Dr. Gerothwohl say that?

1431. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) He said you would lose your coat?—Yes.

1432. You had no conversation with him yourself; you offered no observation?—No.

1433. Is there anything else that you remember that Dr. Gerothwohl said on the way?—No, I do not. I know he was charged.

1434. At the station, when you got to the door of the station what took place as to going to the station?—I went up with Dr. Gerothwohl.

1435. How did he go in through the door?—A bit excited, but quietly.

1436. Did anybody throw him in or push him in?—Not that I am aware of. I was the only one who had hold of him.

1437. Did you push him in?—No.

1438. Did you have hold of him at that time?—I did.

1439. Did anybody push him in?—No.

1440. Who was standing at the door?—P.C. 333; I do not know his name, but there he is—(pointing to a police constable).

1441. That is the man?—Yes, he was standing at the bottom of the steps.

1442. Was any other constable standing there?—I did not see one. I should have seen if there had been.

1443. How did Dr. Gerothwohl go into the station?—Quietly, but he was very excited.

1444. Did anyone throw him about from one constable to another?—No, they did not. I did not leave go of Dr. Gerothwohl until he was in the dock, and no one touched him to my knowledge.

1445. You had hold of him until he was in the dock?—Yes.

1446. When he got into the dock was the inspector there?—Yes, Mr. Berry was in the charge room.

1447. Who went into the dock first of the three?—Timmings.

1448. And then?—Mr. Lavalette and then Dr. Gerothwohl.

1449. In the dock did you hear Dr. Gerothwohl say anything?—Yes.

1450. What did you hear him say?—He told the inspector that he had got his card and wanted him to take it, and he also wanted to complain of the police—the brutality of the police, I believe he used that expression.

1451. Did he say he wanted to complain of the brutality of the police towards whom?—He did not say.

1452. Did Dr. Gerothwohl have a stick?—Yes.

1453. What happened with regard to that?—I asked him for it twice; he refused to give it up, and I took hold of the stick, and in the struggle between Dr. Gerothwohl and myself the stick was broken.

1454. What did you do with the pieces?—Put them on the table. Isaacson bound them up and put them away.

1455. Did Isaacson have anything to do with taking the stick from Dr. Gerothwohl?—He never touched that stick until he had it in two pieces.

1456. How long have you been in the Force?—Nineteen years and five months.

1457. Where have you served your time?—Vine Street.

1458. The whole of your service?—Yes.

1459. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) Where did you first see Mr. Lavalette and myself?—At Church Place or Church Passage, I would not say which.

1460. Were you on the south pavement of Piccadilly?—No, I was in the roadway.

1461. Did you see we were five arm in arm?—I saw you and four others; Mr. Lavalette was one, Trimmings was another, and two others who were not in custody.

1462. Who did you see first?—Timmings was the side of the kerb and then came yourself and then Mr. Lavalette.

1463. Could you see were we pretty straight across the pavement in a straight line?—No, I would not say it was a straight line. I would not say that.

1464. When you saw us, what did you do?—I heard Isaacson speak to you and I said "Why don't you take good advice?"

1465. Did you hear Isaacson speak to us?—I did.

1466. From where?—From the pavement when he got in front of you.

1467. You did not tell us you crossed the road?—No, but I was close to the kerb, though in the road.

1468 You were not on the south corner of Air Street?—I was previous to that. I could not see you from there.

1469. I thought you said you saw us from there?—From Piccadilly.

1470. How long had you seen us before the arrest of Timmings took place?—I saw you at Church Place. I do not suppose it would be more than a minute.

1471. What was the condition of light at Church Place?—Fairly good, unless you got in the passage.

1472. What time was it?—12.10.

1473. Would not the Popular Café lights be out?—Yes, they would.

1474. The light was very good?—Fairly, because there is a light at the corner of Swallow Street.

1475. Did you see Timmings pushed against the cab?—No; I did not.

1476. When you crossed Piccadilly, did you put your foot on the south pavement of Piccadilly behind us or in front of us?—I do not know that I did until I got on the footway at St. James's Church.

1477. You walked alongside?—Yes.

1478. Behind us or in front of us?—No, I think of the two it was in front, if there was any difference.

1479. It was then that you heard Isaacson, according to his statement, caution us?—I heard him opposite Church Place.

1480. You did not caution us?—I said, "Why don't you take good advice when it is given to you," or words to that effect.

P.C. Wallington. 25 July 1906.

1481. Did you see Timmings pushed against the cab?—No.

1482. You did not?—I did not.

1483. You saw no cab standing there?—No, I did not.

1484. Where was C R. 43 just at Church Passage?—He was on the footway when he spoke to you.

1485. On which spot of the footway?—Near the centre.

1486. He was facing us?—Yes, he did face you there.

1487. You were also in front?—I was there in the roadway—of the two, I was in front, but there was not many inches difference, at all events.

1488. Did you see C R. 43 arrest Timmings?—I did.

1489. Did you see him hand him over to Police Constable 427?—Yes.

1490. You saw him arrest Mr. Lavelette?—I saw him arrest Mr. Lavelette.

1491. What did you do?—I took you, Sir.

1492. After Timmings had been arrested by C R. 43 or before that?—After, when I arrested you.

1493. Immediately after?—I do not suppose there was half a minute had elapsed.

1494. Half a minute is a good time?—I do not suppose there was that.

1495. What did you do as soon as you arrested me?—I took you to the station.

1496. At once?—Yes.

1497. And did you see C R. 43 pass Timmings on to Police Constable 427?—I did.

1498. You had time to see that?—Yes.

1499. You had already marched me off to the station?—No, I had not arrested you. I told you before that Isaacson arrested Timmings and handed him over to Police Constable 427 and then arrested Lavalette, and I arrested you.

1500. Did I resist?—No, not what we should call resist.

1501. You are accustomed to pretty hard work?—I do not know about that. We do not take much notice of a crack now and again unless it does us much injury.

1502. You had heard a shrieking?—Yes, I heard booing and shouting.

1503. Could you possibly say who was booing specially?—No, there were scores.

1504. Behind us two?—Yes; in fact, there were hundreds behind you.

1505. All booing?—I would not say all.

1506. The majority?—Yes, I daresay it was the majority.

1507. Why did you arrest us specially?—You were the leaders of the gang, a rowdy mob; that was my opinion.

1508. In what way were we different from the others?—I say you were the leaders, and you were arm-in-arm together, and no one else could pass up the footway.

1509. Was there anyone between you and us?—I do not quite understand.

1510. You were in the roadway?—I was.

1511. Was there anyone between you and us?—I was not on the roadway when I arrested you; I was on the footway.

1512. Behind us or in front of us?—In front of you.

1513. Did you walk in front of us for some time?—It was not very long; I do not suppose it took us half a minute.

1514. But you did turn your back on us, or did you walk backwards?—No, I walked down the side of the kerb.

1515. I thought you said you were on the pavement? I was on the pavement when I arrested you, and that was the first time I had been on the footway.

1516. You say I went quietly?—Yes, I should term it quietly.

1517. Did I pull?—You did a bit, but it was not much good, sir.

1518. But I thought Isaacson said, the other day, I was a big man?—I do not dispute that fact, sir.

1519. You say I went quietly, comparatively?—Yes.

1520. I did not try to pick a quarrel with you?—No, not what I should call a quarrel—certainly not.

1521. Did you hear Isaacson say on Monday that I was in that state of drunkenness when a man is inclined to pick a quarrel with a constable?—I heard that.

1522. You do not quite agree with him on that point?—We may have our opinions, but I can certainly say this, that my opinion was then that you were inclined to be somewhat unpleasant and to make yourself obnoxious. I do not say anything more than that.

1523. Did you notice the remaining two of the five?—Not after I arrested you.

1524. But before?—I saw the two.

1525. Could you describe them?—No, I could not.

1526. They were not arrested?—They were not.

1527. Did you see where they went?—Yes, they went down Piccadilly, and very quickly, when they saw what was taking place.

1528. Were they all five ringleaders?—You were all five together.

1529. I am asking you whether they were all five ringleaders?—What five do you mean?

1530. The five who, according to you, contained three of us?—I consider that you were the ringleader.

1531. But we were all five ringleaders?—There were many more, but I think you were the ringleaders there.

1532. How did you distinguish me from the remainder?—You and Mr. Lavalette were dressed differently to the others.

1533. Do you remember how I was dressed?—Similar to what you are now—a collar and so on.

1534. I had a collar?—Yes.

1535. Do you remember what hat I had?—No, I could not say that.

1536. Do you remember what form of hat Mr. Lavalette had?—No, I could not say that.

1537. You said something about a coat a moment ago, which I did not quite understand. You said I said something about your coat?—Yes.

1538. What was that?—I think you were referring to this serge that we are wearing at present.

1539. You call that a coat?—Serge it is termed, I believe.

1540. You say I called it a coat?—Yes.

1541. What did I say?—You said that I would lose my coat.

1542. Is that a term in use in the service?—It is a term that is often used by the public.

1543. Is it a term that is used by the police?—I have not heard of it—not from our own men.

1544. You do not remember what sort of hat I had?—No.

1545. Do you mean to say that you did not notice it even in the station?—No, I was looking at your countenance; we go by that more than anything else. We do not look at the other matters in a drunk and disorderly case.

1546. You marched me, therefore, from Piccadilly to the station without seeing what form of hat I wore?—Yes, I did not trouble about the hat.

1547. In what order did we cross Piccadilly?—P.C. Divers 427, went first; then came P.C. Isaacson; and then you and I.

1548. We brought up the rear, according to you?—Yes, if you will have it in that way.

1549. What was the traffic like at that time?—There was a little traffic about, but not very much, at that time.

1550. Was there any stop in the middle of the road?—Yes, we waited there.

1551. Who?—You and I.

1552. Only?—Isaacson as well, with Lavalette. We might have waited there six or seven seconds, I did not time it.

1553. Did you try to catch up afterwards?—I do not understand your question.

1554. With Timmings and Divers?—No, I did not run to the station with you.

1555. Therefore you were at some considerable distance behind Divers?—I suppose we might have been 20 yards behind Divers.

1556. How far were Isaacson and Lavalette behind us?—They were in front, and you and I were five or ten yards behind them.

1557. What was the order of entrance into the police station?—Divers first, with Timmings.

1558. You were there when he brought in Timmings?—No, I was not; I was coming up Swallow Street with you.

1559. What was the order in which we were placed in the dock?—Timmings first, then Lavalette, and then yourself.

1560. You are quite sure that the order was Timmings, Lavalette, and myself?—Yes.

1561. Where was Timmings?—In the corner.

1562. Which corner?—In the west corner of the dock.

1563. Where was Lavalette?—In the centre.

1564. And where was I?—In the east corner.

1565. How is the bar of the dock in Vine Street? Would you explain that to me?—Supposing the dock is here, the bar lifts up from here (describing).

1566. The door is in the middle?—Yes.

1567. And you say that the man who came in second was in the middle?—In the centre.

1568. Therefore how did I get into the east corner?—There is quite room to put another one there.

1569. But how did I get in the east corner?—Because you were put there, in the east corner, I said.

1570. Therefore Lavalette was pushed aside?—I do not know about being pushed aside. There is plenty of room there.

1571. Why was he not put in the south corner?—I did not say anything about the south corner. I do not know why.

1572. Is not it extraordinary that a man brought in second should be in the middle just where the bar opens?—No.

1573. You see nothing extraordinary in that?—No, nothing whatever.

1574. Do you remember throwing Mr. Lavalette's matches into the fire-place?—No, I did not do that. I never touched Mr. Lavalette.

1575. You did not search him?—I did not.

1576. You swear you did not search him?—I did not.

1577. You searched me?—I do not know that I searched you. I asked you if you had a knife or matches.

1578. You do not know whether you searched me or not?—As a rule we do not search gentlemen when they are dressed as you were. We give them the privilege of turning out their knives or matches if they have them.

1579. Therefore you did not search me?—Not to the best of my recollection.

1580. Did I give up anything to you?—No.

1581. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) What was it you said about asking people to give up?—We ask them if they have a knife or matches, and if they have, we say, "Will you kindly give them up." That is to prevent smoking. We do not say that in the case of a poor man or beggar who is likely to conceal anything.

1582. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) Mr. Lavalette delivered up his matches to you?—He did not. I did not ask Mr. Lavalette for anything.

1583. His knife?—No.

1584. You are quite sure you did not search him?—I am positive

1585. Was Mr. Lavalette searched?—That I could not say. I did not search him.

1586. Was I searched?—I did not search you, as far as I know. I believe I asked you whether you had got a knife or matches.

1587. You asked me?—Yes

1588. Did I give up any matches?—No, I do not believe you did.

1589. Did I give up anything?—Not that I am aware of; only the stick.

1590. I gave the stick up?—The stick you parted with.

1591. For your profit?—Not for my profit.

1592. How was the stick when it was broken?—In two pieces.

1593. How was I holding it?—You had it up that way (describing).

1594. You put your hand up?—I asked you for it twice, and when you did not give it up, I took hold of it like that, and at the bottom, and in the struggle between you and I, the stick was broken.

1595. Would you explain again how the stick was broken?—I put my right hand up like that, and the left like that, and in the struggle to get the stick, it was broken.

1596. It was twisted that way?—It was broken.

1597. Did I raise the stick?—Yes, you did.

1598. Did I menace you? You remember that question was asked you in the police court?—You looked to me as if you might use it.

1599. But did I menace you?—I will not say that you did.

1600. How do you account for my stick being in the air. Can you account for it?—I tell you my opinion was that you might use it. I have had one before, and I am very careful about a stick now, and shall be for the future. I can feel the effects of one that I had years ago.

1601. As I did not menace you, why did you take it—according to you—because I put no responsibility on you for breaking my stick; you did not break it. I was not holding it along the railings?—No, it was up in the air.

1602. I have been questioning you on your own story. Will you admit for a moment my story. From what you have said, you were in such a position that you saw Timmings arrested?—Yes.

1603. And would have seen us following when he was taken in charge?—I do not know about following. I could not answer that question.

1604. But, admitting my story for a moment, you would have seen us following?—But I did not see you following.

1605. I am asking you to admit my story for a for a moment, as I have admitted yours.

1606. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Have you admitted his?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) No, but I am cross-examining on that basis. Are you a great pal of Constable Isaacson's?—I do not know that I am a great pal of his. I have a great many comrades, pals, I must admit. I cannot say more than that.

1607. You know him well, though?—I have known him just over nineteen years.

1608. Is his a resonant voice? Does he generally speak as loud as he spoke on Monday?—Yes. I have heard him speak louder.

1609. He is quite capable of howling down four people together?—I do not know about that. I could not say.

1610. Have you heard him speak like that at the station?—Yes.

1611. (Chairman.) You say that you arrested Dr. Gerothwohl?—Yes.

1612. What did you do actually to him?—I only took him by the arm and told him what I was arresting him for and took him to the station.

1613. What arm did you take him by?—His right arm.

1614. With your right arm?—No, with my left

P.C. Wallington.

25 July 1906.

1615. Did he offer any resistance at all?—No, not to say resistance.

1616. Did he walk quietly with you to the station?—Yes. He was somewhat excited, but nothing that we would take much notice of.

1617. He had got the stick with him in one of his hands all the time?—Yes.

1618. And, in fact, there was no kind of incident at all on the way to the station?—No, not of any note.

1619. When did he first become excited?—He was excited when I first saw him at Church Place, and after he had been spoken to he was more excited.

1620. Then I put it in this way, that he was excited, but still without any resistance he walked quietly with you to Vine Street and went through the door and into the dock?—Yes.

1621. Quite quietly?—Yes.

1622. And he had the stick all the time?—Yes.

1623. When did he first begin to flourish the stick?—When in the dock.

1624. It was rather suddenly, then?—It was.

1625. Did he seem surprised to find himself in the dock?—I do not know that he did.

1626. At any rate, he began to flourish the stick?—He did.

1627. You tried to take it from him?—Yes, I asked him for it twice.

1628. And then tried to take it from him?—Yes.

1629. You say it broke in the struggle?—Yes.

1630. After it had broken had you got both pieces in your hand?—Yes, one in each.

1631. He had not got one piece and you another piece?—No.

1632. How did it happen?—He had the stick up like that—(describing)—and he was flourishing the stick. I asked him twice for it, and he would not give it up. I took the stick like that, the top portion of the stick above his hand, and took it away.

1633. You found after the struggle you had one piece in your hand and then took the other from him?—No, I had the two. It is always a rule to take sticks and that kind of thing from men when they are brought into the station.

1634. (Mr. Whitmore.) The stick broke at that moment, you say?—Yes.

1635. (Chairman.) At the time the struggle for the stick took place had Inspector Berry come in?—Mr. Berry was in the charge room at the time.

1636. Was he sitting at his desk?—Yes—I am not sure whether he was sitting down or standing up at that moment. I would not be sure on that. He was in the charge room.

1637. Did you hear Inspector Berry address Dr. Gerothwohl?—I do not quite follow the question.

1638. After the stick had been broken who spoke first. Did Inspector Berry speak first or did Dr. Gerothwohl speak first?—I know Dr. Gerothwohl complained, and before the charge was taken Inspector Berry made inquiries into that charge.

1639. What did he say when he complained?—He said he was on the way to the station to complain of the brutality of the police when he was arrested and pushed up the steps.

1640. Was that all he said?—Yes, I do not know that there was anything else.

1641. Did he not mention Timmings?—No, I did not hear him.

1642. You heard Inspector Berry at the police court say that he did say he was coming to speak for Timmings?—He might have done, but I did not hear it.

1643. You heard Inspector Berry say that at the police court?—Yes, I did hear it in the evidence.

1644. Are you prepared to contradict him, or do you wish us simply to understand you do not recollect his saying so?—I do not recollect it. He might have said so, but I did not notice it.

1645. Had Inspector Berry asked you any questions?—Yes.

1646. What did he ask you?—Inspector Berry asked me where he was arrested, and what he was doing. Mr. Berry was told by Police Constable Isaacson, and he said "What did you see, Wallington?" and I said "I saw them arm in arm together, and they were clearing the footway," and he said "Then you arrested him." I said "Yes, I took Dr. Gerothwohl."

1647. You had no difficulty in hearing what was being said in the dock?—No.

1648. Have you got a note book like the one that Police Constable Isaacson has?—I have one, but there is nothing in it referring to this case, because I did not charge, and therefore I did not see anything done. We do not do so unless we charge.

1649. Then it was Isaacson who gave them in charge formally to the inspector?—He preferred the charge.

1650. And therefore you made no note at all?—Nothing more than to attend at the police court.

1651. Did Timmings say anything in the dock at all?—No, I never heard him. I did hear him make a statement in the police court.

1652. That he did not know the other prisoners?—Yes, he said that he was more drunk than ill, and he did not know the others. I would not say word for word, but that was the substance of it.

1653. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Do you mean more drunk than ill or more ill than drunk?—More ill than drunk.

1654. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I did not understand this expression that you mentioned which you say Dr. Gerothwohl used to you—"You will lose your coat." What did you understand it to mean?—I can tell you what it means generally.

1655. That is what I want to know?—It means that we might have occasion to arrest someone in the street, and as soon as you take them into custody and you are on the way to the station, they will threaten you, and they will say, "This is the last charge you will ever take to the station, you will get the sack; I mean seeing this right through," and the next morning probably they have nothing to say in court at all.

1656. Do you mean it is a kind of slang expression which is used by those who are accustomed to be taken to the police station?—Yes, and also those who are not.

1657. Do you mean to say that Dr. Gerothwohl used an expression to you meaning that?—I do not know what his meaning was, but that was his expression.

1658. Is there any other possible meaning that you can give to it if he used it?—No, I do not know that there is.

1659. If I understand you, what you mean is that he used an expression which you often hear used by people whom you take up which meant that you would get into trouble over this job, and that you would lose your position. Is that what you mean?—Yes; we often hear it.

1660. Is that what you mean that he said to you? Yes, but what his meaning was I do not know, or whether he knew the meaning of it, or whether he might have heard it casually.

1661. Have you ever said before that he said that to you?—No.

1662. You never said it at the police station or the police court?—No.

1663. Do you know at the police court the question was whether you had arrested him in Piccadilly, or whether he had been arrested at the police station?—The question was asked me.

1664. Did you realise there was a considerable importance as to whether any conversation had taken place between you and him between Piccadilly and the police station?—There might have been.

1665. You mean you recollected this, and never said a word about it?—No, we do not say anything unless it is really drawn from us, as it were.

1666. What do you mean by "unless it is really drawn from you, as it were"?—We do not say the statement the prisoner makes until he has been charged—not as a general rule.

1667. Do you mean in a case of this kind, when one question is whether he has been arrested in Piccadilly or whether he has been arrested at the police station, that you would not state to the magistrate a conversation that had taken place between you and him on the road, according to you, from Piccadilly to the police station?—No.

1668. Would you not tell the magistrate that he had spoken to you?—No. It is quite possible the magistrate might say, "I want to know the facts of the case, and not what took place on the way to the station." We simply state what a man was doing and leave the rest to the magistrate.

1669. Did he say anything else to you?—No, nothing that I can recollect clearly.

1670. I want to understand what you are saying. The impression that he made on you was that it was not the first time he had been in difficulties of this character. Is that what you mean?—I would not say that as far as Dr. Gerothwohl is concerned, but we hear it often. If we only take a poor man in for begging, we can hear it. We have heard it at times from an unfortunate who has been arrested. We may have heard it from one who has been following her and who probably has some interest in her calling, but we are unable to prove it.

1671. They are all people who are not unaccustomed to being in collision with the police?—That is so.

1672. Those are the kind of people from whom you would hear such a statement?—I have heard it from the boys going to school, but where they learn it I do not know, but they have it.

1673. Were you told to arrest Dr. Gerothwohl?—I do not know, but that I was.

1674. I do not understand that answer?—If Isaacson said anything I did not hear him.

1675. Cannot you answer the question that I am putting to you; were you told to arrest Dr. Gerothwohl?—No.

1676. Did you arrest him on your own initiative?—Yes.

1677. Without any signal from anybody?—I never had any signal.

1678. Then why did you arrest him?—Because he was with the others.

1679. Because you saw Timmings and Lavalette taken up, and he was one of the others, so you took him up?—Yes.

1680. Did he go quietly into the dock?—Yes.

1681. Without any fuss of any kind?—He was very excited, and he was shouting.

1682. Shouting?—Yes.

1683. How do you mean he was shouting?—Shouting for the inspector and such as that—that he had been brought in wrongly.

1684. That is to say, he was making it plain to you that he denied the charge?—I suppose it would be that.

1685. And then you heard him, I suppose, make his answer to Inspector Berry?—I did.

1686. And you heard him say that he had come on behalf of Timmings, or something to that effect. You do not remember his saying "Timmings," I understand?—No, I do not remember him saying "Timmings."

1687. You understood he meant he was come about the Timmings case?—The brutality of the Police. I should think it would be that case, but I could not say for certain.

1688. Do you mean that you did not understand from him that he had come about one of the two cases then before the inspector?—He might have done.

1689. Did you understand that that was what he he was saying?—No, because I had seen no brutality and I did not know how he could say that.

1690. That is not the question that I am putting to you. Did not you understand that he said he had come on behalf of one of the other two?—He said he had come to complain of the brutality of the Police. I did not know whether he meant Timmings or anyone else, as far as that went.

1691. Do you mean you did not understand at the station that it was in respect of Timmings that he was speaking?—No.

1692. Do you mean to say you did not hear him say anything about coming on behalf of anybody?—No. I understood him to say he came to complain of the brutality of the Police.

1693. But not generally?—I did not take any notice, because that is a thing that the inspector on duty would attend to.

1694. But it would affect you, would it not?—It would affect me.

1695. It was a charge which, if true, would affect you?—Yes, if it was proved against me.

1696. Then I suppose you paid particular attention to it?—Not out of the way in that case.

1697. Do you mean not out of the way in that case more than in any other case?—No.

1698. Were you asked questions about it?—Yes, I was asked by Inspector Berry what they were doing?

1699. What who were doing?—What Mr. Lavalette and Dr. Gerothwohl and Timmings were doing.

1700. When the charge was made and they were sent to the cells, you quite understood that they were disputing that they were drunk and disorderly?—No, as soon as the charge was read over and they were brought out of the dock I asked Dr. Gerothwohl if he had got any knife or matches, and, as I said just now, I could not say whether he did give up anything, and I left the station.

1701. I am not asking you about a knife or matches, but the charge was read over to them?—Yes, and they made no reply.

1702. I notice you say that the same as the others. That seems to be quite common ground, that they made no reply, but you knew perfectly well without their making a reply that they disputed being drunk and disorderly from what you told me just now?—They disputed that, certainly.

1703. It was not necessary for them to dispute the charge, because those who were in the Station knew they were disputing the charge from what they had said?—Yes, they would, if you put it like that.

1704. So that nothing is to be drawn from the fact that they did not make any answer when the charge was read to them?—As far as I know, nothing whatever.

1705. If that is the case, I do not understand this. We have got it perfectly plain now that you knew they were disputing the charge, and you were asked to make a report about this?—Yes.

1706. Of course it is your duty to report faithfully the facts to your superior officer, and I find that in that report you, like the others, make this statement that they were charged with being drunk and disorderly, and upon the charge being read over to them by Inspector Berry they made no reply. According to that report no one would have any idea that they were disputing the fact that they were drunk and disorderly. Do you realise that?—I only know that it is the system to take notice of what a prisoner says after he is charged, and I do not know that we do take notice of what he said before.

1707. Do you mean that if a prisoner has denied the charge before it is read over to him, that if he does not again deny it, then you do not take any notice of his first denial?—Yes, if the inspector was there he would have a doctor if it was a case of drunkenness, and it is quite possible that the charge would not be taken until he had been seen by the doctor.

1708. That is one of the things I want to put to you. You have told us what took place; that he was disputing that he was drunk and disorderly, and he did ask for his own doctor?—Not while I was in the station. It was afterwards that I heard of that.

1709. After you had gone, then you heard that he had asked for a doctor?—Immediately the charge was taken we left the station.

1710. Suppose a man does dispute being drunk, is the ordinary practice to send for a doctor or must he ask for one?—The inspector would say, no doubt: "Let that man leave the dock and sit down, and send for the doctor," and the divisional surgeon would be called.

1711. That is what you would have expected to have happened in this case?—I did not hear them say that they were not drunk—not clearly. They said they were coming to the station and they were coming to the police station to complain of the brutality.

1712. You have already told me more than once that

P.C. Wallington.

25 July 1906.

you understood that they denied the charge?—I cannot quite explain that.

1713. I want you to, if you can, because it seems to me that it wants explanation?—They did not say they were not drunk.

1714. I understood you to say they did not use those words?—Yes, that is what I understood you to mean.

1715. And you understood that to mean that they were not drunk. That is the important point?—Yes.

1716. I do not care what words were used, but you understood at the station, when these men were saying they were not drunk, that did not mean they were disputing the charge that they were drunk, because in the ordinary course the divisional surgeon would be sent for?—Yes.

1717. That would be before they go to the cells?—Yes.

1718. They ought to have been told to take a seat, according to you on the bench to the left of the inspector until the divisional surgeon came?—Yes.

1719. That was the ordinary practice?—If they had told the inspector they were not drunk the doctor would have been sent for.

1720. Why could not the inspector understand, as well as you could, what they were saying?—I could not say what the inspector was doing then.

1721. The inspector only heard what you heard?—I could not say that.

1722. You know it took place in your presence, and the inspector heard what you heard. As far as you were concerned it was plain to you that these men were saying they were not drunk, and the inspector must have understood the same thing?—Mr. Berry might have done; I could not say.

1723. I want to understand this system of reports. You make a report on April 13th, and in that report this is what you say. You first give a statement of what happened, that you arrested Gerothwohl, and that Isaacson arrested Lavalette, and conveyed them to Vine Street Station. "They were then placed in the dock. I asked Dr. Gerothwohl for his stick, he refused to give it up, and as he held it in a striking attitude I took hold of it, and in the struggle to get it away it was broken. They were all charged with being drunk and disorderly by Isaacson, and on the charge being read over to them by Inspector Berry they made no reply." Why did you not say in that report that they had denied the charge?—I did not hear them—not in their own words.

1724. Do not you see the effect this report would have upon anybody who read it would be that they were really admitting the charge in this sense, that they were not disputing the fact. You follow that from the report you made?—Yes.

1725. Is that what you generally do?—Yes. As I said just now, we do not as a rule take any notice unless the prisoner denies being drunk, and then the doctor is sent for; otherwise we take no notice of the statements a prisoner might make in that respect.

1726. Supposing he denies it half a dozen times before the charge is read over to him. Do you mean if the charge is read over to him and he does not deny it again you take no notice of the denial?—No. When we take him in there the inspector deals with him.

1727. It would be the inspector's duty to take a note of that?—Yes.

1728. If you were present or heard it, would you not in your report make any reference to it?—No, because we should not report anything like that.

1729. But you were asked for a report, and you made one when the matter was fresh in your mind?—It was an exceptional case.

1730. It was an exceptional case, and I should have thought it therefore required a very careful statement of the facts?—Yes.

1731. This was just after this occurrence on the 13th April?—Yes.

1732. All the police constables make reports, and not one of them says anything about these men having denied that they were drunk or disorderly?—It is not the general rule to do so.

1733. Is it not the general rule if it is the truth?—You do not take any notice of the statements as far as I know until the man is charged.

1734. But you see he is being charged at the time, and we are only dealing with the time when he is in the dock and the charge is being read to him. Do you mean it is not a general rule to take any notice of what he has said unless he says it immediately after the charge is read over to him. Is that what you mean?—That is so—not in the case of drunkenness.

1735. However much you may have understood from him before you read over the charge that he is saying he is not drunk?—The inspector does that, sir.

1736. I should like to ask you the question I asked Isaacson. Have you ever heard of police constables taking money from women?—No, never in my experience.

1737. You have never heard of such a thing being done?—No.

1738. No such case has ever been brought before you?—There has never been one brought under my notice of that description.

1739. Have you not heard of complaints of that kind?—I have heard rumours of that, but I know nothing of that.

1740. Rumours amongst yourselves, rumours that have come to you from members of the force?—Yes, they have. There is one thing I have known, and that is, for prostitutes to offer a constable money, but it has been refused and they have been told to go away. I have had it in my own experience.

1741. When you say in your own experience, do you mean by that that it has been offered to you and you refused it?—Yes, while on duty.

1742. Was that a prostitute who was known by sight to you at all?—Yes.

1743. Had she been about any time?—It would be generally one who has started probably twelve months or two years, or something like that, or probably only three or four months.

1744. Do you mean by that that it is only someone who is starting to go on the streets who offered it to you. Is that what you mean?—Yes, that would be so.

1745. How often has it happened?—I could not say exactly, but I do not think more than about four times.

1746. Four times that it has been offered to you?—Yes.

1747. Did you refuse it each time?—Yes.

1748. Was it by four different women?—I believe there was one woman on two occasions who offered it to me.

1749. How long ago was this?—It would be just after I got into the Reserve, eight years ago, or between eight and nine years ago.

1750. Have you ever heard of money being left by women for constables on railings?—I never have.

1751. Or on the window sill?—No.

1752. Or of a constable following a woman up and her holding money at the back of her for him to take?—I have never heard of such a thing, I am very pleased to say.

1753. Have you ever heard of men taking money from bookmakers?—No. I have known it has been rumoured, but I never knew a man or heard of any constable who did it.

1754. You have heard it being rumoured also among members of the force?—Yes.

1755. What are the rumours that you have heard?—They would say: "There is a bookmaker—just give him a look round"—the public would say that to you, and such men as their runners. Oftentimes a bookmaker would have three or four touts. A runner is a man who keeps observation and watches for the police.

1756. What would happen then. If he says to you "Have a look round," that is inviting you to go to the bookmaker?—Yes, it is. That is to get the right side of the police.

1757. This man would be carrying on business with the bookmaker, you mean?—He is what is termed a tout for the bookmaker.

1758. That means, I suppose, that he is to bring business to the bookmaker?—That is so, and keep his eyes open to see that the bookmaker is not caught by the police.

1759. Are they the rumours that you are speaking of that you heard among the police officers?—Yes, I have heard it from constables, and such as that.

1760. You have heard what rumours from constables?—That the police constables have money, and such as that—what the public say about them—but I have never heard it from a constable.

1761. Not that it takes place, but that the public says it takes place?—The public say it takes place.

1762. In your 19 years' experience, as I understand you, you have never heard of any men taking money from a bookmaker?—I have not, Sir, or yet an unfortunate.

1763. Or a licensed victualler?—No.

1764. (Mr. Dickinson.) Just tell me again exactly what happened at the beginning of this affair. You came out of Air Street?—Yes.

1765. Tell me just exactly what happened?—I went down Piccadilly in the road.

1766. You were with Isaacson?—Yes. He went on the footway opposite Church Place and I was in the road near the kerb. He spoke to a——

1767. Which kerb?—The kerb on the south side of Piccadilly. Then we went down opposite the church.

1768. You said he spoke. Who did he speak to?—He spoke to the leading five. Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette were the leading ones.

1769. Did you see them?—Yes, opposite Church Place.

1770. He spoke to Dr. Gerothwohl and the others?—Yes, taking them as five together.

1771. Did you see those individuals at that moment?—Do you mean Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette?

1772. Yes?—Yes.

1773. What happened next?—They still came arm-in-arm and went down as far as St. James's Church, and when opposite St. James's Church, Police Constable Isaacson arrested Timmings.

1774. Where were you then, and what did you do?—I arrested Dr. Gerothwohl.

1775. Before that between Church Place and the church?—I walked down by the side of the kerb.

1776. How far from these individuals?—I do not suppose I was more than two feet; I do not think I was.

1777. Then you have no doubt that these were the same individuals that were spoken to in the first instance?—I have not the least doubt in my mind.

1778. Then you say Isaacson spoke again?—Yes.

1779. What did he say then?—He told them again to break up, and they did not, and then he arrested Timmings.

1780. Where were you at that moment in relation to these three men. On which side of them?—This side.

1781. What do you mean by "This side"?—The north side as they were standing on the south—on the right of them.

1782. How did you get there. You were on the kerb, I understand, behind them?—No, I was at the side. I might have been a yard or so in front at the time.

1783. You were in front of them the whole time as you walked along the street?—Yes, but it would not be much.

1784. You said that at that moment Isaacson had occasion to arrest Timmings?—Yes.

1785. What do you mean by saying he had occasion to arrest Timmings. What did he do it for?—Because they would not break up.

1786. Did he say nothing to you at that moment?—Not that I am aware of.

1787. How did you get to Dr. Gerothwohl to arrest him. What exactly happened? I understand from you that you were in the roadway?—Yes.

1788. In which case Timmings would have been in front of you?—Yes.

1789. And Isaacson was where?—Isaacson got just in front of me on the footway.

1790. And then he took Timmings further on?—Yes.

1791. Where was Police Constable Divers then?—Divers was coming across the road, and he was close to the kerb, and I believe that Divers stepped on to the footway when Timmings was handed over to him, but it was very, very close. I could not swear that he had both feet on the footway. I could not say that, but I should think he had.

1792. You laid your hand immediately on Dr. Gerothwohl?—It was not many seconds.

1793. What did you say to him then?—I told him I should arrest him for being drunk and behaving in a disorderly manner.

1794. You then charged him with being drunk?—Yes.

1795. Did he protest then?—No.

1796. And then you say that he walked across the road quietly with you?—Yes; I mean to say he was not violent, or anything of that.

1797. Did you see Isaacson arrest Lavalette?—I did.

1798. Did you see Police Constable Divers and Timmings again before they got to the station?—Yes, I saw them as they were going up Swallow Street.

1799. How far were they in front?—I suppose they might have been 25 yards.

1800. Whereabouts was Isaacson?—Going on behind Police Constable 427 with Lavalette.

1801. He was in front of you?—Isaacson was, yes.

1802. How was it that you and Dr. Gerothwohl dropped behind?—I do not know, I am sure. I was about five yards probably behind. We should not go along all four together. We were on the footway or the roadway.

1803. But Isaacson had handed over Trimmings to Divers?—Yes.

1804. In the meantime you took up Dr. Gerothwohl?—Yes.

1805. And you must have got hold of him before Lavalette was taken?—There might have been a few seconds either way, but there were very few, if there were any.

1806. (Chairman.) When Mr. Lavalette and Dr. Gerothwohl were in the dock, how were they behaving, according to your view?—Mr. Lavalette and Dr. Gerothwohl were very excited, and shouting—in fact, they seemed as if their temper had got the upper hand of them.

1807. You do not say anything of that in your report. How came you to omit that statement as to their conduct in the dock in your report?—I do not know, I am sure, how that was. It may have been an error on my part.

1808. Would you say that they were very violent in the Station?—No, I should not. In my opinion they were far from being very violent. They were very excited.

1809. Would you say that Dr. Gerothwohl was flourishing the stick in a dangerous way when he was in the dock?—Yes.

1810. You think that would be an accurate description?—I think it would.

1811. He had not done so before at all, had he?—No, he had not.

1812. Were you aware that Inspector Berry said that they were both very violent in the Station?—I was not aware of it.

1813. How do you account for the fact that Dr. Gerothwohl flourished his stick about in the dock, whereas he had never done anything of the kind before from the time he was arrested?—I do not know, sir. I am unable to account for it.

1814. Can you suggest any reason for his suddenly becoming more excited when he was in the dock?—He was excited before, but it may be when he got into the dock he felt his position acutely, and that might have made a difference.

1815. Did he behave like a person who was surprised

P.C. Wallington.

25 July 1906.

to find himself in the dock?—No, I do not think he did.

1816. How would a person suddenly placed in the dock behave—by suddenly, I mean without in the least expecting to be placed there?—Some would start swearing at you, and others would start laughing, and other would start kicking in the dock. I have seen them several ways.

1817. Generally they become violent?—Yes.

1818. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) One word about the form of your report. It is on page 253 of the White Book, rule 209: "The charge as entered on the sheet is always to be read over to the prisoner, not with a view of extracting an answer, but to inform him of the nature of the offence with which he is charged, but any observation he makes is to be noted and attended to." Is it the practice when you are making a report to note and attend to any answer a man might have made in answer to the charge?—Yes.

1819. And rightly or wrongly is the practice, if he says nothing, to mention that in your report?—Yes.

1820. And whether it is right or wrong you follow the ordinary course in the form of your report in this case?—That is so, sir.

1821. One word about what happened in the charge-room. Dr. Gerothwohl has suggested to you that Isaacson behaved in a way that showed he was capable of howling down four people together.

1822. Was there any howling on Isaacson's part or any loud talking at all in the charge room?—No, sir, I did not notice any. The way Isaacson spoke was only his general way, that I know of.

1823. Was there anything that took place in the charge room on the part of the police which could be properly described as a turmoil?—Not that I saw.

1824. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) With reference to that rule that Mr. Bankes read to you just now, the end of the rule is: "Any observation they make is to be noted and attended to." That is in Rule 209. That, of course, is for the purpose of reporting whether the prisoner admits or denies the charge, is it not?—It is for any statement, as I have understood it, that a man might make, and of which you would inform the magistrate before whom the man was tried.

1825. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) The rule apparently has reference to anything said after the charge is made. It may be right or wrong in form, but that is the inference.

1826. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Probably it is to be so read, but you seem to stick very close to the letter of the rule. Is that the view that you would take of that rule. Just look at the rule for yourself. Is that the view you would take of the rule and of your duty. Supposing a man has denied the charge over and over again before the charge is actually read over to him, then you would not take any notice of his previous denial if he did not deny it again after it was read over to him?—Not in a case of drunkenness.

1827. I do not know why you should make this exception in the case of drunkenness. You mean you might in other cases, but not in case of drunkenness?—I am unable to answer that. We hear so many remarks in bringing a drunken person along, even after they are in the station, that we do not take any notice of them.

1828. It is very often the subject of a good deal of discussion as to whether a man is drunk or not?—We never argue with a drunken man.

1829. But the point is whether he is drunk or not. Very often there is room for doubt as to whether a man is drunk or not?—If there was any doubt about it the prisoner would get the benefit of it, as far as I know.

1830. He would be handed over to the divisional surgeon?—Yes.

1831. One thing more with reference to it. Do you say that these two gentlemen were drunk when you arrested them?—Honestly, in my opinion, sir, I believe they were drunk.

1832. Tell me one thing which makes you say that. Was it only that they were making a noise or was it anything else that you noticed?—From their appearance, their behaviour and also the smell of their breath.

1833. Did you notice that on the road to the station?—I noticed that when I spoke to Dr. Gerothwohl.

1834. You only smelt his breath; you did not smell the others?—I could at the station.

1835. Do you mean at the station that their breath smelt so strong that you could smell all three?—Yes, I was close to them.

1836. Was that when you noticed it—at the station?—I noticed Dr. Gerothwohl before.

1837. You noticed him when you arrested him?—Yes, and that was how it was I told him what I was going to arrest him for. I told him I was going to arrest him for being drunk and behaving in a disorderly manner. I told him that. That was the only reason I had for considering Dr. Gerothwohl was drunk.

1838. You told us of the smell, and we know, according to your evidence, that he was making a noise, but I do not quite understand what else there was about his appearance?—He was very much flushed.

1839. The kind of flush that a man might have if he was excited, or equally if he was drunk?—That is so.

1840. (Chairman.) By the bye, I forgot to ask you when you began your work on that night, the 7th April?—At a quarter to seven.

1841. The same time as Isaacson?—Yes.

1842. Were you on the same beat as Isaacson?—He was patrolling the south side of Regent Street from Air Street to Piccadilly Circus, while I was supposed to be patrolling the north side of Regent Street, through Air Street, to Piccadilly Circus, and at a quarter-past eleven our instructions were to patrol together.

1843. Was that an unusual instruction?—In a sense as applied to that Saturday evening only. The patrols are shorter on an occasion like that, and there are more men.

1844. At 11.15 on this night you joined Isaacson and patrolled with him?—Yes, but I had previously been with Isaacson as it was necessary owing to several people coming along arm in arm together.

1845. You yourself had made no arrest up to that time?—No.

1846-7. And you made no arrest after?—No, not that night.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) We have the Occurrence Book, which shows the first entry in Isaacson's writing, 1905 and 1903.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That explains it. It was very difficult to understand without it. It is very easily ascertained.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I am told that you will have to go a little further back in the book if you want the date, because there are several instances recorded on that night.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Quite right.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Perhaps the book could be corrected by authority.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Yes. That explains the difficulty I had in following the year.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Do you wish to keep the book.

(Chairman.) I do not think so after that. The book will not be destroyed.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) No.

P.C. THOMAS DIVERS (427 C), sworn.

P. C. Divers.

1848. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I think you have been in the Police Force about 2½ years?—That is so.

1849. You have been attached the whole time to the C Division at Vine Street?—Yes.

1850. Were you on duty in Sackville Street on the Saturday night in question?—Part of the night.

1851. Where was your beat that night?—When I paraded at a quarter to seven I was told off to go to Hamilton Place, at the far west end of Piccadilly, to regulate the traffic until ten o'clock, and from there to go to Sackville Street and patrol Sackville Street.

1852. So at ten o'clock you went on duty patrolling Sackville Street?—Yes.

1853. Do you remember hearing a noise in Piccadilly?—Yes.

1854. About what time was that?—A few moments after twelve.

1855. From what direction was the noise coming?—Piccadilly.

1856. In which direction—from the east?—From the east.

1857. What sort of a noise was it?—Shouting; and it sounded to me like great rowdyism going on.

1858. When you heard that noise, what did you do?—I went towards Piccadilly.

1859. Down Sackville Street towards Piccadilly?—Yes.

1860. What did you do next?—I went across the road, and as soon as I got on the opposite side of the road, just in front of the church—I had not got on the path—P.C. 43 (Isaacson) handed over to me a prisoner (Timmings), and I took him to the station.

1861. You did not see anything of any other arrest that took place after that?—I did not.

1862. Timmings was handed over to you, and you went straight with him to Vine Street?—Yes.

1863. Did you take Timmings by yourself, or did anybody help you?—I took him by myself.

1864. Did you take him straight to Vine Street viâ Swallow Street?—Yes.

1865. When you got to Vine Street, where did you and he go?—Along Vine Street, into the station.

1866. When you got into the station, where did you go?—I was told to place Timmings in the dock.

1867. Did you do so?—I did so.

1868. How long was it before Mr. Lavalette and Dr. Gerothwohl came?—But a very few moments.

1869. Who brought Mr. Lavalette in?—P.C. Isaacson (43 C R.).

1870. Who brought Dr. Gerothwohl in?—P.C. Wallington (6 C R.).

1871. Were all three men placed in the dock?—Yes.

1872. Did you remain in the charge-room after they had been placed in the dock?—Yes.

1873. Did you remain there until the charge had been recorded?—Until the charge was read over to them.

1874. Just tell to the Commissioners what you saw take place. First of all, did you see the incident about the stick?—Yes.

1875. Just describe in your own way what took place with reference to Dr. Gerothwohl's stick?—I saw Dr. Gerothwohl, Mr. Lavalette, and Timmings all placed in the dock; Timmings stood on the east side, Lavalette in the centre, and Dr. Gerothwohl on the right. Dr. Gerothwohl was asked by P.C. Wallington for his stick—I think once or twice I heard him—but he refused to give it up. I thought he held it in a threatening attitude. P.C. Wallington then took hold of it, and in the struggle to get it away the stick was broken.

1876. Are you sure it was P.C. Wallington who was taking the stick?—I am positive.

1877. Did you hear Dr. Gerothwohl say anything?—He was very excited while in the dock, and was making use of some words or other, but what they were or what they were about I could not say.

1878. To whom was he speaking?—I think he was addressing the inspector; he was looking towards him.

1879. Did you hear what he said?—No.

1880. Did you see the inspector taking the charge down?—Yes.

1881. What was done by the inspector after he had taken the charge down?—He read the charge over.

1882. Did you hear anybody say anything after the charge was read over? Did they say anything?—Not that I am aware of.

1883. Were they then taken off to the cells?—They were taken out of the dock.

1884. And did you leave?—I left the station.

P.C. Divers.
25 July 1906.

1885. It is suggested by these gentlemen that it was P.C. Isaacson who took Timmings across the street, and that you joined Isaacson at the corner of Swallow Street?—No, I went on the other side, on the south side, of Piccadilly.

1886. You took Timmings across entirely by yourself, did you?—I did.

1887. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) You say that about midnight you were on duty in Sackville Street?—Yes.

1888. Were you far up Sackville Street?—No, not a great distance; in fact, a very few yards—six in all, I should think.

1889. That was your beat, I understand?—Patrolling Sackville Street.

1890. Had you left that beat that evening previously?—You see, I did not go there until 10, but after 10 until the time this occurred I did not leave it.

1891. What induced you to leave your beat?—The shouting and the noise that I heard in Piccadilly.

1892. You had not heard any rowdyism before midnight?—I cannot say I did particularly.

1893. You did not?—No.

1894. On leaving Sackville Street, as you reached the corner of Sackville Street, what did you see?—I did not stop there. I went across the road.

1895. Straight across?—No, not straight across from Sackville Street.

1896. When did you set your feet on the pavement?—I do not think I did set my feet on the pavement on the other side.

1897. Never?—No.

1898. At no time?—No.

1899. Just before you reached the west railings of St. James's Church did you not notice anyone there?—No, not to recognise them.

1900. Did you not recognise a crowd of young men?—There was a crowd.

1901. Were they not rowdy?—They were all rowdy, the whole lot of them.

1902. There was a crowd of young men, and they were rowdy. You did not think it necessary to interfere?—I had no chance to interfere. No sooner I was there than prisoner Timmings was handed over to me.

1903. I quite understand that, but you had not yet reached the prisoner Timmings when you got to that crowd?—I had. P.C. Isaacson handed the man over to me.

1904. Do you suggest that Timmings was quite close to that crowd?—I could not say where Timmings was; I was in the gutter, as it were.

1905. Was Timmings handed over to you on the edge of the kerb?—I was in the road.

1906. Supposing this was the road and this was the pavement, and you were here, was there not a crowd here?—I did not notice a crowd.

1907. You said a moment ago you noticed a crowd?—Yes—the whole lot coming from the east of Piccadilly going west.

1908. But you had not passed the whole lot before you reached St. James's Church?—I fancy they were not ahead of St. James's Church.

1909. There was no one ahead at St. James's Church?—Not that I am aware of.

1910. You passed no crowd on your way?—No. I went straight across; there were cabs and other traffic there; when I got there the man was handed over to me, with the words, "Take him to the station," which I did.

1911. I find in the verbatim report of your evidence this: "Owing to the shouting coming from Piccadilly I went there, and on my arrival there P.C. Isaacson (43) handed me over the prisoner Timmings." You say, "I went there, and on my arrival there." Do you suggest you did not arrive in Piccadilly before you were at St. James's Church?—No, naturally I should not, because I say I took a slanting line towards the church.

1912. Did you not arrive at Piccadilly at the corner of Sackville Street?—Yes. That is the north side of Piccadilly.

P.C. Divers.
25 July 1906.

1913. You say, "On my arrival there"—in Piccadilly—"P.C. Isaacson (43) handed me over the prisoner Timmings"?—"On my arrival there"—I mean by the church.

1914. I find again, further down, you make this statement:—"Timmings was handed over to me as soon as I was in Piccadilly." Therefore there are two statements—"On my arrival there," and again, "As soon as I was in Piccadilly." Do you suggest that that could have been at St. James's Church or in the middle of the road, seeing that you had come all the way from Sackville Street?—That is the place I mean.

1915. You are not answering my question?—I mean to say the prisoner Timmings was handed over to me on my arrival outside St. James's Church.

1916. But how do you reconcile that with your statement that on your arrival in Piccadilly Timmings was handed over to you and further down you say, "As soon as I was in Piccadilly"?—I go straight across to a particular point.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Dr. Gerothwohl, does not the constable say in the shorthand note, "On my arrival P.C. Isaacson handed me over the prisoner Timmings, whom I took to the station. That was in Piccadilly, opposite St. James's Church"? He says so. That is what he says in his own statement.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) He says:—"As soon as I was in Piccadilly.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) He had already said that that was in Piccadilly, opposite St. James's Church.

1917. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) Did you see anything of the other two—myself and Mr. Lavalette?—Not before you were at the station.

1918. We were therefore not at all in the neighbourhood of Timmings when he was handed over to you?—I could not say. There was someone there, but who it was I could not say. I could not recognise anyone.

1919. You did not see five people arm in arm?—No, I did not.

1920. You saw nothing of it at all all the way to the station?—I saw nothing of you at all all the way to the station.

1921. Nothing. You never turned round?—Not at all.

1922. At the station entrance did you notice us?—No one—only one, P.C. Wellbelove (333).

1923. I asked you if you had noticed us?—No.

1924. Timmings was already in the dock when we were brought in?—Yes.

1925. Was there an awful row just as you were going into Vine Street Police Station?—I thought I heard something of a row.

1926. Was Timmings going quietly?—Yes.

1927. And you heard a row just before you?—No, I was inside before I took any notice of the row or heard the row.

1928. Was there an awful row just as you were going to Vine Street Police Station? In answer to that question, "Was there an awful row just as you were going to Vine Street," did you say, "Apparently from the violence of the prisoners in trying to get away"?—I think the question asked me was whether I thought it was inconsistent with your being arrested outside the station. I think that was the question. You are referring now, I believe, to my cross-examination at the police court.

1929. Were these your words at the Police Station in answer to the following question: "Was there an awful row just as you were going to Vine Street? (A.) Apparently, from the violence of the prisoners in trying to get away." Did you use these words?—I cannot quite follow what you mean.

1930. Look at it for yourself—(handing)?—The question was asked me: "Was there an awful row just as you were going to Vine Street Station." I understood that differently when at the Police Court. The question I understood was: "Did you think the noise outside the station was inconsistent with Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette being arrested outside?" to which I replied, "Apparently, from the violence of the prisoners in trying to get away."

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You had better read the next question and answer to that which you have just read. The story now is that they were arrested in Piccadilly and tried to make their escape when they got to Vine Street. Your answer is "I do not know; I only took Timmings to the Station."

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) It is their question that they tried to make their escape.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I do not think that is quite Dr. Gerothwohl's point. He is putting this point: "Was there an awful row just as you were going to Vine Street?" and the constable answered: "Apparently, from the violence of the prisoners in trying to get away." Then the next question and answer which I have just read follow.

1931. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) What do you mean by the words "a row"? You said there was an awful row?—I thought I heard an awful row.

1932. Where?—Coming from that direction—outside Vine Street or Piccadilly it might be.

1933. All the way down Piccadilly. You say here as you were going to Vine Street?—As I was going.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) There is another question: "Was the row that you heard caused by their being arrested in Vine Street under protest? (A) I do not think so."

1934. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) You went quietly?—Yes.

1935. You did not turn round?—Not at all.

1936. Not owing to that awful row?—Not at all. I did not turn round. My whole attention was taken up with Timmings.

1937. He went quite quietly?—Yes.

1938. Did you not think it likely your comrades behind might require assistance?—I do not think so.

1939. In spite of that awful row?—In spite of that awful row.

1940. Did you see Wallington when Timmings was arrested?—No.

1941. Did you see any other constable standing close to Isaacson when Isaacson took hold of Timmings?—There were several constables about there I noticed, but to recognise them I could not.

Mr. Thomas Dolling Bolton, M.P., sworn.

Mr. T. D. Bolton, M.P.

1942. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) I understand you have volunteered to give the Commissioners some information with regard to the veracity of Mr. Lavalette's character generally?—Yes.

1943. Will you tell the Commissioners what you know about Mr. Lavalette?—Yes.

1944. (Chairman.) First of all, will you give your description. You are a Member of Parliament, I understand?—Yes.

1945. Will you give us your full description?—I am a solicitor, and a Justice of the Peace for the County of Hereford.

1946. How long have you known Mr. Lavalette?—Between four and five years.

1947. What opinion have you formed about him?—He has been four or five years in the employ of a company of which I am chairman, and I have been brought more or less in contact with him during that period. I selected him to accompany me abroad, and he has been to Brussels, to Paris, to Buda-Pesth, to Vienna, to Italy and to Switzerland with me on different occasions, and therefore I have had an opportunity of observing him as an employee particularly very carefully, and I believe him to be a very straightforward young man. Travelling abroad as I do, and having to entertain at different places people of various nationalities, one has to do what Englishmen do—live very well, to say the least of it—and if he had had the slightest inclination to indulge in an undue quantity of alcoholic drink he had the opportunity on very many occasions when with me of doing so, and he would have shown the effects of it, but never on one single occasion have I seen him even excited by drink when he has been in my presence.

1948. I think you saw something of the police-court proceedings against him and Dr. Gerothwohl?—Yes.

1949. You took some part in the matter, did you not?—No, I took no part. I was not called, but I was there, and heard some part of the evidence. I should like to add that I paid the fine of the young man Timmings, and I should like to explain why I did so, so that there shall be no misunderstanding on that subject. I listened to the case, and I came to the conclusion that there was one charge which embraced these three men. The magistrate, after hearing the evidence, discharged two of those men, and by that decision he appeared to me to have come to the conclusion that the evidence of the same people against the three was not evidence that he could rely upon; and in my humble opinion I think if the two gentlemen were to be discharged, then the third man should have been discharged too. The man appealed to the magistrate. He was evidently a poor sort of creature, and very much affected; he pointed out to the magistrate that if he were fined he would have to go to prison, because he could not pay the fine. I felt that it was a case of great hardship to him, because, as I said before, I think if the two men were let off he ought to have been let off, too. I should like to add that afterwards, when I paid the fine, he expressed himself in very good language, thanking me, and he asked me what he could possibly do to repay the kindness I had shown him on that occasion. I explain that to show why I paid the fine.

Mr. T. D. Bolton, M.P. 25 July 1906.

(Chairman.) I do not know whether you wish to ask any questions, Mr. Bankes.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) No.

1950. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) May I ask you whether, at the conclusion of the case, Timmings was given an opportunity of understanding well that he might make a statement in his defence?—I cannot tell what the effect of the magistrate's question upon Timmings' mind was, because that was not my mind.

P.C. Thomas Divers (427 C) recalled.

1951. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) When you were at the station you had arrested Timmings. Did Timmings go quietly with you to the station?—Yes.

1952. Was he very drunk?—Yes, he was worse than the others.

1953. He was able to talk?—He was able to talk, but he did not do but very little of that.

1954. He did not do much talking?—Not with me.

1955. You did not form an opinion as to whether he was drunk or not before taking him into custody, did you?—He was handed over to me.

1956. You had no responsibility?—No, none at all. I took him to the station.

1957. And then when you got him to the station you formed the opinion that he was drunk. Is that it?—I had an opinion of my own, but I did not express it to anyone.

1958. On the road from Piccadilly, where you arrested him, to Vine Street Station, did you form an opinion then as to whether he was drunk?—Yes.

1959. Was he able to walk all right?—Yes.

1960. What was there about him which showed that he was so drunk?—He sometimes staggered a bit; you could feel the jerk on your arm as he staggered, and so on.

1961. With regard to Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette, when they got there they certainly were not, according to you, in the same condition as Timmings?—No.

1962. There was a very noticeable difference, was there?—I should not have known they were drunk only from the excited condition they were in.

1963. You would not have known they were drunk except for the excitable condition in which they were?—That was the only time I saw them whilst they were at the station.

1964. That is all you noticed at the time you were at the station—that they were in a state of great excitement?—That is all.

1965. Which, I suppose, is quite consistent with an excitement which did not arise from drink, but merely from having been arrested?—Not in my opinion. I thought they were drunk, because they were in such an excited state.

1966. You formed the opinion that they were drunk, because they were in such an excited state. That is all you had to go upon?—That is all.

1967. A man may be in a very excited state, and yet not be drunk, may he not?—Yes, quite right.

1968. If he was wrongly arrested, he might be in a very excited state, and not drunk?—Yes.

1969. If they had been, as they thought, wrongly arrested, that is a sort of state you would expect them to be in, without being drunk?—Yes, it could be like that.

1970. Did you pay any attention to what was going on at the station?—No, not a great deal, I was not interested at all.

1971. As soon as you had handed over your man in the dock, your business was over?—Yes.

1972. Did you notice when you were going to Vine Street Police Station whether there were any constables at the door?—There was one constable on the west side.

P.C. Divers.

1973. Was he stationed there?—His duty is at the door. His duty is sometimes inside and sometimes outside.

1974. Is there always one constable there?—At the door—a third reserve man—for the purpose of intercepting anyone who comes there to make inquiries. Should anyone go to make inquiries, he intercepts them.

1975. Before they go into the station?—Before they go into the station.

1976. Were any precautions taken that night which were different from the precautions taken on every other night?—As to what?

1977. As to constables at Vine Street Station at the door or anything of that character?—Not that I am aware of.

1978. This was Boat Race night, and apparently you expect a good deal of rowdyism on that night?—Yes.

1979. The consequence would be, you would get a good many charges brought up, admittedly, to Vine Street Station?—Yes.

1980. This would be just about the time when you would expect them, when the crowd was thickest?—Yes.

1981. What I want to know is this. When you were expecting anything such as would happen on this Boat Race night, would there be anybody specially ordered to be outside Vine Street Station to help in case there was a rush at the station?—I never heard of that.

1982. Do you know whether many arrests were made on that night?—I could not say.

1983. (Mr. Dickinson.) When you arrived in the charge room, you put Timmings in the dock?—Yes.

1984. Mr. Lavalette and P.C. Isaacson came in next, did they not?—Yes.

1985. Did they come into the room quietly?—As far as I know.

1986. Then came Dr. Gerothwohl and P.C. Wallington. Did they follow in quietly?—Yes.

1987. When exactly was this awful row that you speak of?—I heard a row outside. I was inside the station when I heard it. I thought it came from the direction outside in the street—in Vine Street—or from the direction of the passage which leads direct into Piccadilly, where the crowd would be at the time.

1988. Was there such a row as to lead you to think somebody was trying to avoid arrest?—I thought it quite likely.

1989. Who was in the charge room?—At the time I got there?

1990. Yes?—There was Inspector Berry, and there were two officers there with two prisoners.

1991. What prisoners—two people we have not heard of?—There are men in plain clothes employed for the purpose of catching beggars and so forth, and when these men catch beggars they hand them over to uniform men to take them to the station, and a plain clothes man after that comes along and prefers a charge against them, because they wait and attend to these people.

1992. Was Inspector Berry in the Charge Room when you came in?—Yes, he was at his desk.

1993. Were there any other people in evening clothes or in ordinary dress?—Not when I went in.

1994. About how many people were there there?—About six all told.

1995. There was a commotion in this room?—Not that I am aware of.

1996. I mean after the prisoners had come in?—Yes, after the whole of the prisoners had come in.

1997. After the whole of the prisoners had come in, how many would there be there?—Three prisoners as well as the officers. I suppose there would be ten to a dozen altogether, prisoners and all.

1998. At that time there was a commotion in the room?—Not a great commotion exactly. Dr. Gerothwohl was certainly shouting something, but what I do not know, and he was looking to the inspector as if appealing, but about what I do not know. His arms were akimbo, and so forth; he waved them about; he was very excited.

1999. Do I understand from you that Timmings said nothing to you all the time he was walking with you?—He never said a word to me.

2000. (Chairman.) How long have you been in the Force?—Two years and seven months.

2001. When did you go on duty on Saturday night?—At a quarter to seven.

2002. At the same time as the other constables?—Yes.

2003. What was your beat?—In the first place I went to Hamilton Place, right at the west end of Piccadilly, near Hyde Park Corner, for the purpose of regulating the traffic till 10, and then I was told off to take up a patrol at Sackville Street.

2004. Sackville Street alone that means?—Yes.

2005. Your duty, then, was to walk up and down Sackville Street?—Yes.

2006. That was from 10 o'clock onwards?—Yes.

2007. Had you been in Sackville Street until this occurrence a few minutes past 12?—Yes.

2008. And nothing untoward had occurred?—Not in Sackville Street.

2009. Had anything happened elsewhere that attracted your attention?—No, I had not been away from Sackville Street before.

2010. What induced you to go into Piccadilly at all and to leave Sackville Street?—The noise that I heard attracted my attention.

2011. Where were you when you first heard the noise?—In Sackville Street.

2012. Where in Sackville Street?—On the east side, about from ten to a dozen yards from Piccadilly.

2013. Then looking down from where you were towards Piccadilly, you would not see the church, I gather, according to my recollection?—No, it is at right angles, right opposite Prince's Restaurant.

2014. How many yards from Prince's Restaurant to the church do you make it?—I should think nearly 20 yards.

2015. And to the place where Timmings was arrested?—That would be about the same.

2016. Another 20 yards?—No. From the restaurant to in front of the church, about opposite the gate where Timmings was handed over to me, if I remember rightly, would be about 20 yards.

2017. You are now speaking from what you have been told, I understand, and not from what you saw. Did you see Timmings arrested?—No.

2018. I thought not. You first heard the noise 10 or 15 yards up Sackville Street, and hearing the noise you walked down on the east pavement of Sackville Street to the corner of Piccadilly and Sackville Street?—Yes.

2019. Did you look eastward?—I did not stop at all. I kept going.

2020. Straight across the road?—Not straight across the road, but slantways towards the church.

2021. Why did you do that. Was it that you heard something or saw something?—The noise was continuous, and as it came from that direction I walked in that direction.

2022. Then when you got to the corner of Sackville Street, you walked diagonally to the left, crossing the road, because you heard the noise coming from that direction?—Yes.

2023. You saw nothing of five men arm-in-arm?—No. I might mention this, that there is a rank for cabs standing in the middle of the road, and that might possibly be the cause of my not seeing them.

2024. You had to avoid the cabs in passing. You were going diagonally. You were not able to go quite straight, I take it?—In some cases cabs pull up as you walk towards them, because one gets a fare, and as they pull up they leave a space and you can go through.

2025. Were you walking rapidly?—Not very rapidly.

2026. What induced you to leave your beat?—Owing to the noise. It was unusual to hear such a noise as that. It was such an unusual thing that I naturally thought there was something very serious happening, and, not knowing what it might be, I went to ascertain.

2027. You went there because you believed it to be in accordance with your duty?—Yes.

2028. How far off from Constable Isaacson (43 C. R.) were you when you first saw him?—I did not notice him until he turned round to hand the prisoner over to me.

2029. You came right upon Isaacson, Timmings, and the people immediately round them in a crowd before you recognised him?—Yes, before I recognised Isaacson. When I saw Isaacson he had Timmings under arrest.

2030. Were they on the pavement then?—He was.

2031. Whom do you mean by "he"?—Isaacson.

2032. Where was Timmings?—He was on the pavement, too, as far as I recollect.

2033. Did you see a cab near him?—Not near Timmings.

2034. Are you perfectly certain that Isaacson handed Timmings into your charge on that side of Piccadilly?—On that side of Piccadilly—on the south side—yes.

2035. Have you heard it said by Dr. Gerothwohl at the Police Court and before us, that P.C. Isaacson had got Timmings with him in Swallow Street?—Yes, I have heard him say so.

2036. Are you perfectly certain that instead of going to the south side of Piccadilly you did not turn and go along the northern pavement and turn up Swallow Street?—I am positive of that.

2037. And that it was then that Isaacson gave Timmings into your charge?—I am positive of that.

2038. Then your account is that Isaacson gave Timmings into your custody and that you had to get across the road?—Yes.

2039. And he came quite quietly?—Yes.

2040. You went up to Swallow Street?—Yes, with Timmings.

2041. I think I gathered from an expression that fell from you that when you got Timmings into the charge room you were told to place Timmings in the dock?—Yes, I was told to place Timmings in the dock.

2042. Who told you?—Inspector Berry.

2043. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) You were asked whether in the charge room there was any commotion. Was there anybody doing anything that could be described as commotion except Dr. Gerothwohl?—I think not.

2044. If there was any commotion, was it of his own creating?—Yes.

2045. Are you sure there was no one else there at the time who was doing anything, either talking loudly or creating a commotion of any sort, except Dr. Gerothwohl?—Not to my knowledge.

P.C. Ernest William Wellbelove (C. 333) sworn.

2046. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) You are a constable of the C Division?—Yes.

2047. Were you on duty outside Vine Street Police Station on Saturday night, the 7th April?—Yes.

2048. Was there any other constable on duty out there?—No.

2049. Did you see P.C. Divers come there with Timmings in his custody?—I did.

2050. At that time was there any other constable outside the Police Station besides yourself?—No, only myself.

2051. Did you see the other two constables come—Isaacson and Wallington?—Yes, I did.

2052. With their prisoners?—With their prisoners.

2053. How had they hold of their prisoners?—They had hold of their arms.

2054. From what distance did you see them approach the station?—As soon as Divers got into the station with his prisoner? Isaacson followed shortly after, and then came Wallington.

2055. How far up the street did you see them before they reached the station?—As soon as they turned Swallow Street—about 20 yards.

2056. Had they hold of their prisoners going that distance?—Yes, they had hold of them.

2057. All the way?—All the way.

2058. When Isaacson went into the police station with his prisoner, how did they go?—They went straight in.

2059. Was the prisoner pushed in by anybody?—No.

2060. How did the other officer, Wallington, with his prisoner, go in?—He went straight in the same way.

2061. Was there any pushing of the prisoners at all in your sight?—No pushing whatever.

2062. This is the description Dr. Gerothwohl has given as to how he went into the station:—"Just as I put my foot on the first or second step I was seized behind, shoved forward up the steps, and on the staircase P.C. 43 let go of Timmings and turned round, and, facing me this way, he seized me, twisted me round, and flung me on to another constable, and that constable flung me back." Did any part of that or anything like it take place in your sight?—No.

2063. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) I just want to put one or two questions to you. When you were standing outside, on which side were you standing?—On the west side.

2064. Were you within the passage?—What passage?

2065. The entrance?—I was just at the side close to the steps.

2066. Which way were you looking?—Towards Swallow Street.

2067. When we went in, how did we go in?—You went straight in.

2068. When Timmings went in with Divers, did you turn round?—Yes.

2069. Did you look up?—Yes.

2070. Did you do that with the others, too?—No, I watched them all come up.

2071. Did you see us go upstairs?—Yes. Then 43 C R. went in with Mr. Lavalette, and then you with 6 C R. went in behind.

2072. You say Divers, with Timmings, were already in the station when we were on the staircase?—Yes.

2073. You heard no commotion in Vine Street at that moment?—None whatever.

2074. You did not hear the awful row to which Constable Divers referred?—I heard a lot of shouting going on in Piccadilly.

2075. I suppose that had been going on all the evening?—No, not all the evening, but somewhere about midnight.

2076. Not since 11 o'clock, when the theatres closed?—No.

2077. Not at that time?—No, not at that time. I never heard shouting until just about midnight. I first heard a row just about midnight.

P.C. Wellbelove.

2078. You heard no row before midnight,—No.

2079. There was no constable standing outside?—Only myself.

2080. Was there at any time that evening that you were there a constable standing outside?—No, only myself.

2081. There were never two there?—There were never two there.

2082. You are quite sure of that?—Quite sure.

2083. Had you been standing there for a long time?—Since 10 o'clock. I simply went into the station with a person who wanted to make some inquiry, to instruct her, and I came back again.

2084. That was before?—Yes.

2085. Were you at the station shortly after we went in?—I went to close the door behind you.

2086. Which door?—The charge room door.

2087. Why?—Because it is my place to close the door after a prisoner has gone in.

2088. In every case?—Not in every case.

2089. Why specially in this case?—Because you seemed very excited.

2090. There was then a slight commotion?—Yes, just inside the charge room, after you all had been brought in.

2091. On the staircase?—No, in the charge room.

2092. There was a commotion in the charge room?—Yes.

2093. Was that the reason you went up?—To close the door.

2094. You did not wish to hear the commotion?—No, it is not my place. My place is outside, on the steps.

2095. I do not quite see why you shut the door?—To keep the noise from the public.

2096. Then there must have been a good deal of noise?—Not much noise.

2097. A fair amount?—A fair amount.

2098. In Vine Street?—In the station, caused, I should think, by the three prisoners going in—when they were placed in the dock.

2099. You said you closed the door so as not to hear the noise. Surely that would not have been the noise in the station, but the noise outside?—No, in the station.

2100. The noise caused by us going in?—I dare say.

2101. There was a great noise on our going in?—Not before you went into the station.

2102. When do you consider we went into the station—on the staircase?—You went up the stairs, no doubt.

2103. Was there not a noise then?—No.

2104. It was only afterwards?—After you had got into the station.

2105. There was a great noise when we were in the station?—After you went in.

2106. (Mr. Dickinson.) How far is it from the pavement of the street in Vine Street to the charge room: how many steps are there?—I think there are about five or six steps.

2107. Then do you come at once to the charge room?—Yes. As soon as the prisoners entered the charge room I went behind them and closed the door, and came outside again.

2108. You say when they were in the charge room you heard a noise?—Yes.

2109. Do I understand from you that both of these gentlemen, with the policeman, went quietly up the steps into the charge room?—Yes. There was no noise before they entered the charge room.

2110. Then when Constable Divers said just now he heard behind him a commotion that was incorrect?—That was the noise in Piccadilly.

P.C. Wellbelove.
25 July 1906.

2111. He said just now that when he went into the station there was a noise behind him, and he thought if the prisoners were trying to escape it would account for the noise. That sort of noise, according to you, did not occur?—Not in Vine Street.

2112. Nor on the staircase?—No.

2113. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Do you mean there was no scuffle of any kind?—No scuffle at all.

2114. Were they walking quietly?—Yes.

2115. All three of them?—Divers went in first, and the other two followed shortly afterwards.

2116. As I understand, you saw them coming up Vine Street?—Yes, they turned up Swallow Street into Vine Street.

2117. That is not many yards?—About 20 yards.

2118. They were walking all right?—Yes, very quietly.

2119. And as far as walking is concerned they were walking like sober men?—I did not take much notice of them. As far as walking is concerned, I should say so, but I did not take notice whether they were drunk or sober.

2120. When you saw them walking along they did not appear to be drunk?—No.

2121. Did you know what they had been arrested for?—I did not.

2122. You did not think it was for being drunk?—I did not know what it was for.

2123. I say you did not think it was for being drunk, did you?—I cannot say for being drunk or anything else.

2124. (Chairman.) Did you make any special report?—No.

2125. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) How near did these gentlemen pass you as you were standing at the door at Vine Street?—As close as I am here to this desk; close by, almost touching.

2126. Were you standing on the pavement?—On the pavement.

2127. So that to get from where you were into the charge room they would have to go up five steps only?—Five steps.

2128. Then how near are they to the door of the charge room?—To the door is about a yard and a half, I should think.

2129. So that after passing you they would then go up five steps, and within about a yard and a half there would be the charge room?—Yes.

2130. If there had been any scuffle or pushing of these men into the station must you have seen it?—Yes.

2131. You heard no commotion, as you expressed it?—Not until after they had got into the charge room.

2132. What was the nature of the commotion you heard then which caused you to go and shut the door?—Shouting.

2133. Were you still standing on the pavement?—Yes.

2134. When you heard the shouting in the charge room, did that cause you to go and shut the door?—Yes.

2135. Is it part of your duty to shut the door?—Yes, when there is rather a noisy crowd going in.

Inspector Walter Berry, sworn.

Inspector Berry.

2136. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I think you are an inspector of the C Division of the Police?—Yes.

2137. You have had 17 years' service?—17½.

2138. How many years have you served in the Vine Street Division?—Just over two years.

2139. During that time have you acted as an inspector at Vine Street Police Station?—Yes.

2140. Were you in charge of the station on Saturday night and Sunday morning when this occurrence took place?—Yes.

2141. Do you remember Timmings being brought into the charge room?—Yes, I was in there at the time.

2142. At the time he was brought where exactly were you?—I stood at the door leading into the inspector's office. I had just dealt with a previous charge, and was just going to the office when the man was brought in, so I stopped there.

2143. It is said that when Timmings was brought in by Divers you told him to put Timmings into the dock. Is that correct?—Yes, that is so. I can explain that.

2144. Then was Timmings put into the dock?—Yes.

2145. What was the next thing that happened?—The other two men were brought in almost simultaneously.

2146. First of all Divers brought in Timmings, then Isaacson brought in Mr. Lavalette, and then Wallington brought in Dr. Gerothwohl?—That is so.

2147. They came in almost simultaneously?—Yes, within a few moments.

2148. Just describe in your own way what happened when the three men were in the dock?—They were put in the dock, and Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette were in a very excited state; Dr. Gerothwohl particularly. He was throwing his arms about; he had his stick in one hand, holding it by the middle; and he shouted out something about that he was coming to the station on behalf of the other man, indicating Timmings, who stood in the dock. I asked the constable what the charge was. Isaacson said he saw them arm-in-arm in Piccadilly, drunk, shouting, and pushing people off the footway. I said: "You hear what they say about being arrested on their way to the station. Where were they arrested?" Isaacson said they were arrested at St. James's Church, on the other side of Piccadilly, indicating the far side. I asked Wallington if he knew anything about the matter, and he corroborated Isaacson to the same effect. I asked them their names.

2149. Did you ask them their names before the stick incident or after?—After. As he was flourishing the stick about, the constable, in the usual way, asked him for it. It was rather dangerous for a man in his condition, I thought, to retain it, so I stood by him while he took it.

2150. Which constable was it who took it?—6 C R.

2151. That is Wallington?—Yes, he asked him for it. He said he would not give it up, and he held it in the middle, and in trying to get it away Wallington put one hand on one side and one on the other, thinking he would let go, but as he did not the stick broke in the middle.

2152. Are you quite sure that that was Wallington, and not Isaacson?—Positive. I stood there at the time.

2153. Was it after that incident that you asked them for their names?—Yes.

2154. And at the time that you were asking them for their names whereabouts were you?—Sitting at the desk, waiting to put it on the charge sheet.

2155. You had got the charge sheet ready to record their names?—Yes.

2156. Did they give you their names?—They tried to, but I could not understand them, so I copied them from their cards.

2157. At that time did they give you their cards?—Yes; they gave them to me, I think, when a difficulty arose about the spelling of the names.

2158. Did you copy their names, Gerothwohl and Lavalette, from their cards on to the charge sheet?—Yes.

2159. Did Timmings give you his name?—Yes, he gave me his name first. I would not be quite certain about that, but he gave it, anyway.

2160. Whilst you were sitting there writing down the names on the charge sheet what was happening? Were these men doing or saying anything?—Shouting; Dr. Gerothwohl especially was shouting and throwing himself about there. He kept on repeating there about their former protest, that they were coming to the station on behalf of the other man.

2161. (Chairman.) Did he keep repeating that, do you say?—Yes, he repeated it several times.

2163. Did any one of the three say anything when you read it out?—Not one—not a word.

2164. What opinion did you form as to their condition from what you saw of them and heard them say whilst they were in the charge room?—I formed the opinion that they were drunk.

2165. Of course, with regard to the disorder which was alleged, you would have to depend on the statements of the constables?—In the street, yes.

2166. As regards the allegation of drunkenness, would it be your duty to inform yourself, as well as you could from their appearance, whether the charge could be justified?—Yes, I should exercise my personal opinion whatever the constable said.

2167. What was it that led you to think, from what they said and did in the charge room, that the men were under the influence of drink or drunk?—They smelt strongly of drink, their faces were very flushed, their voices were rather thick, they did not seem to have proper control over their tongues, and their eyes had a glassy appearance, which follows from drink.

2168. Were they very excited?—Yes, Dr. Gerothwohl particularly, but Mr. Lavalette not so much.

2169. Upon that you took the charge, you entered it, you read it over to them, and they made no answer?—No answer whatever.

2170. After a charge is made against a man and he disputes the fact that he is drunk, what is the course of procedure then?—We call the divisional surgeon to examine him.

2171. Was the divisional surgeon upon the premises during that night, do you know?—He was at the station at the time, in the office adjoining the charge room.

2172. From what these gentlemen had said you understood they were protesting about their arrest, because they were coming to the station of their own accord and were not disorderly. Did you understand that they were protesting on the ground that they were not under the influence of drink?—No, I did not.

2173. If you had had any doubt upon that point, and had understood that they were protesting about that, would you have called in the divisional surgeon in the ordinary course?—Yes, it would have been my duty to do so.

2174. However, there being no objection to the charge when it was read over, they were taken to the cells?—Yes, after being searched.

2175. What was the next thing that happened that you took part in? I think you did not visit the cells, did you?—No, I did not.

2176. Was it reported that they required a doctor sent for?—Yes, a Dr. Stewart, somewhere at Chelsea.

2177. I think you were informed of that by Inspector Smith, and he it was who visited the cells?—Yes, he visited the cells.

2178. And he reported to you that they required Dr. Stewart to attend?—Yes.

2179. Upon that what did you do?—I instructed the man appointed for the purpose to send a telegraph message to the police of that district for him to attend.

2180. I think you did send this telegraph message at 1.15 a.m. to the Chelsea police: "C. Division, Vine St. Police Station, 8th April, 1906.—Please inform Dr. Stewart, 98, Radcliffe Gardens, that Mr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Henri Lavalette are both charged here with drunkenness, and wish Dr. Stewart to medically examine them. Reply"?—Yes, that would be the message.

2181. Is that the ordinary procedure in such cases?—Yes.

2182. To telegraph to the nearest police station to the residence of the person who is wanted?—Yes.

2183. I think you got back an answer at 2.25 a.m.: "Dr. Stewart declines to attend"?—Yes.

2184. I think upon receiving that reply you went yourself to the cells, and saw Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette?—I did.

Inspector Berry.

25 July 1906.

2185. Did you tell them the result of your inquiry?—Yes, I informed them of the nature of the reply.

2186. What passed between you and them then?—I said, "There is our doctor on the premises, you can see him if you like," and they seemed only too pleased to take advantage of the offer, I thought. I got the cell key and let them out, and took them up, and they saw the doctor.

2187. I think they say Dr. Mitchell?—Yes, the divisional surgeon.

2188. He gave a certificate, and after that I think they were allowed out?—Yes, on bail, immediately afterwards.

2189. We want the time at which they were bailed. Do you keep a record in Vine Street of the times at which persons are bailed out?—There is a book kept for that purpose.

2190. Whose duty is it to keep that book?—The officer in charge of the station. I might say that that is not my writing there. The officer is here who wrote it.

2191. All it states is: "Bailed at 2.40 a.m. 8/4/06"?

(Chairman.) I think that is agreed.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I think, Dr. Gerothwohl, there is no dispute as to the time being 2.40, is there?

(Mr. Lavalette.) I think just afterwards I looked at a clock, and I noticed it was twenty minutes to three. We left the station about half-past two.

2192. (Mr Eldon Bankes.) It is only a matter of ten minutes. Was the door of the charge room left open after Timmings had been brought in by P.C. Divers?—Yes.

2193. You were in the charge room?—Yes.

2194. Is it possible for the scene which Dr. Gerothwohl stated occurred at the steps of the police station to have occurred, bearing in mind the fact that you were in the charge room and the door was open?—I should say it was quite impossible.

2195. It is suggested by Dr. Gerothwohl that he was "seized from behind, shoved up the steps, and on the staircase P.C. 43 let go of Timmings, turned round, and, facing me, he seized me, twisted me round, and flung me on to another constable; that constable flung me back, and I was again seized by P.C. 43 and twisted into the dock." Did anything of that kind occur in your presence?—No. I could not see on the stairs.

2196. But as far as the charge room is concerned did anything of that kind occur?—No.

2197. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) You said that when Timmings was brought in by Constable Divers you gave orders to have him placed in the dock?—Yes.

2198. You never said that at the police court?—No, and I did not say it now. Divers has said it now. I merely corroborate him.

2199. These three prisoners were not brought in by two constables?—What three prisoners?

2199*. Timmings, myself, and Lavalette. You said at the police court that the three prisoners were brought in by two constables, 6 C R. and 43 C R.?—No.

2200. "(Witness.) I was in charge of Vine Street Police Station at a quarter past 12 on Sunday morning; the three prisoners were brought in by two constables, 6 C R. and 43 C R."?—There is a mistake there, I think.

(Chairman.) In my copy it is three constables.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I am beginning to doubt the accuracy of this shorthand note.

(Witness.) That is not accurate.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) In the notes of the evidence supplied by the Home Office it is said, "I was in charge of Vine Street Station at 12.15 on the 8th April when prisoners were brought in." There is nothing further.

(Chairman.) The note that was brought by the Clerk of the Court says, "I was in charge of Vine Street Station at 12.15 on the 8th April when prisoners were brought in." You are reading from the shorthand notes?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) Yes.

Inspector Berry.

25 July 1906.

2201. You are quite sure you were in the charge room?—Absolutely sure.

2202-3. Where?—Standing by the door leading to the inspector's office from the charge room.

2204. You were standing at the door?—I was just going to the door when I heard a prisoner coming in. Then I stopped.

2205. You were not standing by the dock?—The dock is against the door.

2206. You were not walking?—At what particular moment do you mean?

2207. When the prisoners were brought in?—I should say I was standing there then.

2208. Resting?—No, not resting. I was standing. Standing is not always resting.

2209. Previous to that you were in the front room?—No, in the charge room.

2210. Previously, a few minutes before, were you in the front room?—No, not for some minutes.

2211. Did you hear a commotion?—Some distance off in Piccadilly.

2212. Did you not come out of the front room?—When?

2213. On hearing a commotion?—No. I say I was in the charge room.

2214. "I was standing in the charge room by the dock when they were brought in. There was such a commotion, I went out to see what it was"?—Went out where?

2215. You heard a commotion. You did not come out. You said "There was such a commotion I went out to see what it was"?—I do not understand that.

2216. This is what you said at the Police Court: "I was standing in the charge room by the dock when they were brought in. There was such a commotion I went out to see what it was"?—If I was standing in the charge room there was no need to go out.

2217. Did you use those words at the Police Court?—Not to that effect. I do not remember that.

2218. You remember saying something to that effect?—No, not exactly.

2219. Are you positive you did not say this?—Not that it would have the same meaning as those words there have.

2220. You are positive you did not utter those words?—Yes, I am positive I did not utter those exact words.

2221. Or anything to that effect?—Or anything to that effect.

2222. You are quite sure. Just think a little will you?—I am thinking.

2223. What impression did that commotion make on you. Where was that commotion?—The principal part seemed to come from the neighbourhood of Piccadilly. You see there is a passage opposite the station. I could hear some shouting of people outside.

2224. Had you not heard that for some time?—No.

2225. Was it starting then at that moment?—No.

2226. Then it had been going on for some time. Why did you notice it so specially?—Because it was more than usual.

2227. In Piccadilly?—Yes.

2228. Do you pay very much attention to what is going on in Piccadilly when you are at the station?—No, I cannot very well do that if I am in the station.

2229. Does commotion suddenly strike you. You said there was such a commotion just outside?—Yes, that is what it sounded like.

2230. Just outside?—It is not far down.

2231. It is a good way down, especially if it was on the south side?—An extra noise could very well be heard that short distance.

2232. Would you call that just outside?—Yes.

2233. You call Piccadilly just outside?—Yes.

2234. I suggest that if the arrests took place there, at the door of Vine Street Station, it might account for the commotion?—The one that I refer to?

2235. The row you heard?—I do not agree with that suggestion.

2236. You said in Court: "It may have been part of it"?—Part of the whole noise.

2237. It may have been part of the commotion—the arrest outside Vine Street. These are your words. Counsel said: "I suggest if the arrests took place there it might account for the commotion"?—If it did—part of it.

2238. It may have been part of it?—Yes, if it took place outside.

2239. The arrests, therefore, taking place outside Vine Street may have accounted for the commotion?—No, part of it.

2240. Some of it?—I should think it was possible.

2241. When we were brought in where were you standing?—By the dock.

2242. Next to whom?—What, prisoners?

2243. Yes?—Timmings? I stood in front of him.

2244. Why did you stand in front of him? What was the particular reason?—I do not know that there was any particular reason. I was there and I knew there was a charge to be taken, so I stopped.

2245. You must have stood before him for some purpose?—No, I had no particular purpose—not then.

2246. You were in front of Timmings?—Yes.

2247. Of anyone else?—Do you mean after you were in the dock?

2248. Yes?—I came right along then.

2249. For what purpose?—To have a good look at you.

2250. For what purpose?—To see what condition you were in.

2251. You were before Timmings for no purpose?—At that time. I thought you meant before you came in.

2252. Timmings was a prisoner?—Yes.

2253. You were facing him for no purpose. When I came in you faced me for a purpose—to make sure as to my condition?—That applied to you all three when you were all three in the dock.

2254. But Timmings was in before?—Yes, he was.

2255. Why did not you examine him then?—I had no reason to at that moment.

2256. What was the charge against Timmings? Why was he in the dock if you had no reason to examine his condition?—At the time.

2257. You say you had Timmings placed in the dock by your order?—Yes.

2258. And you say you were in front of him at that moment?—Yes.

2259. Surely you must have been there for some purpose. You must have looked at him?—I did look at him.

2260. Did you notice anything as to his condition?—Yes.

2261. Then?—Yes.

2262. Why did you not say that before when I asked you whether you were standing in front of him?—I did not go there for that purpose. I understood you to ask me for what purpose I was standing there.

2263. Yes?—I did not go there for that purpose. I was there when he was put there.

2264. You tried to make yourself clear as to his condition?—I do not follow you.

2265. After making sure of Timming's condition you say you approached me to make sure of my condition?—No, Mr. Lavalette next.

2266. In what way did you approach us?—I only walked along in front of you. It was a matter of a step.

2267-8. When you were walking or standing in front of us what did you do? What did you do when you were before Mr. Lavalette?—I took the opportunity of smelling his breath.

2269. Did you approach very close?—No, it was not necessary.

2270. You did not examine him for his breath?—Not beyond that. I looked at his face, and took a mental note of his appearance.

2271. You smelled his breath?—Yes.

2272. Might his condition in the dock be accounted for by his excited state? Was he excited?—Yes. Mr. Lavalette, you mean?

2273. Yes?—Yes.

2274. Very?—Yes, I should say very.

2275. Might it be explained by his surprise at finding himself in the dock?—No, I should not say so.

2276. He did not look like a man who was excited by finding himself in the dock?—No, he did not.

2277. You are sure of that?—Yes.

2278. May I ask about what distance you were from him in order to smell his breath?—A couple of feet, perhaps, or a foot—quite close to the dock rail.

2279. You smelled him at that distance?—Yes.

2280. Well?—Yes.

2281. You are quite sure?—Quite sure.

2282. Then what did you do?—I noticed his condition.

2283. How long did you take making this examination?—A very short time; a few seconds, perhaps.

2284. You examined the three of us in a few seconds?—Yes.

2285. You did not smell our breath when you were standing at the end of the dock next to Timmings?—Not all three of you.

2286. Do you remember me flourishing my card in order that it might be given to you?—Yes.

2287. Do you remember it was some time before it was given?—Barely a second, I should say.

2288. Then you mean there was no opposition at all to taking it?—No.

2289. None whatever?—I should say not; it was of great assistance to us in getting the names on the charge sheet.

2290. You are quite positive?—Yes.

2291. You say you got our names from the cards?—Yes.

2292. At once?—As soon as I could.

2293. How were the names spelt on the charge sheet?—Your name?

2294. My name?—Morris Gerothwohl.

2295. Is it "Ger"?—I would not be quite certain about that. It might be "Gorothwohl."

2296. How could it be "Gor" if it was copied from the card?—I may have made a mistake; it being small print.

2297. How was Mr. Lavalette's name spelt?—Lavalette.

2298. That is how it is spelt, but is that how it was spelt on the charge sheet?—Yes, I believe so.

(Chairman.) Both names are incorrectly spelt on the charge sheet.

2299. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) And they were both copied from the cards?—I copied them as well as I could.

2300. Is your sight very clear?—It is clear enough for my purposes.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Is the original charge sheet here?

(Chairman.) The error is very trifling.

2301. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) Do you remember asking us our nationality?—Yes.

2302. What did I reply?—A Belgian, I think, to the best of my recollection. Whatever you said I put it on the charge sheet.

2303. What did I say as to my nationality? What is on the charge sheet?—Whatever is on the charge sheet is what you told me.

2304. I know what I told you, but I should like to see what is on the charge sheet.

2305. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) "British subject"?—You said you were born in Belgium, and were a naturalised British subject.

2306. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) I said that?—Yes. It may not have been "Belgian."

2307. I suggest that Mr. Lavalette, who is a Belgian, said that. I am a British subject. With regard to the message you sent to Dr. Stewart at a later time, it was mentioned specifically to Dr. Stewart that two foreigners had been arrested?—That is a matter I cannot explain. That was done by the Police of that district where the message was delivered.

2308. You said a minute ago you thought I said I was a Belgian?—Yes.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) The message to Dr. Stewart was in writing.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) The message was only carried verbally.

(Witness.) The ordinary course would be that a copy would be made out by the Police at their end and delivered to that address.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I find the original charge sheet is here, and I am afraid the inspector is right and the copy is wrong. (The charge sheet was handed to the Commissioners.)

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It is simply a question of an "o" for an "e."

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) The charge sheet looks to me to be right.

2309. (Chairman.) Will you look at your charge sheet (handing). Your handwriting lends colour to various remarks, and it lends colour to the remark that your "e's" and "o's" are very remarkably alike?—It is spelt Gerothwohl.

2310. You said it might be "Gorothwohl"?—Yes.

2311. Now look at Mr. Lavalette's name?—Lavalette.

2312. You think it is the letter "e"?—Yes.

2313. You think it is "Lavalette" and not "Lavalotte"?—Yes.

2314. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) I suggest to you that there was some confusion in the charge room?—Not confusion. There was a lot of noise that you and Mr. Lavalette were making.

2315. Were not the constables joining in?—I should not allow it.

2316. You did not allow them to push us about?—Not in the charge room.

2317. You say nothing about the staircase?—No.

2318. You say you were informed by Inspector Smith that we requested to see a doctor?—Yes.

2319. Did Inspector Smith not convey to you the message that we wanted to see two gentlemen?—No.

2320. You are quite sure of that?—Quite positive.

2321. He did not suggest anything to you about Mr. Graves?—He did not—only Dr. Stewart.

2322. Did you see us searched?—Yes.

2323. Who searched me?—P.C. 6.

2324. P.C. 6 searched me?—Yes.

2325. In what way?—I am not sure whether he put his hands in your pockets or not.

2326. He may have done?—He may have done.

2327. You heard him say he never touched me. He never put his hands in my pocket. He said he did not search me?—I do not think he said that. I think he said he was not quite certain about it.

2328. You are not quite certain about it either?—Not about putting his hands in your pocket. If a gentleman offers to give up his knife and matches there is no necessity for him to be searched.

2329. You did not see Constable Isaacson search me?—No.

2330. You did not hear Constable Isaacson say to me "I am not going to rob you"?—No.

2331. Did you see Mr. Lavalette searched?—Yes.

2332. By whom?—By Isaacson.

2333. Did he search him?—I will not say he put his hands in his pocket. A man searches his own prisoners.

2334. Did you throw the matches into the fire?—No.

2335. It is not your habit to throw them into the fire?—We keep them and hand them to them afterwards with their other property.

2336. You remember, of course, releasing us from the cells?—Yes.

2337. And offering us the services of Dr. Mitchell?—Yes.

2338. Until when were you in the charge room after

Inspector Berry.

25 July 1906.

we had been placed in the cells?—Until you were about to be bailed out.

2339. All that time?—Not in the charge room, but I was in the office.

2340. You never heard anything about the bell being rung from our cell?—No.

2341. I suggest that it did not work?—They were in working order. They are examined every time an officer takes the station over.

2342. You never heard it ring?—No.

2343. As we were emerging do you remember Mr. Lavalette saying to you, "Surely you are not going to say we are drunk."?—He did not say any such thing.

2344. You have no recollection of that?—I am sure he did not say it.

2345. You are quite sure?—Quite sure.

2346. You are quite sure you did not reply "Yes—it is always wrong to interfere," or words to that effect?—Absolutely positive.

2347. Quite positive?—Yes, nothing like it. I should not be so indiscreet.

2348. After the medical examination you spoke to us a little?—I did not.

2349. Not at all?—No.

2350. Were you present when we left after the medical examination?—You were bailed out.

2351. But were you there?—Not when you were bailed out.

2352. You did not see us leave?—No, I did not.

2353. (Chairman.) I do not quite follow the expression "bailed out." I thought they were let out on their own recognisances?—That is the same thing.

2354. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) I put it to you you saw us leave?—I do not think I actually saw you leave the station; you were about to leave.

2355. You said at the Court, "I saw you leave." Were we drunk at that time?—When you were bailed out?

2356. Yes—in your opinion, of course?—No.

2357. We were perfectly sober?—You were not drunk, I will say that.

2358. You say Dr. Mitchell was in the building when we were brought in?—Yes.

2359. You heard our protest?—About the way you were arrested.

2360. And that we were coming about the third man, and so forth?—Yes.

2361. You thought we were drunk too?—Yes.

2362. You did not suggest the services of the divisional surgeon, who was in the building?—No, I did not.

2363. Why not?—You did not ask for them, and I did not think it necessary.

2364. Not when there was a protest?—I did not take a protest as to your condition.

2365. Is it the duty of the officer when a charge of drunkenness is made when there is any protest to send for the surgeon?—If they protest about their condition; if they deny drunkenness, or anything of that sort.

2366. If they just deny the charge formally?—No. If they deny the drunkenness we send for the divisional surgeon.

2367. Is it not a denial of drunkenness to protest against the way you are treated when you say you are coming about another man?—No, I should not take it so, or I should have called the doctor.

2368. Do you remember my walking up to you immediately the bar of the dock was raised and saying, "Do you really think me drunk?"—You did not do so.

2369. You do not remember that?—I say you did not do so.

2370. You say I did not do so?—You did not.

2371. You do not remember answering "Yes"?—No, as I say you did not do so.

2372. If I had asked you would you have answered "Yes"?—Certainly I should.

2373. When we were leaving you say we were perfectly sober?—I did not use the adjective.

2374. Had we any indication of drink on us?—Yes. You seemed to have the after effects of drink about you.

2375. In the police court you said "No, I cannot say they had." "Had they any indication of drink on them when they left? (A.) No, I cannot say they had"?—I do not remember saying that at all.

2376. Did our breath smell?—When you went out?

2377. Yes?—Yes, slightly.

2378. You can judge of it. You came close enough to judge of it?—You will remember I spoke to you through the trapdoor of the cell. I walked up in front of you when you came out of the cell and spoke to you.

2379. You were near enough to smell our breath?—Yes.

2380. You say we did smell of drink?—Very faintly.

2381. When you were asked that question by counsel, "Did their breath smell?" you answered, "I could not say; I did not get close enough to them."

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You are asking the inspector about something which you read out, and which he is supposed to have said when you were leaving?

2382. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) Yes. You were asked, "Had they any indication of drink on them when they left? (A.) No, I could not say they had. (Q.) Did their breath smell? (A.) I could not say; I did not get close enough to them." You have just said that when we did leave the station you got at any rate, if not for that purpose, close enough to us to notice a faint smell of drink?—I spoke to you at the cell door about Dr. Stewart not coming. I spoke to you through the trapdoor of the cell, you remember.

2383. It was when we were about to leave?—When I let you out of the cell.

2384. When we left the cell we were medically examined?—That is so.

2385. We were not brought back to the cell?—No.

2386. That would not be when we were leaving?—That would be so.

2387. You said we could not walk properly. Did you think we could not walk properly when we were brought in?—When you were in the dock—yes, that was my impression.

2388. We were brought in. We had an opportunity of walking in. I mean did we have an opportunity of walking, because if we were flung about we should have no such opportunity?—If you were flung about certainly not, but I do not consider you were; you certainly were not in the charge room.

2389. Were we held by the constables when we were brought in?—Yes, they held your arm.

2390. One of them?—Yes.

2391. And they never let go of us before we got into the dock?—Just as you went into the dock.

2392. Did they shove us into the dock?—No, certainly not.

2393. Did they help us into the dock?—In what sense do you mean?

2394. Were they holding us?—You went in by yourself.

2395. (Chairman.) You made a special report in this case, I think?—Yes.

2396. You have told us you formed the opinion that the three men in the dock were all drunk?—Yes.

2397. Now, I am going to read a sentence from your report: "As in my opinion they were all drunk, I did not place any credence in the allegations made by the two former prisoners respecting their arrests, and they were all charged accordingly." The allegations, I think, is the allegation that they were going to the station to speak for Timmings?—No—as to the way they were arrested.

2398. "In the dock Gerothwohl stated that he and Lavalette were coming to Station to hand in their cards on behalf of Timmings, and were arrested when on way here." That is, I take it, the allegation you refer to in the extract I have read?—Yes.

2399. It is perfectly clear, is it not, that these two men, at any rate, were not drunk or incapable?—They were not incapable, certainly not.

2400. Even supposing that you say they were talking thickly, or talking in a way that indicated that they had been taking too much drink, why did you come to the conclusion that you ought not to attach any credence to anything they said before they were charged with being drunk and disorderly?—They did not appear to be in a condition to make any reliable statement. That was the opinion I formed.

2401. I thought there was an old maxim that when in wine the truth comes out?—It may be so; but I do not think that applies to this case.

2402. Do I understand you now to say that they were so drunk that you did not think it was worth while to pay any attention to anything they said?—Yes.

2403. Why?—They appeared to me to be in that condition when men frequently do make all sorts of wild allegations against the police.

2404. Wild allegations against the Police? The allegation was "that he and Mr. Lavalette were coming to Station to hand in their cards on behalf of Timmings, and were arrested when on way here." That seems a perfectly coherent allegation, at any rate?—Then I will say serious allegations instead of wild allegations.

2405. It is a complete sentence, is it not?—Yes.

2406. The prisoner, at any rate, made it quite clear to your mind what he was alleging against the Police?—Yes, he did. I gathered from what he said what he meant, of course. I cannot say the exact words he used, but I gathered from what he did say that that was the allegation he made.

2407. That he and Mr. Lavalette were coming to the Station in order to speak to you as inspector on behalf of Timmings, and that before they got to the Station they were arrested?—Yes.

Inspector Berry.
25 July 1906.

2408. Did you not think that if people are in a position to give an explanation, reasonable in form, at any rate you might have made some further inquiries about the matter?—I made inquiries of all I could, and the constables who were there directly contradicted them. It was a matter of whom to believe.

2409. You have stated it strongly in your report: "As, in my opinion, they were all drunk, I did not place any credence in the allegations made by the two prisoners"?—Yes.

2410. I do not follow that. On what ground did you come to that conclusion?—I thought, in view of all the circumstances, I should believe the constables sooner than them. That was the position I was in. Had the constables admitted anything like that I should not have taken the charge.

2411. I do not find in the charge sheet any column for any remarks made by the accused?—No, there is not any such column.

2412. I see the charge of "Drunk and disorderly in Piccadilly," but there is no column at all in which apparently any remark made by the accused is to be entered?—No, there is no such column on the charge sheet. There is a column for remarks by the magistrate.

(Chairman.) We will now adjourn till 12 o'clock on Monday, and we shall sit here, unless public notice to the contrary is given.

FOURTH DAY.

Monday, 30th July 1906.

PRESENT:

Sir DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, K.C., M.P. (Chairman).
RUFUS DANIEL ISAACS, Esq., K.C., M.P.
WILLOUGHBY HYETT DICKINSON, Esq., M.P. (Barrister-at-Law).
CHARLES ALGERNON WHITMORE, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law).
J. W. ST. LAWRANCE LESLIE, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law), (Secretary).

Inspector WALTER BERRY, recalled.

2413. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Did you notice how these gentlemen were dressed when they were brought in?—I cannot say exactly. I could not swear to it, at any rate. They were very respectably dressed.

2414. Otherwise you did not pay any particular attention?—No, I did not.

2415. Was their dress at all disorderly?—No, I did not notice it.

2416. Nothing to attract your attention in any way?—Not in the matter of dress.

2417. They talked rationally, did not they?—Not altogether; rather wildly, I thought.

2418. I was on the question of dress, but I thought you used the word yourself, in your evidence before, that they talked rationally, although I think you added they talked excitedly. But in what they said there was no difficulty in understanding them?—No. I think I said that before.

2419. The only thing that, as I understand, you mean by saying they talked wildly is that they were very excited?—Yes.

2420. And you thought their allegations were wild?—I did.

2421. But why were the allegations wild. What they were saying was very definite, was it not?—It was, but it struck me that under the circumstances it was not altogether reliable.

2422. But what circumstances were there which made it unreliable, except that you had got the contradictions from the constables?—That is all that I could get, and previous experience of men who do make accusations against the police when they are in that condition.

Inspector Berry.
30 July 1906.

2423. I suppose it is not uncommon when a man is charged for him to make an accusation against the police?—Not at all; it is only too frequent.

2424. It becomes a somewhat stereotyped form?—Very often.

2425. And you get to look upon it in a somewhat stereotyped manner?—Not altogether. It all depends on circumstances.

2426. But the fact that you have to hear it so often would rather tend, would it not, to make you believe the police?—Not altogether, because in each case we should look at the surrounding circumstances.

2427. So I should have thought; but in this particular case I do not quite follow what was done, except that a question was put to the police?—That was all I did, and all I am able to do on the spot.

2428. Then, from the answer which was given by the police, you came to the conclusion that these allegations were wild?—Yes.

2429. Did you inquire of them whether they had ever known Timmings before?—No, I did not.

2430. That was rather an important matter, was it not?—It did not strike me so at the time.

2431. It did not occur to you?—No.

Inspector Berry.

30 July 1906.

2432. But it does now, does it not?—It does now, in view of after events.

2433. I should have thought, if they were coming to the police station to complain, it was a very important matter to know whether they knew the man with reference to whom they were coming to the police station. However, you say it would occur to you now, but it did not strike you at the time?—It did not strike me at the time.

2434. You have spoken about symptoms which you noticed with them. I want to know, first of all, with reference to the smell of drink of which you have spoken. Do you attribute much importance to that?—I took it in conjunction with other facts.

2435. But by itself I suggest to you that a man smelling of drink does not indicate that he is drunk?—No, not that alone.

2436. It is rather difficult to tell, is it not, from the smell, whether the man has had much or little?—From the smell alone, yes.

2437. So that from the smell itself all that you could tell would be that the man at some time, perhaps during the last few hours, has had some alcohol to drink?—That is so.

2438. That is all you could arrive at from the smell?—That is all.

2439. That does not seem to be of any assistance to you?—Taking it in conjunction with other facts I think it is.

2440. How long do you think the smell would last?—I could not say.

2441. In this particular case did you notice any difference between the condition of the three persons charged?—Yes, Timmings was worse than the other two.

2442. That you are clear about?—Yes, quite.

2443. Have you ever said that before?—I have said it before.

2444. At the police court?—No, I did not say it there.

2445. Have you ever said it in your report?—I do not remember.

2446. Am I not right in saying this, that throughout hitherto you have maintained they were all three in the same condition?—I do not think so, but I will not be certain on the point.

2447. So far as I know, from the evidence that has been given in this case, it has been the statement that you have made that they were all three in the same condition?—No, I do not think so.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I do not think the point ever arose as to distinguishing between the condition of the three. The statement was that they were all three drunk.

2448 (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I think perhaps that is right. I am not pinning myself to words, but perhaps that is right. That confirms what I am putting to you. You say they were all three drunk, and I am pointing out to you that you were making no distinction between the condition of Timmings and the other two?—I said they were all drunk, of course.

2449. Then that does mean you did not attempt to draw any distinction between the condition of Timmings and the other men?—Oh, no, sir. I thought you were speaking as a matter of degree.

2450. I do not mean as a matter of degree, but what I am asking you about is as to what you said at the police court, and the effect of it would be this, that so far as your evidence was concerned you did not draw any distinction to the magistrate between the condition of Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette and Timmings?—I do not think I did.

2451. As far as the magistrate knew from your evidence they would be in the same condition?—As far as the magistrate was concerned, yes, I suppose so.

2452. You do not appear to draw any distinction between the stages of drunkenness and the degrees of drunkenness?—No, I do not think I did.

2453. I suppose it might be that a man might be very excited after he had had some drink without being in the slightest degree drunk?—That might happen sometimes.

2454. Do not you think that the condition of Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette was somewhat that condition?—No, I do not.

2455. You still think that they were drunk?—I do, sir, yes.

2456. Now a little more about that. You have said their faces were flushed?—Yes.

2457. That is a very ordinary symptom of undue excitement, is it not?—It occurs in some cases, but in other cases there is quite a contrary effect, and they go white.

2458. That is quite true, but these gentlemen were very excited?—Oh yes, they were.

2459. Whether they were right or wrong they were in a state of very great excitement when they were brought into the station?—Yes.

2460. And from the earliest moment, as I understand you, that they were in the station (please correct me if I am wrong), as soon as they were able to articulate, they protested against being brought there, with the statement that they had come to give evidence on behalf of Timmings?—As soon as they were put in the dock.

2461. They had no chance of speaking till then, had they?—No, not to me.

2462. Then from the moment they got into the police station, and as soon as they could address you, they made that statement?—Yes.

2463. And as I understand the evidence you gave us on the last occasion they repeated that statement on several occasions?—Yes, Dr. Gerothwohl did.

2464. And Mr. Lavalette?—Yes, he corroborated him in a way. I could not say the exact words.

2465. When you smelt them could you then swear they had been drinking whisky?—No, I could not.

2466. Brandy?—No, I could not.

2467. Do you mean you could not tell what they had been drinking?—I could tell it was alcoholic liquor—that was all. It was an alcoholic smell.

2468. Do you often make this test for the purpose of corroborating charges made?—Yes.

2469. You get in the habit, I suppose, of knowing to some extent according to your view when you smell a man's breath who is in the dock whether he has been drinking or not?—Oh, yes.

2470. Cannot you distinguish between, we will say, his having been drinking beer and his having been drinking brandy?—No, I would not like to say that I can for certain. Rum smells particularly strong, you might distinguish that.

2471. You say rum smells particularly strong?—Yes.

2472. Do I understand you to say that when you smelt the breath of these men you could not tell whether they had been drinking whisky or whether they had been drinking beer?—No, I could not—not for certain.

2473. All you could detect was from the smell that they had been drinking something alcoholic?—That is so.

2474. But you could not tell what?—I could not tell what.

2475. It cannot have been so very strong, can it?—It was quite strong enough to smell standing a yard or two away from them.

2476. But these three men were in the dock together?—Yes.

2477. Do you mean to say you could tell whose breath it was you were smelling a yard or two away?—I do not say I did smell them a yard or two away. I say it was strong enough to smell it. I was one side of the rails and they were the other.

2478. They were standing very close together in the dock?—Yes.

2479. I have seen the dock, and it is quite a small place, and three men would be standing quite close together?—There is plenty of room for four standing side by side.

2480. But still they were standing close together?—Oh, yes.

2481. As I understand what you did was you passed in front of them?—Yes.

2482. And from passing in front of them you came to the conclusion that each one of them smelt of drink?—Yes.

2483. And strongly?—Yes.

2484. Were they able to walk properly when they came into the station?—I could not tell thoroughly. I only saw them as they came through the door.

2485. As far as you could see they could walk properly, could not they?—They seemed to me to be staggering a bit even when the policeman had hold of them.

2486. Staggering?—Yes, slightly. Timmings, of course, particularly so.

2487. Do not bother about Timmings for a moment, I am asking now about Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette. Did you see them before they came into the station?—No.

2488. You had heard some commotion outside, you told us?—Yes, I heard footsteps like you usually hear when a charge is coming to the station.

2489. Did you hear any scuffling?—No.

2490. Or shuffling of feet?—I heard a shuffling of feet like you hear when a charge is being brought to the station from the crowd that follows.

2491. Am I to understand that the commotion you heard outside was the police walking up quietly with the men in charge—nothing more than that?—And the crowd that usually follows a charge to the station. That is what I mean.

2492. Had a crowd followed in this case?—I could not say, but I took it to be that.

2493. You heard sufficient footsteps outside or sufficient numbers outside to make you think that there was a crowd?—A good number of people.

2494. That must have been a pretty considerable amount, I suppose?—You see there is no other sound round that street. There is no traffic, so you can hear pretty distinctly.

2495. We have got to this, that you heard just before they were brought in, commotion outside?—Yes.

2496. Which, according to you, was caused by a number of people who were following the police and the men they had in charge?—In my opinion. You frequently hear it.

2497. When they came into the station were they walking quietly?—I do not know about quietly, but practically so.

2498. I only want to know what you tell us. You say "practically so." Does that mean they were walking quietly or were struggling to get away from the police?—There was not any struggling.

2499. Then they were put into the dock?—Yes.

2500. And they did not struggle then?—No, they threw themselves about a bit, particularly Dr. Gerothwohl, who threw his arms about with a stick.

2501. That was his excited manner of speaking—that was all, was it not?—It did not seem to be so necessary for him to wave his arms about to speak.

2502. Some people do?—No doubt, Dr. Gerothwohl did on this occasion—most decidedly.

2503. There was nothing more than that was there?—No.

2504. They were not violent, or anything of that kind?—I should hardly use that term.

2505. Will you tell me why it is that you have described their conduct as very violent? It is puzzling me on the evidence that we have heard. You describe their conduct as very violent. Why is that? It is not correct from what you have told me just now, and I should like to know why you said that?—It might be a rather strong term.

2506. It would not accurately describe what had been taking place in the station, according to what you have just told us?—Probably not—not the use of the adjective.

2507. Let me read you what you said in your report that was made immediately after, when there was a complaint made about this matter: "Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette were both very violent in the station." That is not accurate?—Not exactly so. I should like to modify that statement.

2508. Is it not a very important matter that you should be strictly accurate when you are reporting to your superior officers?—It is an important matter.

2509. I do not understand how you came to use words of this kind. This was after they had been discharged, and after you were called upon to make a report in consequence of the complaint that was made, and you say this: "Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette were both very violent in the station, the former, who is a tall, powerful man, particularly so?—Yes, that is so.

2510. You agree that that is not an accurate way of expressing what took place?—It is rather too strong a term to use. Still, I had in my mind to speak to the truth when I made that report.

2511. It is a rather coloured report, according to what you have told us just now. That is so, is it not?—I must agree with you, sir, now.

2512. You have told us about the stick?—Yes.

2513. And a good deal of importance, apparently, is attributed to what took place with the stick by you, because I find it referred to in the report. As I understand, what had taken place was, according to your statement to us, that Wallington tried to take the stick away from Dr. Gerothwohl, or tried to get him to give it up, and he would not give it up?—That is so.

2514. And thereupon he took it away from him?—Yes. I asked him myself as well to give it up, or I tried to make him hear, but he was making so much noise that I would not say he heard me. Then, of course, Wallington did try to take it away from him.

2515. You asked him yourself to give it up?—Yes, I did.

2516. I do not think you told us that on the last occasion, did you?—Probably not.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Not on the last occasion, but it is in his statement.

2517. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That is quite a different thing. I am speaking of the evidence. I know perfectly well it is in the report, and I am going to ask you a question about it. What I am much more concerned with than the report is the sworn testimony which you gave. You gave evidence at the police court?—Yes.

2518. I just want to be quite clear, so that you may not be misled in any way. I am rather under the impression that at the police court you said nothing in your examination-in-chief about the stick. Apparently you were not asked, and you did not say anything about it?—No; the question of the stick did not crop up when I was at the police court.

2519. I think that is quite right?—No one made any statement about it except Dr. Gerothwohl, when he gave his evidence. The magistrate asked me nothing about it.

2520. Nothing was made of it when you gave your evidence?—No.

2521. But you gave us your evidence on the last occasion here, and I think I am right in saying that you said nothing about it then?—I do not think I did mention it last time.

2522. You told us of the incident about the stick, and told us nothing about having persuaded him to give it up?—I asked him to give it up to the constable.

2523. The thing I want you to explain about that is this, the first time I find anything about that is in your report?—Yes.

2524. Which is made after the case had been heard?—Yes.

2525. You asked him to give it up?—Yes.

2526. Is that all that took place about it, so far as you were concerned?—That is all.

2527. Do you mean you merely said to him he was to give it up?—I said, "Why don't you give the stick to the constable?" or some words to that effect. Wallington had already asked him for it twice.

Inspector Berry.

30 July 1906.

2528. You have said that you could not swear that he heard you?—I could not swear that Dr. Gerothwohl heard me.

2529. You said he was flourishing the stick about? Yes.

2530. And the constable asked him for it. "It was rather dangerous for a man in his condition, I thought, to retain it, so I stood by him while he took it. (Q.) Which constable was it who took it? (A.) 6 C R. (Q.) That is Wallington? (A.) Yes, he asked him for it. He said he would not give it up, and he held it in the middle, and in trying to get it away Wallington put one hand on one side and one on the other, thinking he would let go, but as he did not the stick broke in the middle." That is your account that you gave to us on the last occasion of what took place?—Yes.

2531. You observe you told us before that you were standing by Dr. Gerothwohl while the police constable was taking it away, but you do not say a word about having spoken to him about it?—No, I do not think I did. In fact, according to what you have read, I did not say so. It is quite true, though.

2532. But you were telling us the whole story. It would not be right to say you were endeavouring to persuade him to give it up, would it?—I should say it would.

2533. You think it would?—Yes.

2534. Why did you not tell us that when you told us your story on the last occasion? It was a very important matter, so far as this incident of the stick goes, because a great deal has been made of it, and it has been referred to a great many times, and you yourself were telling us the whole story. The fact that you stood by and endeavoured to persuade him to give it up would be a very important element in the matter. Why have you not ever said that before?—I suppose it escaped my memory last week. That is all—that is the only reason I can give. It is a perfectly honest mistake, I can assure you.

2535. You mean it had occurred to you when you wrote the report, but you forgot it when on the last occasion you were giving evidence?—Yes, that is the only explanation I can offer.

2536. You seem to have remembered it pretty fairly well when you were giving your report?—There has been rather a long interval between that and now.

2537. Have you seen your report since you wrote it?—No, I do not think I have.

2538. The report would be written on the 13th April?—I could not swear to the date.

2539. But that is the date upon it. Have you never seen it since?—I do not remember having done so.

2540. When your men make reports—for instance, Isaacson and Wallington and Divers—do they have to submit them to you?—Not to me personally in this case.

2541. Did you see them?—No, I do not think I did. I do not remember seeing them—not to read them, anyhow.

2542. You knew they were making reports?—Oh, yes.

2543. You knew a charge had been formulated to the Home Secretary, and that reports were called for?—Yes, I know that.

2544. And you knew that the police constables had to make reports?—Yes.

2545. Who would see those reports before they were sent in?—The Sub-Divisional Inspector, the superior officer to me.

2546. He countersigns it?—Yes.

2547. That would not be you?—No.

2548. Let me go back for a moment to the question of the symptoms we were upon. There was nothing really the matter with their speech, was there?—There seemed to be a thickness in the speech.

2549. You say there seemed to be, but I suppose it was a sort of thickness that you may possibly find with men who were very excited and thinking they were improperly charged?—Not in my experience.

2550. You think the sort of thickness of speech you found was inconsistent with that?—Yes, I do. It is generally associated with men who are in a state of intoxication.

2551. It was not sufficiently distinct for you to be able to say that it was quite impossible for them to be sober with the thickness of speech that you heard, was it?—I should say it was.

2552. All the excitement would not account for the state of speech?—It may have partly accounted for it, but to a very small degree.

2553. But the thickness itself was a very small degree?—It was not very pronounced, but it was enough to notice it.

2554. You told me it would be partly accounted for by the excitement, and a very small degree of thickness of speech might more easily be accounted for by a very great degree of excitement, might it not?—It may have been.

2555. You told us something about their eyes?—Yes.

2556. Apparently, as everybody seems to agree, in the state of great excitement which they were in I suppose their eyes were bright and flashy?—I do not know about flashy, but a glassy appearance.

2557. That is a matter I want you to explain. In your opinion their eyes had a glassy appearance?—That is the best way I can describe it.

2558. Does not that seem to you quite inconsistent with the story you have been telling us about the state of excitement in which they were, and what they were saying?—In what way?

2559. You say their eyes had a glassy appearance. Apparently they were very excited and were protesting against being arrested. Do you think they would still maintain the glassy appearance of the eye?—Yes.

2560. Did you attribute importance to that symptom?—Taking it in conjunction with the others, I did.

2561. Have you ever said that before you told us that the other day?—Said what?

2562. That their eyes had a glassy appearance. Have you ever said it before. One of the questions was whether they were drunk, and you told us on the last occasion that their eyes had a glassy appearance. What I want to know from you is have you ever said that before. You had been asked for their symptoms at the police court, and you have given a report as to the condition in which you found them, and their symptoms. Have you ever said that their eyes had a glassy appearance?—No, I do not think I have. I may say that I was not asked for the symptoms at the police court.

2563. Were you not? You were cross-examined, and you said they were drunk. Then you were asked why do you say they were drunk, and you say because they were excited, and you say not only that, but because also of their wild behaviour, and they smelt of drink. You were asked in detail about it?—Yes, I was.

2564. According to you the eyes having a glassy appearance would be an important element, would it not? That would assist you, and if you found a man smelling of drink and his eyes had a glassy appearance, you might come to the conclusion that he was drunk?—Yes.

2565. Do you mean to tell us that in the condition in which they were, and in the protests which they were making at the time, that you noticed that their eyes had a glassy appearance?—Yes.

2566. I should like to know why you have never mentioned that before. Had it slipped your memory?—That is the only explanation I can give.

2567. The only explanation that you can give to me is that it slipped your memory?—Yes, that is all.

2568. But you see these men were arrested, and the police court proceedings took place in April, and you made a report on the 13th April. Your memory would be a great deal fresher then than it would be now, would it not?—Yes, it would have been in the ordinary way.

2569. How is it that in the interval of time when you were giving your evidence the last time for the first time you remember their eyes had a glassy appearance?—I remembered it all along, but I did not state so probably. In my report I did not go into the symptoms.

2570. If you remembered it all along why did you not say so. I thought you told me you had not remembered it. Why did you not say so before, if you remembered it?—I cannot say.

2571. I can understand you saying that you did not remember it, but I cannot understand why, if you did remember it you should not have said so?—When—on the last occasion when I gave my evidence, do you mean?

2572. No. You told us about it then, but on the last occasion when you were giving evidence in the police court and on the occasion also when you made the report—particularly when you were giving evidence at the police court. I think you are justified in saying you were not asked for particular symptoms in the report, but you were cross-examined at the police court, and you were asked for what reasons you said they were drunk, and I do not understand, if you recollected at that time that their eyes had a glassy appearance, why you should not have said so. Does it not strike you as the strongest symptom you could get?—Not the strongest.

2573. As strong as any other?—Probably so.

2574. You did not recollect it?—No, I did not.

2575. Will you tell me what has assisted you to recollect it on the last occasion?—Nothing that I am aware of.

2576. You understood, did you not, from the very first—I rather think it follows from your evidence—that they were protesting from the moment that they could speak to you against having been arrested?—Against where they were arrested.

2577. Not only against where they were arrested, but against having been arrested?—Yes, I took it to be that.

2578. Their contention was that they had not been disorderly in any way and that they had been wrongly arrested?—I did not take it to mean that.

2579. You mean you thought they were not protesting against being charged with being disorderly?—No, I did not.

2580. You did not think that?—No.

2581. Did you think they were making no protest against the charge then?—In a way, of course.

2582. In a way?—Yes.

2583. What other way was there than to give speech to it?—That is the only way they would have if it comes to that.

2584. In the only way they had of protesting they did protest?—I suppose it would amount to that.

2585. You understood it was because you have told us here to-day that they protested, and not to waste time over this, inspector, did you not quite understand from the protest they made and repeated, that their point was that they were wrongly arrested, and they had come to the police station in order to give evidence on behalf of Timmings?—Yes.

2586. And that therefore they were disputing the charge of being drunk and disorderly?—I did not look upon it in that light.

2587. I do not understand that. Do you mean you did not look upon it in that light then?—No, I did not.

2588. I wish you would explain what you mean as to that. You told us that the moment they were in the dock they protested against having been arrested and where they were arrested, and they also said they had come to speak on behalf of Timmings. You understood that as a protest against being charged with any misconduct, did you not?—I understood they were protesting against being brought there.

2589. The only thing for which they were being brought there was for being drunk and disorderly? Yes.

2590. You understood they were protesting against being brought there for being drunk and disorderly?—At that time they did not know what the charge was.

2591. Whatever the charge was, they were protesting against it?—Yes.

2592. It would not matter very much what the charge was, because they were protesting against it from the first. You understood that?—Yes.

2593. To make it quite plain—it is quite plain, is it not?—you realised that from the first moment they were in the dock until the end that they were saying that they were wrongly accused of this offence?—Yes, it would amount to that.

2594. If that is the case, I should like to know what you mean by saying that you did not understand, as you told us on the last occasion, that they were protesting that they were not under the influence of drink. Is not that a mistake on your part? Let me read you what you said?—As regards the drunkenness, I do not understand they made any protest from beginning to end.

2595. I follow what you mean as to that, or I think I do. Do you mean that they never said to you that they were not drunk?—That is so.

2596. But do you not understand from the whole of what was taking place that they were saying they were not drunk or disorderly?—No.

2597. You told me just now you said they were protesting that they were not guilty of the offence with which they were accused?—Yes.

2598. The offence with which they were charged was being drunk and disorderly?—Yes.

2599. What part of it did you think they were protesting against?—The particular place at which they were arrested.

2600. What had that to do with the offence?—Really nothing, if they had committed the offence.

2601. You understood that they were protesting that they had committed no offence, so that the place of arrest did not help you upon that?—No.

2602. What part of the offence was it that you think they had not committed, or that you thought their protest went to? Did you understand that they were complaining that they had not been disorderly?—Not altogether.

2603. You understood that their protest went to that, did you not?—I thought it was the place of arrest they were protesting about, and as to whether they were arrested at the time they committed the offence, or on their way to the station.

2604. What difference does it make to a man if he has committed the offence whether he is arrested at one place or another?—It would not make any difference.

2605. Then what is the good of his protesting?—Nothing.

2606. You have told us that you understood that they were protesting that they were not guilty of the offence with which they were accused. Is that right or wrong? I do not want you to make any mistake about it?—I suppose it would amount to a protest in one way, but, of course, they had not been charged.

2607. I understand that they had not been charged, but before they were charged, the moment they got to the station, they made this protest, from which you understood that they were saying that they had done nothing wrong?—That is so.

2608. Then afterwards they are charged with being drunk and disorderly, and there had been a good deal of excitement and protest made by them a good many times, and then they were taken to the cells. Had anything happened in the meanwhile which in the slightest degree affected their denial of having committed the offence?—Only the fact of their not denying the charge when it was read over to them.

2609. That is the point to which you attributed importance apparently?—I did, sir.

2610. I want to understand what you understand by that. Supposing a man is charged with being drunk and disorderly, and he says half a dozen times before the charge is read over to him that he protests and denies the charge, and then when the charge is read over to him he does not repeat his denial, is it not quite plain you understand that he is denying the charge?—If he really denies being drunk we call the doctor before he is charged.

Inspector Berry.

30 July 1906.

2611. You said just now that no charge had been made?—The charge had not been read.

2612. I rather understood you to say that no charge had been made when they were in the station?—No charge had been read to them. The constables had stated what the charge was.

2613. When they came in?—After the men had got in the dock. The constable says whatever the charge is—drunk and disorderly, for instance—and then he goes into the circumstances of the case as to what happened in the street.

2614. But according to the constable's evidence he had told Dr. Gerothwohl what he was arrested for—for being drunk and disorderly when he arrested him in Piccadilly?—Yes, that is the usual course.

2615. So he would know very well what the charge was?—It is for my information that he says that.

2616. When a man is arrested the usual course would be to tell him what he is arrested for?—Yes.

2617. So that the moment he comes and makes a protest to you you would expect it to be a protest in respect of the charge which he has been told he has been arrested for?—Practically so.

2618. He had been told he had been arrested for being drunk and disorderly, and he protested directly he came in to you in the words which you have described?—Yes.

2619. So that he knew what the charge was, and you knew that he knew it?—I could not say then that he knew for certain.

2620. I thought you told us that would be the practice?—It would be the practice, but I do not say it is always followed out.

2621. But that is what you would expect?—I should expect it in most cases.

2622. I want to understand this about the protest. First of all will you tell me, as an inspector, do you think it right under the circumstances that we have heard, and which you have told us of, for these three policemen to have made reports in which they say not one word about the protest which Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette had made at the police station. I am not seeking to make you responsible for it, but I want your view?—I think they ought to have stated it.

2623. So I should have thought. The three of them, Isaacson, Wallington and Divers, were called upon to report as to what had taken place on that night within a day or two of the occurrence?—Yes.

2624. Each one of them makes a report, and not one of them mentions the fact that Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette had protested against being brought to the station and against their arrest?—Yes.

2625. You agree that that was wrong, do you?—It does not seem quite correct in my idea.

2626. It would not convey a true impression to the superior?—No, not altogether; not a correct one.

2627. We are concerned with seeing that the report is correct. I do not quite understand the explanation of that. Do you know any explanation of that?—Of what?

2628. Of why the constables did not state what appears to be the very plain fact that when these men were arrested and when they were at the police station, they protested that they had come there to give evidence in favour of Timmings?—I cannot give any reason for it at all.

2629. As far as you are concerned it seems to your mind quite unaccountable?—It is.

2630. If they were going to give a correct account of what had happened, it would be plain, would it not, that that was one of the most important statements that they would have to report?—Yes, I should say it would.

2631. But you now know that it is left out of each one of the reports?—I cannot say for certain.

2632. Have you not seen the reports?—No.

2633. You can take it from me that it is so. The result of the protest which they had been making was that you knew they were saying they were not guilty of the offence with which they were charged as you have now told me. Why were they not offered the services of the Divisional Surgeon?—I did not take it all through that they were denying being really drunk. That is the only time we call the Divisional Surgeon in, when they actually dispute being drunk.

2634. You use the expression that they were denying being really drunk?—I mean denying being drunk at all. There was no actual denial of their being drunk.

2635. Did not Dr. Gerothwohl ask you whether you really believed he was drunk?—He did not.

2636. Just let me call your attention to your report upon this matter. "They made"—that is the three prisoners—"no reply whatever when I read the charge to them. They did not deny being drunk or ask to see a doctor." Then before that, it is only fair to you to say that you do make the statement at the beginning of your report that they had protested. Yours is the only report in which I find that?—I stated what they said. I gave that evidence at the police court.

2637. Certainly, and you put it in your report undoubtedly?—Yes.

2638. You still make this observation with reference to it which would suggest that they were not disputing the charge. I do not want to press you hard on this because, as I follow, you had made that statement already about the protest that they had made when they were brought into the dock, and you mean this statement to be what occurred after the charge was read over to them?—That is so distinctly.

2639. Very shortly after that they asked to see a doctor?—Some time after that—about an hour afterwards. They did not ask me, I may say.

2640. Just think a moment about that. You say it was about an hour afterwards. I would like you to think about that before you say that. Are you sure that that is right?—No, I will not be positive, because they did not ask me.

2641. They were brought into the station, and they were arrested somewhere about 12.15?—They were brought to the station at 12.15.

2642. Then there was a scene of some excitement which lasted some little time. How long do you think?—While they were being charged do you mean and taking their names down?

2643. Yes?—Probably altogether five minutes.

2644. Not more than that?—It may have been a minute more; I could not say for certain.

2645. Is that all?—It would be very little longer, if anything.

2646. There would not be much time for much inquiry if that is all that took place?—All the officers were on the spot, and I merely had to ask them there.

2647. You merely put the question to them?—That is so.

2648. Am I right in this, that at 12.45 they asked to see the doctor?—I would not swear you are right or wrong as to the time. They did not ask me, and I did not take particular note of the time.

2649. But, of course, the question of asking to see a doctor would be an important element. If they were disputing that they were drunk, that was the only way in which they could prove it?—Yes.

2650. Let me read your own report with reference to this: "At 12.45 a.m. Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette requested that Dr. Stewart, of Redcliffe Gardens, South Kensington, should be sent for to come and see them"?—Yes.

2651. 12.45 a.m. is your own time?—That is a report I made six days afterwards, and since then I have had nothing to fix it.

2652. I am not complaining of your not recollecting the time. What you remembered then would be much more likely to be right?—I should say so. Although I say that they asked, I do not mean that they asked me.

2653. I am not suggesting that they did. It is the time that I want. Then what I want to understand is this. At 12.45 you got the request that Dr. Stewart should be sent for. Why is that only forwarded at half-past one?—There is very often some difficulty in getting into communication with that particular station. You have to go from one station to another to get connected.

2654. How do you do it—by telephone?—We have the telephone and the A.B.C. instrument.

2655. This is the message which has been produced in writing, but it is a telephone message, I understand?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes, it was a telephone message.

2656. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Forwarded from Vine Street at 1.15. Why was it you had this interval of half an hour between the request and the sending of the telephone message?—That is the only explanation, and that is the true one, that there was some difficulty in getting connected with that particular station. It is rather a busy time at night, and there is only one line.

2657. Were there many charges that night?—During the whole of the night do you mean?

2658. Yes?—I think to the best of my recollection I had 17 from half-past 10 to about 1 o'clock in the morning. When I say 17 charges there was more than one prisoner in some of the charges.

2659. Now about another matter. You saw the prisoners searched?—I did not see the men actually put their hands in all their pockets. I probably saw the men at them.

2660. Not in all their pockets, but there can be no mistake when an inspector says he saw the prisoners searched?—I think I used the word "practically," in my last evidence. I would not be certain.

2661. I will refer to your evidence in a moment, but what do you mean by saying you saw them practically searched?—As they were brought out of the dock the constable went through the usual procedure, or apparently so. They go to the prisoners, and feel about them, and see if they have any knife or revolver. What I mean is, I did not stand over each man.

2662. No, but you saw them go through the operation of searching?—Apparently so.

2663. You put it very definitely at Question 2322 on the last occasion. You were asked by Dr. Gerothwohl: "Did you see us searched?" and you said "Yes." Then you were asked: "Who searched me? (A.) P.C. 6. (Q.) P.C. 6 searched me?" and you say "Yes." Then you were asked: "In what way?" and you answer: "I am not sure whether he put his hands in your pockets or not. (Q.) He may have done? (A.) He may have done."—That is what I mean now.

2664. That is very definite that you saw them searched, which means to feel all over them, and you are not quite sure whether the constable put his hands in Dr. Gerothwohl's pockets?—That is what I mean.

2665. You are quite clear about that—that you saw that happen?—As I say, I saw them there. I would not swear to every detail in that respect, but they were apparently going through the usual operation of being searched.

2666. Let me see whether this is correct. If that is the case it cannot be correct, according to your recollection, to say that he was not searched, but he was asked to give up his knife and matches?—No, that cannot be absolutely correct.

2667. That is not correct?—Not absolutely correct.

2668. Not absolutely correct. As I follow it, according to the statement which you have made, it was absolutely incorrect?—(No answer.)

2669. It is, according to your recollection, actually incorrect?—If they were to state definitely they were not searched I should say it was not correct.

2670. What I am calling your attention to is not Dr. Gerothwohl's evidence, but to Police Constable Wallington's?—Yes, I heard him say so.

2671. Were you in court when he said it?—When he was questioned about the searching.

2672. According to your recollection, his evidence with regard to that is not correct?—When he makes a definite statement to the effect that they were not searched it is not absolutely correct.

2673. I call this a definite statement: "I did not search him—I did not search you as far as I know"?—As far as he knows—he adds that to it. Whether he is uncertain on the matter, or whether he did not take it so, I do not know. He probably thought you meant he was inflicting some indignity on him.

2674. No, because he is asked the question again and again, and what he says is he put the question to him whether he would give up his knife and matches. That does not agree with your recollection, as I understand it?—Not in detail.

2675. I do not care very much about the details, but it does not agree in substance. According to your recollection they were searched, and according to the police constable's recollection they were not searched. They cannot both be right?—No, they cannot both be right. They are directly opposite.

2676. There is another matter to which I must call your attention. When Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette left the police station did you smell their breath again?—I did not see them go out of the station.

2677. But at the time they were going to be discharged on their own recognisances?—I did at the trap door of the cell in which they were both confined.

2678. I want to call your attention to what you said at the police court with reference to this, which appears to differ from what you said here, and I want you to give us an explanation, if you can, of it. At the police court you said you could not say when they left whether there were any signs of after effects. Do you remember that?—I think I do remember saying something to that effect.

2679. I will read what you said to bring it to your recollection: "Had they any indication of drink on them when they left?— (A.) No, I could not say they had. (Q.) Did their breath smell? (A.) I could not say; I did not get close enough to them. (Q.) You did not notice any indication of drink when they left? (A.) I did not notice it: I did not get close enough to them. I saw them leave the station. I did not bail them out"?—"About to leave the station," I think that should be. I did not actually see them going out of the doors.

2680. In your evidence here you said this, and it is all that I want to call your attention to. It is rather different from this, as I read it. You were asked the question on the last occasion, and you say this at 2374: "You seemed to have the after effects of drink about you." At the police court you say you did not see any, and you did not notice. Which of those statements is correct?—The only detail I noticed is what I say, that I smelt their breath at the trap door when I told them about the doctor.

2681. The trap door interview is long before they left?—Only a few minutes.

2682. You mean on the occasion when they were brought up to see the divisional surgeon?—Yes.

2683. That is not quite the question you were asked. You were asked this: "When we were leaving you say we were perfectly sober?" and you say "I did not use the adjective." That is after they had been examined, and after you had taken their own recognisances?—Excuse me, I did not take their own recognisances. It was another inspector.

2684. I do not mean you personally, but I mean at the police station. I want you to say on that explanation what the apparent discrepancy is between the two statements. Then you were asked by Dr. Gerothwohl, "Had we any indication of drink on us?" and you say, "Yes, you seemed to have the after-effects of drink about you." At the police court you were asked the same question, "Had they any indication of drink on them when they left?" and you said then "No, I cannot say they had." You say on this occasion that you noticed their breath, and that they smelt faintly of some drink when they left. Do you remember saying that?—What I meant by "when they left" was when they were about to leave the cells.

2685. When they were coming up to be examined by the divisional surgeon?—Yes, I brought them up myself. There is a trap door in the cell door, and when I went to speak to them that is when I noticed it.

2686. The question that is put to you is, "When we were leaving you say we were perfectly sober"—there is no doubt about that. That is not as to what happened in the cell. "When we were leaving"—that is referring to what you said at the police court?—

Inspector Berry.

30 July 1906.

They were about to leave then, because I immediately opened the door and let them out.

2687. Then they had to be examined by the Divisional Surgeon?—Yes.

2688. And it depended on the result of his examination as to whether you let them go or not?—As to whether they were let go.

2689. They were not leaving the police station, were they. It depended on the Divisional Surgeon's view, did it not?—It would to a great extent.

2690. As I understand, what happens is, if a man is drunk you do not let him go?—No.

2691. If he has been drunk, but is sufficiently sober to take care of himself, you do let him go?—Yes.

2692. They were brought up to the Divisional Surgeon, who was to say what their condition was?—Yes.

2693. It was after that that you came to the conclusion, after what he said, that they ought to be let out on their own recognisances?—I could see myself that they were ready to go then.

2694. When you saw them down in the cells?—Yes, because that is why the other inspector got on with the bail.

2695. That is your explanation of these two apparent discrepancies.

2696. (Mr. Dickinson.) When you were taking the names down, I understood you to say the other day that you copied the names from the cards?—From the two cards.

2697. That was after the struggle with reference to the stick?—Yes.

2698. Did you see Dr. Gerothwohl offer you his card before that?—Yes, I did; it was the same card that he was offering.

2699. He was offering his card to you the whole time?—Yes.

2700. Why did you not take his card the moment he offered it to you?—I, myself, was too far away to take it. It was taken within a very few seconds after, and the constable handed it over to me. He apparently did not want the constable to handle it. He wanted to give it to me himself. As a matter of fact, I was too far away, and if he had given it to the constable it would have been taken much sooner.

2701. If a man is brought into the police station and offers you his card, does it not occur to you the first thing to do is to look at his name and see who he is?—Not if he was brought in a prisoner—not in every case.

2702. Why not?—I do not see that it has any bearing on the case.

2703. Surely it is important for you to know who the prisoner is if he has a card?—No, it is not important. We decide as to whether to take the charge or not on the evidence, and not on the question of who the people are. What I mean is, we should be impartial.

2704. But this man was coming, as you have said, making a protest that he was wrongly arrested?—He says so.

2705. Does it not seem to you the proper thing would have been to at once have seen who this man was who was offering you his card?—I did, sir, within a very short period.

2706. "As the prisoner was coming in," you said on the last occasion, when you were asked whether you were standing at the door, "I was just going to the door and I heard a prisoner coming in and then I stopped"?—"Got to the door," I think I said.

2707. "I was just going to the door"; that is what you said. At the police court, as you know, you said there was such a commotion that you went out to see what it was. Did you or did you not go towards the door?—Not the outer door.

2708. What door are you speaking of?—The door leading from the charge room into the inspector's room.

2709. That would not have taken you out to see what the commotion was?—Not outside the station.

2710. What do you mean by saying "There was such a commotion that I went out to see what it was"?—I had just got to the door of the inspector's office. To say I went back would be a more correct term to use.

2711. Let me understand that. You say you went back?—That would be a more correct term.

2712. Back to where. I have not seen the room, but there is a door coming from the street, I understand?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) We have a plan here (producing a plan which was explained to the Commissioners by the Witness.)

2713. (Mr. Dickinson.) Where were you when Timmings was brought in?—At this door here in the inspector's office (pointing on the plan.)

2715. You came back from that doorway in order to go out of that doorway, because you heard there was a commotion?—No.

2716. What do you mean by saying "There was such a commotion I went out to see what it was"?—It is the usual commotion when a charge is brought in. I naturally concluded it was a charge, and I went out with the anticipation of taking the charge.

2717. But you were in the charge room, according to your statement?—I was in the doorway. It is neither one nor yet the other. Had nothing happened I should have gone into the office.

2718. Instead of that you came out into the charge room again?—I was in the doorway. It is rather a fine point perhaps.

2719. At that moment do I understand that Timmings was already in the dock?—No.

2720. Where were you when Timmings came in?—Just here; just about this corner (pointing on the plan.)

2721. He was brought into the dock near you?—No. Usually when a prisoner is brought in he is put down on that seat right over here, but as I was prepared to take the charge, if there was one, as he got across here I said, "Put him in the dock," so that it took that less time for me to get partly over here, in the usual way, and put him back in the dock.

2722. Then what happened after that? Where were you when the others were brought in?—I sat here (pointing on the plan).

2723. They were also placed in the dock?—Yes.

2724. Did Timmings say anything at all?—Not beyond giving his name and address.

2725. Did he say he did not know these gentlemen?—No, he said that at the police court.

2726. At that time he said nothing at all?—At that time he said nothing at all beyond giving his name and address, and the usual particulars—his occupation, and so on.

2727. Do you take any steps to find out whether a man like Timmings is drunk or not?—No, not if he does not deny it, and apparently is drunk. If we had any doubt in our own minds we should call the doctor as well.

2728. Was the doctor there at that moment?—He was on the premises.

2729. He was not in the room?—Not in the charge room.

2730. When did you make this report that was sent in to the Home Office. I see it is dated 15th April?—If it is dated that date I should make it out on that day.

2731. Under what circumstances did you make that report. Where did you make it?—At the station, in the desk.

2732. All the other reports are dated the same day?—I could not say. I have not seen them. I suppose that would be the natural course.

2733. Were they made in the station?—I suppose they would be, but not in the inspector's office. I made mine in the inspector's office, but the men would not be allowed to come in there to make their reports.

2734. What is the system adopted with regard to these reports? Here are three constables instructed to make reports of a particular case, and yourself?—Yes.

2735. Who conveys that instruction to the constables?—I did not in this case. It differs with each case. If I had a case to deal with I should instruct them to make out the report, but the sub-divisional inspector had to deal with this, and I suppose he directed them in the usual way.

2736. How would they make the report that they were instructed to make. Would they come to the office and write it out themselves?—No, not in the office. That is the inspector's office, and they would not be allowed to go there. They would be given a report and told to make it out.

2737. They would make it out in their own writing?—Oh, yes.

2738. There is no system of taking down reports by a shorthand writer?—No.

2739. All these reports are in their own writing, we assume?—Yes, they always are. I can answer for that.

2740. Did you have any communication with the police constables between the hearing on the 9th and the hearing on the 11th?—No.

2741. Were you prepared to be called on the 9th? You were not, as a matter of fact, called on the 9th?—No, I was not there on the 9th.

2742. Were you prepared to be called on the 9th?—I was not at the police court at all.

2743. Who instructed you to appear at the police court on the 11th?—Mr. Denman, the magistrate—not him personally, but the direction came from him to Dr. Mitchell and myself.

2744. Who did those instructions come through?—I think it was the inspector on duty in the police court when this case was heard. I would not be certain, but that would be the usual procedure for the inspector on duty at the police court to convey the instructions of the magistrate.

2745. Were they conveyed to you in writing, or how?—Verbally.

2746. You had instructions?—Yes.

2747. Who was it sent the instructions?—I could not say myself who the person was, but in the usual way it would be the inspector on duty at the police court.

2748. You cannot remember who sent them?—No, not distinctly.

2749. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) You knew nothing about this matter until the men were brought into the charge room?—Nothing whatever.

2750. You have been asked about something that appears in the shorthand notes about your saying that you heard a commotion. Have you any recollection of having used those words before the magistrate? Do you remember the word "commotion"?—I have no distinct recollection, but it is a long time ago.

2751. It is not in the magistrate's note. However, we will try and clear that up. At any rate, did you hear anything unusual on that occasion?—Nothing unusual in the charge being brought in and the noise in Piccadilly on such nights.

2752. There was a noise in Piccadilly—you heard that?—Yes.

2753. Was that audible from the station?—Yes, quite.

2754. Was there any other noise that you heard except such as is usual when a number of police come in bringing prisoners?—No, none whatever.

2755. Did you change your direction, and come into the room because you anticipated a charge was being brought in?—Yes. I have already explained that, or endeavoured to do so.

2756. When they came in, as I understand you, Mr. Lavalette and Dr. Gerothwohl began to protest?—Yes.

2757. I see in your report you say they protested because they said they were coming to the station to hand in their cards, and were arrested on the way there?—That is so.

2758. Did you understand that to be what I may call the gravamen of their complaint?—Yes.

2759. Did you investigate into that as soon as you could?—Yes, I asked the constables who were present.

2760. Were there any other means you could take except to ask the constables as to whether that statement was true or not?—No.

2761. Had you known these police constables for some time?—All three of them.

2762. Were they reliable men?—Yes, quite.

2763. From your previous experience, they were men whose opinion you could take?—Yes.

2764. Upon what conclusion did you come to as to whether these gentlemen's statements were reliable or not?—I came to the conclusion that they were not reliable.

2765. And did that fact influence you in forming a judgment as to whether they were under the influence of drink?—Yes.

2766. You have used the statement that you considered they were making wild statements?—I said "wild," but I think I corrected that afterwards, and said "serious."

2767-9. Unfounded?—Yes, unfounded.

2770. Would that be a matter that you would naturally take into consideration in considering whether these men were under the influence of drink?—Yes, from experience.

2771. With regard to other indications, I understand you to say their breath smelt, their faces were flushed, and they were very excited and their speech was thick?—Yes.

2772. Did you endeavour to form an honest judgment before taking this charge whether or not the charge was one that you ought to take or refuse?—I did. I took every available step that I could, in my judgment.

2773. And if you understood they were challenging the charge so far as it related to their being drunk should you have called in the divisional surgeon?—Most decidedly.

2774. (Chairman.) May I interpose a question here? I presume that when a man is in the dock in the position of a prisoner it is not your custom to ask him questions on those occasions?—Oh, no. I merely assure myself that he understands the charge.

2775. Do answer the question. It is not your custom to ask him questions?—It is not customary, beyond the fact of asking him whether he hears what the constable says.

2776. Would you call his attention to what the constable is saying?—Yes. The object is to see if he understands the charge that is being made against him, but beyond that we ask no other questions.

2777. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Except his name and address?—Of course.

2778. (Chairman.) Would you ever take a note of what is said before the charge is entered?—Not in writing—not in these cases. In cases of felony a note is taken.

2779. In a case of felony you give them some kind of caution, to the effect that what they say may be taken down and used in evidence against them?—Yes.

2780. But you do not do it in a case of a charge of being drunk and disorderly?—No.

2781. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) The regulation is this: "The officer on duty before receiving the charge is to ascertain that there is reasonable ground for preferring the complaint against the accused."?—Yes.

2782. Is that what you endeavour to do?—That is the ground I acted upon.

2783. Were there other charges coming in which had to be dealt with as soon as you had disposed of this one?—Yes, one came in while I was dealing with this.

2784. A word about the searching. What is the ordinary course that is followed with reference to searching prisoners of the class of these gentlemen?—If they cannot feel from the outside of their pockets whether they have a knife or a revolver or small bottles, they feel inside.

Inspector Berry.

30 July 1906.

2785. Is the practice always to feel outside a man's pocket?—And inside as well in most cases.

2786. Is it the practice always to feel outside?—Yes.

2787. Then do you also ask questions as to whether they have got money or a knife or matches?

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I think you ought to let the witness tell us this himself, because you are putting to him what the discrepancy is.

2788. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) What is the practice about searching?—As a rule in ordinary cases a constable might say, "Have you got a knife or matches," and then they assure themselves they have not, by either putting their hands right in their pockets, or very often they can feel from the outside quite distinctly whether a man has anything in his pockets or not, however small it might be.

2789. So that they would either feel outside or inside, or sometimes both?—Yes, that is so.

2790. Supposing a man is asked to turn out his knife and matches and does so, would there be a search by putting the hands in the pockets?—Oh yes, to make sure.

2791. Is that the ordinary course?—Yes.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I have got the original reports here with reference to what Mr. Dickinson said, and will hand them in (handing in reports). I do not know whether the inspector knows the constable's handwriting.

2792. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I want to call your attention to this. I asked you before whether you found them all three in the same stage of drunkenness, and there was some discussion about it. I want to call your attention to what you said at the police court according to the notes of the magistrate's clerk: "In my opinion all three were drunk. I should say from what I saw that all three were in the same stage of drunkenness." There is no doubt, is there, that you did say they were all in the same stage of drunkenness?—Probably so. There was not much difference, of course.

2793. I do not understand. You have told us to-day they were not in the same stage of drunkenness?—Not absolutely.

2794. That Timmings was worse than the other two?—Slightly.

2795. How came you to tell the magistrate that they were in the same stage of drunkenness?—I do not know. There was no serious difference.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) I think, sir, you are looking at the proof of this witness. It is in the same bundle as the evidence, but it is a proof taken for the purpose of this inquiry.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) It is not in the notes.

2796. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) This is a statement which you have made "relating to the arrest of the above named persons, Gerothwohl and Lavalette." That is a statement that you made then and a statement, I suppose, which you made to some superior?—To Mr. Muskett, the solicitor, I think.

2797. For the purpose of this inquiry. Let us take it according to the notes we have got, and I will take it that you did not say anything about the same stage of drunkenness. But you told us here you told somebody they were all three in the same state of drunkenness. That is not a statement on oath, but that appears to be inaccurate from what you have told us to-day?—Slightly; there was not such a lot of difference, and I did not think it necessary to make any distinction.

2798. There was sufficient difference for you to be able to say they were not all three in the same stage of drunkenness?—There was sufficient really in fact.

2799. I noticed in that statement that you enumerate the symptoms. You say they were thick in their speech, smelt strongly of drink, and their faces were flushed. They understood their position and talked rationally, although wildly and excitedly. You notice in that statement which you have made and which I suppose was a considered statement, that there are those words?—I hardly know what you mean.

2800. I will tell you what I am saying so that there may be no misapprehension. I suppose this statement was taken for the purpose of something like a report of what you were going to say?—I presume so.

2801. And which was given to Mr. Muskett for the purpose of this case?—I really cannot say about the details of how it was obtained. I was under the impression that Mr. Muskett took it from us.

2802. Do you know how long ago it was taken?—Five or six weeks ago.

2803. I suppose it was for the purpose of this inquiry?—I believe so.

2804. Therefore I suppose you would carefully consider what you were going to say before you made this statement in writing?—I did not make that statement.

2805. Was it not taken down in writing as what you were saying?—I believe it was. I am not altogether certain on that point. It must have been.

2806. I want to ascertain what your recollection was at that date. These words which I read just now as to the flushing and so on were taken down from you, and I only want to call your attention to this—that there is not a word in that about the eyes being of glassy appearance. That is when you made the statement, five or six weeks ago?—Yes.

2807. There is only one thing more I must ask you about this statement. You gave an account in that of the stick episode?—Yes.

2808. And there is not a word in that that I can find about your having endeavoured to persuade Dr. Gerothwohl to give up the stick?—There should be. Did I not say that I asked him?

2809. No, you did not. Listen to what you say in the statement: "Dr. Gerothwohl is a big man; he had a cane in his hand, which he flourished. P.C. Wallington asked him for this cane, but Dr. Gerothwohl declined to give it up, and in the struggle which ensued between him and P.C. Wallington the cane was broken. It was a flimsy kind of cane, and was held by Dr. Gerothwohl in the middle, and the police constable caught hold of it on either side with his hands. Both he and Lavalette were very excited." There is not a word in that about your having persuaded him to give up the stick?—No, I see there is not; it is a fact, nevertheless.

2810. I want to know why it was that five or six weeks ago you did not recollect about asking him to give up the stick?—I think you will find that in my report.

2811. That is the report of the 13th April?—Yes, that is so; that is the only report I made.

2812. You did not remember it when you were giving this statement?—I suppose that would account for it.

(Mr. Dickinson.) Are we going to have Inspector Mackay and Superintendent Mann?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) They are here.

(Chairman.) What evidence do you propose to call now?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) On the last occasion a letter was handed to Mr. Rufus Isaacs from Dr. Stewart, and I understood there was some statement in that with reference to what the police at Chelsea had said to him. I have got all the witnesses from Chelsea here, but I have not had an opportunity of seeing the witnesses. If no importance is attached to it, we do not want to call them.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I do not know whether the Chairman or any of the other Commissioners would attribute any importance to it, but, speaking for myself, I do not, because all it came to was that they were foreigners. That is the only point that was made about it.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I have the whole explanation, and I am prepared to give it.

(Chairman.) I attach personally no importance to that. I do not think you need go into it. Before we adjourn, may I ask what other witnesses you propose to take?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) With reference to this case?

(Chairman.) Yes.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I propose to call Major Woodhouse, Inspector Mackay, and Superintendent Mann, if any questions are desired to be asked of them, and then there is Sub-divisional Inspector Smith, and I think those are all the witnesses.

(Chairman.) Are you going to call Dr. Mitchell?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes, certainly. I should like to make an application with regard to these witnesses, because there is another case you said was to be taken to-day, and I have brought two witnesses over from Paris, as I thought probably they would be reached. There is one most important witness whom I would ask should be allowed to give her evidence to-day, because we may have a difficulty in bringing her over again. I do not know what time you propose to adjourn to, but I would ask that you should take the evidence of that witness, at any rate, before you adjourn for the day.

(Chairman.) There is no difficulty about that. I will now ask the Secretary to call Eva d'Angely and Rene d'Angely. Inspector Berry. 30 July 1906.

The Secretary called upon Eva d'Angely, but there was no response.

(The Secretary.) Let her be called outside.

The Officer. [having called her] There is no answer.

The Secretary then called upon Rene d'Angely, and there was no response.

(The Secretary.) Let him be called outside.

The Officer. [having called him] There is no answer.

Major Edwin Frederick Wodehouse; sworn.

2813. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I think you are one of the three Assistant Commissioners of Police, are you not?—Yes. Major E. F. Wodehouse.

2814. On Saturday 7th April—Boatrace night—did you desire to see for yourself what the condition of the streets was?—I did.

2815. I think you left home at 11.45 and went to Piccadilly and in that neighbourhood?—Yes.

2816. I need not go through what happened. Afterwards, about 12.45, did you go to Vine Street Police Station?—Yes.

2817. What was your object in going there?—In order to see generally that the Orders and Regulations were being properly carried out.

2818. Is it your practice to do that from time to time?—Occasionally.

2819. I think you went to Vine Street about 12.45—is that so?—I believe so. I think that was about the time.

2820. I think you went into the charge room?—Yes.

2821. Did you find everything at the station at that time, so for as you could see, in order?—Perfectly in order.

2822. I think later from the charge room you desired to see the cells, and you went down to see the cells?—Yes.

2823. Who accompanied you?—Sub-divisional Inspector Smith and Superintendent Mann—I think he accompanied us. He was there, certainly, later.

2824. Did you go from cell to cell?—I went from cell to cell.

2825. To each one? Did you speak to the persons inside or did the Sub-divisional Inspector?—The Sub-divisional Inspector spoke.

2826. You overheard what took place?—Yes.

2827. I think the last cell you visited was the one in which Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette were?—Yes, I think they were in the last cell.

2828. Is there a communication shutter in the door of the cell?—Yes.

2829. Was that open and did the Sub-divisional Inspector speak to Dr. Gerothwohl through this opening?—Yes.

2830. Will you first tell the Commissioners what you recollect took place?—My recollection is that on the trap door being opened one of the inmates of the cell (I could not say positively which it was, but I believe it was Dr. Gerothwohl) made a request for notepaper to write to his doctor. The Sub-divisional Inspector told him that the best way to communicate with his doctor would be by a Police telegram. Before that, I think, he was asked what he wanted his doctor for, and I think that was the reply made by the Inspector, and on ascertaining that he wanted his doctor to speak as to his condition, the Inspector told him, as I have said, that the better way would be to communicate by a Police telegram.

2831. Did the person who was making the inquiry appear satisfied with that?—I understood him to be perfectly satisfied. Of course, a good deal of conversation passed.

2832. Did you hear the inmate of the cell (we know it was Dr. Gerothwohl) mention any other person's name besides that of the doctor, or refer to any other name?—I think he did. I think he referred to some friend.

2833. What took place between the Inspector and himself about the friend?—He alluded to a friend with regard to bail, and it was pointed out to him that the doctor would bail him as well as anybody else, so that the one attendance, as it were, would satisfy both purposes.

2834. Did he appear satisfied with that?—I thought so.

2835. Then the conversation terminated and a telegram was sent?—A telegram was sent before I left the station.

2836. Or rather I think it was a telephone message?—It was a telephone message, as a matter of fact.

2837. Did the voice of the person in the cell strike you in any way?—There was nothing very marked about it, it was the voice of a person under excitement in some form.

2838. As the result of the conversation were you satisfied that the inmate was quite content if a Police telegram was sent for the doctor?—I was.

2839. If you had understood that he wanted anybody else should you have seen that the somebody else was sent for?—Yes. I should certainly have interfered.

2840. Was any reference made in that conversation to any previous request to see a doctor?—None, to the best of my recollection.

2841. (Dr. Gerothwohl): Are you quite sure with reference to the question of bail that I, the person speaking, did not make some reference with regard to bail in connection with Dr. Stewart?—I think you did.

2842. Then I mentioned that Dr. Stewart would bail me out?—It might have been you who made the suggestion. I am really uncertain on the point. The suggestion was made.

2843. You heard me also refer to another friend you said just now?—Yes.

2844. You do not recollect the name of that friend?—No, I do not.

2845. Do you recollect Inspector Smith asking me why I wanted that friend in addition to the other?—No, I do not remember that.

2846. You do not remember my saying, thereupon, "For private reasons, as they are people connected with my University," or some words to that effect?—I have a recollection or impression now that you recall it, but I cannot remember what it applied to.

2847. I should not have said that if the Inspector had not possibly hinted that it was unnecessary to send for two persons?—I could not say.

2848. Did you not hear me insist on the two being called?—No.

2849. Why was the other not called?—I conclude he was not called because the Sub-divisional Inspector arrived at the same conclusion as I did—that you did not insist upon it.

2850. Is it the habit to only call in one person when a man wishes to communicate with his friends?—No. I think there is no hard and fast rule laid down at all.

2851. You have heard of two being called?—As a matter of fact I have not.

Major E. F. Wodehouse.

30 July 1906.

2852. You have never heard of two persons being called?—Not to my knowledge, but I would not say that two have never been called 2853. Have you heard prisoners ask for it?—No; but I have not many opportunities.

2854. (Chairman.) I did not quite gather from you why you went to Vine Street Police Station on this evening?—It is a practice of mine on occasions when there is likely to be disorder. Very often on Bank Holiday nights, and that kind of thing, I look round the streets and visit a station here and there as the case may be. It is by no means a regular practice.

2855. Is it not a regular practice in the sense of being prescribed by any Regulation?—No.

2856. Is it a regular practice of your own in the sense that you may always be expected at Vine Street in the course of a boat-race night, for instance?—No, I certainly think not. They could not possibly expect me.

2857. Then it was a kind of surprise visit from a superior authority?—Yes, any visit I make must be a surprise visit unless I arrange it beforehand.

2858. Was the visit made on this occasion in consequence of anything that had recently come under your notice in connection with the discipline at Vine Street, or with the discipline of the C Division?—No, certainly not. It was made really in the ordinary way. Of course, a night like boat-race night is a good night for me to take an opportunity of seeing the working of the police.

2859. You mean the working of the whole of the system?—Yes; the working of the constables in the streets, and of the working of the officers in the station.

2860. To see whether the constables in the streets, that is, the constables who are on duty on the various patrols or beats, are doing their duty?—Yes.

2861. And whether the inspector in charge of the police station is doing his duty?—Yes.

2862. And whether the prisoners, if any, are being properly treated in the cells?—Yes.

2863. Did you conduct an inquiry in the usual way consequent on your visit on this occasion?—An inquiry into this matter?

2864. Yes?—No; it had nothing to do with my visit There was no inquiry as the result of my visit.

2865. You went, as I understand, to pay a surprise visit to this police station?—Yes.

2866. Did you on that occasion do what you usually do when you pay those visits?—Yes; that is to say, the principal object of my visit was to see that all was correct inside the station; in fact, that was the object of my visit to the station.

2867. The object of your visit was to see that all was correct?—Yes.

2868. Do you think, upon the statement you have now made to us, having regard to what you did, that you did all that was necessary in order to see whether all was correct?—I think so.

2869. Why did you not go into the cell in which Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette were confined?—I do not think that is part of my functions.

2870. I understand it was part of your functions to do all that was necessary to find out whether all was correct?—Yes; all that was necessary.

2871. Was the opening of the trap-door, and the conversation that took place between the inspector and the person unknown in the cell, a conversation that took place with a view to your enlightenment?—Not at all. I merely accompanied the Sub-divisional Inspector on his round.

2872. Do you think it possible that prisoners who had been charged with being drunk and disorderly, and who were in the cell, might think they had been unjustly accused of being drunk and disorderly?—It is quite possible, of course. I knew what the charge was. The charge is stated on a slate outside each cell.

2873. When you got to the last cell, did you look at the slate outside?—I think I did, or else probably the Sub-divisional Inspector said what the charge was. I do not remember which it was. But I had the opportunity, of course, of seeing it for myself.

2874. Were the names of the prisoners written on the slate?—I think they are as a rule. I am not certain.

2875. You cannot recollect whether that was so in this case?—No. The charge is always written, and I think the name is.

2876. Did it not occur to you that if it was your duty to find out whether all was correct, it would have been a reasonable thing to enter the cell and see whether the men were then drunk?—No. I think it would be altogether out of my province. It is not part of my duty at all. I could gather quite well any information I wanted from the conversation that passed.

2877. Do you suggest that it is not part of your duty to find out whether the charge had been made upon reasonable evidence by the Police arresting?—Not at that stage. They were then charged, and only a magistrate could deal with them. If I interfered at that stage I should usurp the functions of the magistrate.

2878. Is that quite so? There are regulations as to what constables are to do when men are arrested for being drunk and disorderly, and as to what is to take place at the police station?—Yes, but I was not at the police station when the charge was taken.

2879. You made no inquiries as to what had taken place?—There were a great number of prisoners. But after all that is not my point. I say I should have been wrong to have done it.

2880. You suggest that all you had a right to do, and all you ought to do, on an occasion of that kind, was to go through the police station and to see that there was nothing obviously wrong or incorrect or improper?—Yes; that is so. That is the view I take.

2881. It was no part of your duty to inquire, for instance, whether Inspector Berry had behaved properly in entering the charge against any of the prisoners then in the cells?—No, I think not at that stage. If there were any irregularity, it would be commented on by the magistrate, and then it would come before me.

2882. It seems a pity now, does it not, that you did not see Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette on that occasion?—No, I think not.

2883. Do you go to other parts of the Metropolis as well?—Yes, to every part of the Metropolitan Police District.

2884. You go when you in your discretion think fit?—Yes; it is left to my discretion.

2885. Was it part of your duty as a visitor to this police station to see if the Divisional Surgeon was on the premises?—No; I should not regard that as my business.

2886. Did you meet Dr. Mitchell on this night as a matter of fact?—I do not think I did. He was in the station. I am not certain, I do not think I saw him. He has his own room.

2887. Nothing at all unusual struck you then with regard to this last cell in which you heard a conversation, or near which you heard a conversation?—No, nothing unusual.

2888. (Mr. Whitmore.) To make the matter clear will you tell us exactly what you think are your duties when you do arrive at Vine Street Police Station on a night such as this?—It is rather difficult to tell you. If I arrive at Vine Street Police Station, or at any other police station, I can only judge by what I see and by what I ask.

2889. I suppose, first of all, your object would be to see that no man brought into that police station had been in any way badly treated?—Certainly.

2890. Supposing you had been a witness of it, what course would you have adopted?—With regard to the allegation as to their treatment as they were brought into the station?

2891. Yes. If that had been accurate and you had seen it, what course would you have adopted?—I must have taken a very strong course.

2892. Will you tell me what that strong course would be?—It is difficult to say, but the chances are that the officers concerned would have been suspended from duty.

2893. Have you ever seen such conduct at a police station?—Never.

2894. Have you ever heard of it?—I have heard of allegations of course of ill-treatment.

2895. Has it ever been your duty to inquire into the truth of those allegations?—Yes, I think it has.

2896. Can you recall any particular case?—No, I really cannot. I deal with a great many cases. I cannot say I have not had a case before me in which a constable has been accused of violence.

2897. I am talking now of violence at the police station?—Yes, I cannot recall any particular case.

2898. Nor the result of an inquiry which has been made?—No. I cannot recall a case in which any special inquiry was made.

2899. Did you go to any other police station that night?—No, not that night.

2900. About how often do you make a surprise visit of this kind in the course of a year?—I visit stations constantly and almost daily in some parts of the district.

2901. At night?—No, not at night, but frequently.

2902. On occasions such as you refer to, Bank Holiday nights, or Boat Race night, is it a common practice of yours to go unexpectedly to a police station where there is likely to be a number of charges?—Yes.

2903. Do your fellow Commissioners follow that practice?—The Assistant Commissioners?

2904. Yes?—No, it is not their business; their duties are distinct.

2905. This duty is delegated to you?—Yes; because I deal with the personnel of the Force.

2906. You are the only Commissioner and the only officer outside the ranks of the Superintendent and Inspectors who has any opportunity of seeing that the Police discharge their duty at night?—No, the Chief Constables.

2907. Will you tell us about them?—The Chief Constables are in charge of districts.

2908. How many Chief Constables are there?—There are four in charge of districts, and it is essentially their duty to visit frequently and continuously.

2909. Now supposing you had been present at this police station when the beginning of the interview we have heard so much about took place, and you had heard the charges actually made against the Police, would you have acquiesced in the course followed by the Inspector and the constables?—That is a difficult question to answer. A case presents itself differently when you hear it.

2910. I want to be perfectly frank with you. Do you think that the importance attached by the Police in their reports to the apparent silence of the defendants when they were actually charged, was as great as they thought it was?—I do not think it was.

2911. Then do you or do you not think that their previous protest ought to have made a greater impression on the minds of the police-constables?—I can hardly answer that question yes or no, because so much depends upon how it is made. A protest is a very common thing when a prisoner is placed in the dock. I think a protest should be regarded.

2912. You do not think it any part of your duty to ask any question, or to find out whether the previous proceedings have been properly conducted or not. If on one of your visits a man asked you to facilitate that and communicated that to you when he was in the cell you would do so, but you would not inquire and find out whether the charge had been properly made, and they had had an opportunity of answering it. You would not think it your duty to ask them about it?—No, not to ask them myself. I go by what passed between the Inspector and the prisoner, and if any remark had been made which conveyed to my mind that he had been improperly treated and refused a doctor when he had asked for one, or anything else, I should have intervened then. When I say I should have intervened, I should have called the Inspector to account at a later period.

(Mr. Dickinson.) You stated that when you went to the cell a good deal of conversation passed?—Yes, between Dr. Gerothwohl and the Inspector.

2913. Dr. Gerothwohl was asking for some communication to be sent to a friend, was he not?—Yes.

2914. I do not understand what need there is for conversation on that subject. Is it not recognised that if a prisoner asks for a friend to be sent for you send for the friend at once?—Yes, if he wants the friend for a legitimate object, of course. The conversation, I think, arose because they were both somewhat voluble. Dr. Gerothwohl spoke a good deal, and the Inspector was endeavouring, as I understood, to point out the best course for him to take in the circumstances, and that caused a good deal of conversation. It did not last long.

2915. Is there any Rule about it? I do not see any Rule in this book about treating prisoners when they are brought into the station. Is there any practice about prisoners who protest their innocence and want to communicate with their friends?—The practice is to hear what the prisoner says. Upon that the Inspector decides whether it is a case in which he should take the charge or refuse the charge. He then decides what he will do, and if he takes the charge, then is the time for the prisoner to make any statement; it is then open to him to say whether he denies the drunkenness or denies whatever the charge may be. If he denies the drunkenness, the Divisional Surgeon would be called.

2916. That is not the point I am referring to. I am asking you when a prisoner, whether he is guilty or is not guilty, says he wants to communicate with anybody, are there no Regulations by which it is laid down that he has that right?—Yes. Are you alluding to bail?

2917. Yes, to anything?—The Regulations as to bail are very full and clear indeed.

2918. What Rules are they?—That every effort shall be made to procure the bail without any delay at all.

2919. Where is that?

(Mr. Dickinson.) "If prisoners in custody for a bailable offence wish to send for bail, and are willing to pay for a messenger, or telegram being sent, the officer in charge of the station is to take the necessary steps without delay."

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) The next one is important.

(Mr. Dickinson.) "(301) If prisoners have no money, and are desirous of being bailed, the necessary expenses of sending for bail will be allowed by the Commissioner, there being no object on the part of the Police in unnecessarily detaining in the cells a prisoner who can be legally liberated on sufficient bail being offered. The Police telegraph is to be used in such cases whenever practicable."

2920. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Will you tell me this: when you went to the cell you heard a good deal of conversation by Dr. Gerothwohl. He was speaking quite rationally?—Yes.

2921. And apparently he was under considerable excitement?—Yes. I may say considerable excitement.

2922. At any rate, he was under some excitement?—Yes.

2923. I want you to tell me, from what you observed when you were down there, and from what you heard from him, was there anything in his demeanour or in his statement which was inconsistent with his being perfectly sober or under excitement?—No; I should say nothing. I did not see him.

2924. No, but you heard him speaking?—Yes.

2925. Was he speaking through the trap?—Yes. I was standing on one side.

2926. Inspector Smith was speaking to him?—Yes

2927. You would only hear what was taking place?—That is so.

2928. So that I may quite correctly apprehend your duty, if I follow you correctly; it is no part of your duty at all to inquire into the charges made?—No.

2929. That was a matter for the magistrate to deal with next day?—Yes.

2930. But you go to see that everything is in order at the police station, and that the police are properly carrying out their duties. Is that it?—Yes, that is so in a very general way.

2931. Did anybody tell you on that night that these two prisoners, as they then were, had protested that they had come to the station to give evidence on behalf of a third person?—No.

2932. You never heard of that?—No, nothing was said on that matter. It could hardly have been.

2933. You say "it could hardly have been." Would it not be the duty of someone to tell you that they had made that statement?—I do not think so.

2934. You mean you did not hear anything about it?—No, I should not expect to unless I had asked.

2935. You would not know, then, whether they were denying or admitting the offence?—No.

Major E. F. Wodehouse.

30 July 1906.

2936. You did not know?—I did not know.

2937. As far as you were concerned there was nothing to indicate to you that they were protesting their innocence?—No, except the fact that one was asking for a doctor. Of course, I gathered from that that he was protesting against it.

2938. May I point out to you that when you were there it was about 12.45?—Yes, I believe that was about the time.

2939. That was about half an hour after they were arrested?—Yes.

2940. You have told us, from what you observed and from what took place, that there was nothing inconsistent with their having been sober at a quarter-past twelve?—That I could hardly say.

2941. From what you saw and from what you observed there was nothing inconsistent with their having been perfectly sober half an hour before you were there?—No, certainly not.

2942. (Chairman.) Just one or two more questions. You arrived, I understand, at, I think, 12.45?—About that.

2943. Did you look at the Occurrence Book when you arrived?—That I do not remember. I think I very likely did. It is a very common practice of mine; but I rather doubt whether I did. I think I entered into conversation almost immediately with the Sub-Divisional Inspector.

2944. I see, for instance, this entry on Saturday, 7th April 1906. "J. Smith reports having called the Roll at S.F." I do not know exactly what that means. "All men not on duty present. Correct. W. Berry, Inspector." That is the last entry on Saturday night. Then there comes Sunday, 8th April 1906. You would expect to find the book made up to the hour that you arrived—12.45?—No, it might not have been made up until later

2945. Until when?—Until a convenient moment.

2946. But it is made up continuously?—Yes.

2947. That is to say, it is not a book made up perhaps 24 hours after the occurrence from notes made at the time by the various constables?—No, it is made up when they can get an opportunity.

2948. Whose duty is it to see that the Occurrence Book is properly entered up?—The inspector on duty.

2949. That is to say, Inspector Berry?—Yes.

2950. I think you told me you did not think it all part of your duty to enter the cells and see the prisoners?—I do not feel myself bound to do so at all.

2951. We understand that. You have given a general definition of the objects of your visit, and therefore of the duties that you have to discharge?—It was quite open to me to go into the cells.

2952. I find here in the Occurrence Book this entry, at 11.30 p.m. That is on the Saturday. That would be an hour and a quarter before you arrived there. "Chief Constable" (Major Parsons, I understand) "visited this station and saw the prisoners. W. Berry, Inspector"?—Yes.

2953. It is clear from that, I suppose, he did see the prisoners?—Yes.

2954. Is there any difference in principle between a visit of the Chief Constable and a visit by yourself?—No. The Chief Constables have got definite and distinct duties laid down. My duties are very indefinite.

2955. They are in the White Book, are they not?—Yes, they are briefly laid down there.

2956 I am rather asking you particularly about this because I should have thought that the object of your visit could only have been attained by your seeing the prisoners?—I think I could satisfy myself very well without entering the cells.

2957. Would Mr. Berry, the inspector, have expected you in the ordinary course of things to see the prisoners?—No. I might have gone to the station, of course, without seeing them at all.

2958. There happens to be a note in the Occurrence Book of your having made the visit. "Assistant-Commissioner's visit. I beg to report that at 12.45 a.m., 8th inst., Major Wodehouse, Assistant-Commissioner, visited this station, saw the prisoners, and inspected books. W. Berry, Inspector"?—I have no doubt that that entry is perfectly correct in spirit. I did, as a matter of fact, see some of the prisoners.

2959. Correct in spirit?—Perfectly.

2960. Did you see the prisoners?—I saw some of the prisoners, but the inspector did not accompany me. That is a mere formal way of recording the fact that I visited the cells.

2961. I suppose it is a different thing to formally record the fact and to accurately record the fact?—I think not. I think that is accurate.

2962. But according to your own statement you did not see Dr. Gerothwohl, Mr. Lavalette, or Timmings?—I did not see them during the interview because I stood on one side of the cell door, and the trap is very small. It is impossible for me to have seen them.

2963. Did you see them during your visit at all?—I saw them as I passed the door. I do not call that seeing them. The view that you get is not seeing them at all. I was just aware there was somebody in the cells.

2964. Do you wish to represent to us that Inspector Berry's Report in the Occurrence Book is correct when he says you saw the prisoners?—I say again the entry is perfectly correct in the sense in which he meant it. He meant it was a visit of inspection to the cells, and I submit that it was.

2965. That is the only explanation you wish to give as to the entry?—That is the only explanation I wish to give.

2966. Then what do you say to the words "and inspected the books"?—I have no doubt I did inspect the books.

2967. I thought I asked you a little time ago if you looked at the Occurrence Book, and you told me "I am not sure"?—Neither am I. I do a great many acts on my visit to a station. I did not make that entry in the Occurrence Book.

2968. I understand you to represent that the entry in the Occurrence Book is a formal record in a usual form?—Yes. I have no doubt by that I did inspect some books, otherwise the entry would not have been made in that form. I may go to a station and inspect nothing, perhaps, but the stables. In that case I should not expect to see an entry as to the books.

2969. I still do not quite see that the entry is correct as to seeing the prisoners on your own statement?—I think it is substantially correct.

2970. Does it not strike you that the matter is rather important, and that the case in its present form might never have happened at all if you had really happened to see the prisoners, Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette?—It would have made no difference at all.

2971. But if you see a prisoner you listen to what he says, do you not?—Yes, certainly.

2972. Now do you not think it was a very unfortunate occurrence that you should not hear the full statement of Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette on this occasion?—I do not. It would not have made any difference at all. They were there and they were bound to go before the magistrate then I was not bound to release them.

2973. They are bound to come before the magistrate in a technical sense, but there is still time for the police to find, as the magistrate ultimately found, that there had been a mistake. They might have been bailed out. They were let out on their own recognizances?—Yes, certainly.

2974. If you hear two educated men telling the story in the early morning that they told at the police court on Wednesday, do you not think they would have been let out on their own recognizances, and perhaps nothing more would have been heard of the case?—The case must have come on.

2975. I quite agree that the case must have come on, but nothing more would have been heard of the decision of Mr. Denman. I am only putting it to you because I want to ascertain what are your views as to your duty as Chief of the Police?—Whatever investigation I may have made then would in no way have affected the case. I could have taken no step at all. I could have directed the Inspector to release them on bail if I had liked. I might have said, "Release them on their own bail, at once"; but I certainly think I should not have done so.

2976. I am only asking these questions with a view of seeing what your duties really were, and to test the view you take of them. That is the explanation that you wish to give about it?—Yes.

2977. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I should like to ask you one question with regard to it. This entry is not made in your presence, is it?—No.

2978. You are not responsible for it. You do not see it?—No, I do not see it. I may never see it again.

2979. When the constables were called upon to make reports in this case it was of the utmost importance that they should have reported that these two gentlemen had made the protest they did directly they came to the police station, was it not?—Yes, I think that should have been reported.

2980. You have seen the Reports, I presume, which were sent in when they were called for?—Yes.

2981. They convey a very inaccurate impression of what took place, do they not?—They omit that. It is not so vital, to my mind.

2982. I do not quite understand that, because the important point is that they had made their protest which we have heard. There was a denial as far as they were concerned, and there was a statement by them that they were coming up to give evidence on behalf of one Timmings, a third person arrested. It was very important that whoever was to inquire into these cases should know that, was it not?—Yes, it was important.

2983. They ought to have reported it?—Yes, they should have reported it. I quite admit that.

2984. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I think you have told us you are one of the three Assistant Commissioners?—That is so.

2985. What are your particular duties?—My particular duties are with regard to the discipline of the service generally.

2986. Does that cover the uniform men and detectives, or only uniform men?—Uniform men.

2987. So that the visit to the station on your part would be primarily to see that the officers were doing their duty?—Yes.

2988. Of course, in connection with that, you may get information from visiting cells?—Yes.

2989. You may hear something that might indicate to you that some man had not done his duty?—Yes.

2990. And then you might make inquiry?—Yes.

2991. On this particular night did you hear or see anything from first to last whilst you were down at the cells which led you to think it was necessary or desirable that you should go into any of the cells?—No, nothing.

2992. Unless something of that kind occurred you would not go into a cell?—No, I very rarely do.

2993. Your object in going in would be to investigate some complaint against an officer?—Yes. There might be some statement made by a prisoner that would indicate that I ought to go.

2994. On this night nothing of that kind occurred which led you to think it necessary to go into the cells?—No.

2995. After you come up from the cells did you see or speak to Inspector Berry?—I do not remember. I went back into the inspector's office, so I think I probably did.

2996. Did you tell him exactly what you had done when you had gone down with Sub-divisional Inspector Smith?—No. Major E. F. Wodehouse. 30 July 1906.

2997. Is the Occurrence Book as it were a general diary of events which take place in the station?—Yes.

2998. In your opinion, was Inspector Berry, knowing that you had been down to the cells, justified in describing your visit in the way which he did, do you think?—I think he was.

2999. It would be perfectly understood by anybody who had occasion to study the Occurrence Book about your visit?—Yes, I should say so, certainly.

3000. With regard to the chief constables, I think their duty with regard to visiting stations is laid down in the regulations, is it not?—Yes.

3001. It is Regulation 31. Their duties are very strictly defined with regard to visiting stations. You visit merely for the purpose of investigating for your own information the conduct of those under your supervision?—Yes.

3002. You were asked whether there was anything you could have done. Assuming the story told by these gentlemen to be correct, the mischief had all occurred before you got to the station?—Yes.

3003. (Mr. Dickinson.) Who is the officer who is charged with presenting the case before the magistrate. Of course the superintendent has nothing to do with it?—No. Very often it is the constable who is in charge of the case. He takes the prisoner to the court.

3004. Is it not brought before the notice of the sub-inspector?—Yes. It is bound to come before the station inspector; that is generally the inspector on duty. He would be cognizant of the charge. The sub-divisional inspector of course is the next in authority.

3305. Is there no officer who would be responsible for a case being taken up wrongfully or by mistake?—The sub-divisional inspector is the responsible person in that way.

3006. Who would that be?—In this case that would be Inspector Smith.

3007. He would be the person who would be responsible?—Yes, for presenting the case to the magistrate. The inspector on duty who takes the charge is responsible, of course, for the charge that he takes.

3008. According to you, in practice, anybody could do it. The constables in the case simply attend the court with their prisoners and then the case is called on and dealt with?—The common practice is for the inspector who took the charge to attend.

3009. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs). The witnesses are there who can depose to anything that is material, so that the magistrate has all the facts before him?—Yes.

3010. (Mr. Dickinson). In this case he did not attend?—He did not attend.

3011. The persons who did attend were the police constables?—That is so.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes). I am told that the witnesses' names are all shown upon the charge sheet.

Sub-divisional Inspector JAMES SMITH, sworn.

3012. (Mr. R. D. Muir). Are you a sub-divisional inspector of the C. Division stationed at Vine Street?—Yes. Inspector J. Smith.

3013. Have you been nineteen years in the police force?—That is so.

3014. Have you been all that time at Vine Street?—For the last eight years at Vine Street.

3015. And previous to that in other divisions?—Practically at Bow Street the remainder of my time.

3016. At 12.45 on Sunday morning, 8th April, did you visit the cells at Vine Street?—I did.

3017. Was that a visit by you in the ordinary course of your duty?—Yes.

3018. Did it happen on this occasion that Major Wodehouse accompanied you?—That is so.

3019. Two of the prisoners were Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette?—Yes.

3020. They were together in one cell, were they?—Yes, No. 3 cell. It was the last cell we visited.

3021. There were others in the cell also?—I believe there were three other persons confined in that cell.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) No doubt Timmings was in that cell.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Timmings was there as well, was he?—I could not say whether Timmings was in that cell, but there were others besides Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette.

3022. Did you let down the trap-door in the ordinary course of your duty?—I did.

3023. What inquiry did you make?—I said, "Are you all right"?

3024. Is that the ordinary question?—That is the ordinary question you put to prisoners. Dr. Gerothwohl came to the trap-door and said "No, it is not all right."

Inspector J. Smith.

30 July 1906.

I said, "What is it"? He said "I want you to send for my private doctor." I said, "What do you want him for"? He said, "To see if I am drunk, and to examine my friend here" (pointing to a gentleman, who was Mr. Lavalette I found out afterwards, he was beside him) "to see if he is drunk also." He also asked, I remember now, but I did not at the time, for another gentleman to be sent for.

3025. Do you remember the name or not?—No, I do not remember the name. I put it to him, "Well if we send for your doctor, and he comes, to examine you, we will accept his bail for you without troubling anybody else; but my experience is, that private doctors will not come to a police station at this time of the morning." He, however, insisted. I took down Dr. Stewart's name and address. That would be about 1 o'clock when we had finished the round of the cells. I gave directions for a telephone message to be sent to Chelsea for Dr. Stewart's attendance.

3026. You took down Dr. Stewart's name and address?—Yes.

3027. Did Dr. Gerothwohl press you to take the other name and address?—No. Dr. Gerothwohl seemed satisfied with my explanation to him.

3028. Do you remember anything being said, according to your recollection, about pen and paper or writing materials?—No, I have no recollection of that. I have no recollection on that point at all. There was a good deal of conversation. Mr. Lavalette and Dr. Gerothwohl continually broke in on one another inside, and as Mr. Lavalette spoke in broken English it was a difficult matter for some time to tell what he wanted.

3029. A message was sent to Dr. Stewart?—Yes.

3030. And some time later a reply was received?—Yes. Dr. Stewart declined to attend.

3031. Did you attend to that?—No, I had other duties to attend to.

3032. Who attended to that?—Inspector Berry.

3033. Did you see the inspection by the divisional surgeon?—No.

3034. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) Was it you who so very kindly gave Mr. Lavalette some matches before leaving the police station?—No. I had nothing to do with you after the cell incident.

3035. Do you not remember asking me why I wanted Dr. Stewart and another gentleman?—No, I do not. There was a good deal of conversation between you and me, but I cannot remember anything of that at all. I remember now you did say something about another gentleman, but you seemed satisfied when I said we would accept Dr. Stewart's bail if he arrived.

3036. You remember I did mention another gentleman?—Yes.

3037 You do not remember my saying I wanted him for private reasons?—I do not remember that at all.

3038. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) There is one question I ought to ask you. Is it your duty to record the time at which these gentlemen were bailed out?—No. The inspector bailing them would do that in the bail book. That would be Inspector Bex.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I think we have evidence got before as to that.

Superintendent MANN, sworn.

Superintendent Mann.

3039. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I think you are superintendent in charge of Vine Street Station?—Yes, C Division.

3040. I do not think you were in the station at the time these gentlemen were brought in?—No, I was not.

3041. But I think you did go down to the cells at the same time as Major Woodhouse?—I did.

3042. Did you hear any conversation?—Yes, I heard all the conversation that took place, the same as the others.

3043. Have you heard what has been stated in the box?—Yes.

3044. Is that correct?—Quite correct.

3045. I think afterwards, reports by the constables were called for, were they not?—Yes.

3046. How was the fact communicated to the constables that they had to make reports?—Papers were received, and I sent the papers on to Sub-divisional Inspector Smith, to get reports from the constables, and to go into the matter in detail.

3047. Were the papers laid before you?—Yes.

3048. I think you appended your signature to them? Yes.

3049. Do you see the constables before they do that? —Yes, sometimes; not in all instances, but in some.

3050 Did you see them in this instance?—I think I did see one or two of them, but I am not quite certain on the point.

3051. Can you give the Commissioners any information they want on this point?—Yes.

3052. Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) When the constables make their reports, are they made by them in private?—No. They could go into a private room, but, in fact, they make them in the charge room as a rule, under the eyes of the inspector.

3053. Were they told that a complaint had been made as to what had happened at the police station on this night?—They would be told the nature of the complaint and they would have to report in explanation of it.

3054. In this case they would be told the nature of the complaint which Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette were making?—That is so.

3055. And they would be called upon to make their report, and to state what had happened?—Yes.

3056. Then each man would write it out?—Yes.

3057. Would they be written at the same time, do you know?—No, not necessarily. The first constable who came into the station would be told that he had to make his report, and he would do it, and then he would go out. It might be that two might be there at the same time.

3058. Do you know at all whether two were there at the same time?—I cannot say at all. The sub-divisional inspector would know.

3059. It is quite plain that they ought to have made the report that these two gentlemen had protested from the first?—Yes, they ought to have stated that in their reports.

3060. It is rather a serious matter to leave that out of the report, is it not?—Yes, they should have put it in, undoubtedly.

3061. More particularly as complaint was being made with regard to this very matter?—Yes.

3062. When the reports are made I did not quite catch what happens to them. Are they given to Sub-divisional Inspector Smith?—They go in to Sub-divisional Inspector Smith, or to the sub-divisional inspector of another sub-division.

3063. Then you, as superintendent, would countersign?—Yes, they would be sent to me after the sub-divisional inspector had gone through them, and seen that they were correct.

3064. All you would do would be to send them on with such observations as you thought it right to make on the report?—Yes.

3065. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) With regard to this particular matter it was Sub-divisional Inspector Mackay who was acting?—Yes. That occurred because Sub-divisional inspector Smith had commenced his seven days' leave the day before.

3066. (Mr. Dickenson.) I understand that Sub-divisional Inspector Mackay is the man who actually transmitted to these men the order to make reports?—I expect it would be so. The papers would be sent out to him; he would be the one I should expect who would do it.

3067. In this report of Inspector Berry, written in his own writing and signed by himself, there is a continuation on the same paper which is written either in your writing or in Mackay's?—Part of it is Mackay's and part of it is mine.

3068. Your report follows on Mackay's?—Yes. The are simply observations upon it.

3069. But the observations of both of you are upon Inspector Berry's report?—Yes. I do not usually make observations on the others. That is summarised in the first report.

3070. Therefore, your observations are based upon what the inspector had written?—I should read all the reports before I put any observations in it at all.

3071. You had read all the reports, including Inspector Berry's?—Yes.

3072. Therefore, your observations are made on what Inspector Berry said?—No, not entirely. They would be based on that and also on the constable's report.

3073. The last words in Inspector Berry's report are "Reports from police constables herewith"?—Yes. If he has seen those reports they would go through him.

3074. When the inspector wrote his report, and stated, "Reports from police constables herewith," he had also read the reports of the police constables?—That I cannot say. It looks like it from the remark he has put there. It looks as though he had seen them, and sent them to the sub-divisional inspector.

3075. I want to know what is the ordinary course. Would that be the ordinary course?—Yes, if the papers were handed to him.

3076. He would make his report after reading the reports by his subordinates?—Yes.

3077. With regard to P.C. Isaacson's report, that is written in Isaacson's writing and is signed by him, and then countersigned by Mackay and yourself?—That shows that it has not gone through the hands of the inspector. If he had called for the report and it was given to him he would have signed it, undoubtedly.

3078. These reports are written in good writing and carefully. Are they written in the police station?—Certainly; most likely in the charge-room.

3079. Can you tell me what amount of time these police constables would have had to write these reports. When would they have been called upon to write the reports. It is dated April 13th?—One of them might be near at hand when the papers were sent out. He would be sent for and he would write it at once. Once the report form was given to him he would have to give it back in the course of a very short time. It may take, of course, half-an-hour.

3080. Do you mean to tell me that between the order to write this report and receiving it only half-an-hour elapses?—It may be more. It depends on whether he is a quick writer.

3081. Do they write these reports from notes?—No; from memory, I should say.

3082. I am rather struck with the carefulness of the writing of these reports. Are you sure that they would be written out newly or copied?—They are copied in a press copy-book after being written.

3083. These are the originals?—These are the originals.

3084. (Chairman.) Is it part of your duty to give instructions from time to time to the whole body of men under you?—Yes, in accordance with the general order.

3085. Do you do that in writing?—I do, invariably, in writing.

3086. What do you call it. Is it a memorandum you issue to them?—Yes, that is to say, supposing there had been some neglect of work somewhere, I should send out a memorandum, or I might do it verbally and tell the inspector there was something wanted attending to.

3087. You say you might send out a printed memorandum?—No, not a printed one, but written.

3088. Do you remember having to make a complaint about a man in August of last year, for instance?—No I think I was away all last August; in fact, I know I was.

3089. When last did you have any reason to complain of the slackness of any members of the division under you?—I really could not say that. I might complain about a man in the street if I met him. I keep no record. Superintendent Mann. 30 July 1906.

3090. Have you had occasion during the last year or two to issue anything in the form of a general admonition, or general warning, that men were not doing their duty, and that you expected them to do it?—Yes, I have sent out memoranda of that sort.

3091. In what way were the men not doing their duty on the occasion you are speaking of?—It all depends on what the duty was. Perhaps I might find a man on point duty who was not attending to his duty with regard to traffic, or I might find another man patrolling, and I might think he was lax in his duty, or in his manner, and so forth.

3092. Have you complained to them at all for not bringing in more charges?—No. We do not encourage that.

3093. You do not remember ever having to make complaint about members of the C Force as to neglect of part of their duty?—Not at all.

3094. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) How long have you been in the C Division?—Eight years now, and twelve or thirteen years altogether.

3095. Have you during that time ever heard complaints made against the police of accepting money from women?—Yes, I have heard of them but not in writing. I have only heard of them casually. Nothing has ever come before me officially.

3096. Has no investigation or inquiry ever been made?—I think there was one case, and that was quite recently, when two women were charged. They said then that the policeman had charged them because they had not given him money for twelve months; but that charge came to nothing, because where they said they had given the money the constable had not been on duty for nearly two years.

3097. Was that a case which was examined before the magistrate?—Yes. They were charged, they went before the magistrate, and they made no complaint; in fact they were invited to come and make their statements, and have them taken down.

3098. Were they convicted?—Yes.

3099. Were they charged with soliciting or with what is tantamount to soliciting?—Yes

3100. In the same way have you heard of any complaints made against members of the force of taking money from bookmakers?—Yes, I have heard of that, and there was one case which was investigated, and that was proved groundless. I would like to say that I do not think there is much chance of that, for during the present year there has been close on £1,700 paid in fines by street bookmakers in the C Division alone.

3101. Who investigated the charge that you are speaking of on this occasion?—The charge against the women?

3102. No.—I did, and I submitted the whole of the facts to the Commissioner.

3103. Then was a report made in writing?—Yes. The whole of the statements were taken down from these betting men, and it was found that there was no reliance to be placed on them; in fact, the very men they were complaining against had charged them several times, and the complaints resulted because they did their duty so well in the streets.

3104. Have you had any charges made against the police of taking money from licensed victuallers?—No, not a single one.

3105. You have not heard of that?—I have not heard of such a thing in the C Division.

Inspector Francis Mackay; sworn.

3106. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Are you a sub-divisional inspector stationed at Marlborough Street Police Station?—Yes. Inspector F. Mackay.

3107. I think the police station is next door to the police court?—Yes.

3108. Did you happen to be on duty at the police station when Dr. Gerothwohl's case came on?—No.

3109. How did you come in contact with Dr. Gerothwohl's case?—I have had very little to do with it at all. I simply submitted the report in the first instance because my colleague was away.

3110. When were you called upon to get reports from the constables concerned in that case?—As near as I can recollect I think it was about the 12th or 13th April.

Inspector F. Mackay.

30 July 1906.

3111. How did you call for them—in writing, or verbally?—I called for them verbally. I think I left a memorandum with Inspector Berry, and the constables were to be warned to write out the reports. I ultimately found the reports on my desk.

3112. Were they accompanied by the report of Inspector Berry?—Yes.

3113. (Mr. Whitmore.) You were not present when the constables made their reports?—No, I was not.

3114. What is your duty when you are asked to get reports from constables?—The complaint is read to them, and, on that complaint, they have to make their reports.

3115. They make the reports, and then they hand them to you?—Yes.

3116. Have you finished your duty when you have gone through the reports of the constables?—We go through the reports, and if there is anything which we think is deficient we make them write fresh reports.

3117. In this case you knew nothing of the circumstances?—No, I did not.

3118. Did you go through the reports?—I went through the reports, but not with them, afterwards.

3119. That is to say, if you now think there is anything deficient in those reports, you would not know it then?—No.

3120. As a matter of fact, you did not check the reports?—I did check the reports.

3121. As a matter of fact, you were not at the police station when this occurrence took place?—No.

3122. Therefore you did not know whether those reports were deficient or not?—No, I did not.

3123. Therefore your checking of them could not be very effective?—No. I could only be guided by the circumstances.

3124. (Mr. Dickinson.) Have you any knowledge as to whether those reports were made independently?—Yes.

3125. Do you know they were?—The men were not on the same duty. They make reports when they come off duty. I have made inquiries since, and I find they were on separate duties, and they made the reports separately.

3126. At what time?—I believe one was made in the afternoon and the other was made later—in the evening.

3127. If their reports are alike, you think that is something fortuitous.—Yes, and I think if they were speaking the truth they would require to be so.

3128. You do not confine yourself to sending in those reports, but you make this observation: "If P.C. Wallington and Isaacson had not arrested the gentlemen outside St. James' Church there would not have been any necessity to hand Timmings to P.C. Divers." You knew nothing of the case originally. What made you come to that conclusion?—I knew sufficient in this way: That had P.C. Isaacson handed Dr. Gerothwohl to P.C. Divers he would have been acting very improperly, because unless he had occasion to hand him over he had no right to do so, and I doubt very much whether P.C. Divers would have taken the prisoner

3129. What I want to know is where you got the information from which enabled you to come to this conclusion at this time?—I think that was from inquiries I made.

3130. You discussed it with whom?—With Inspector Berry.

3131. With anybody else?—No, I think not—not that I recollect at present.

3132. Did you not discuss it with either Police-constable Isaacson or Police-constable Wallington?—No.

3133. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Was it any part of the Inspector's duty to go through the reports?—Yes, he should have seen them by rights.

3134. Do you know whether he did or not in this case?—I think he did not see them all.

3135. Why did he not?—I think he was on night duty at the time, or had gone off duty, and I think I dealt with them before he came back on duty again.

3136. Do you mean you sent them away before he saw them?—No, I could not say whether he saw them or not. I found them on my desk, but I knew he had gone off duty then, and I sent them away before he came back on duty.

3137. That does not seem to agree with his report, because if you look at his report there is Inspector Berry's handwriting?—Yes.

3138. Just above that you will see "reports from police constables herewith."?—Yes.

3139. So that Inspector Berry does appear to have sent them on?—Yes, according to that he does.

3140. There is his signature underneath?—Yes, that is so.

3141. Have you any reason to doubt that that is correct?—No, I have not. I know I found the reports on my desk, and I dealt with them almost immediately. He was not there then.

3142. He must have seen them before if he did see them?—He must have seen them before if he did see them.

3143. I do not understand what is the meaning of his saying at the end of his report: "Reports from police constables herewith," unless he had had them?—According to that that would certainly convey the idea that he had seen them.

3144. I suppose I may take it that that is correct?—Yes.

3145. He had seen them?—Yes. I do not know from my own knowledge that he had.

3146. You are only gathering that from what you see here? Yes.

3147. We have had evidence from several officers about it, but it is plain, is it not, that these three police constables ought to have stated in their reports the protest which had been made by Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette?—Yes, that would be correct.

3148. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) At the end of Inspector Berry's report you wrote a note of your own which begins "Submitted"?—Yes.

3149. At that time had you before you the statements of the police constables as well as the statements of the inspector?—Yes, I had all the reports.

3150. You say there, "If P.C. Wallington and Isaacson had not arrested the gentlemen outside St. James's Church there would not have been any necessity to hand Timmings over to P.C. Divers." Did you ascertain from the constables that they had done so?—Yes.

3151. That was your comment upon what you saw in the reports?—Yes.

3152. (Mr. Dickinson.) The assumption is that you talked it over with Inspector Berry?—Previous to making the report.

3153. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) The next is of the same character. You comment on the fact that Dr. Gerothwohl swears that the stick was taken away by P.C. Isaacson, whereas the stick was taken away by P.C. Wallington. That fact you also gathered from the report?—Yes.

3154. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I should like to understand this from you with reference to what you have just said to Mr. Eldon Bankes, you read the reports of the three police constables and I take it Inspector Berry's report before they were sent on?—Yes.

3155. And you had a conversation with Inspector Berry about them?—Prior to that.

3156. Before you read them?—Yes, I think I read the reports.

3157. When you read the reports of those three police constables, did it not strike you at once that they had left out the most important feature of the whole occurrence, which was the protest which had been made by Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette, when they were in the dock?—No. That was made by Inspector Berry.

3158. I am asking you about the police constables' reports. I know what Inspector Berry says. Did it not strike you in reading through the reports of those three police constables that they were leaving out that most important statement?—No, I cannot say so. It does not strike me so.

3159. You have told us it was wrong for them to have left it out?—It would certainly have been better if they had not left it out.

3160. Do not let us play with words. It would have been more than "better." It would have been right for them to have stated it, and they ought to have stated it?—Yes.

3161. If they were asked to give a true statement of what had occurred, they ought to have stated that which was a most important feature, from the prisoners' point of view?—Yes.

3162. When you read them did it not strike you as an extraordinary thing that these police constables had not mentioned that fact?—It did not strike me so at the time.

3163. But it strikes you now?—Yes, it does.

3164. But it did not strike you when you read what they said that no reply was made to the charge? You knew the fact at the time that a protest had been made by Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette?—No, I did not know much about it except what was told me by Inspector Berry.

3165. In the conversation you had with him?—Yes.

3166. Did he not tell you that they had repeatedly protested about the place where they were arrested, and also that they had come to speak in favour of Timmings? Did he tell you that?—Yes.

3167. Then you must have had it present to your mind when you had the constables' reports?—Yes, and they denied it.

3168. Who denied it?—The constables.

3169. If you had had that present to your mind when you read the police constables' reports, why did not you call their attention to the fact that they had not made any statement about it?—That certainly slipped my notice.

3170. It did not occur to you at the time?—It did not.

3171. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Were those reports called for by your superior officer?—Yes.

3172. Was Inspector Berry's report annexed to the reports of the constables?—Yes. Inspector F. Mackay.

3173. In Inspector Berry's report the incident about the protest is mentioned?—Yes. 30 July 1906

3174. Whether it ought to be in the constables' reports or not I am not saying for the moment, but whoever received the four reports together would know the fact?—Yes. The fact was admitted.

3175. It appeared in Inspector Berry's report, although it did not appear in the other reports.?—Yes. the fact was that Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette did protest.

3176. You made some suggestions at the end of Inspector Berry's report, and I have read two of them. Now, I want to know this. Were these two men, Police-constable Wallington and Police-constable Isaacson on point duty or were they on beat duty that night?—On patrol duty.

3177. Would it be a breach of their duty to leave their patrol without some good cause?—Yes.

3178. Supposing, for instance, they had properly gone to St. James's Church to deal with this crowd would it have been a breach of their duty to have left it, and to have followed these gentlemen to Vine Street unless they had arrested them?—They would not certainly be justified in handing a prisoner over.

3179. He certainly would not be justified in handing a prisoner over unless he had another himself?—That is so.

3180. Supposing Timmings was the only one arrested there would it have been a breach of this man's duty to leave the crowd at St. James's Church and go to Vine Street?—Distinctly so.

Dr. Alexander Mitchell; sworn.

3181. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I think you are a Doctor of Medicine, a Bachelor of Medicine, and a Master in Surgery, and, I think, at the present moment, you are acting as Chief-Surgeon to the Metropolitan Police?—Yes.

3182. I think the Chief-Surgeon is away on leave?—Yes.

3183. I think you are the Divisional-Surgeon of Police of the C Division?—At Vine Street, Piccadilly.

3184. What is the exact nature of that appointment. Are you principally employed by the police?—Not altogether, not exclusively.

3185. Are you appointed to that office?—Yes.

3186. Who appoints you?—The Home Secretary, I believe.

3187. You receive a definite appointment?—Yes.

3188. Then you have to perform such duties as you are called upon to perform?—Yes.

3189. Does part of your duties consist in examining persons who are charged with being drunk and who deny it?—That is so.

3190. Were you at Vine Street Station on this particular Saturday night?—I was.

3191. Had you any particular reason for being there?—Not unless I examined any case that came in that required examination in case of injury, and other things.

3192. Were you summoned that night to go, or did you go of your own motion?—I went voluntarily.

3193. Have you a room at the station?—I have.

3194. Do you remember what time you went to the station, that evening?—About a quarter past ten.

3195. Did you see these three men brought into the station do you remember?—No I did not see them brought into the station.

3196. Did you see them in the charge room at all?—When I was leaving the opposite room after a quarter past twelve I saw three men in the dock and the constables, but I cannot swear to their identity. There were three men there, and there was a stick, and the stick was broken in a struggle.

3197. You saw that going on?—Yes, I cannot swear to the main point, but there were three men there about that time. Dr. Alexander Mitchell.

3198. That is all you saw with reference to the time when the men were in the charge room?—Yes.

3199. Later, at about half-past two in the morning, I think it was, were you called to examine these two gentlemen?—I was.

3200. Who asked you to come. Do you remember?—I think it was the inspector. I think I was in my room at the time.

3201. Did you go down to the cells?—I did.

3202. Did you examine both Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette?—Yes.

3203. Which gentleman did you examine first?—Dr. Gerothwohl.

3204. Where did you examine him?—In the passage leading from the charge room to the cell.

3205. I think you did write out a certificate as to his condition?—I did.

3206. Did you do that at the time?—Shortly afterwards.

3207. After you came back to your room?—Yes. I went into the charge room after finishing my examination.

3208. Did you also examine Mr. Lavalette?—I did.

3209. And you wrote a certificate with reference to him?—Almost on similar lines.

3210. I had better read the certificate:—You say "I examined at 2.30 a.m. Maurice A. Gerothwohl and found him recovering from the effects of excessive drinking. I think he is not now drunk." Your certificate with regard to Mr. Lavalette is: "I examined at 2.45 a.m. Henri Lavalette, and found him recovering from the effects of excessive drinking. I think he is not now drunk." Did you make a careful examination of these two gentlemen?—I did.

3211. Do these two certificates contain your opinion as to their condition after your examination?—It contains a very correct description of my opinion after my examination.

3212. Have you had considerable experience in examining into cases of drunkenness?—I have examined between something like 600 and 700 cases yearly for the last eight or nine years.

Dr. Alexander Mitchell.

3213. Will you tell us what are the indications which you look for of drunkenness, or of a man having been drunk?—Do you mean the symptoms?

3214. Yes.—I generally examine the eyes to begin with, and in almost every case I find the pupils dilated and inactive. They do not react to light, the whites of the eyes are usually congested, the speech is hesitating and stammering, the expression vacant, gait unsteady, the lips parched, and the breath smells of drink.

3215. Those are the symptoms you look for in order to make up your mind?—Yes.

3216. What did you find upon your examination of these gentlemen that led you to form the conclusion which you state in your certificate?—I examined them as to gait, and found it perfectly steady; the expression was intelligent, the voice in either case was not thick, and they did not stammer or hesitate, and I therefore came to the conclusion that they were sober; but when I examined their eyes I found the pupils still dilated, I found their lips parched, and their breath distinctly smelling of drink, and therefore I concluded that they were recovering from the effects of excessive drinking.

3217. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) You say you were instructed by Inspector Berry?—I forget which inspector it was. An inspector came and told me that some gentlemen wanted to be examined.

3218. You took that as meaning that they were intending to dispute the charge?—I take it that is the meaning of their wanting to be examined.

3219. In such a case you would make, I suppose, an especially careful examination?—I am so accustomed to examination that it would not take me so long a time to examine people in that condition as it would take some medical men less trained in this particular line.

3220. You did make a careful examination?—I made as careful an examination as was necessary for the purpose. I certified you were not drunk. I stated that you were recovering from excessive drinking for the reasons I have given—pupils dilated and inactive, lips parched, and breath smelling of drink.

3221. You said our gait was steady, our voice not thick, and our speech not stammering or hesitating?—Yes.

3222. Why did not you state that at the police court?—The question was not asked me.

3223. You stated the unfavourable symptoms?—I stated that you were not drunk when I examined you, but that you were recovering from excessive drinking.

3224. I say at the police court you stated all the unfavourable symptoms?—I stated that you were not drunk. If you had asked me my reasons I should have told you.

3225. You stated what symptoms you found as indicating in your opinion that we were recovering from drink?—I did. I certified you were not drunk.

3226. You did not state the symptoms which pointed to our sobriety?—I tell you I certified you were not drunk. If you had asked for my reasons for expressing that opinion I should have told you as I have told you now.

3227. Therefore you based your assumption that we were recovering from the effects of excessive drinking on three points?—The eyes, the parched lips, and the breath.

3228. With regard to the eyes, first, with regard to congestion, is congestion not a state in which you find a great many people who are not drunk or even recovering from the effects of drink?—Coupled with the smell of drink and parched lips creates an entirely different impression on my mind than that created by people simply suffering from dilated pupils and suffering from excitement.

3229. I am coming to that presently. I suggest that congestion of the eyes is not conclusive?—It is one symptom which, with the other facts, makes one come to a conclusion as to the condition of the individual.

3230. Is not dilation of the pupils of the eyes a varying quantity?—Almost invariably in cases of drunkenness I find the pupils dilated.

3231. When people are sober are not their pupils dilated?—You may have them dilated from excitement but it does not naturally follow that if a man's pupils are dilated his breath smells strongly of drink. It is not one symptom simply, but it is the two things combined that I base my opinion upon.

3232. Now another point; do not the pupils dilate in a dark cell?—Yes, but they re-act on getting into the light at once—immediately.

3233. Immediately?—In two seconds.

3234. You can get dilation of the pupils from excitement?—Yes.

3235. Now, another point. The pupils vary according to the people, do they not?—In what regard?

3236. Some people have larger pupils than others?—Yes.

3237. Some are abnormally large?—But all re-act to light unless there is reason for their not re-acting.

3238. I put it to you that the indications from our breath were very slight?—They were not slight, especially from your own.

3239. Did you smell our breath when you were examining our eyes?—Yes, I smelt your breath particularly. When I examined your eyes I smelt your breath.

3240. I find you said in the police court "After my examination was over I smelt his breath and thought he had been drinking."?—I cannot remember having said that.

3241. I suggest to you it must have been very imperceptible?—One moment. You stated that I did not come sufficiently near to you to smell your breath. As a matter of fact, I smelt your breath while I was examining your eyes.

3242. Why did you say at the police court "I smelt his breath, and thought he had been drinking."?—That has nothing to do with the question. I do not know that I said anything of the kind, but that was the position I was in—when I examined your eyes I smelt your breath.

3243. I suggest to you that you only noticed the breath, and only thought that we had been drinking. That is what appears from what you said at the police court?—I told you my opinion at the police court as I do now, and that is, that you had been drinking to excess.

3244. I find you said this at the police court. You were asked this question: "I want to ask you one or two questions about this. Did you ask Dr. Gerothwohl when you first saw him what liquor he had had that evening."?—That is so. Perfectly correct.

3245. "A.—I did not when I first saw him. After the examination was over I smelt his breath and thought he had been drinking"?—I knew I smelt your breath at the time I examined your eyes, and you smelt very strongly of drink. That is what I told you.

3246. The only three conditions on which you based your assumption were the three points to which you have just referred?—That is so.

3247. As a medical practitioner you know Quain's Dictionary?—I do, and a very excellent work it is.

3248. I find that Quain says: "Mere odour of the breath is quite fallacious; and the writer attaches but little importance to the state of the pupils."?—When was that written.

3249. That is the revised edition by Drs. Roberts and Mitchell Bruce?—When was it written?

3250. 1895. My own experience, and, as I say, I have had great experience, is that I rarely find cases of drunkenness in which the pupils are not dilated, and in which they satisfactorily re-act to light.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Do you mind telling me under which head that which you have just read comes.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) It is under the head of "Alcoholism."

3251. I presume without expert knowledge that in the recovery stage the features would be even less distorted?—I do not know what you mean.

3252. You are referring to the acute stage?—Yes.

3293. Do prisoners or persons apprehended ever no importance they would be even less important afterwards?—They are of very great importance for this reason. I have given you as clearly as I can the reasons on which I found my opinion as to whether a man is drunk or sober. My opinion is that no such combination of conditions can be caused by any cause except alcoholic stimulation.

3254. I suggest in spite of very great excitement that that would not cause dilation of the pupils or congestion of the eyes?—You have to take into consideration the whole of the circumstances connected with the case. You cannot say that a man is drunk taking one symptom if he has two symptoms.

3255. It is not because the two symptoms are noticeable when people are drunk that they indicate that a person is drunk?—I do not know what you mean. You want a number of symptoms. You cannot tell that a man is drunk by one symptom alone. You want a number of different symptoms.

3256. You have not many symptoms?—How many do you want?

3257. You found a number of favourable symptoms in us. You found steadiness of gait?—You had got dilation of the pupils.

3258. You found the gait steady?—I could not say your gait was unsteady when it was steady.

3259. May I ask you whether you examined any other prisoners that night?—Yes.

3260. Had you examined any between 12 o'clock and 1 o'clock?—I examined one at a quarter past 12, and one at half past 12.

3261. Was there one in evening dress?—That I could not tell you.

3262. You do not remember?—No.

3263. Where was he standing?—I fancy I examined him in the passage where I examined you.

3264. You do not examine them in your room?—No, not for drunkenness. There is a passage there about twelve paces long where I can get one to walk a certain distance.

3265. May I ask you whether the form of certificate in this case has often been given by you—not drunk, but recovering from the effects of excessive drinking?—It has been given by me several times.

3266. Is it not a sort of common form?—It is not common form. I do sometimes use that form when I find them in that state.

3267. You say it is not a usual form?—Not usual.

3268. But you do give it sometimes?—Yes, when necessity arises; it requires to be somewhat in that fashion.

3269. You still contend that the three symptoms which you noticed would be produced only through drunkenness?—I say this, that the three combined, dilated and inactive pupils, congested conjunctiva, with parched lips, and smelling strongly of drink, were the result of recent excessive alcoholism.

3270. (Mr. Lavalette.) Supposing I took a glass of whisky at lunch to-day, and I have had nothing since then, and supposing you were to examine me at the present moment, I am sure you would see my pupils dilated, and I am sure you would see my lips parched?—Are you influenced by drink, then?

3271. Let me ask you this question. If you were to examine me now, and you saw all those symptoms, and you smelt me of whisky, would you say I was drunk or was suffering from the effects of drink?—It would depend on how I found you. If I found you with parched lips, and breath smelling strongly of drink, I should say most probably that you were recovering from the effects of it.

3272. You would?—Yes, very probably.

3273. (Chairman.) I want to ask you one or two general questions before I ask you some questions as to the particular case which is now occupying the attention of the Commission. What are the terms of your remuneration while holding office?—I am paid so much per year by the police authorities for attending on the police. As to those examinations which are made after 7 o'clock in the evening 7s. 6d. is charged for the examination, and during the day 3s. 6d. is charged for the examination—that is, from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.

3274. As I understand, you are paid a salary by whom?—By the police authorities.

3275. That is a settled salary per annum?—Yes.

3276. What have you to do for that?—To attend the men in case of sickness, injury, and other things of that kind.

3277. The men of the C Division?—Yes, the men of the Vine Street Sub-division of the C Division.

3278. Besides your attendance as surgeon on members of the Force, you have certain other duties, I gather?—Yes.

3279. You have a room assigned to you at the police station—Vine Street, for instance?—Yes, which I make my consulting room for the constables, and I stay there in the evening from half past 10 to 2 in the morning.

3280. Why do you stay there?—If I were to go to bed at 10 o'clock I might have cases coming in after that.

3281. Do you mean constables' cases?—Yes, sometimes drink cases and sometimes injured cases, and if I were to go to bed I might have to get up to attend to those cases.

3282. Is it part of your regular employment to attend upon any prisoner in the cell by request of the inspector or by request of the prisoner?—Yes.

3283. Are the terms of your engagement in writing?—No, not in that regard, but simply with reference to attending the Police.

3284. They are in writing with regard to attending the Police?—Yes. I am appointed by the Home Secretary.

3285. Can you tell me what the form is?—I cannot. Perhaps the superintendent can tell you.

3286. Perhaps you will send it on to us?—Yes.

3287. Perhaps you will send us a copy of the letter or document appointing you?—Yes. I think it is simply mentioned in the General Orders of the day that so and so has been appointed divisional surgeon to such and such division or sub-division.

3288. It does not define your duties at all?—No, not beyond that. I would not like to bind myself to anything of that kind.

3289. Take this case. Supposing Inspector Berry had said to you, "Dr. Mitchell, will you come and examine the prisoner in No. 3 cell?" would you be bound to do it?—It is not a question of being bound to do it. I consider it part of my duty.

3290. Would it be a duty that you have entered into as part of a contract which you have made with the Commissioner of Police?—I do not think so.

3291. But certainly if Inspector Berry told you to do it you would do it. The remuneration you are paid per annum would not cover services you had not rendered?—No.

3292. Who would pay you in that case?—Most of the prisoners pay themselves. They are fined in the morning so much, with the cost of the medical examination, and it is usually paid.

3293. The case I put to you is this. Supposing Inspector Berry told you to do it, I understand you to say you would not be bound to do it; but supposing he told you, or asked you to do it, and you did in fact examine the prisoner, who is liable to you for the fee?—The Receiver or the Commissioners—either the Commissioners of Police or the Receiver.

3294. You would expect the Police to pay you in that case?—Decidedly. They give you a certificate to the effect that you have attended so and so at a given hour, and you take that with you.

3295. Supposing the prisoner asks for your attendance and your examination, does he expect to pay you?—You receive a certificate from the officer in charge, and if the individual—the prisoner—himself chooses to pay we always accept the money. It is often done.

3296. Does a prisoner very often himself pay the money?—Yes.

3297. What is the fee?—7s. 6d. between 7 in the evening and 7 in the morning, and 3s. 6d. between 7 in the morning and 7 in the evening.

3298. Do prisoners or persons apprehended ever complain of having to pay your fee?—No.

3299. On this occasion was it Inspector Berry who asked you to come and examine the prisoners?—I do not remember.

Dr. Alexander Mitchell.

30 July 1906.

3300. That was at 2.30 in the morning. That was two hours after the time they had been first taken to the cells?—Yes.

3301. What were you asked to go there for?—To examine them, to see their condition, and to certify whether they were drunk or sober.

3302. When you took them up the passage in order to examine them, the problem that you set yourself was to determine whether they were drunk or sober?—Yes.

3303. They were both sober?—They were both undoubtedly sober.

3304-5. May I ask you why you did not stop in your certificate, having formed a judgment as to their then condition, at the words "drunk" or "sober"?—I am supposed to express my opinion of the men's condition fully in my certificate.

3306. By whom are you supposed to do that?—It is always expected of me. I was requested by the inspector in charge.

3307. A moment ago you said that the problem which you set yourself to determine was whether these two men were drunk or sober at the time you examined them?—That is so. Quite right.

3308. That was the problem?—That was the problem. That is scarcely the way of putting it. It was to express my opinion as to their condition, as a matter of fact.

3309. Who asked you to express your opinion as to their condition?—The inspector who requested my attendance.

3310. You do not remember who that was?—No. It might have been Berry or Bex.

3311. How was the wish conveyed to you? Do you remember the words used?—He wished me to examine the condition of this prisoner.

3312. That I respectfully suggest to you means whether he is drunk or sober?—He wishes an expression of opinion altogether—whether the man is suffering from sickness, injury, drunkenness, or whatever it may be.

3313. I should not have thought it was any part of your duty to say what was his condition three hours before the time of the examination?—I may have expressed my opinion, in consequence of what I saw, that he was recovering from the effects of excessive drinking. It would be a very correct thing to do.

3314. Were you not asked simply to say whether they were drunk or sober?—I was asked to express my opinion as to their condition.

3315. Those were the exact words?—As far as I recollect. The usual expression that is applied to these people is: "Examine this man's condition and report to me."

3316. I must not read the names, because it would be unfair to the persons concerned?—I quite agree with you.

3317. But I find on this very day "At 11.50 p.m. I examined [——] and found him drunk.—Alexander Mitchell"?—That is so. Quite right.

3318. I find this later: "I examined at 12.15 a.m. [——] and found him drunk"?—I note every case in my book.

3319. Is that your certificate or not?—That is my certificate.

3320. That is in the Occurence Book?—Perfectly correct.

3321. May I ask why when you came to deal with Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette you did not adopt the same form and say, "I examined at 2.30 a.m. Maurice A. Gerothwohl and found him sober"?—I say I found him "Not drunk." I put the note down as I found him.

3322. Then follow the words—"but recovering from the effects of excessive drinking"?—I thought it my duty to put down all I could find.

3323. In the case of the other certificate, you say categorically the man was drunk, and you do not put down anything to indicate anything in his favour. You do not indicate any symptoms?—I have those in my private book.

3324. Why did you not keep the words "Recovering from the effects of excessive drinking" in your private note book in the case of Dr. Gerothwohl?—I did not think it was the correct thing to do.

3325. In the former case your evidence was telling in favour of the constables who had arrested the two men with regard to whom you gave certificates?—I defined the condition of the individuals I examined at the time.

3326. The condition of being drunk?—That was their condition; they were drunk.

3327. I am only trying to find out the reason of this?—The reason is this. Men may be recovering from excessive drinking and be sober. I note it in the book in the same form as that. In many cases you get people who are not drunk, but who are just recovering from the effects of drink. It is only fair to yourself that you should enter their condition at the time you examined them.

3328. In that case would it not be far fairer to make a full report in a case in which your verdict is adverse to the person accused?—I could put it all in, but what you are expected to do by the police is to certify whether the man is drunk or not.

3329. I follow that, but you come there as a distinguished professional man to express an unbiassed judgment?—That is so.

3330. Does it not occur to you that the somewhat lengthy entry you make with regard to Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette is an entry in favour of the police?—I do not think so at all. It is the usual form of entry I make in such cases.

3331. Does it not strike you that it is in favour of the police?—When you examine a man's condition, you are supposed to give your certificate free from bias.

3332. When you examined these two men who came from the cells—they were persons who had been arrested some time before by the police for being drunk and disorderly—you found them sober?—Yes.

3333. You begin your certificate by saying you found them "recovering from the effects of excessive drinking"?—Yes, but not drunk; and that was the reason I said they did show the effects of drink—the dilation of the pupils, the breath, and the parched lips.

3334. I asked you what was the problem, and you said it was to determine whether the men were drunk or sober, and that your verdict with regard to their condition at 2.30 and at 2.45 was that they were sober. Do you think it was necessary for you to ask yourself the further problem what was their condition three hours before?—In similar cases I always enter it in that way.

3335. Did Dr. Gerothwohl ask you to enter up your view as to what his condition was some time before?—No, he did not.

3336. As a medical man of experience, do you not think it is rather a difficult thing to determine from such symptoms as you have described what the condition of a man was three hours before?—Having regard to the fact that the three symptoms I discovered are symptoms of drunkenness, I certified that they were recovering from the effects of drunkenness.

3337. No, you say "from the effects of excessive drinking"?—Yes.

3338. Why did you not say they had been drunk, or use some form of words such as that, or they might have been drunk?—I might have said that, but I wanted to give an honest certificate.

3339. Why use the words "recovering from the effects of excessive drinking"?—Those words represented the condition I saw.

3340. Why did you use such words as "excessive drinking," which are ambiguous?—I thought that was rather in favour of the prisoners. I did not want to say they were drunk when I had not seen them.

3341. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Supposing you found a man with his eyes dilated, lips parched, and with a smell of drink, in all probability you would think it showed he had been drinking to excess?—I think so.

3342. But it may also mean he has not been drinking to excess, but he is in a state of great excitement?—That would not account for his condition then.

3343. It would account, if he had been drinking whisky, for example, for his breath smelling of whisky, and then he would have his lips parched and his eyes dilated, and if he was under great excitement in the ordinary course, he would be likely to have the same three symptoms as if he was suffering from the effects of drink?—Yes.

3344. Supposing a man has had two or three glasses of whisky during the evening, his breath would smell of whisky?—Yes.

3345. And his lips would be parched and his eyes dilated in consequence to a great extent. That is what would happen, would it not, if a man was very much excited? You would find his eyes dilated, and his lips parched?—Yes. I do not admit all the same that in every case of excitement you get dilation of pupils.

3346. I am not asking you that. I rather understood you to say that it was a symptom which you find in conditions of excitement?—You might find it.

3347. It is consistent with a person suffering from excitement?—Yes, I would put it in that way.

3348. That is what I understood you to have told us. Therefore, although I quite follow what you say, when you see a man suffering from or manifesting those three symptoms you would think he very probably had been drinking to excess?—Yes, that is so.

3349. But those three symptoms are also consistent with his not having been drinking to excess, but being under great excitement and having some alcoholic liquor?—So much depends on idiosyncracies with regard to drink. Take excitement. I know that excitement does intensify the action of alcohol, and people become intoxicated in that way, perhaps, having taken very little alcohol comparatively; the effects more rapidly wear off than with others.

3350. I understood from what you told me, with which I rather thought you would agree, that the symptoms were consistent with these men being perfectly sober, although you would think it very probable that they had been drinking more than was good for them?—To excess.

3351. If it is consistent also with an innocent interpretation, I do not follow why you did not give them the benefit of that?—I put down what I considered the correct thing at the time, and I want to put down everything that I think is right. I do not want to be on one side more than on the other. I may say the most painful duty I have to perform in connection with police work is with regard to these cases of disputed drunkenness. I would oftentimes a thousand times rather certify a man sober than drunk, but we are obliged to perform our duty.

3352. In your opinion, as I understand you, I think you told us once, but I want to have it quite clear, when you saw them at 2.30, to use your own words, they were undoubtedly both sober?—They were undoubtedly.

3353. If they were undoubtedly both sober at 2.30, they could not have been very drunk at a quarter past twelve?—It depends on the amount of drink they had taken. In my opinion both these gentlemen are not men who drink much at all, and therefore three whiskies and a pint of ale or lager beer was quite sufficient.

3354. At seven o'clock in the evening?—It was after seven o'clock in the evening. One whisky was at eleven o'clock, and one, I think, after, but I say the excitement supervening with regard to the arrest was quite sufficient with the whisky they had taken to render them drunk at the time they were arrested.

3355. You mean to say they had a certain amount of alcohol, and then if they were arrested and brought to the station and got very excited in consequence of that arrest, that might make them appear to be drunk?—That is so.

3356. Then the manifestations of drunkenness must have very rapidly disappeared at the police station?—I have seen cases of men brought in there drunk to all intents and purposes who have drunk very little, and three-quarters of an hour afterwards I have found them to be perfectly sober. I simply gave my opinion on their condition at the time I examined them.

3357. One question about this certificate. You say you found them recovering from the effects of excessive drinking. If there had been this excitement which you have told us of, would you describe that properly as excessive drinking?—Two and a half hours after the occasion had they not been drinking a considerable quantity they would not have shown any symptoms at all.

3358. With regard to the smell of drink. Would anybody be able to detect what they had been drinking from the smell?—I smelt distinctly in the breath of both whisky, and probably wine and beer.

3359. Why do you say probably wine and beer?—Wine and beer ferment in the stomach and produce sour conditions. In Dr. Gerothwohl's case it was particularly marked, but in the other man it was not.

3360. That would depend on the condition of the stomach?—Yes, and the drink would not oxidise in a stuffy police cell as it would outside. After all, speaking of drunkenness, it is difficult to say when a man is really drunk. My own opinion is this: Given an individual who through excessive indulgence in alcoholic stimulants becomes a danger to himself or the public, or an annoyance to the public, or commits acts against his own interests through his having overindulged in stimulants, that man is drunk. Some people run away with the idea that unless a man falls on the floor or in the gutter, and cannot get out of it, he is not drunk, but that is not my opinion.

3361. What I was trying to find from you was with regard to the smell. How long do you think the smell would last from a man who had taken, we will say, two whiskies and sodas from 11 o'clock to 12.15? How long would he continue to smell?—So much depends. If he is in the open air it would pass off in half an hour where oxidisation is going on rapidly, but if that man is in a stuffy police cell it might last two or three hours or longer. I have often found that.

3362. When you examined them, and they had been in a stuffy police cell for two hours and three-quarters, and when you found them still smelling, would that be from two whiskies and sodas?—Probably two or three whiskies is all they had taken altogether, but they are not men who drink much. They are not drinking men at all. I do not say anything of the kind.

3363. And I suppose you would also agree that the great excitement under which they were apparently suffering when they were arrested would, or might, cause people to think that they were drunk?—Probably they were drunk for a moment, for the time being.

3364. You mean drunk from excitement?—In consequence of the alcohol they had taken, its action being accentuated through excitement, which is a very common thing.

3365. A man may become intoxicated without taking alcohol at all?—Yes, from taking coffee sometimes.

3366. Anything that is very stimulating and exciting?—Yes.

3367. And it may be only conversation that may cause it?—Yes, perhaps it might.

3368. (Mr. Dickinson.) When you were asked to certify and express your opinion as to their condition, did you know who it was you were going to examine?—I did not. I was told two gentlemen down in the cells wanted to see me as to their condition.

3369. When did you first become aware of the fact that these were the same men that you had seen in the dock?—I do not know that they are the same men now. I could not swear as to their identity. I merely passed through the charge room in a hurry to get out of it, and I saw a struggle going on in the dock. Whether it be those now I cannot tell. I could not swear to one of them.

3370. Did you know you were being asked to examine them at their request?—I did not ask that at all. I was simply asked to examine those men as to their condition.

3371. Is this an accurate description of what took place—it is what Dr. Gerothwohl said—"Dr. Mitchell examined me and looked at my eyes with an instrument. I said, 'Surely you cannot say I look drunk,' to which he said, 'Well, perhaps; but you may have had time to recover by now'"?—No doubt I did say something of that kind. I cannot remember the exact words, but that may be so.

3372. Then he says, "He examined my eyes with an instrument and asked me what I had had to drink. I said I had had one laager beer at dinner and a whisky and soda later." Is that right?—Yes.

3373. "Then he called Police Constable C R. 43 and asked him what was the charge, and then, for the first time, I heard Police Constable C R. 43 say 'Brawling in Piccadilly, and shoving people off the pavement.'" Do you recollect that?—There was some conversation, but I did not pay any regard to it.

Dr. Alexander Mitchell.

3374. Why did you ask Police Constable C R. 43 what was the charge?—Now I remember it. It is a long time ago—last April.

3375. Now you remember it?—I remember asking what led up to the arrest.

3376. You were anxious to know a little of the history of the case?—Yes.

3377. Did not he inform you they had been taken up for brawling in Piccadilly and shoving people off the pavement?—If that is the expression used by C R. 43 it rather proves that there had not been, or, at all events, it did not mean that they had been drinking, but they were there for the brawling.

3378. Then it is correct to say when you were examining these gentlemen scientifically you felt also bound to ask the policeman what they were there for?—I asked what they were doing, and what they were arrested for.

3379. I presume that had some effect on your mind in saying that they were recovering from excessive drinking?—The constable did not mention about the drinking at all. Would you read it again?

3380. "For the first time I heard Police Constable C R. 43 say 'Brawling in Piccadilly and shoving people off the pavement.'" I put it to you, did that make you think there was an occasion on which they had been drunk prior to that in the evening?—I did not say so. If that is all that the constable said then it does not mention anything about drink at all.

3381. I understand that when you were examining these prisoners in each case there was a police constable present?—There always is.

3382. When you were examining Dr. Gerothwohl there was Police Constable C R. 43, and when you were examining Mr. Lavalette, is this correct, that you made him walk down the passage and made him spell his name?—Because I could not put it down without his spelling it, as a matter of fact.

3383. "He spelt his name according to the French pronunciation, and on hearing this Police Constable C R. 6 spelt it in the English way." Do you remember that happening?—No. I do not.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) These gentlemen behind me (Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette) say it ought to be Police Constable C R. 43 and not C R. 6.

(The Witness.) I do not remember, as a matter of fact.

3384. (Mr. Dickinson.) You cannot remember it in the case of Mr. Lavalette, but you remember it in the case of Dr. Gerothwohl. You did not talk to the policeman about him?—Yes.

3385. You cannot remember whether in the case of Mr. Lavalette you did or not?—I really forget.

3386. (Mr. Whitmore.) One question as to the nature of your appointment. You said you were appointed, you thought, by the Home Secretary?—I understand so.

3387. Do you understand by that that the appointment is made by the Home Office as distinct from Scotland Yard?—Yes.

3388. The Commissioners of Police have nothing to do with appointing you?—I do not think so.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) We will get the terms of the appointment.

3389. (Mr. Whitmore.) Is your appointment for life?—As long as I behave myself.

3390. Then I think I may say it is for life?—I hope so.

3391. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Were you told anything of what occurred before you examined Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette?—No. I was simply asked to come and examine them as to their condition.

3392. You did not know they had protested as to their arrest?—No.

3393. That might have influenced your mind?—If one had known all about it it might, but I knew nothing of the case at all till I examined them.

3394. If you were told they were coming to the station to give evidence on behalf of a third man and were in a great state of excitement about being arrested that might have influenced your mind?—The excitement was there, but I did not know anything about it. Of course I have heard of it since.

3395. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) As to the form of your certificate. Is it in the interests of the prisoner in many cases that your opinion should be known not only as to his condition at the time you see him, but his condition at the time of his arrest?—Yes, for many reasons.

3396. If you find a man drunk when you examine him he must necessarily have been drunk when he was arrested, because he has no opportunity of getting drunk in the cells?—No.

3397. Then there is another condition in which you find a man—sober, but he may have been drinking?—That is so.

3398. Is that your way of dealing with it in the certificate?—Yes, it is usual to put it in that form: "I examined so-and-so and found he had been drinking and was excited, but he was not, in my opinion, drunk."

3399. A third case may arise when you examine a man and find he is then sober, and in your opinion he has not been drinking at all. Would you put that in your certificate also?—Yes.

3400. So in the interests of the prisoner it is desirable they should have your opinion not only as to his condition at the time you examine him, but some time previously?—Yes.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I have now the regulation. It is Regulation 47: "Divisional Surgeons are appointed by the Secretary of the State on the recommendation of the Chief Surgeon endorsed and submitted by the Commissioners." I think, sir, those are all the witnesses we propose to call, and all, so far as I know, that can throw any light upon this matter.

(Chairman.) There is one other witness, and that is Timmings. He is in court, I think.

CHARLES EDWARD TIMMINGS, sworn.

Mr. C. E. Timmings.

3401. (Chairman.) What is your age?—Nineteen.

3402. Nineteen last birthday?—Yes.

3403. Are you living now with your father?—Yes.

3404. What is your father's occupation?—A coach man.

3405. Will you give his full name?—John Timmings.

3406. I understand that you were arrested in Piccadilly on Saturday, the 7th April last?—Yes.

3407. Would you state in your own way to us what took place? But before doing so you had better say something about your having been ill. I understand you had been ill?—Yes.

3408. What was the nature of your illness?—Acute rheumatism.

3409. Had you been in the infirmary?—Yes.

3410. Under Dr. Potter?—Yes.

3411. How long had you been in the infirmary?—Three weeks.

3412. And then three weeks in the convalescent home?—Yes.

3413. How long had you been back home when this occurrence took place on boat-race night?—Just on two months.

3414. You had been living at home for two months?—Yes.

3415. After leaving the convalescent home?—No, it would be a week; two months altogether.

3416. What was your occupation generally before this illness?—Groom.

3417. On Boat Race night you were out of employment still, after the illness?—Yes.

3418. Had the doctor put you under any treatment? Had he told you anything about drink?—He told me not to touch any intoxicating liquor, only I could have a glass or two every now and then.

3419. Had you been at home on this Boat Race Saturday?—Yes, I had.

3420. The greater part of the day?—Yes.

3421. What time did you leave home in the evening? About eight o'clock, and then I came back again and went out again. I took a blow on the 'bus.

3422. What time did you go out the second time?—About ten past eleven.

3423. What induced you to go out?—I thought a blow on the 'bus would do me better than sticking indoors.

3424. Were you quite sober then?—I was.

3425. Will you tell us what took place. Where did you go on the 'bus and what did you do when you got there, and how came you to be arrested?—I had a glass of bitter in the Redcliffe Hotel.

3426. Where is that?—In the Fulham Road.

3427. That is before you got on the 'bus?—Yes.

3428. Then you went on the 'bus?—Yes.

3429. Where did you get off the 'bus?—At the Leicester Arms.

3430. Is that in Leicester Square?—Yes, or it may be called the Leicester Hotel.

3431. What did you do then?—I had a glass of bitter there.

3432. About what time was it when you left the Leicester Hotel?—A few minutes before closing.

3433. That would be a little before twelve?—Yes.

3434. Which direction did you walk in when you came out?—I came down on the off-hand side of the road and crossed over by Shaftesbury Avenue on to the left hand again.

3435. That is the south side?—Yes, by the Church

3436. Did you get into Piccadilly?—Yes.

3437. On the south side?—Yes.

3438. And walked along on the pavement?—Yes.

3439. You got as far as the Church?—No, I could not get quite as far as the Church, because there was a big crowd and a rather biggish constable pushed me against a cab wheel. I picked myself up, and as soon as I picked myself up the constable arrested me. I told him he was making a mistake, and he told me to come along with him—he would see all about that.

3440. Should you know the constable again?—Yes, I should; by the rough way he handled me I should know him.

3441. What kind of man was he—a biggish man or a small man?—A very big man.

3442. Had he any moustache or beard?—Yes, rather a heavy moustache.

3443. When he said "We will soon see about that" what did he do with you?—He took me very nearly up to the top of Swallow Street.

3444. Is Police Constable 43 C R. in Court. (The constable stood forward.) Do you recognise anybody?—He is the gentleman.

3445. He is the man who arrested you in Piccadilly?—Yes.

3446. Then you got to the top of Swallow Street?—Yes. That gentleman handed me over to a young constable.

3447. Would you recognise him if you saw him?—Yes, I think I should.

3448. Have you seen him yet?—No, I have not seen him, but I think I should recognise him.

3449. Let Police Constables Divers and Wallington come in. (The constables stood forward.)—That is the gentleman. (Pointing to Police Constable Divers, 427 C.)

3450. He took you from the first constable?—Yes.

3451. And took you to the police station?—Yes.

3452. What happened to you there?—He put me into the dock.

3453. What took place then, or what attracted your notice soon after?—A sort of a noise going on.

3454. Perhaps you had better tell us was anybody else in the room when you were put in the dock?—Yes, there were about a dozen; I do not know what sort of people they were, but they seemed to be arguing the point with Inspector Berry. I do not know what they were arguing over.

3455. You say Inspector Berry. Had you known Inspector Berry before?—Not till I heard his name.

3456. You had never been to Vine Street before?—No.

3457. The inspector whom you afterwards found to be Inspector Berry was in the room when you were put in the dock?—Yes.

3458. Was he taking to other people?—Yes, he was arguing the point there.

3459. While that was taking place, what happened?—There was a terrible rush outside, and then I happened to see two gentlemen being thrown about just like a football and these two gentlemen happened to turn up.

3460. Do you recognise the two gentlemen whom you saw?—Yes.

3461. Are they in Court now?—There are the two gentlemen. (Pointing.)

3462. Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette?—Yes.

3463. Have you seen either of those two gentlemen since the time you left the police court on Wednesday, April 11th?—I have not, and have never seen them in my life before I met them in the police station.

3464. And never seen them since you saw them in the police court?—No, because I have been down in the country since.

3465. Have you had any letters from them?—No, no letters.

3466. No communication?—No correspondence whatever since the case was tried.

3467. Now come back to what took place in the charge room at Vine Street. Were they put in the dock?—Yes, they were pushed in.

3468. You had better describe in your own way what took place?—These two gentlemen were holding out their cards, and about a dozen voices all holloaed out: "We do not want that. What is the name and address?" Just like that. Then I saw one constable take the gentleman's stick away. The two gentlemen were shouting with excitement and very upset, and they kept on denying the charges and saying they had come to speak on my behalf.

3469. Were they talking loudly?—Yes, sir, very excited.

3470. How were the constables behaving?—They were all round in a bunch standing on the off-side of the dock. One constable came up, I think it was the constable who arrested me, and broke the walking-stick.

3471. The constable who arrested you, that is the big man?—Yes, that is the one I think took the walking-stick.

3472. It was the same man who arrested you who took the stick?—Yes, that is what I think.

3473. Did you say anything yourself at this time?—No, not at all—I was weeping and crying, that is what I was doing.

3474. Did you hear the charge read over by Inspector Berry?—I did.

3475. Did you say anything?—No.

3476. Why not?—Because I did not know what to say and did not know what to do.

3477. Is it true that you were drunk in St. James's Street?—No, I was not drunk.

3478. Is it true that you were disorderly?—No.

3479. Were you booing at all?—No, I was not. I was entirely by myself.

3480. Were you arm in arm with any men?—No, sir.

3481. Then I need hardly ask you, you were not arm in arm with Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette?—Never.

Mr. C. E. Timmings.

30 July 1906.

3482. Did you notice either Dr. Gerothwohl or Mr. Lavalette in Piccadilly?—No.

3483. The first time that you saw them was in the dock?—Yes, the first time I saw these gentlemen was when they were in the dock with me.

3484. Did you hear which of the constables gave the charge, or was taking the lead in the matter?—Yes.

3485. Who was that?—The constable who arrested me.

3486. What did he say?—He seemed to be the spokesman, as far as I could make out.

3487. What did he say?—I could not tell you what he said.

3488. Have you anything to say further as to what took place in the charge room?—No.

3489. Do you remember going to the cells with them?—Yes, certainly.

3490. Did you hear them ask for anything?—Yes, they asked for Dr. Stewart, I think his name was.

3491. And for another gentleman?—Yes, and also for pen and paper.

3492. What was the answer. They knocked and rung two or three times, and no answer came. Then presently a constable appeared and he promised to send for the gentlemen.

3493. Was any request made by them for a doctor before they left the charge room with you?—Yes, before they went to the cells there was a request to send for two gentlemen.

3494. Was the same request made again afterwards when they were in the cells?—Yes.

3495. Do you remember having any conversation with Dr. Gerothwohl, that is the bigger of the two?—Yes, he asked me if I was hurt, and I told him not much to make a fuss about, but I felt a little pain.

3496. Did you tell him anything else?—No.

3497. About your illness, for instance?—I told him about the illness when we got to know each other. I told him it was more illness than drunkenness, and that the constable had made a mistake.

3498. Did the two gentlemen ring the bell, and so on?—Yes, and kicked at the doors, but no answer appeared.

3499. Did anybody come?—No, not for about a quarter of an hour afterwards.

3500. Do you remember the inspector coming in to say their doctor could not attend?—No, I was sitting down in the corner and the inspector opened the trap-door and I heard the conversation that Dr. Stewart could not attend, and they could see the police doctor, and they immediately said yes.

3501. You say they were very excited?—Yes.

3502. So far as you could tell, or so far as your opinion is worth anything, were they sober or drunk when they were in the dock?—If those two gentlemen were drunk at that time, they would never be drunk in their lives. That is my opinion, the gentlemen were not drunk. I am sure of that.

3503. Did the police send for your father?—Yes.

3504. You asked them to do that?—Yes.

3505. Did you make any reply when the charge was read out to you?—No, I did not.

3506. Why did you not do so?—I could not tell you. I was so upset.

3507. Did your father come?—No, because he did not like to break the news to my mother, as she was lying dangerously ill, and as they released me at 12 o'clock on the Sunday morning, I met my father coming up.

3508. They let you out on your own recognisances?—Yes.

3509. You met your father?—Yes, I met him coming up Piccadilly.

3510. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) What time was it when they let you out?—Twelve o'clock on Sunday morning.

3511. You had then been under arrest nearly 12 hours?—Yes.

3512. Why did you not ask to see the doctor yourself?—Because I could not afford it.

3513. Had you ever been arrested or taken to the police court before?—Never.

3514. Never summoned there?—No, never.

3515. Never been in any trouble of the kind before?—Never.

3516. Since this occurrence, you have, I think, been in employment?—Yes, in a country place.

3517. On a job?—Yes.

3518. You have only come to London a few days ago?—Yes, a week ago.

3519. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I suppose you can read?—A little.

3520. Have you been reading an account of this inquiry in the newspapers?—I saw one piece about a month ago, when there was another case on; and when a bit of this cropped up and I bought a paper not so very long ago and saw the account.

3521. Did you see what Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette had told these gentlemen in the inquiry in the newspapers?—I cannot say that I did.

3522. I want to know whether you did or not?—There was not much about it.

3523. But do you read a newspaper nearly every day?—Yes, when I get the chance.

3524. You get the chance most days, do you not?—Yes.

3525. Have you taken the trouble to see what the newspapers said about what these gentlemen have been telling the Commissioners?—Yes, I have been trying to follow it up as much as ever I could.

3526. You have made yourself pretty well acquainted with what these gentlemen have told the Commissioners?—You could not help that.

3527. I suppose you have made a statement in writing to some gentlemen, quite lately, have you not?—I did this morning.

3528. So that you have seen all there was to be seen in the newspapers before you made that statement?—Certainly I did.

3529. (Chairman.) Perhaps you would not mind my interposing, as this is a witness who came to the Commission. I should like to ask him who the gentleman to whom he made the statement was. (To the Witness.) Who was it?—This gentleman here (pointing).

3530. Mr. Leslie, the secretary?—Yes.

3531. At the offices of the Commission?—Yes.

3532. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I only want to get the dates. That was made this morning, I understand?—Yes.

3533. You say you are 19 years of age. Let me ask a question about you. Are you a Londoner?—Yes.

3534. Born and bred in London?—Yes.

3535. I suppose you went to school until you were 15?—No, I went to school till I was about 14.

3536. You have lived in London and know London ways?—Yes.

3537. After you left school, where did you go?—I was working in Gloucester Road at Cecil Roy's, the stationers.

3538. What as?—As paper boy, you may say.

3539. Taking papers round in the morning?—Yes.

3540. Were you regularly employed there?—Yes.

3541. For how long?—I was 16 months there.

3542. Just after that. Did you go straight from school to Cecil Roy's?—Yes, and from there I went to service.

3543. You left school at the age of fourteen?—Yes.

3544. You would be fifteen and a half when you left Cecil Roy's?—Yes.

3545. What did you do after you left there?—I went from there to Mr. Young's, the jobmaster.

3546. Did you go straight from Cecil Roy's?—Yes.

3547. What were you with Mr. Young?—Carriage groom.

3548. How long were you there?—I was on a season job about three months.

3549. What else have you done?—I went from there with Mr. Talbot, as pony boy.

3550. Who is Mr. Talbot?—He lives at 21, Evelyn Gardens.

3551. A private gentleman?—Yes.

3552. How long were you with him?—A matter of six or eight months.

3553. Anybody else?—Then I went from there to Captain Weatherby's.

3554. Where does he live?—He is in the 7th Dragoon Guards.

3555. How long were you there with him?—A matter of about a month with him. Then I went from there to Hampstead.

3556. Who did you go to at Hampstead?—Mr. Salmon and Gluckstein.

3557. Can you give me his address?—Yes. 3, Lingfield Gardens.

3558. How long were you with him?—I have been there ever since up to this occurence—a matter of about three years.

3559. You have been with him three years?—Yes; up to the time of this occurrence, before my illness.

3560. You mean up to the time you were ill?—Yes.

3561. What were you doing with Mr. Salmon?—I was second coachman.

3562. Did you leave him because you were ill?—No, he was giving up his horses. That was just before I felt queer.

3563. During the whole of that time were you a teetotaller or not a teetotaller?—No, I was not a teetotaller.

3564. Have you ever been drunk?—No.

3565. Never?—No. My good characters will bear that out.

3566. Do I understand after you left Mr. Salmon you got ill?—Yes.

3567. Acute rheumatism?—Yes.

3568. I do not know whether I misunderstood, but did you say the doctor told you not to have any intoxicating liquor, but to have a glass or two now and then?—It would not hurt me, but not to overdo it. I must not get drunk.

3569. No doctor would ever suggest that you were to get drunk. You mean you were not to take any intoxicating liquor, but you might have a glass or two now and then?—I asked him whether I could have a glass or two of beer when I left the infirmary, and he said, "Yes, occasionally."

3570. Could you give me the date when you left the infirmary?—It would be very near three months.

3571. Three months from now?—Yes, it must be.

3572. We are now at the very end of July?—Yes.

3573. What month did this occurrence happen?—I could not tell you—not now.

3574. You could not tell me when this occurrence happened?—April, or something.

3575. Is that your recollection that you left the infirmary three months ago?—Yes, to the best of my recollection.

3576. That is your definite recollection?—Yes.

3577. We are now in July. Three months would be July, June, and May. Do you think you left the infirmary in May?—Yes.

3578. Did you leave the infirmary before or after this happened?—Afterwards.

3579. The date when this happened was the 8th of April. Had you left the infirmary before that?—I had been from a convalescent home. I had come out of the infirmary three weeks, and a week afterwards I was arrested.

3380. You are wrong in thinking you came out of the infirmary three months ago. Have you been back to the infirmary since this happened?—No.

3581. It is obviously a mistake, and we will clear that up. Do you say you had been out of the infirmary and the convalescent home for a week before this happened?—Yes.

3582. You are sure about that?—Yes, I am sure of that.

3583. You had been living at home?—Yes.

3584. I suppose you had no intoxicating liquor at all in the infirmary or the convalescent home?—No, they would not allow it.

3585. Had you any during the week after you came out before this night?—No; only two glasses a day, on the average.

3586. I do not think you follow my question. You had nothing to drink at all while you were in the infirmary or the convalescent home?—No, certainly not.

3587. During that time you were very bad, I understand?—Yes.

3588. Then you came out of the convalescent home?—Yes.

3589. Had you had anything to drink between the time you came out of the convalescent home and this Boat Race night, or was this Boat Race night the first time you had had anything to drink since you had been ill?—About an average, two glasses a day since I came from the convalescent home.

3590. You had an average of two glasses a day?—Yes.

3591. Had you been doing anything?—No, not then.

3592. Now, with regard to this Saturday on which this happened. What had you been doing on that Saturday?—I was indoors.

3593. The whole time?—Yes.

3594. At home?—Most part of it, till I went out and went back again, and then went out again.

3595. Had you had any beer with your dinner?—Yes, I had a glass.

3596. Did you have any before dinner?—No.

3597. Are you quite sure?—Quite sure of that.

3598. Had you been out at all before dinner?—No.

3599. Quite sure?—Quite sure.

3600. You had a glass with your dinner. When did you have the next glass?—At the Redcliffe Arms, as I said, before I started on my journey.

3601. That would be about 7 o'clock?—No.

3602. What time would that be?—When I came out at ten past 11, as I have said.

3603. Do you say you had nothing except one glass up to then?—That is all.

3604. And then you came up westwards?—Yes.

3605. Where was your father living then?—At the same place where we are living now.

3606. Where is that?—Barker Street.

3607. Is that close to where you got on the 'bus?—Yes.

3608. You got on the 'bus about a quarter to 11, was it?—About ten past.

3609. I suppose that is the time at which your father and mother ordinarily go to bed?—No.

3610. What time do they go to bed?—We had a little company, and the room was rather too hot for me, so I thought I would go out for a blow somewhere.

3611. Were the company having anything to drink?—No, they were not.

3612. What were they doing?—Having a talk over old times.

3613. Do you mean to say that they had nothing to eat or drink?—No.

3614. Had they had supper?—They had supper.

3615. But you said they had nothing to eat or drink. You must be a little bit careful?—Not to drink.

3616. They had had something to eat?—I expect so.

3617. Did you have something to eat with them?—Yes.

3618. What had you to drink with them?—A glass of cold water.

3619. Is that all your company had?—I do not know about them.

3620. You were in the same room with them?—Yes, but it was not my affair to look after them.

3621. Do you suggest to the Commissioners you cannot tell whether your father and his company were having anything to drink or not?—No, certainly not.

Mr. C. E. Timmings.

30 July 1906.

3622. How big is the room?—Need I answer that question?

3623. Yes, I ask you. Were you sitting at the same table with these other people?—No, I was not.

3624. Is it an ordinary living room?—Yes.

3625. Is it over a stable?—No, it is not.

3626. Would it be as big as from you to that furthest gentleman?—Yes, it would.

3627. About as big as that?—Yes.

3628. How many friends were there?—Only two.

3629. And your father and mother?—My mother was in bed.

3630. In the same room?—No, certainly not.

3631. There was your father, and who were the friends?—My sister and her young man. He is my friend.

3632. And who else?—Nobody.

3633. Were these the people who were talking over old times?—Yes.

3634. They had supper together?—Yes.

3635. Were you sitting together at the table with them?—I never had supper with them.

3636. Were you sitting at the table with them?—No, I was sitting on the couch.

3637. Close to?—Yes.

3638. Do you seriously tell these gentlemen you cannot tell what they had to drink when they were having supper?—No, I shall not answer that question.

3639. Although you could have touched them if you had held out your hand?—Yes, I could have touched them.

3640. When did you have supper yourself?—About 10 o'clock.

3641. Was that after this or before?—After this.

3642. How long after?—About three-quarters of an hour, I expect.

3643. Were they in the room while you were having your supper?—Yes, they were.

3644. Why did you not have yours with them?—Because I did not require it, I expect. I was in the room with my mother.

3645. Then you went out?—Yes.

3646. Did you know it was Boat Race night?—Yes, I knew it was Boat Race night. I could not help knowing that.

3647. Did you know there was generally a row in the West End on Boat Race night?—No, I did not. It was the first time I had ever been there on such an occasion.

3648. How far did you go on the 'bus?—Right up to the Leicester.

3649. Did you go alone or with a friend?—By myself entirely.

3650. How many glasses do you say you had at the Leicester?—One.

3651. And then you started to come back?—Yes.

3652. And then it was that you were arrested?—Yes.

3653. Was there a considerable crowd all round you?—Yes, there was.

3654. Right up to you in front and behind?—Yes.

3655. They were close all round, touching you?—Just like a swarm of bees.

3656. If it is said that you were walking quite by yourself with a space all round you and nobody there at all, that is not right?—It would not be right.

3657. They were all like a swarm of bees right up against you?—Yes.

3658. Were you in front of the crowd?—No, I was going along this way.

3659. Were you on the pavement?—No—I was on the pavement and yet I was not on the pavement.

3660. That means to say you were on the outside—the kerb?—Yes.

3661. As you say you were neither on nor off the pavement?—Yes.

3662. You were on the kerb?—Yes.

3663. Was this crowd stretching from you to the wall?—Yes.

3664. Right across?—Yes.

3665. Whether they were arm in arm or not they were straight across the pavement?—Yes.

3666. So that nobody could pass if they wanted to coming in the other direction?—No, I understand they could not.

3667. That is the way in which you were proceeding?—Yes.

3668. Was that the way in which you had been proceeding all the way from Piccadilly Circus?—That is the way you would have to proceed.

3669. It is quite likely if you went there. There is no doubt that is the way you had been walking all the way from Piccadilly Circus. You were just on the kerb, and there was somebody or another between you and the wall, and no foot passengers could get the other way at all?—You could not help it.

3670. Was there a great deal of shouting?—Yes, there was.

3671. Shouting all round you?—Yes.

3672. Did you feel at all inclined to shout?—No, I did not.

3673. You know what being drunk is?—Yes, I do.

3674. From your knowledge of London life you have heard of people being charged with being drunk and disorderly?—I have.

3675. You quite realise what the charge meant?—Yes, as far as that goes.

3676. Until to-day you have never suggested that you were not drunk, have you?—No.

3677. And you have had abundant opportunity of saying so?—I have, and yet I have not.

3678. The charge was read over to you at the station, was it not?—Yes.

3679. You had then an opportunity of saying you were not drunk if you wished to?—What is the use of saying it?

3680. You had an opportunity of saying it then if you wanted to?—Yes.

3681. And you said nothing?—No.

3682. As a matter of fact you were apologising to the police, were you not?—I told the constable he had made a big mistake.

3683. I want to know, is it true that you were apologising to the police in the dock, saying you were very sorry?—No.

3684. That is not true?—That is not true.

3685. You were crying, were you not?—Certainly I was.

3686. You are nineteen. Were you crying because you were under the influence of drink or what was it?—No, I was not.

3687. What was the reason?—Because I was downhearted and afraid that it would reach my mother, who was ill.

3688. If you were not guilty what were you crying about?—There you are. It is the different nature of people, I expect.

3689. Then you were taken down to the cells?—Yes.

3690. You heard these gentlemen ask for a doctor?—Yes.

3691. You heard them told that their doctor would not come, but that the Divisional Surgeon would look at them?—Yes.

3692. Was anything said as to who was to pay for him?—Not that I know of.

3693. And for all you knew they were going to get his services free?—No, because I knew that before ever it started you would have to pay for the doctor.

3694. Who do you know that from?—From what you can read in the newspapers. It is generally about 7s. 6d. handed up for the doctor's fee.

3695. You have studied this. You were all there about these matters. You were sufficiently au fait with these matters to know that if you were fined for drunkenness you would have to pay 7s. 6d. for the doctor's fee. You had not the courage or the wisdom to say that you were not drunk when you were asked?—When I was asked.

3696. The next day you were before the Police Magistrate?—Yes.

3697. He asked you several times, did he not, if you had any question to ask the witnesses?—Yes, and I said no.

3698. These witnesses had stated to the Magistrate on their oath that you were drunk?—They had.

3699. The Magistrate asked you whether you wanted to ask them any questions, and you said no?—Yes.

3700. Was that because you thought they were telling the truth?—Certainly not.

3701. Why did you not want to ask them anything?—Because I was brokenhearted over it. It was the first time I had ever been in such a place, and I wanted to get over it.

3702. Had you been asked to say whether you were guilty or not?—Mr. Denman, I think, read over the charge, and asked me if I had anything to say to the witnesses. I said no.

3703. But before that did he ask you whether you pleaded guilty or not?—No, I do not think so.

3704. Did he ask you whether you admitted being drunk?—I do not think so.

3705. Did he ask you whether you had anything to say to the witnesses, and you said no?—Yes.

3706. Did he ask you whether you had anything to say to him?—Not that I remember.

3707. Did you say all that you had to say was that the gentlemen were strangers to you?—That is what I said on Monday morning.

3708. That was before the Magistrate?—Yes.

3709. Why, if you had got anything to say to the Magistrate, did you not tell him you were not drunk?—There you are, Sir. I thought I would get it over quickly. I was told by an ex-policeman, if you want to know the truth, that the policeman had me, and he would make me pay.

3710. Who said that?—The ex-policeman said the policeman had got me and would see it through.

3711. Just repeat that again?—An ex-policeman told me to say nothing about it—to keep my mouth shut.

3712. An ex-policeman?—He had been in the police 40 years.

3713. We will find out who that is. You say he is an ex-policeman. Is that somebody who spoke to you after you were bailed?—Yes, after I came out on bail.

3714. What is his name?—I shall not give it.

3715. I shall appeal to the Commissioners. I ask you to tell me that man's name?—I cannot tell you his name, but I can find him for you. I have other witnesses who were with me to say what he said.

3716. I asked you his name a moment ago, and you told me you would not tell it to me?—Yes, but I will find him for you.

3717. You told me you would not tell it to me?—Yes.

3718. At that time did you know it or not know it, when you told me you would not tell his name?—I could find the man for you. I know where he lives.

3719. Where did you see this man?—At the Redcliffe Arms, when I was going home.

3720. On what day?—Sunday, when I was let out.

3721. What time in the morning?—About half-past one.

3722. Half-past one in the morning?—On Sunday midday.

3723. Is he a man you knew?—Yes.

3724. Is he a member of the police force now?—No, he is not.

3725. Perhaps you can send the solicitor his name and address?—Yes, I will find out.

3726. What do you say he said to you?—He said to me, "If the constable has got you it is no use your getting out of it."

3727. Is that all he said?—Yes; he said, "What is the use of saying anything?"

3728. Do you suggest that it was because of that statement that when the Magistrate asked you——?—When the Magistrate asked me, that is why I never said anything.

3729. When you got into the charge room how many people do you say there were there?—About a dozen, I should think.

3730. Are you quite sure of that?—Yes—civilians.

3731. Civilians?—They were people in private clothes.

3732. Not constables?—No.

3733. They took no part in this football business, I suppose?—No.

3734. Who do you say it was who chucked these gentlemen about like a football?—There were three constables standing outside when I went in—two or three.

3735. You mean at the door?—Yes, when I went in first.

3736. Have you seen a statement in the newspaper that a constable was called to say that only one was there? You have seen that, have you not?—There was more than one outside.

3737. Have you seen the statement in a newspaper that there was only one?—No, never.

3738. Have you not seen that?—No, not about one.

3739. Have you seen anything in the newspaper?—Not about a policeman being outside there.

3740. Do you say there were two or three out there?—Yes.

3741. When were you taken in?—When I was taken in first.

3742. Could you recognise any of them?—I cannot say that I could now.

3743. You say there were three or four there?—Yes

3744. You mean standing at the door of the police station?—Yes, standing outside.

3745. Close to the door of the police station?—Yes.

3746. Are you quite sure of that?—Yes.

3747. You were taken up and taken in by Police Constable Divers, and put in the dock?—Yes.

3748. Who do you say it was that threw these people about?—The constables who brought them in, I should think. There was a lot of excitement going on.

3749. You have pledged your word that they were thrown about like a football?—Yes.

3750. I want to know who you say did that?—They were going from one constable to the other.

3751. Who were the constables?—I could not tell you. I could see the clothes, and that was all.

3752. Was the inspector there at the time?—Yes.

3753. When first did you see Police Constable Divers? You know Police Constable Divers quite well, do you not?—Yes.

3754. You saw them all at the police station?—I saw them before I got to the police station, because I was not so drunk that I did not know them.

3755. Is that really your condition—is that a fair expression of your condition, that you were not so drunk that you did not know them?—That is so.

3756. You were under the influence of drink, but not so drunk that you did not know them?—I could not tell you the names.

3757. Why do you say that you were not so drunk that you did not know them?—Because they said I was drunk.

3758. You have more than once said it was more illness than drunkenness?—Yes.

3759. That conveys the impression, does it not, that you were drunk, but that you were more ill than drunk?—Yes.

3760. Is that what you mean to say—that it was more illness than drunkenness?—Certainly it was.

3761. But there was some drunkenness in it?—Two glasses of bitter would not knock me over.

3762. It may depend. But is that what you mean to convey—that it was more illness than drunkenness; that you were the worse for liquor, but it was because you were ill that you were so bad?—Certainly not. Two glasses of bitter would not touch me, I do not think.

Mr. C. E. Timmings.

30 July 1906.

3763. Why did you say it was more illness than drunkenness?—That was my opinion.

3764. Is that your opinion still?—Yes.

3765. Then there was something peculiar about your behaviour, was there not?—There was not the least sign of bad behaviour, or anything, or shouting on my part.

3766. What were you explaining by saying that it was more illness than drunkenness? What was more illness than drunkenness?—The policeman said I was drunk.

3767. Were you not explaining your own condition as more illness than drunkenness?—Yes.

3768. Therefore there was something that required explanation in your condition?—I cannot say that. I say I was queer, that was all.

3769. You were queer?—Yes.

3770. How did the queerness show itself?—They said I was drunk.

3771. Did you feel queer?—Not at the time.

3772. Then why explain it by saying it was more illness than drunkenness?—That is what my opinion is.

3773. As to your condition?—My condition was right enough—as right as it is now.

3774. Then why explain it in that way?—That is my way of putting it, I suppose.

3775. That is the only way you ever have put it up to now?—Yes.

(Chairman.) Have you finished with this witness?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I have put all that occurs to me at the moment, but I may have, after investigation, to ask some further questions.

(Chairman.) The Secretary, Mr. Leslie, has got his address. Do you ask any questions, Dr. Gerothwohl?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) No, sir; I leave it entirely in the Commissioners' hands.

3776. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I do not understand your position when you got to the Police Court the next morning, and you were charged before the Magistrate. You were not ill then, were you?—No, I was upset, and I thought the quieter I was the better the case would go off.

3777. Upset at finding yourself in the Police Court?—Yes.

3778. The Magistrate asked you several times whether you had anything to say?—Yes, and I thought the case would go off much quieter if I said nothing. I knew they had got me into trouble.

3779. Why could you not tell the Magistrate that you had been ill?—I did not see the necessity of it, but now it has all come out.

3780. You are 19 years of age, and you seem to know your way about fairly well. You do, do not you?—Yes.

3781. You understood the position you were in?—Yes, but I thought the quieter I was and the less I said the quieter the case would go off. I was sorry to see myself in such a position.

3782. By not saying anything you were sure to be convicted. You understood that?—I did not understand it at the moment.

3783. Did not you?—No, I did not.

3784. You understood by not saying anything you were bound to be convicted?—There you are. I did not know that at the moment. I did not think of it.

3785. I rather understood you to say you had been told that that was the best that could happen—that you had better say nothing about it because they had got you?—There you are.

3786. Saying nothing about it meant you would be convicted. You must have understood that from your reading of the Police Court proceedings. You knew all about the 7s. 6d. for the doctor?—Yes.

3787. You knew very well if you did not say anything you would be convicted?—Yes, I ought to have done in one way.

3788. Do you mean to tell us that you did not?—No, on the moment I did not think of it.

3789. But on the moment! You had ever so long to think about it. You had been in the cells all the night?—Yes.

3790. You had been let out at 12 o'clock on the day; you had gone home and had had a conversation with an ex-policeman, who as I understand told you you had better not defend it?—Yes.

3791. That is what you understood, was it?—Yes.

3792. Therefore you knew perfectly well when you went to the Police Court that if you said nothing when you were asked, and did not offer any defence, that you would be convicted?—I could not say much about that, because I wanted the case to go as quietly as ever it could, and the less I said the better. That is the way I took it.

3793. You wanted the case disposed of?—Yes.

3794. But it could only be disposed of, if you offered no defence, by your being convicted?—I was never old enough to understand that.

3795. Oh, come, you must have understood that?—I did not. My father told me when I got home that I ought to have pleaded not guilty, as I could not have been drunk.

3796. I do not understand from you what you thought was going to happen if you said nothing when the magistrate gave you the opportunity of asking questions. How did you think you could possibly be let off if you did not say you were not drunk?—There you are, sir; I could not tell you at all.

3797. Do you wish us to understand that you thought you would be let off, or what was to happen to you?—No, I knew I should get fined.

3798. You knew you were going to be fined?—Yes.

3799. Did you not think it was better to tell the magistrate that you were ill, and that you were not drunk, than it was to be fined?—I did not see much use in it at the time.

3800. Why not?—I could not tell you, but that is what I thought.

3801. You seem to have been in the habit of reading newspapers a good deal, and been in conversation with several people?—You have not been in a place like that yourself, sir, and the first time you don't feel like all these sort of things.

3802. I quite understand that when you are in the dock?—If I had been there before, perhaps I might have spoken out.

3803. I am not asking you about being in the dock. I quite understand your answer, that you were confused and upset about that, but after you had been home, and you had all night to think about it, and you had the whole of Sunday, and you had talked to your father about it?—Yes.

3804. You told your father what had happened?—Yes.

3805. Did you tell your father you were not drunk?—I told my father I was not drunk. He said: "If the policeman says you were drunk, you must have been drunk."

3806. Who said that?—My father.

3807. Your father took the view it was no use your making any defence?—There you are.

3808. Your father believed the policeman?—I expect so. They generally have their way, from what I can see of it.

3809. Who do?—The Police. That is what I have always been given to understand—that they generally have their way at the finish.

3810. You are always given to understand by whom?—From what you read in the papers and that, and I thought the less I said the quicker the case would go off.

3811. You are quite sharp enough to know that, if you tell the magistrate who is there to try the case, any questions would be asked about it. You know that, do you not?—Yes.

3812. You were there, and you were charged before the magistrate. You were not in the hands of the Police, but you were in the hands of the magistrate?—Yes.

3813. Why did you not tell him then that you were not drunk?—I could not tell you at all. I did not know what I was doing really, I was so upset.

3814. Just think a moment about that. You say you were so upset. You had all of this Sunday, and

I suppose you told some of your friends about it?—No, I did not. There was only one man, this ex-policeman, and Dad knew, of course.

3815. Nobody else?—And my brothers, naturally enough they knew; but no outsider, you may say, knew it.

3816. Who were the friends who you said were there in the presence of this ex-policeman?—My brothers.

3817. Do you mean to say that between them all not one of them gave you advice to speak to the magistrate, according to you?—No, not one of them.

3818. (Mr. Dickinson.) Did you appeal to the magistrate at all?—No, I did not.

3819. Did you, or did you not, say that you had no money and would have to go to prison?—Yes, I told him that, but I told him I could get my fine.

3820. Had you no money with you?

3821. (Chairman.) Mr. Bolton paid your fine, did he not?—One of the gentlemen in court did.

3822. Did you notice Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette were represented by a gentleman who spoke up for them?—Yes, they were.

3823. Did it not occur to you when you saw that that you might say something for yourself too?—I ought to have done, but I did not at the moment.

3824. You thought you were certain to be convicted, as I gather?—Yes, that is what I thought.

3825. And that the fine would be smaller the less you said?—That is what I thought at the time.

3826. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Who was it who suggested to you that you should ask the Magistrate to let you get the money to pay the fine?—My father, before I started, because we had got no money in the house. He said, "If they fine you, you tell them to send home, and I will come up and get you out."

3827. I understand you went to the Police Court knowing you were going to be fined?—Yes, but I had no ready money.

Mr. C. E. Timmings.

30 July 1906.

3828. You were not afraid to ask the Magistrate to give you time to find the money?—There was not much to be afraid of in that.

3829. You do not seem to have been afraid to ask the Magistrate for that. You could find a voice for that?—Yes.

(Chairman.) That seems to conclude the evidence at present with regard to the complaint against the police as to the occurrences on April 7th.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes.

(Chairman.) We have a collection of telegrams from different gentlemen in various parts of the country who know Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette, speaking in high terms of their character. We are not troubling to take formal evidence of it, and we are not bound by them, but you can look at these telegrams, Mr. Bankes.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I raise no question about that. I do not want to go back from what I have said.

(Chairman.) It is simply the sort of statement that gentlemen might make if they were called here as witnesses of character. You are perfectly at liberty to inspect them if you like, Mr. Bankes. We will take them for what they are worth. Then I understand you have a witness from Paris.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes, sir.

(Chairman.) Has there been any response to the call for Eva D'Angely and René D'Angely?

(Secretary.) There is no response.

(Chairman.) Then we will go on with their case after a short adjournment.

(Chairman.) Now we will begin what we may call the D'Angely case.

Madame Marie Louise Hardie, sworn.

(Mr. Charles Pembo, was sworn as Interpreter.)

3830. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) You are the wife of Augustus Renouard Hardie?—Yes.

3831. Do you rent a flat at No. 20, Rue Berlin, Paris?—Yes.

3832. Do you sublet furnished rooms to single men and women?—Yes.

3833. On the 22nd May last did a man call at your house to ask for a room?—Yes.

3834. What name did he give?—M. René.

3835. Will you look at that photograph and say whether that is the man? (A photograph was handed to witness.)—Yes, this is the person.

3836. Did he say for whom he wanted the room?—He said that he wanted a room for a certain Madame Eva Duteil.

3837. Did you arrange with him to let him take a double-bedded room at 85 francs a month?—Yes.

3838. Did he say where the lady was?—He said that the lady was at that time at an hotel, but she would come in a few hours, and he would rent the room for a few days only in order to see how the lady would get on with me.

3839. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Was the rent to be paid for a few days only?—For a month.

3840. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) After that, on the same day, did a lady come to your house and occupy the room?—She came there to inhabit the room, and M. René also came and inhabited the same room with her.

3841. What name did the lady give herself?—Eva Duteil.

3842. Whose name was entered in the police book as the person who rented that room?—I cannot exactly say the name, but so far as I can remember I think he entered the name of Leroux, and she said that she wanted to keep from the police the name of her family.

3843. Did they remain occupying that room from the 22nd May down to the 27th July?—Yes.

Madame M. L. Hardie.

3844. Do you recognise that photograph of the woman? (A photograph was handed to witness.)—There was a photograph similar to this in my house.

3845. During the time that she occupied this room was she in the habit of bringing home men at night?—She brought home several gentlemen, but I was occupying a back room. I could not see what was going on in her room. But certainly several other gentlemen besides M. René visited her.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Would you mind asking whether they came separately or together, just to get it clear?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Certainly.

3846. When the gentlemen came did they come one at a time or more than one at a time?—One at a time.

3847. When the gentlemen came in that way where did M. René go?—He used to go to a room of another tenant of mine, and remain on a chair bedstead there, or else he would go into the kitchen and remain there until the visitor had gone away.

3848. Was it at night time that the gentlemen came to visit this lady?—They used to come during the day time and at night also, because at night the lady used to go out to fetch them, as René obliged her to go out for that purpose.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I do not think we need go into this in greater detail. This lady was there when your messenger went over.

(Chairman.) Is our messenger here?

(Mr. Booth.) Yes.

3849. (Chairman.) Madame Hardie, do you recognise this gentleman?—Yes; he has come to my place.

3850. Do you recognise this gentleman, Mr. William Booth, as coming to your house in Rue Berlin?—Yes, he came with two other gentlemen.

Madame M. L. Hardie.

30 July 1907.

3851. On what day did he first come?—About a fortnight or three weeks ago.

3852. At what time in the day?—I cannot say exactly, but I think it was in the forenoon; in fact, I thought they were policemen who were coming to arrest René.

3853. Did Mr. Booth ask for M. René, or for the lady?—They came, and they asked me to allow them to see someone, but I cannot remember whether they asked to see M. René or Madame Eva.

3854. Did Mr. Booth and the other gentleman go up to the room occupied by M. René and the lady?—Yes; they were both in bed at the time.

3855. Did you accompany them into the room. No. These gentlemen entered the room and they shut the door in my face.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I do not know whether you would look at the second paragraph of this lady's statement and see whether that is a matter you desire to inquire into (handing statement).

3856. (Chairman.) I think it is only fair to ask that question. Have you stated that René and Eva Duteil on the 27th July, 1906, left for the Gare du Nord Station, announcing they were going to Dieppe, en route for England, leaving the house about 12 o'clock?—Yes. René said that they were coming to England in order to stand as a witness for a friend of his who was about to enter Parliament. He also said that if anybody tried to make him talk he would find he would be a difficult man to deal with.

3857. Did you gather from what they said that they were coming to give evidence before this Commission?—All I understood was that he was coming to give evidence as a witness on behalf of a friend of his.

Mr. William Booth, sworn.

Mr. W. Booth.

3858. (Chairman.) You are the Clerk to this Commission?—I am.

3859. Did Mr. Leslie on the 18th July, or on the 17th, it may be (I am not sure which it was), give you instructions to proceed to Paris with a letter which he handed to you?—Yes.

3860. Did he read the letter to you? Was it open?—No, it was sealed up, but I copied the letter.

3861. Then you know what was in the letter?—Yes.

3862. I will read the letter and ask you if that tallies with your recollection. Was the letter written in French and English?—Yes. I saw the English one.

3863. There was a letter written in French as well?—Yes.

3864. "31, Great George Street, Westminster, London, 18th July.—Madame,—I am directed by the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into certain duties of the Metropolitan Police, to inform you that the Royal Commission intend, on Monday the 23rd instant, at 12 o'clock noon, at the Caxton Hall, Westminster, London, S.W., to take evidence in respect to the circumstances under which you were arrested in London in April last, the hearing of the case against you at the police court, and other matters germane thereto. The Commission are, of course, desirous of hearing your evidence and also that of Monsieur D'Angely as regards these matters, and request that that you will attend before them accordingly at the time and place above-mentioned, together with any witnesses whom you may wish to call. If you attend, you may, if you desire it, be represented by counsel or solicitor, or both. Lastly, I am to say that if you are not now residing in London, your reasonable expenses of attending before the Commissioners and also those of any witnesses whom you may call, will be defrayed by His Majesty's Treasury." There was also a letter, I think, to Monsieur D'Angely, which was similar in terms, but omitting the word "arrested"?—Yes.

3865-6. Four letters altogether were given to you, I think, two in French and two in English?—Two in French to take to Paris, and two in English, which I left at Twyford Mansions.

3867. No. 25, Twyford Mansions was, I understand, the last known place of address of René and Eva D'Angely in London?—Yes.

3868. Did you take two English letters first of all to Twyford Mansions?—Yes.

3869. Whom did you see there?—A clerk.

3870. Did you make inquiries as to those persons?—Yes. I found out that they had gone a fortnight previously 3871. Did you leave the letters there?—Yes.

3872. How were the letters addressed?—To Madame D'Angely, 25, Twyford Mansions.

3873. And a similar letter was also left there addressed to René D'Angely at No. 25, Twyford Mansions?—Yes.

3874. You then came away. Did you then go to Paris?—The same evening.

3875. Taking the two letters in French with you?—Yes.

3876. Who accompanied you to Paris?—Detective Inspector Sexton and Inspector Cooper.

3877. You all went to Paris on the evening of the 18th July, was it?—Yes.

3878. Arriving in Paris, what did you do?—We proceeded to the Detective Offices, and a detective was then placed at our disposal, and I went and delivered the letters almost immediately.

3879. An officer was placed at your disposal at the Paris Detective Offices, you explained your errand to him, and he took you to Rue Berlin, I understand?—Yes, No. 20.

3880. Where you met Madame Hardie, who has just been called?—Yes.

3881. Who went with you to this House in Rue Berlin?—The two inspectors.

3882. Who came over with you, and the French inspector?—Yes.

3883. Then there were four of you altogether?—Yes.

3884. And you went up to the room directly?—We did.

3885. Whom did you see there?—Madame and Monsieur.

3886. You saw a man and a woman. That is what it comes to. You had never seen Madame D'Angely or M. D'Angely before?—No.

3887. Had you been shown any photographs?—No. I had a detective along with me for the purpose of identifying them.

3888. In consequence of what was told you by this detective, you handed the letter addressed to M. D'Angely to the man, and you handed the letter addressed to Madame D'Angely to the woman?—Exactly.

3889. What happened then?—They perused the letters.

3890. They broke the seals of the letters, I suppose?—Yes.

3891. What did René say?—He said the notice was too short—the 19th to the 23rd—and that he could not possibly attend on the 23rd. Madame replied that she could not attend unless accompanied by her husband. I think she said "that man."

3892. Which did she say? Please be accurate?—Unless she was accompanied by that man.

3893. (Mr. Whitmore.) Talking in French?—Yes. It was translated by an interpreter.

3894. (Chairman.) Both the man and the woman spoke French?—Yes. The man spoke broken English.

3895. And the lady spoke in French?—Yes.

3896. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Was the interpreter who is present here with you?—No, it was not this interpreter.

3897. (Chairman.) The actual interpreter was one of the men who accompanied you from London?—Yes, Detective-Sergeant Sexton.

3898. He went there not so much as a detective but as interpreter?—Yes.

3899. He interpreted to you what the man and the woman said?—Yes.

3900. What did the woman say. I should like that accurately, please, according to your recollection?—"I cannot go unless accompanied by this man," pointing to René.

3901. Did he say anything further?—Yes, he said he could come later on in the month.

3902. That is all that took place then?—Yes.

3903. Then you came back leaving the letters with them?—Yes.

3904. You have not been to Paris again?—No.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I think the witness can identify these photographs. (The photographs were handed to the Witness.)

Mr. W. Booth.

30 July 1906.

3905. (Chairman.) Do you recognise those photographs?—Yes.

3906. The woman that you saw in that room is the person that is represented in that photograph to the best of your judgment?—Yes.

3907. The man also?—Yes.

3908. (Chairman.) Are those the same photographs that were handed to Madame Hardie?

3909. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes.

3910. (Chairman.) Do you know that?—Yes.

3911. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You seem to be rather doubtful as to what was the expression used by Madame D'Angely in referring to the man. Are you quite clear now as to what expression it was she used?—Yes. She referred to him as "this man."

3912. Not in any way as her husband?—No.

3913. You are quite clear as to that?—I am quite clear.

Detective-Inspector Cornelius Sexton, sworn.

Detective-Inspector C. Sexton.

3914. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) You are a detective inspector at Scotland Yard?—Yes.

3915. You have for many years been largely employed in Continental cases?—For the past 20 years.

3916. And are well acquainted with the French language?—Fairly well.

3917. Did you accompany Mr. Booth when he went to serve the Royal Commission letter upon Madame D'Angely?—Yes.

3918. You have heard Mr. Booth say what they said when they got the letters and read them?—Yes.

3919. Who spoke first?—The man, in broken English.

3920. (Chairman.) We should like to have what the French expression used was before he comes to say what Madame D'Angely said?—I first said in French, "Etes vous Monsieur D'Angely," and he responded, "Oui, Monsieur." I said to Mr. Booth "Here is M. D'Angely; will you do your business?" Mr. Booth handed the notices to them. We requested him to open it to see what the communication was. He understood, and said, "Très bien." He opened the letter. I pointed to the woman and I said: "Ouvrez, Madame, s'il vous plait." She likewise opened the letter, and they both read the letters. He said the notice was absolutely too short, and this being the 19th he could not attend on Monday, the 23rd. He was then asked by Mr. Booth, through me, when would it be convenient for him to attend. He said at the end of the month—about the first of next month, or by the following Monday. I then said, "Yes; you understand what it means?" and he said, "Yes, I understand all about it." He then broke in in French and said: "Je le sais bien." I said it is to try this thing in the regular way. He said "I have no reason to hide myself." I then suggested to him that if he was not financially ready to come, I could advance him his fares, or, if necessary, he could accompany us to London, and I would pay his fares and the whole of his expenses. He said no, he had plenty of money, but he would expect it to be refunded after the hearing by the Commission. I then said to Madame in French, "Et vous, Madame?" to which she replied, "Je ne puis pas venir à moins que je suis accompagnée par ce Monsieur," (pointing to M. D'Angely). I replied, "Très bien, Madame."

Inspector Kenneth Cooper, sworn.

Inspector K. Cooper.

3921. (Chairman.) Are you an inspector of the C Division?—Yes.

3922. I think you met Mr. Leslie, the Secretary of this Commission, on the 23rd July?—The Secretary's clerk.

3923. Did Mr. Booth bring you two letters?—No, he kept possession of those letters himself.

3924. Was a letter handed to you by anybody at the office at Scotland Yard on the 23rd July?—No, the letters were kept by Mr. Booth all the time.

3925. You went over to Paris on the first occasion?—I went over on both occasions.

3926. I am not asking you about the first occasion, because there seems to be no need to do that. I am now on the second occasion. You went over to Paris a second time?—That is so.

3927. How came you to go to Paris a second time?—I had two letters handed to me to deliver in Paris.

3928. At the same address?—Yes, at the same address.

3929. Were the letters entrusted to you open or sealed?—They were sealed.

3930. How were the two letters addressed, according to your recollection?—To M. D'Angely, 20, Rue Berlin, Paris, and to Madame D'Angely, 20, Rue Berlin, Paris.

3931. Did you go over to Paris again, taking those two letters with you?—I did.

3932. Did anybody accompany you?—Yes, Detective-sergeant McIntyre, of Scotland Yard.

3933. He also went with you?—Yes. He went as interpreter.

3934. Both of you went to this same address?—Yes.

3935. Did you ask for Madame d'Angely?—Detective-sergeant McIntyre did. No one in the house could understand English.

3936. Whom did you see in the house?—We saw the woman who has given evidence here.

3937. Were you shown up to the bedroom again?—Yes.

3938. Were the man and woman there?—Yes, in the same room.

3939. About what time in the day was that?—About 10 o'clock in the morning.

3940. Did you give them the letters?—Yes.

3941. The one addressed to René d'Angely you gave to him, and the one addressed to Madame d'Angely to madame?—Yes.

3942. What took place?—The conversation was entirely in French. Detective-sergeant McIntyre could detail the conversation in French.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) By whom were the letters handed to you? Where did you get the letters from that you were to deliver?—They were handed to me at Scotland Yard. I did not get them direct.

Inspector K. Cooper.

30 July 1906.

3943. (Chairman.) Then a conversation took place in French between Detective-sergeant McIntyre and this man and woman?—Yes.

3944. Had you an opportunity of observing the faces of these people?—Yes, I recognised both of them at once.

3945. Had you seen them before in London?—I knew them very well.

3946. Where had you seen them in London?—At Great Marlborough Street Police Station. I took the charge against the woman.

3947. I do not want to go into that matter now?—That is how I recognised her.

3948. Did you also see, at the hearing before Mr. Denman, René d'Angely, who came and said he was the husband?—I did.

3949. Did you recognise him as the man you saw in the Rue Berlin?—Yes.

3950. You have not the slightest doubt about it?—Not the slightest doubt.

Sergeant PETER MCINTYRE, sworn.

Sergeant P. McIntyre.

3951 (Chairman.) You accompanied the last witness to Paris on the second occasion?—Yes.

3952. I think you went as interpreter?—Yes.

3953. Did you go to No. 20, Rue Berlin?—We did, about 10 o'clock on Tuesday morning.

3954. And you saw a man and woman in bed?—Yes.

3955. Had you ever seen them before?—No, I had never seen them before. I had seen their photographs before.

3956. You recognised them from photographs which you had seen?—Yes, and Inspector Cooper said, as soon as we went in, "These are the same people."

3957. Are those the photographs that you refer to (the photographs were handed to witness)?—Yes.

3958. Look at the photograph of the woman. Is that the woman you saw at Rue Berlin?—Yes, certainly.

3959. And the man?—Yes. There is no doubt about it.

3960-1. What did they say when you handed them the letters?—I handed them the letters. I spoke in French. I said: "Here is a letter for you, madame." She was out of bed. She had a dressing-gown on. The man was in bed. I said: "Here is a letter for you, madame, and here is a letter for you, monsieur." I said: "I understand you are Madame d'Angely." She said, "Yes." I said, "I understand you are Monsieur d'Angely." He said, "Yes." He said to Inspector Cooper, "What, have you come again?" I said "Yes." I said: "You had better open the letter. It is an invitation for you to attend the Royal Commission next Monday in London." The man said: "It is useless to have come a second time, as we promised you last week we would attend on Monday." Then the French inspector said: "Pardon me, but you did not specify any certain day; you said the end of the month." There was a little argument about that. The man said: "No; I said Monday." I said: "At any rate, you are invited to attend next Monday." He said: "Very good, we will be there." She said: "Oui, monsieur."

3962. On what day was this?—Last Tuesday morning.

3963. That was the 24th?—Yes.

3964. No copy of the letter was given to you?—I did see a copy of it.

3965. Then I think we must ask, Mr. Leslie, the secretary to read the letter in public. Will you read the English copy?

(The Secretary.) I am afraid I have not the English.

(Chairman.) Then read the French copy.

(The Secretary.) "Metropolitan Police Commission, 23 Juillet, 1906.—'Madame,—On ayant dit aux Commissaires Royaux qu'en recevant leur lettre du 18 courant vous avez refusé d'être présent à leur séance d'aujourd'hui, mais que vous y assisteriez volontiers à un jour plus tard de ce mois, les Commissaires ont fixé lundi, 30 courant, à midi, pour votre affaire qui aura lieu à Caxton Hall, Westminster, London, et ils desirent que vous soyez présente sur ce jour-là. Si toutefois vous refusez ou que vous manquiez de vous présenter l'affaire sera jugée en votre absence. Je répète ce que je vous ai fait connaitre dans ma lettre précédente au sujet de vos frais et de ceux de vos témoins. Agréez l'assurance de mes meilleurs sentiments." This is the copy I wrote to M. d'Angely: "Metropolitan Police Commission, 23rd July.—"Monsieur,—On ayant dit aux Commissaires Royaux qu'en recevant leur lettre du 18 courant vous avez refusé d'être présent à leur séance d'aujourd'hui, mais que vous y assisteriez volontiers à un jour plus tard de ce mois, les Commissaires ont fixé lundi, 30 courant, à midi pour l'affaire d'Angely, qui aura lieu à Caxton Hall, Westminster, London, et ils desirent que vous soyez présent sur ce jour-là. Si toutefois vous refusez ou que vous manquiez de vous présenter l'affaire sera jugée en votre absence. Je répète ce que je vous ai fait connaitre dans ma lettre précédente au sujet de vos frais et de ceux de vos témoins. Agréez l'assurance de mes meilleurs sentiments."

(The witness.) I ought to have said that I said to the man "Do you know the address where you have to come to in London?" He said, "Yes, I have it in a letter." The woman said, "You had better write it down," so I wrote it down "31, Great George Street, Westminster, London.

3966. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) What time of the day was it when you went there?—About 10 o'clock as near as possible.

M. CHARLES ULYSSES BEAUBE, sworn.

(Examined through the Interpreter.)

M. Charles Ulysses Beaube.

3952*. (Chairman.) Will you kindly tell me your description. What is your office in the service of the French police?—I am the Senior Principal Inspector of the City of Paris Police.

3953*. Do you remember that gentleman (Mr. Booth) coming to you in Paris?—I recognise him very well.

3954*. He had two other gentlemen with him, I think?—Yes. He was accompanied by Detective-Inspector Sexton and also by another person whom I see now in the uniform of a police inspector.

3955*. Did you accompany them, or rather, did you take them to No. 20, Rue Berlin?—Yes. I went up first, and I knocked at the door, and I told the lady who gave evidence here to tell René that I wanted to see him, and also the woman, together with those gentlemen.

3956*. By what name did the man and woman whom you saw on this day at No. 20, Rue Berlin, go by in Paris?—An officer under my orders a few days ago established his absolute identity as a man of the name of Soubigére, and this photograph has been handed to us by his wife, from whom he is divorced now.

3957*. Now look at the other photograph. (Photograph handed to the Witness)?—We also have this photograph, and when we entered the room of Soubigére and his mistress I noticed at once that a similar photograph was on the mantelpiece.

3958*. That is a photograph of a woman you saw in the bedroom with the man Soubigére?—Yes, they were in bed together. The woman opened the door, Soubigére remained in bed, and the woman returned to bed after opening the door.

3959*. I do not know that it is necessary to ask you what took place. There seems to be no doubt about it. You do not understand English?—Not at all. M. Charles Ulysses Beaube.

3960*. I do not think I need trouble you with what took place afterwards?—I hold myself at your disposal. 30 July 1906.

Mr. William Booth, recalled.

3961*. (Chairman.) It so happens that Caxton Hall is mentioned in both the letters. We want to know whether you have been to Caxton Hall to-day?—Yes. I was there at 12 o'clock this morning. Mr. W. Booth.

3962*. Did you see anything of Monsieur or Madame d'Angely there?—No.

3963*. Have you been there since?—Yes. I waited there for half an hour, and I left instructions that if they came they should be sent here.

3964*. You left instructions that if they should arrive they should be sent here?—Yes, I also left similar instructions at the office.

3965*. 31, Great George Street?—Yes.

(Chairman.) That seems to complete the evidence as to the service of our request on Monsieur and Madame d'Angely to attend here, and to show that these proceedings have been brought to their notice. They are not here to-day, but I think the Commissioners would like me to publicly state that if they should come at any one of our future sittings we will, of course, take their evidence. I do not think we can proceed further with the case to-day. We shall limit the evidence to-morrow to the police evidence, which you would like to call in reference to the charge against Madame d'Angely.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) We have a number of witnesses in London who can speak to the doings of these people to a certain extent; for instance, where they lived before they went to Twyford Mansions. Do you wish the evidence to-morrow to be confined to the police evidence? I am afraid we shall not be able to get the other witnesses, because I am told we shall have to subpœna them, and there will not be time to do it, but we shall have the police evidence.

(Chairman.) We will take any evidence you can get.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Of course we have a quantity of sworn evidence from Algiers.

(Chairman.) It is a question whether the Commission will, or will not, receive that evidence, and it may not be necessary even to raise the question. We will not decide that question now. That is documentary evidence pure and simple.

FIFTH DAY.

Tuesday, 31*st July* 1906.

PRESENT:

Sir David Brynmor Jones, K.C., M.P. (Chairman.)
Rufus Daniel Isaacs, Esq., K.C., M.P.
Willoughby Hyett Dickinson, Esq., M.P. (Barrister-at-Law).
Charles Algernon Whitmore, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law).
J. W. St. Lawrance Leslie, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law) (Secretary).

(Chairman.) Now Mr. Muir, do you propose to call the police constables who gave evidence against Eva d'Angely at the police court?

(Mr. Muir.) If you please, sir.

Horace Page, P.C. 429 C, sworn.

3966*. (Mr. Muir.) Are you a police constable of the C Division?—I am. P.C. H. Page.

3967. How long have you been in the Police Force?—Three years and a half. 31 July 1906.

3968. All that time have you been at Marlborough Street Police Station?—Yes.

3969. On the 24th April in this year were you on duty in Regent Street?—Yes.

3970. What duty was this on?—On beat duty.

3971. Where was your beat?—On No. 1, third section.

3972. Where is that?—Regent Street, Conduit Street and George Street.

3973. Where is George Street?—That is just before you get to New Bond Street.

3974. Leading into Hanover Square?—Yes.

3975. Then back through Hanover Street?—Yes, into Regent Street.

3976. How long had you been on duty on that beat before the 24th April?—During the month.

3977. What were your hours on duty?—From 10 p.m. to 6 a.m.

3978. What are your duties with regard to women that you see soliciting male passengers?—My duty is to caution them first, and if they still continue to annoy and accost male passengers I take them into custody.

P.C. H. Page, 31 July 1906.

3979. What do you charge them with in those circumstances?—If I have known them for some considerable time I charge them with being common prostitutes if I have seen them on previous occasions accosting men.

3980. And you take them to the station on that charge?—Yes.

3981. On the 24th April did you see a woman called Eva D'Angely?—Yes.

3982. When did you see her first on that day?—About 11.30 p.m.

3983. Where did you see her first?—She passed me when I was standing at the corner of Maddox Street in Regent Street.

3984. That is about half-way down your beat in Regent Street?—Yes. She walked on about 12 yards and she stopped a gentleman. She then walked on again, still going south, down Regent Street and walked on about 50 yards and crossed to the opposite side, that is, the east side of Regent Street, and then turned and walked back; she came up to Foubert's Place, still on the east side, and stopped another gentleman there.

3985. On the east side?—Yes.

3986. That is not on your beat, but on the opposite side of Regent Street?—Yes. She then walked on to Argyll Place and then stopped a third gentleman. She again crossed Regent Street on the west side.

3987. Where did she cross?—Near Hanover Street and walked down to where I was standing near Maddox Street. I then asked her why she stopped those gentlemen. She replied, "Me no speak English." I told her to behave herself and not to accost gentlemen.

3988-9. Did she make any further reply?—She replied, "Oui, oui," and smiled, and walked on.

3990. What time would that be when you spoke to her and cautioned her?—When I first met her it would be shortly before half-past 11; it would be about 11.35 when she arrived at the station.

3991. About five minutes she was under your observation before you cautioned her?—Yes.

3992. And she walked on?—She walked on to Conduit Street, and stopped another gentleman, and I went up and took her into custody.

3993. How long was that after you cautioned her?—About five minutes.

3994. What did you say to her when you took her into custody?—I said, "I have already cautioned you, and I shall take you into custody for accosting these gentlemen." She said something in French; I could not understand what she was saying. I then took her to the station. I then crossed over Regent Street, took her through Foubert's Place into Marlborough Street, to Great Marlborough Police Station.

3995. Did she walk quietly?—Yes, she seemed happy and talked in French. I could not understand what she was saying.

3996. When you got her to the police station, who was the officer in charge of the station?—Inspector Cooper.

3997. Did you state the charge to the inspector?—Yes, I did.

3998. Was an interpreter there?—No.

3999. What was done with regard to writing down the charge and reading it over, do you know?—She wrote her name on a slip of paper and said she was a Madame, and she made some statement in French, but I could not understand what she was saying.

4000. Was any officer there who did understand, do you know, or an interpreter?—No, there was no interpreter.

4001. When was the charge read over to her, do you know?—It was about 11.35, to the best of my recollection.

4002. Was that done in French?—No.

4003. That is all that took place that night?—That is all that took place that night.

4004. Were you present in the station when the man who said he was the husband came to bail her out?—No, I was on my beat then.

4005. During that month had you seen this woman before?—Yes, I had seen her on several occasions.

4006. What was she doing when you had seen her?—She was accosting gentlemen, and apparently she was watching me.

4007. And on those occasions what hours had you seen her at?—From 10 o'clock to about half-past 11.

4008. And where?—In Regent Street.

4009. Was she alone, or accompanied by anyone?—No, I only saw her with the men she accosted; I never saw her with any man.

4010. Or any woman?—No.

4011. (Chairman.) How long have you been in the Force?—About three and a-half years—three years last April.

4012. How old are you?—Twenty-eight last January.

4013. You are a constable?—Yes.

4014. How long have you belonged to the C Division?—During the whole time I have been in the Force.

4015. Was this the first month during which you had been on duty in Regent Street?—No, I had been posted there previously, but not the month previous to that.

4016. On what day does the month you refer to commence. Is it the calendar month?—On the first Monday it commences. We always change duty the first Monday of the month.

4017. Then it is simply four weeks?—Some are four week months and some are five week months. We always change the first Monday in the month.

4018. The first Monday in January, the first Monday in February, and so forth?—Yes.

4019. This was the 24th April?—Yes.

4020. You had been on this duty, then, from the first Monday in April?—Yes.

4021. What day in the week was this 24th April? (Mr. Muir.) Tuesday, and the 2nd April was the Monday.

4022. (Chairman.) Where had you been in the month before?—I had been on day duty on various beats.

4023. What had been your beat during the month of March?—I was not posted at any particular beat there. I was posted at different beats. One day I might be on the second section, and on another day I might be on the first section.

4024. But all in the same section?—No, not in the same section. There are two sections day duty, and one day I might be on the first section.

4025. Then during March you were on day duty and in April night duty?—Yes.

4026. And in February you were on night duty?—No, on point duty—Oxford Circus fixed point.

4027. How long was it since you had been on this particular beat. How many months or how many weeks had elapsed?—I had been on Conduit Street cab rank, which is adjoining the same beat, during March.

4028. Did the woman you arrested give you any name in the street?—No.

4029. You say you had seen her several times before the 24th April?—Yes.

4030. Had you seen her during March?—Yes, I had seen her when I had been on the Conduit Street cab rank.

4031. Had you seen her during February?—Yes, that was when I first noticed her when I was on the Oxford Street fixed point, that is at the top of Regent Street, the junction of Oxford Street.

4032. What attracted your attention to her when you were on point duty at the corner of Oxford Street and Regent Street?—I saw her walking about, and I also saw her stop and speak to different gentlemen, and I was not quite certain whether she was a prostitute or not, and I wanted to make my mind quite clear before I took any action.

4033. Was that in February?—In February.

4034. You thought it would be necessary to take action against this woman as far back as February, did you?—I came to the conclusion that that was what she was, but I was not quite certain about her—not then. She appeared to be watching me at the same time that she would be accosting.

4035. Was she dressed in the same way on all the occasions you saw her?—No, not on all the occasions.

4036. You saw her at the police court in daylight, I suppose?—Yes.

4037. Have you any doubt in your own mind that the woman you saw in Marlborough Street Police Court in the daytime was the woman who you observed as far back as February?—No doubt.

4038. What part of the month of February?—I could not exactly say the date, but it was about the second or third week in February when I first noticed her.

4039. You said, did you not, at the police court that she had been there almost nightly for the past three months?—The question was asked, "How long have you known her?" and I said "About three months."

4040. According to the notes I have got you said "She has been there almost nightly for the past three months"?—No, I never said that. I could not have sworn that, because I had not been on there nightly.

4041. You saw the clerk taking notes?—Oh, yes.

4042. But, of course, they were not read over to you, as I understand?—No.

4043. Did you hear the defendant at the hearing of the case say anything through the interpreter?—She asked through the interpreter if I could produce any gentleman, and I replied no.

4044. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) What, in your view, is soliciting. What do you have to see before you arrest a woman?—I have to see her go up and accost a gentleman to his annoyance—if I consider it is to his annoyance.

4045. First of all you have to be sure that she is a prostitute?—I have to make my mind sure about that before I take any step.

4046. And that, I understand, you always have made up your mind about before you arrest a woman?—I make my mind confident that she is a prostitute before I arrest her and charge her with that offence.

4047. You are in the habit of seeing these women walking about on your beats?—Oh, yes, I see them on my beats, and I also see them at the police court.

4048. You only see them at the police court when they are summoned?—When they are charged.

4049. Do you mean for these offences?—For similar offences.

4050. But this woman, as I understand, had never been charged before?—No.

4051. So you would have got to know her from seeing her walk about the streets and going up to men as you have told us?—Yes, by her conduct.

4052. Do you see much of this soliciting?—Yes.

4053. A good deal?—Yes.

4054. You do not arrest every time you see them, do you?—No, not unless we are confident, but we always caution them first.

4055. Suppose you were confident that a woman belonging to that particular class, and you see her going up and accosting a man, do you always arrest her?—No, we caution her first.

4056. Do you mean that in your view (I only want to know what your practice is) you must have cautioned her on the same day?—No, not particularly on the same day.

4057. It may have been a month or two months before?—No, not so long ago as that. It might have been a night or so before.

4058. You give them a warning?—Yes.

4059. And within a short time after the warning if they still continue then to solicit you arrest them. Is that it?—Yes.

4060. Has any one of these women ever offered you money?—No.

4061. Never offered it?—No.

4062. Have you ever known of it being done?—No, I have never known. I have heard rumours, but I have never known it to be done.

4063. Rumours amongst the force?—No. Sometimes when the women are in the police court they say something about it chatting between themselves.

4064. Say something about what?—About giving money, but I have never seen it done.

4065. What is it they say about giving money?—They say "Why don't you square the copper," or something like that.

4066. That is what you have heard them say one to the other?—I have heard them say that.

4067. Do you mean that during your experience in this particular part of London that you have never heard of any policeman taking money from any one of them?—No.

4068. Have you ever heard of any policeman having money offered to him?—No.

4069. Not offered?—No.

4070. (Mr. Dickinson.) You were on night duty in January?—Yes.

4071. That was not on the same beat as this?—No.

4072. And then I see you arrested eight women during that month?—It may have been. I could not say the exact number.

4073. I see in November you made three arrests, and in February two. Is it a common thing for you when you are on night duty in the course of the month to make a certain number of arrests?—No, no particular number.

4074. Not a particular number, but you do arrest some?—I do my duty. If I see a woman committing an offence and I have cautioned her I take her into custody.

4075. Are your instructions to take into custody any woman whom you know to be a prostitute and who you see soliciting?—Not unless she is committing an offence.

4076. If she is?—If she is committing the offence we have got our instructions what to do.

4077. You have instructions?—Yes.

4078. If you see a woman whom you know to be a prostitute who is soliciting you are to caution her and then to take her up?—Those are our instructions in the Instruction Book.

4079. I suppose on your beats you see a very large number of these women?—Yes.

4080. And I suppose you know a large number of them to be prostitutes?—Yes.

4081. But unless you see them actually soliciting or actually speaking to a man you do not take any action?—No.

4082. I suppose a good many of them cannot speak English?—There are a lot of foreign women about. Some of them say they cannot speak English, but when they get to the police court next morning they speak English.

4083. You say you knew this woman as far back as February?—I knew her by sight, not by name.

4084. And then in March you saw her on several occasions soliciting?—Two or three times, not several.

4085. Two or three times?—Yes.

4086. Had you seen her on any other occasion in March actually soliciting?—No, only when I was on the Conduit Street cab rank.

4087. Why did you not arrest her then?—I never had an opportunity to get near her. She was watching me, and when I got anywhere near or walked towards her she either got in a cab or 'bus or walked in the opposite direction right away from my beat.

4088. Your beat is a small one?—No, not particularly small; about the same as the others. They are all very small there.

4089. It is very easy to pass from the beat of one constable to another?—Yes.

4090. And any woman who has been seen soliciting and knows she has been soliciting, goes out of your beat on to the beat of another constable, where she is safe, so far as that evening is concerned?—If I saw her committing an offence on the adjoining beat, I should arrest her.

4091. But would it be your duty to go off your beat?—Yes; not to go right away from my beat, but if I saw her on the opposite side of the road, for instance, I should go.

P.C. H. Page. 31 July 1906.

4092. I take it from you that as there is a large number of these women here, most of them avoid being seen soliciting?—They do as well as they can. They often work in pairs. You will see one woman walking about 12 yards in front, keeping a look out for the policeman, or perhaps there is one behind who is doing it.

4093. So you say if they are not very often arrested it is because they manage to avoid the eye of the police?—Yes.

4094. (Chairman.) Will you look at this photograph marked A. Is that a photograph, so far as you can tell, of the woman whom you arrested?—Yes.

4095. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You are Police Constable 429 C?—Yes.

4096. Have you known the police to take money from bookmakers?—No, Sir.

4097. Have you known of their being offered any?—No.

4098. It has never been offered to you?—No.

4099. You have never known it happen?—No.

4100. Or from public houses?—No.

4101. Is part of your beat round Leicester Square?—No.

4102. You do not go round there at all?—No, we take the other end.

4103. Leicester Square, Lisle Street. Would that be any part of your beat?—No.

4104. Rupert Street?—No. Our sub-division goes from the corner of Tottenham Court Road straight along Oxford Street to the Marble Arch, down Park Lane, Bruton Street, Conduit Street, Little Pulteney Street, up to Cambridge Circus, and down West Street, passing up St. Martin's Lane and up to Bloomsbury.

4105. (Mr. Dickinson.) Have you ever heard of money being left in certain places by the women for the Division, stationed at Marlborough Street Police Station?—No.

4106. You have never heard that stated?—No, I have never heard that.

Police Constable Nelson Sims, 440 C, sworn.

P.C. Nelson Sims.

4107. (Mr. Muir.) You are a constable of the C Division stationed at Marlborough Police Station?—Yes.

4108. How long have you been in that Force?—Nearly three years.

4109. And all the time at Marlborough Street?—Yes.

4110. Were you on point duty in Regent Street on the night of the 24th April?—Yes.

4111. Where was your point?—Regent Circus fixed point, close to the Circus.

4112. Which part of the Circus?—On the south-west corner.

4113. Just opposite the island there?—Yes.

4114. Do you know this woman who calls herself Eva D'Angely?—Yes.

4115. Have you seen that photograph marked A?—Yes, that is the woman.

4116. That is the woman who you speak of as Eva D'Angely?—Yes.

4117. How long had you known her?—About three months.

4118. Did you know her name at all at that time?—No.

4119. During the three months you had known her, had you been on duty at Regent Street?—Not continually.

4120. Part of the time you had?—Yes.

4121. On night duty?—During the month of March I was on night duty, the beat of the second section close to the Circus, and during the month of April I was on the Regent Circus fixed point.

4122. At night?—In the evening from 9 o'clock to 1 o'clock in the morning.

4123. That is practically night duty?—Yes.

4124. Had you seen that woman at all during that time?—During the month of March I saw her almost nightly, and during the month of April when I was on late duty I sa wher nightly.

4125. What was she doing?—Accosting gentlemen.

4126. Was she alone or with anyone?—Alone.

4127. Had you occasion to speak to her or did you speak to her during that time?—I tried to several times, but I could never get near her until the night of her arrest, when I did caution her.

4128. What did you see her doing on the night of her arrest?—She crossed Oxford Street near where I was and went up and accosted a gentleman standing near the Circus and Regent Street.

4129. Did you speak to her then?—I cautioned her as to her conduct. I said: "Behave yourself in a public thoroughfare, and do not molest gentlemen." She turned round and smiled and went off down Regent Street in the direction of Piccadilly Circus.

4130. She made no reply at all?—No.

4131. What time was that?—About 11 o'clock, as near as I can say.

4132. Later on that same night, did you see her in custody?—I saw her cross Regent Street in the custody of Police Constable Page.

4133. (Chairman.) How long have you been in the Police Force?—Nearly three years.

4134. What is your age?—Twenty-five.

4135. Have you been during the time you have been a member of the Force in the C Division?—Yes, employed at Marlborough Street.

4136. All the time?—Yes.

4137. And employed in or about Regent Street—Yes, at Great Marlborough Street.

4138. (Mr. Dickinson.) You say that you have seen this woman constantly in March and April nightly?—Almost nightly during the month of March.

4139. And accosting gentlemen nightly?—Yes.

4140. And you knew her to be a prostitute?—By her actions I considered she was a prostitute.

4141. Would she not have come into the category of women who you were instructed to arrest?—She would.

4142. How is it that you did not in all this time arrest her?—Because I considered it my duty before arresting her to caution her, and I never had that opportunity. One night during the month of April I tried to caution her; I went for her to caution her, but she ran down Oxford Street and then crossed over on the other side of Oxford Street and stood on the corner of Holles Street, and then she came back along Oxford Street on the north side.

4143. I understand that this obligation on you to caution these women makes it difficult for you to arrest them?—Yes. If they happen to see you coming they try to get away as quickly as they can.

4144. I see that in this list we have here of the number of prostitutes apprehended in November, December, January, February, March, and April, in all the first five months you did not apprehend any prostitutes?—No.

4145. And you only apprehended one in April?—Yes.

4146. Were you on night duty during any of those five months?—Yes, alternately night duty, day duty, and point duty.

4147. Therefore you resumed your night duty for two or three out of those five months?—Yes.

4148. What was the reason why you seem to have arrested no one all that time. I want to understand why it is. You admit that you see a number of these people?—Yes, when I am on duty in the vicinity of Regent Street.

4149. Every night when you are on duty there you see large numbers?—Yes.

4150. And women who you know to be prostitutes?—

Yes, some of them, but I always like to make sure before I take any action.

4151. I quite understand that, but nevertheless, you see a considerable number of women whom, no doubt, you know, and who are prostitutes?—Yes.

4152. And during all those months you did not have occasion to arrest anyone. Can you explain how that came about?—I never saw them commit any offence in front of my eyes at the time or else I should have cautioned them, and if they committed it again I should take them into custody.

4153. You seem to have seen Madame D'Angely committing an offence several times?—I did.

4154. Is it not reasonable to assume you must have seen a good many others too?—No doubt I did.

4155. I want to understand (probably you have an explanation) why, if you have instructions that when you see a known prostitute to be soliciting that you should arrest her, and that there are so large a number about there every night, and you are on night duty for two or three out of these five months, how is it that you did not make a single arrest?—During that time I was not on night duty in the vicinity of Regent Street, or only once. In the month of January I was on a beat round Bond Street.

4156. Are there not women of this class there?—Very few indeed.

4157. Have you a similar explanation for the other months. Do you remember where you were in those other months. In January you were in Bond Street. Where were you in February?—(Mr. Muir.) I do not know, sir, whether you have a list of the duties of all these constables, but there is a list in the printed statement before you, a table showing the duties during February, March, and April. It is limited to those three months.

4158. (Mr. Dickinson.) Yes. In February you were on day duty, and in March you were on night duty, and in April you were on point duty, that is night duty?—No, not exactly night duty.

4159. I understood from the last constable that point duty was?—When you are on late duty you go on at mid-day till 5 in the afternoon, and then again from nine in the evening to one in the morning.

4160. What were you doing in April?—Three weeks early turn and two weeks later turn.

4161. Then you were two weeks on night duty?—Yes.

4162. And those two weeks was when you saw this woman?—Yes.

4163. In March you were on night duty and you took Oxford Street from the 5th to the 17th, near the Circus, and the 31st. Then on the 8th March you were on Oxford Circus patrol. Then on the 9th March you were at Bond Street. Then on the 10th, 13th, 18th, 29th, 30th, and 1st April you were at Oxford Street near the Circus. Then from the 19th to the 27th March you were sick. On the 28th you were on No. 9 beat, second section, and on the 11th and 16th you were on your fortnightly leave. Then in April from the 2nd to the 7th, and from the 9th to the 16th and from the 18th to the 30th you were on the Regent Circus point, and on the 8th to the 17th you had your fortnightly leave. Then you were about twelve or thirteen days on Oxford Street near the Circus?—Yes.

4164. That is the part where there are these women?—Yes.

4165. I suppose, then, you saw a good many of these women?—Yes, I saw them—perhaps not in the act of soliciting.

4166. You say you did not see them in the act of soliciting?—No.

4167. You said you cautioned Madame D'Angely in Oxford Street?—Yes.

4168. You saw her frequently about three months in Oxford Street and cautioned her there. Did you caution her on any other occasion than the one you mention?—No.

4169. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I do not quite understand what you say about this. You had seen this woman, Madame D'Angely, frequently before she was arrested, had you not?—Yes.

4170. And you had seen her frequently accosting men when you were on duty in Oxford Street near the Circus?—Yes.

4171. You knew what she was?—I formed an opinion as to what she was.

4172. I suppose it does not require a very long time when you see a woman accosting men nightly for you to come to a conclusion as to what she is?—No.

4173. Had you been seeing her do this for some time?—Yes.

4174. Had you not been able to warn her?—No, I tried several times, but I could never get near her.

4175. Do you mean you must always warn her when she is actually committing the offence?—After she has committed the offence.

4176. You have seen her doing it several times. Why not warn her?—Because she always got away when I got near her.

4177. But you saw her again?—Yes, I saw her again, but I wanted to see her commit the offence again before I cautioned her.

4178. I do not understand that. You see a woman committing the offence and your instructions are that you are to warn her before you arrest her?—Yes.

4179. You have seen her committing it, and if she had done that after you had warned her you would have arrested her?—Yes, I should.

4180. As you had not warned her before you saw her committing the offence you did not arrest her?—No.

4181. But you ought to have warned her?—I did warn her on the first opportunity I could get.

4182. That is what I do not understand. When was the first opportunity you got?—On the night of her arrest, about 11 o'clock.

4183. That is on the 24th April?—Yes.

4184. But you had seen her frequently before in Oxford Street for about three months?—Yes.

4185. How often did you see her commit the offence of soliciting, do you think?—During March I should say I saw her almost nightly, but on every occasion she did not commit the offence; only on some occasions.

4186. During the month of March?—Yes.

4187. How often did you caution her during March?—Not once.

4188. Not at all?—No.

4189. Why not?—As I said just now, I could never get near to her to caution her.

4190. You saw her?—Yes, I saw her, but on seeing me approach she used to get away from me.

4191. You never were near enough to talk to her?—No.

4192. Not on any one of the occasions?—On the night of her arrest she crossed Oxford Street.

4193. But before that in March you could never speak to her?—No.

4194. Was she on the same side of the road as you were?—Not on all occasions.

4195. If you have got to caution a woman and she sees you in uniform whenever you come near her she will get away?—Yes.

4196. The result is that you can never caution her?—No, we can never get near her.

4197. As long as she is able to slip away from you or does not come anywhere near you she cannot be arrested?—Not till I have cautioned her.

4198. She might go on committing the offence night after night, according to that?—Someone else might see her.

4199. If she happens to be on your beat and there is no other policeman there seeing her commit the offence, she might commit it night after night?—Not without my seeing her.

4200. Your seeing her is no good because you told me you saw her almost nightly during March, therefore seeing her is no good, according to your statement. You see her committing the offence a good many times during the month of March, but she is not arrested?—No, not by me.

4201. Or by anybody else?—No.

P.C. Nelson Sims. 31 July 1906.

4202. That is what I do not understand, and as I understand your explanation she is not arrested because you could never get near enough to her to caution her?—Yes.

4203. So that all she has to do is to get sufficiently far from you for you not to be able to speak to her?—Yes.

4204. And if she does that she may go on committing the offence night after night?—She can do that, and if she saw me coming she could cross the road to another division.

4205. And get out of the way?—Yes.

4206. It is rather easy to avoid arrest then, is it not?—It is in some cases.

4207. I do not understand why if your statement is correct it is not easy in all cases, unless a policeman happens to come unawares upon the woman, or she does not know what the law is?—(No answer.)

4208. It seems to you so, does it not?—It might be so.

4209. By whose instructions is it that you have to give the warning?—It is in our instruction book.

4210. Can you give me the reference to it?

4211. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Did you ever tell another policeman to caution this woman?—No.

4212. You do not communicate to somebody else and point out the woman and say, "she must be warned," or anything of that character?—No, I never have.

4213. Apparently, according to what I understand from you, the effect of having to give a warning is to do away to a great extent with the liability to arrest of these women?—Yes.

4214. That is so, is it not?—I consider it my duty to caution them before I arrest them.

4215. That is quite right. You have got the instructions in your rules and you have to caution them. I am not asking the question in any way as casting any blame on you. I only want to understand how this duty is conducted. It seems to follow from what you say that if you have to give a warning, and you have such a difficulty in giving a warning, the result of continuing to give a warning is that the woman manages to get off scot free in most cases?—Yes.

4216. That is so?—Yes.

4217. Does Glasshouse Street come anywhere in your district?—No, that is on the Vine Street ground.

4218. Or Leicester Square?—No.

4219. Generally speaking do the same women walk about the same part?—No, not every night—not as far as I know. They go right through Regent Street and Piccadilly, and places round there.

4220. If a constable is on duty—for example, if you were at Oxford Street near the Circus—do you get to know the women who walk the streets up and down there?—Yes, because there are a great number who come through there every night coming back from Piccadilly and that direction; no end of them come up that way.

4221. (Mr. Dickinson.) How often have you arrested a prostitute?—Twice.

4222. Only twice during three years?—Yes.

4223. (Mr. Muir.) You mentioned an occasion when you tried to warn this woman d'Angely?—Yes.

4224. And she ran down Oxford Street on the south side to Harewood Place, and then crossed over to the corner of Holles Street on the north side on the D Division ground, and came back along Oxford Street on the north side. Can you tell us approximately when that was?—No.

4225. Or what month it was in?—It was during the month of April.

4226. Supposing you had not to administer a caution to this woman D'Angely, at about what period would you have considered yourself justified in arresting her for persistent solicitation. About what date should you say?—I should think it was about the third or fourth week in April, as near as I could say.

4227. In the month of March you saw her again and again, as I understand, soliciting?—Yes.

4228. Supposing you had not had to caution her, at what time would you have made up your mind that she was a prostitute and persistently soliciting men on your beat?—About the second week in April, when I came on point duty.

4229. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Not during the whole of March?—No, because I never saw her so many times during the whole of March as I did in April. I saw her on a good many occasions in March—in fact, almost nightly during March.

4230. That is what I understood. I thought you said you saw her almost nightly during March?—Yes.

4231. You saw her, not every night, but on a good many nights soliciting during March?—Yes.

4232. If that is the case why do you say to Mr. Muir that you never would have arrested her, if you had been able to give a warning, before the second week in April?—I should have arrested her if I had been able to give the warning.

4233. That is what Mr. Muir's question was directed to, but I do not think you followed it. What Mr. Muir was asking you was, supposing you had been able to give the warning, and had apparently made up your mind as to what this woman was, what was the earliest period at which you would have arrested her if you had been able to give her the warning?—If I saw her commit the offence again and I cautioned her I should have arrested her at once.

4234. You do not follow the question, and I must try and put it in another way. Did you see her in February?—Yes.

4235. You had formed an opinion already in February apparently as to what she was?—Yes.

4236. Did you see her solicit in February?—Once, as far as I recollect.

4237. Suppose you had cautioned her then (we know you did not), when you saw her on the next occasion and she did it again, what would you do then?—Arrest her.

4238. You did see her again, I think, some time in February. When was that?—As far as I can recollect, it was about the second or third week in February.

4239. You mean you saw her again do it?—No, that was the first time I saw her do it.

4240. When did you see her again?—In March.

4241. The beginning of March?—About the first week in March.

4242. If you had been able to warn her when you saw her in February, when you saw her again in March you would have arrested her if she committed the offence, as she did do?—Yes.

4243. But you did not do it as you had not been able to warn her?—That is quite right.

4244. (Mr. Dickinson.) I should like Police constable Page to come back, as I have another question to ask him.

HORACE PAGE, P.C. 429 C, recalled.

P.C. H. Page.

4245. (Mr. Dickinson.) I understand that when the arrest took place you saw this woman on the opposite side of Regent Street?—She passed me on the west side first.

4246. When did she solicit somebody?—When she got about 12 yards past me on the west side.

4247. Having seen you?—Yes, she saw me—she must have done. She passed me.

4248. Therefore she was not afraid of you?—No, she did not appear to be that night.

4249. Then she crossed over again?—She walked on about 50 yards first, and then she crossed over on the east side, on the opposite side of Regent Street.

4250. Still in your view?—Yes.

4251. Still knowing that you could see her?—I suppose so.

4252. Then what did she do?—She went north up towards Fouberts Place, and then she stopped another gentleman there.

4253. Still in your view?—Yes.

4254. Knowing that you could see her?—I suppose she knew I could see her.

4255. Then she came towards you?—No, she walked towards Argyll Street, still on the east side of Regent Street.

4256. Still in your view?—Yes.

4257. And then what happened?—She stopped another gentleman there, and then she crossed over to the west side of Regent Street and walked down towards where I was standing.

4258. She walked towards you?—Yes.

4259. Seeing you?—Yes.

4260. Then she did not elude you?—She did not appear to.

4261. If this difficulty arises, which we have heard so much of, that the women escape and try to evade the eyes of the police, she was not trying to evade your eyes on that night?—She might have thought I had gone when she came down the second time. She must have seen me when she passed me in the first place.

P.C. H. Page.
31 July 1906.

4262. Were you round the corner?—I stood back against the houses.

4263. You think she came on you unawares to herself?—I think so the second time.

4264. That is when you cautioned her?—Yes.

4265. Then you cautioned her. And how did you meet her again?—When I arrested her, do you mean?

4266. Yes?—I walked on after her.

4267. You followed her?—Yes. She was standing with her back to me, and I went on behind her.

4268. She must have known you were behind her then?—She saw me at the corner of Maddox Street just as previously.

4269. You did not try to conceal yourself, then?—I was standing back close to the houses.

FREDERICK LUCAS, P.C. 136 C, sworn.

4270. (Mr. Muir.) You are a police constable, No. 136 of the C Division, stationed at Marlborough Street?—Yes.

4271. Were you on duty in Regent Street on the night of the 24th April?—Yes.

4272. Did you see the woman Eva d'Angely on that night?—At the station.

4273. You saw nothing of her prior to her arrest?—Not that night.

4274. Had you seen her before that night?—I saw her the second week in April in Regent Street.

4275. Where were you on duty at that time?—On the south-east corner of Oxford Street—the fixed point.

4276. While you were there did you see her?—Yes.

4277. What were your hours of duty?—From 9 o'clock p.m. to 1 o'clock a.m. that week.

4278. What did you see her doing?—I saw her accosting.

4279. Did you caution her at all?—No.

4280. Why not?—I could not get close enough to her to do so.

4281. Was she alone?—Yes.

4282. (Chairman.) How long have you been in the Force?—Five years.

4283. And what is your age?—Twenty-seven.

4284. Have you been in the C Division all the time?—Yes.

4285. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Do you find also that this practice of having to give warning causes women to escape from you?—It does in a good many cases.

4286. The result of which apparently is that they can go on committing the offence so long as you are not near enough to speak to them. Is that it?—That is so, sir. I always caution them first before I take them into custody. I had only seen this woman a week.

4287. Supposing you see a woman committing the offence of soliciting, and you cannot get near enough to caution her that night, supposing you see her the next night, would you not give her the warning?—I think so.

4288. (Mr. Whitmore.) Because of the offence you saw her committing on the previous night?—Yes, I would.

4289. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That would be your first opportunity, and then you would give her the warning not to do again what you had seen her doing the evening before?—Quite so.

P.C. F. Lucas.

4290. (Mr. Dickinson.) It seems from the table we have before us, that the number of prostitutes varies considerably in the different months?—Yes.

4291. You have had a good deal of experience, I suppose, of this work?—Yes.

4292. Is there any reason why, in November, 1905, there were as many as 153 arrests; in February following, only 104 in your division?—I cannot give you the reason.

4293. And again in April, 141. Does the number vary according to the time of year?—I could not say.

4294. Is it your experience that there are more women arrested out of the streets in that particular time of year than at other times?—Sometimes there are more about one night than another.

4295. There is no regular habit that you have noticed?—No.

4296. You yourself, I see, arrested nine in April and only one in March?—Yes.

4297. Is nine a large number for you to arrest in one month?—It is, rather.

4298. Is there any reason?—I was on a particular point—Regent Street—where these women are.

4299. On that particular point there are most arrests?—Yes.

4300. There are the largest number of arrests on that point every month?—Yes.

4301. Whoever is there?—Yes.

4302. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I suppose the weather affects the number of women that are about?—It does.

4303. (Mr. Dickinson.) Do you find yourself there is a difficulty in, so to speak, catching the women? That seems to be the difficulty as I understand?—They will not accost if they see a policeman about. I do not think they would accost in front of a policeman.

4304. (Mr. Muir.) For example, in the foggy weather are there many of those women about?—Yes.

4305. Even in the very foggy weather?—Yes.

(Mr. Muir.) I will now call Inspector Cooper.

(Chairman.) What does Inspector Cooper prove?

(Mr. Muir.) The arrest; he was in charge of the station.

Inspector KENNETH COOPER, sworn.

4305*. (Mr. Muir.) You were sworn yesterday?—Yes.

4306. You are an inspector of the C Division, stationed at Great Marlborough Street?—Yes.

4307. At 11.35 on the night of the 24th April did Police Constable Page bring Eva D'Angely into the station?—Yes.

4308. And did he say he had arrested her as a common prostitute for behaving in a riotous and indecent manner in Regent Street?—That is so.

Inspector K. Cooper.

4309. That is the form in which you took the charge at that station?—That is so, under the Vagrancy Act of 1824, Section 3.

4310. Did the constable state the facts to you that

Inspector K. Cooper.

31 July 1906.

he had just witnessed?—Just as detailed before the Commission.

4311. Did the woman appear to be distressed at all at her position?—Not in the least.

4312. Not at being there under arrest?—Not in the least.

4313. Did she speak any English at all?—Sufficiently for me to understand what she said, and she understood me sufficiently too. She spoke in broken English.

4314. She appeared to understand the charge?—Decidedly.

4315. Did she give you her husband's name?—She did.

4316. The man she called her husband—D'Angely?—Yes.

4317. Did she say anything to you about him?—She told me he was a dealer in bijoutry—jewellery.

4318. Did she make any protest about being arrested?—Not in the least. She was in a very good humour.

4319. Did she give her address?—Yes.

4320. Did you telegraph to the division in which her address was?—I did.

4321. And make inquiries as to it?—Yes, in order that she might be bailed.

4322. A little before 1.20 in the morning did the man giving the name of D'Angely, whom you saw in Paris, come to the station and bail her out?—Yes.

4323. Did he offer any explanation at all as to her being in Regent Street at that time of night?—No.

4324. Did he make any protest as to her being arrested?—He spoke rapidly to her in French, and appeared to be somewhat upset, but he left the station as quickly as he could.

4325. He made no protest to you about her arrest?—Oh, no.

4326. Was she released on her husband's bail, and did he sign the bail book?—Yes.

4327. Is the bail book here?—Yes.

4328. Were you present in court while the evidence was given?—Yes.

4329. Did D'Angely give evidence on the first day?—Yes, he did give evidence.

4330. This is the magistrate's clerk's note of it: "René D'Angely, 25, Twyford Mansions, New Cavendish Street. She is my wife. I appointed to meet my wife at 11.30 p.m. 24th April, Regent Street. Waited for her; found she was not there. Found her afterwards. Had last seen her before this at 10.30 p.m., when I left home to see a friend off." That evidence was given?—That was the effect of his evidence.

4331. Did the magistrate thereupon remand the hearing until the 1st May?—That is so.

4332. Taking bail in £5?—Yes.

4333. (Chairman.) The magistrate discharged her on the remand?—Yes. I was not present on the remand.

4334. (Mr Muir.) After leaving the court did the man D'Angely and the woman go to the station?—They did.

4335. For the purpose of signing the bail book, I suppose?—No, the bail is taken at the court.

4336. Did Inspector Mackay ask them some questions there?—He did.

4337. And did you put down those answers in the form of a statement?—I did.

4338. Have you got that statement?—I have. (Document produced.)

4339. "25th April, 1906. Statement of René D'Angely, 25, Twyford Mansions. My name is René D'Angely. I am 26 years of age, and am a dealer in jewellery and antique articles. I am not employed by any person. I usually deal with Foster's, 54, Pall Mall, who sells on commission things that are sent me. I receive the goods at my address. I have no other address. The rooms I occupy are furnished, and were taken by me through an advertisement from Mr. Gaze, at 63, Twyford Mansions. I earn about £20 a month, and give nearly all to my wife. My rent is £12 a month. When in Paris I live in a boarding house"?—That was the statement I took down in reply to questions.

4340. And that is certified by Inspector Mackay?—Yes.

4341. Then the statement of Eva D'Angely, of 25, Twyford Mansions, Little Marylebone Street: "I am 25 years of age, and was married in Algiers about eighteen months ago. I have a certificate of marriage in Paris, but do not know the address. I came to England with my husband on the 20th February last. With the exception of three nights we have stayed at the present address since we have been in England. I have never previously been in England. I left home about 10.45 p.m. last night, in company of my husband and Mr. Rubens, 17, Porchester Gardens West. We came along Oxford Street to Regent Circus, where I left my husband and his friend. I then walked down Regent Street on the right side as far as Vigo Street to the Café Royal, and came back on the other side to near Verrey's, where I was arrested. I have on several occasions been in Regent Street alone between ten and half-past. I have no lady friends in London. No policeman has ever spoken to me in the street"?—Yes, that is the statement.

4342. Were those statements made with a view of making the inquiries which the magistrate had directed to be made?—To assist in the inquiry for the magistrate's information.

4343. (Chairman.) What did the magistrate say about making inquiries?—At the remand he said to Sub-Divisional Inspector Mackay: "Make full inquiries into this case." That is all that transpired.

4344. Upon the magistrate remanding her, he said that?—Yes; he directed Sub-Divisional Inspector Mackay to make full inquiries into this case.

4345. (Mr. Muir.) That is why you took those statements?—Yes.

4346. You were not in court when the case was disposed of?—No.

4347. (Mr. Dickinson.) I suppose in all these cases you take special care to assure yourself, when a constable brings in a woman, that she is a prostitute?—No doubt we take very great care of that.

4348. What do you do to assure yourself of that?—We have to take the evidence of the constable to a great extent, and if we are satisfied with the statement he makes to us, and there is a prima-facie case, we consider we are justified in putting it on the charge-sheet.

4349. That inquiry you carry out in the police station?—At the police station, before any other steps are taken.

4350. I suppose you had some difficulty in communicating with Madame D'Angely in speaking to her?—More difficulty than we have in a great many cases. It had to be very carefully explained to her.

4351. In English?—Yes.

4352. She could not speak English?—She could not speak very well, but she satisfied me that she understood her position.

4353. And she gave the name of her husband?—She did—René D'Angely.

4354. She explained in English?—Yes; that is how I understood what trade her husband was, or what he did for a living.

4355. You immediately communicated with the husband?—I did.

4356. Then when he came you allowed her to go out on bail?—I did.

4357. Was it the next day that she came up to the court?—Yes.

4359. Let me put a case to you. Supposing you found that a constable had by error arrested a woman of thoroughly well-known position, and her husband came immediately and took her away, should you be bound to go on with that case?—In the special circumstances we should make as much inquiry as we could before she came before the magistrate, but the charge having been taken it must go before the magistrate.

4360. That is what I want to get from you. The charge having been taken, and that charge having been entered in the charge book, you are bound to take it before the magistrate?—Decidedly. We have no power to deal with it otherwise.

4361. Let me understand what you do in a case like that. Supposing a policeman had brought a woman in and he had said she was a prostitute, and you took the charge down as you did in this case, and then circumstances transpired which convinced you at once that a mistake has been made, would you nevertheless have to take that person before the police court?—We should take her before the police court, but there would be other steps that would necessarily follow. We should have to represent the facts to the magistrate and put the full facts before him, and the woman would necessarily be discharged in that case, and the officer dealt with.

4362. You said just now that special inquiries would have to be made. What was in your mind?—In which case do you mean?

4363. When I put the question to you of a perfectly respectable woman being taken up by mistake and I asked you whether it would come before the police court, and you said special inquiries would have to be made?—In the event of anyone appearing at the station which would alter our minds from the time we took the charge, inquiries would probably be made early in the morning into the veracity of the statement of the witnesses who came to the station, and then we would place what evidence we could in front of the magistrate. That is in the event of such an exceptional case arising. I have never known a case of that kind.

4364. You would have the opportunity of asking the magistrate to adjourn the case?—That is so; or if we were satisfied, we should have the opportunity of asking him to dismiss it.

4365. But nevertheless you would have to bring this person's name before the magistrate?—Yes.

4366. As being accused of this offence?—Yes.

Inspector K. Cooper.

31 July 1906

4367. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Does your answer mean that you have never known a mistake having been committed?—I have no personal knowledge of one. I have taken a great many charges.

4368. How many years' experience have you had?—Five years—four years in the West End at the very busy station of Marlborough Street.

4369. You have never known a woman being brought in by mistake?—No, I have never had any personal knowledge of such a case.

4370. (Mr. Dickinson.) You have had a good deal of experience in these cases. Have you any knowledge of cases of men soliciting women? Are those cases ever brought before you?—No, we have never known a case.

4371. I mean men asking a respectable woman?—A man has been brought in occasionally for insulting behaviour under such circumstances, and I have known one or two cases.

4372. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That is another offence?—Yes, it is another offence entirely.

4373. (Mr. Dickinson.) But you have known certain cases of that kind?—Yes.

4374. Cases in which ladies who have been accosted have brought charges against a man?—No, on the evidence of constables of what they have seen in the streets.

4375. Constables have on occasions brought before you cases on their own motion?—Yes, where men have annoyed women in the streets.

4376. Under what section is that?—Under the Police Act of 1839, Cap. 47, Section 54, Sub-section 13.

4377. That is not very common?—No.

4378. It happens sometimes?—Not very often.

Inspector Francis McKay, recalled.

4379. (Mr. Muir.) Are you a sub-divisional inspector of the Metropolitan Police, stationed at Great Marlborough Street?—Yes, I am in charge of the Great Marlborough Street sub-division.

4380. On April 24th last, about midnight, did you come to the station?—Yes.

4381. From patrol duty?—Yes.

4382. Did you see Eva D'Angely there?—Yes.

4383. Did you speak to her?—I did.

4384. In English?—Yes.

4385. What did you say?—I asked her name. She told me her name was Eva D'Angely. I asked her where she resided; she told me Little Marylebone Street—25.

4386. Did you then find what she was charged with?—Yes.

4387. From Inspector Cooper?—Yes. I examined the charge book.

4388. What condition was she in at that time?—She was quite composed. She was standing against the door of the cell when I was speaking to her. She was quite composed.

4389. Did she appear distressed at all?—Not at all.

4390. Did you go off duty at that time?—Shortly afterwards.

4391. You were not there when D'Angely came?—No.

4392. Were you present in court next day?—Yes.

4393. In what capacity were you in court next day?—Simply to see what was going on. A sort of general supervision.

4394. Your ordinary duties?—Yes, I have duties at the police court every morning.

4395. Did you hear the evidence given by Police Constables Page, Sims, and Lucas in the D'Angely case?—Yes.

4396. After that hearing was over, did you hear the magistrate give some directions?—Yes.

4397. To whom did he give the directions?—He addressed me.

Inspector F. McKay.

4398. What did he say to you?—The prisoner said she wished to call her landlord, and the learned magistrate directed me to see her landlord, or any other person who could give evidence for her.

4399. With a view of making inquiries did you see both the D'Angelys in the police station?—Yes, I took them both into the police station.

4400. And there Inspector Cooper took down the statements which have just been read?—Yes.

4401. Was there an interpreter there?—Yes.

4402. When she was before the magistrate there was an interpreter?—Yes.

4403. Was it through the interpreter that she said she wanted to call her landlord?—Yes.

4404. What inquiries did you make after leaving the court that day?—I saw the gentleman to whom she referred.

4405. Who was that?—Mr. Gaze; and he told me that they had taken the flat from him about the latter part of February. He told me they came from Paris, but he did not know much about them. He had not had much opportunity of knowing much about them.

4406. Did she also refer to a Mr. Rubens?—Yes.

4407. What did she say of Mr. Rubens?—Mr. Rubens was the gentleman whom she referred to as having been with her on the previous night, and Rubens was brought round to the station by D'Angely to see me.

4408. When was that?—That was a few days afterwards. I think it would be about the 26th or 27th, as near as I can remember.

4409. The 26th of April?—Yes. Mr. Rubens told me that he had known them some considerable time abroad as very respectable people—I believe he used the word "very"—and knew nothing against them. He told me he would come to the Police Court and tell the magistrate what he knew about them.

Inspector F. McKay.

31 July 1906.

4410. Were those the inquiries that you made?—Yes.

4411. Those were the only persons to whom they referred?—The only persons. They had assured me they had not been in England but a very short time. They first told me that they lived for a night after coming to England at the Crystal Palace with a friend, but they afterwards corrected that statement and said it was Kensington.

4412. At any rate, they mentioned no other person of whom you could make inquiries except Mr. Gaze, the landlord, and this man Rubens?—That is so. I afterwards saw the secretary of the mansions where they were residing, but he knew nothing about them.

4413. So that you made every inquiry you could with regard to them?—Yes.

4414. So far as your inquiries went, did they appear to show that they were respectable people?—I had nothing from which I could tell the magistrate otherwise. I had no facts to lay before the Bench.

4415. You have told us what the result of your inquiries was?—Yes, that is so.

4416. When the case came on on the 1st of May did you attend before the magistrate, Mr. Denman?—Yes.

4417. And what did you tell him?—I told him that I had made inquiries, and they assured me they had been living at this flat since about the end of February, and I found that was correct. She also assured me that she was married, but she was unable to produce her marriage certificate; she told me it was somewhere in Paris, but she did not know where. I said Rubens had promised to come to the court and speak to their respectability prior to coming to England, but he had not come.

4418. As a fact, Rubens did not come?—No.

4419. Did Mr. Gaze attend?—Mr. Gaze attended, but he did not give evidence. I think that was all that passed. The magistrate asked me if I could carry the case any further, and I said no, I could not.

4420. Upon your statement, without calling Mr. Gaze to give evidence, the magistrate dismissed the charge?—Yes.

4421. After the charge was dismissed did you find out that they had been living at 14, Providence Terrace?—Yes.

4422. Prior to going to Twyford Mansions?—Yes.

4423. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Where is Providence Terrace?—South Kensington.

4424. (Mr. Muir.) On the 4th of May did D'Angely come to the Marlborough Police Station about 2 o'clock?—Yes.

4425. Did you leave the Police Court, where you were on duty, to go to the station to see him?—Yes.

4426. What took place between you?—I met him in the passage leading to the station. He shook hands with me, and said he was very sorry for causing so much trouble, but that it was no fault of his that this trouble should have arisen.

4427. You made a note of it at the time, did you?—Yes.

4428. Just read it, as you have made it, in the first person?—"I am very sorry for causing you so much trouble, but it was no fault of mine that all this trouble should arise. I did not intend to do anything further. A solicitor from Sir George Lewis has been calling on me, with Mr. Gerothwohl, to ask me to take up the case, but I do not wish, and hope the matter is ended."

4429. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) What date was that?—The 4th of May.

4430. (Chairman.) Had you ever seen Rubens before?—No.

4431. Did you have any conversation with him?—Yes, in the Police Station.

4432. Did he give you his address?—Yes.

4433. Have you made any inquiries about him?—Not at his address.

4434. What was his occupation? What did you gather about him?—That he was a commission agent, or employed in a commission agent's office at Trinity Square, City.

4435. From his name he appears to be a foreigner. Did you gather that he was a foreigner?—Yes, but he spoke English very fluently.

4436. He did not come to the Police Court?—No.

4437. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) As I understand from the inquiries that you made you were not satisfied of the respectability?—No, I was not. I had my own opinion from the very first.

4438. You were not to tell the magistrate whether you were satisfied with the respectability; you simply had to communicate to him the result of the information that you had obtained?—That is so.

4439. And then it was for him to exercise his judgment?—Yes.

4440. As far as you were concerned, you appear to have seen the one gentleman, Mr. Gaze, whom you have mentioned, who knew nothing about them except that the flat had been let to them?—That is so.

4441. That is all he knew?—Yes.

4442. The only person who seemed to have vouched for their respectability, if I follow your evidence correctly, was Rubens?—That is so.

4443. But he did not attend the court to give evidence?—No.

4444. Although he had said he would?—Yes.

4445. Beyond Rubens, there was no other?—No.

4446. Is it a common form of defence for a woman charged with this offence to set up?—Yes, it is.

4447. That she is a respectable woman, and that a mistake has been made?—Yes.

4448. Does it often happen that a mistake has in fact been made?—Never to my knowledge.

4449. You are very particular about arrests and charges of this character?—We are extremely so, especially for some time, because we have had a considerable amount of trouble with prostitutes. They have been coming into the neighbourhood somewhat thick, I may say, and we have had to take rather severe measures to make the streets respectable. I think it was about the latter part of 1904 I had to raid a great number of flats situated in the West End, and shortly after that there was a number of prostitutes who came on the streets, more so than there had been previously. There were also a number of Jewish girls who came over about September, 1904. We had considerable difficulty with them, but I received very great assistance from Mr. Cohen, of the Jewish Rescue Society, and we were able to suppress that nuisance considerably. But from about the latter part of 1904 we have certainly had a great number of women arrested, more than there had been in the corresponding period previous.

4450. Does it usually follow that if you are very active with regard to houses that you then get a great number of offences of this character in the streets?—You do for a time, but that does not last any length of time.

4451. What becomes of them then?—They simply migrate into other districts.

4452. They get into other houses?—Yes, that is so.

4453. Or walk the streets in other districts?—Or walk the streets in other districts. They spread themselves over various districts. I have known a number of women there about twelve months ago. I see them no more now.

4454. With regard to this D'Angely case, as I understand from the facts as stated, it appears to have been a very ordinary case?—It was.

4455. There was nothing to take it out of the common?—Nothing.

4456. It seems a very simple case, apparently?—It was.

4457. The only thing that was extraordinary about it was the agitation that was aroused?—In the Press.

4458. Except for that, it was just the class of case of which you have a number?—Oh, yes, I have a great number.

4459. And a class of defence which is set up over and over again?—Yes, in fact, I know to my own knowledge, 12 or 13 cases where men have come forward and sworn that the women were their wives, and we afterwards found out it was a lie. In fact, there were two or three cases in which I had warrants for the men's arrest.

4460. In those cases were the women discharged?—Yes.

4461. Acquitted?—Yes, and of course there were comments in the Press about the matter.

4462. So that in this particular case apparently the acquittal was rather the extraordinary thing. In these cases, as a rule, from what I gather from what you have said, it does not often happen that a woman is acquitted?—Yes, in these cases where there is any doubt.

4463. I quite understand that, but what I mean is, that so far as I can follow from what you have told us, the only thing that can be said to be uncommon in the case is the fact that the woman was acquitted, but you say that happens also sometimes?—Yes, that is so.

4464. In cases such as you have described where a man goes into the witness-box, and swears he is the woman's husband?—Yes, that is so. There are a number of these cases; not so many as we used to have, but the papers recently have been taking more notice of them, and they have become more conspicuous than they would otherwise be.

4465. Do you mean then that there are men who force these women on the streets, and then come forward and swear they are their husbands in order to get them out of the trouble?—They do.

4466. That is what happens?—Oh, yes, I know a great number of cases. I have known cases where men have taken young girls from their businesses, put them on the streets, and in the latter part of the time they become ill, and then the girls start keeping a brothel, and then they have to be raided for keeping the brothel.

4467. Now, in regard to another matter altogether, your experience in the Force has been considerable, I understand?—Yes.

4468. How many years?—19 years. I have performed the whole of my duty within a circle of two miles of Charing Cross.

4469. You have had a large experience within that district?—Yes, I have.

4470. Have you ever known of policemen taking money from women?—No, I have never known a case. I have heard it stated, and women have said so to me, but I have not been able to verify these statements. My duty at times necessitates my being a great deal in plain clothes, especially at night, because I have to raid brothels and clubs. I have laid myself out in this way that I have gone out in my plain clothes, and I have met these women and got into conversation with them as a stranger, and asked them questions about the police, but I could never find a case where they had given money to constables.

4471. I do not quite understand what you mean by saying that you have never found a case. You have found a case where a woman has said she gave it?—Yes, I have heard them say in the police station or where they are charged, "Why don't you give money to the coppers—you will be all right then."

4472. You are speaking of conversations you have had with them when you have been in plain clothes?—Yes.

4473. Have you never heard them say then anything about giving money to the police?—They have said they have given money to the police, but I have asked them to define a case, or tell me of a case where they have actually done it.

4474. That might be very difficult for them, might it not?—No, I think it would be very easy.

4475. As I understand then you have known them tell you when you have been in plain clothes that they have given money to the police, but they have been unable to identify the policeman. Is that it?—They did not say that they were unable to identify him. It was more of a general statement. They would probably say "So and so doesn't get locked up because she tips the policeman." Then you find out "so and so," and of course she has quite a different tale to tell altogether.

4476. In such a case would you go and strive to ascertain from this other woman whether she did tip the policeman?—I would.

4477. In your experience have you ever known a case which has been authenticated in any way? I am not suggesting it against the Force as a whole, for a moment, but what I want to know is have you ever known a case in which it has happened with regard to any particular policeman?—No, I know there are men who at times go about and represent themselves to be policemen. In fact, I have found it when I have had observation kept upon brothels, or when I know that a brothel is running. I have seen men go and stand close to the premises, and take a piece of paper out of their pocket, and start writing, and call attention to the fact. That is only a question of blackmail.

4478. Trying to pretend they are policemen in order to get money?—That is so.

4479. That would rather suggest they would expect if they were the police they would get money, would it not?—It might be so, but I have no reason to suspect it. I have had hundreds of brothels through my hands, and I have never had a single complaint made in that direction.

4480. Have you ever had any complaint with regard to bookmakers?—Yes, I have.

4481. You have had definite complaints with regard to them, have you not?—I have had one definite complaint.

4482. How long ago?—That was about 18 months or two years ago; 18 months, I think it was.

4483. What was the result? Was there an inquiry made?—Yes, a thorough inquiry.

4484. With what result?—The result was the constables were exonerated. There was no blame attached to them.

4485. You say "the constables." Against how many?—There was a sergeant and a constable.

4486. Was the accusation made in writing?—Yes, it was in the first instance, and statements were afterwards taken in front of the two men who were accused.

4487. And who conducted the inquiry?—Superintendent Mann, under the direction of the Commissioner.

4488. That was the instance to which he referred yesterday?—Yes, that was the case where the constables were out in plain clothes for the purpose of suppressing street betting.

4489. Had they gone in plain clothes on that duty?—We did at the time send them out in plain clothes, and these two constables had been particularly active. The men who made the complaint were two bookmakers, and they had to give up their business because they could not live, they had been arrested so many times. I think one had to pay over £100 in less than three months in fines.

4490. You have heard of other cases in the Police Force, have you not?—Yes.

4491. Other cases in which the police have received money from bookmakers?—Yes, I know two cases in particular.

4492. How long ago are those?—They are both within the last four years.

4493. Are they cases which were proved?—Yes.

4494. What happened to the two men?—They were both dismissed.

4495. I want the particulars of those cases. What was the rank of those two men?—One was a constable serving in the L Division—that is Kennington. It was proved he had had money from the bookmaker, and he was dismissed. I think that is about four years ago as near as possible, speaking from memory.

4496. What was his name?—I cannot think for the moment what his name was.

4497. You could give it to us later on, I suppose?—Yes.

4498. He was dismissed?—Yes.

4499. Then there was another one?—Yes.

4500. What was his position?—An inspector.

4501. What division?—The F Division—Kensington.

4502. Is that Inspector McCarthy?—Yes.

4503. He had had very long service?—Yes.

4504. Over twenty years?—Yes.

4505. He was dismissed for having taken money from a bookmaker?—Yes.

4506. Taking bribes?—Yes.

Inspector F. McKay.

31 July 1906.

4507. There was an inquiry into that?—There was.

4508. Who conducted that inquiry?—The Superintendent of the F Division.

4509. (Mr. Muir.) It went before the Commissioner himself finally?—Both these cases, I think, did go before Sir Edward Henry.

(Mr. Muir.) No man can be dismissed and lose his pension without the sanction of the Commissioner himself.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I know it eventually did go before the Commissioner, but I did not know he conducted the inquiry.

(Mr. Muir.) Yes, he did. It went through various stages. The superintendent conducts the first inquiry. Then it goes before the Commissioner, and he has all the witnesses there that the accused desires—all fresh witnesses, but the others who have already given their statements are taken as they stand, unless the accused desires to have the men called before the Commissioner himself.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It is a regular trial.

(Mr. Muir.) It is a regular trial, and the Commissioner delivers a judgment, which is taken down.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) And the result in this case was that it was found to be proved, and the accused was dismissed, in spite of his twenty odd years' service?

(Mr. Muir.) Yes.

4510. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Those are two cases. Can you tell me of any others? It is very important, as you will thoroughly appreciate, not only from the public point of view but for the benefit of the police force, that we should know of as many cases as you can give us?—I am afraid I cannot speak of any other case from memory.

4511. Can you tell me of any other cases in which an inquiry has been conducted—I am not asking for the names of men with regard to whom there has been an inquiry and who have been exonerated, but so far you have told me of one case in which there was an inquiry and exoneration, and two cases in which there were inquiries and conviction?—Yes.

4512. That makes three cases during the last four years, we will say. One, I think you said, was 18 months ago, and the two in which there was a conviction were during the last four years?—That is so.

4513. What I want you to do is to assist us by telling us of any other case in which there have been charges formulated—I do not mean wild allegations or general statements, but cases in which charges have been formulated?—I am afraid I cannot from memory.

4514. There have been others, have not there?—Yes, there have been.

4515. There have been others in which there have been convictions?—Yes, I believe there have been. In other divisions, of course, I would not take a great deal of notice of it.

4516. Except as affecting the general welfare of the police, and their general character?—Yes, just so. I could not give you reliable information from memory.

4517. An honourable member of the force would, of course, be most anxious that any dishonourable member of the force should be convicted?—That is so.

(Mr. Muir.) May I say, for your information, sir, that in all those cases the result of the inquiries and the statements are taken down in writing, and all forwarded to the head office and preserved there. If the Commissioners desired it, a return could be prepared showing every case.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I think I have already asked for the particulars. I asked Sir Edward Henry to let us have them.

(Mr. Muir.) That will be noted. There will be no difficulty in giving them.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) If that is done it will save a good many questions.

(Mr. Muir.) Over what period do you suggest?

Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I should suggest, subject to what the Chairman and the other Commissioners think, that it is desirable we should have it for, say, the last 10 years.

(Chairman.) I think 10 years would be quite enough.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) And, just to complete it, that would be a return which would show us not only the charges which have been successfully formulated, but the charges which have been formulated and in respect of which there has been exoneration. We should like them all.

(Mr. Muir.) Yes. In those cases probably it would not go beyond the Superintendent. If the Superintendent exonerated there would be an end of it.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) But nevertheless there would be the statements in writing.

(Mr. Muir.) Yes, and they are all at the head office.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It is desirable we should have all those, and at the same time (I am only repeating this because I am quite certain that I mentioned it to the Chief Commissioner) also the same thing with regard to any charges of taking money from women, either successfully made or unsuccessfully made, within the same period.

4518. (Chairman.) Is there a record kept at each police station containing charges made against police constables belonging to the division connected with the police station?—Yes, if the complaints were made personally a statement would be taken and entered in the Occurrence Book—that is to say, where the complainant attended the station personally. The constable is then sent for, and a statement made in his presence. It is taken down in writing and signed by the complainant, and dealt with accordingly.

4519. Does the complainant sign the entry in the Occurrence Book?—No, he signs a separate statement.

4520. And the inspector in charge is responsible for seeing there is an Entry in the Occurrence Book referring to the transaction?—That is so.

4521. Then with regard to any ordinary punishment inflicted by way of discipline on any member of the force for small offences, is there a book kept at each of the police stations?—Yes. Each constable when he joins the service is given a default sheet, and all punishments are entered on this default sheet. They are bound each year, and kept for reference.

4522. (Mr. Dickinson.) I suppose you admit there is a large number of prostitutes in Regent Street and Piccadilly between the hours of half-past 11 and half-past 12?—There has been, and there is now, a large number.

4523. You have long experience. Are there more or less now than there were, say, five or six years ago?—Considerably less. The last two years there has been a great improvement in that direction. When we had those flats running we found they were kept by bullies, and each bully had probably four or five women whom he put on the streets; but we have been taking vigorous action against those bullies, and there is no doubt it has cowed them to a very great extent.

4524. Where do they mostly congregate? Is it in the lower part of Regent Street, between Piccadilly Circus and Waterloo Place, or not?—There are numbers round Piccadilly Circus, Leicester Square, Regent Street, Oxford Circus and Oxford Street, Tottenham Court Road, Shaftesbury Avenue, Charing Cross Road, and round that neighbourhood. Then on the west we have in Park Lane a number who come out of the park late at night, but they are of a very low class.

4525. What about the lower part of Regent Street?—Yes, there are a number who congregate round there, but not so many as we find round the circus and round that way.

4526. Can you tell me why they congregate about there?—I think it is really because they find it the best paying market.

4527. Why is the best paying market round there?—There are a number of people going backwards and forwards to the clubs and the theatres.

4528. Do you look upon it as part of the duty of the police to clear these points and these women?—I do.

4529. And a policeman would not be doing his duty if he did not arrest any woman whose conduct under the circumstances justified arrest—who he had cautioned after she accosted?—That is so.

4530. Are there any general instructions to that effect?—We certainly impress upon them the necessity of doing their duty, but at the same time, we take the precaution of pointing out that they should exercise great care, and that they should not rush headlong into the thing. For instance, we should not expect a young man to interfere with prostitutes, till at least he had 12 months' service, because he cannot become sufficiently acquainted with them to know who they are before that.

4531. Do you, as a matter of fact, entrust this duty to particular individuals of the force in preference to others?—We usually take experienced men. For instance, we would not put a young man under twelve months' service on Regent Street and expect him to interfere with prostitutes.

4532. But both these men who appeared before us this morning are young men, or at any rate one of them is quite a young man and he was put on.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs). Twenty-five years of age, with three years' service.

4533. (Chairman). When was he put on to this service in Regent Street?—He was not competent to interfere with prostitutes till quite recently.

4534. (Mr. Dickinson). I want to understand that. I suppose every man in the force has to take his turn at particular places, quite apart from prostitutes?—We have to discriminate.

4535. With a view to this particular question?—Yes, that is so. We must have experienced and reliable men.

4536. You have heard the evidence we have had to-day about the difficulty in having to give the caution and having to see the actual act of accosting?—That is so.

4537. In your opinion is that a real difficulty?—There is no doubt about that, but at the same time it is a safeguard. If a man brings a woman into the station and charges her with being a common prostitute he must be able to satisfy the officer on duty that he has known her for a considerable period, and that he has cautioned her so that there can be no possible chance of the person being an innocent woman.

4538. Assuming it is the right thing (I will not say it is) to clear the streets of these women, are there no means by which the police could do it more effectively than it is done at present?—No, I think not.

4539. You told Mr. Rufus Isaacs of an instance when by putting plain clothes men on duty in the case of bookmakers and betting men, you were able to stop that?—Yes.

4540. Would that not be a possibility in connection with this work?—I do not think I would approve of it. I have seen it tried in provincial towns and I cannot say I admired it. I have studied the working in provincial towns and have seen that done, but it is certainly not to be admired.

4541. Just tell me why?—Constables who are on that duty should be under very close supervision so there can be no possible chance of any irregularity taking place, and when a man is put in plain clothes he is not subject to the same supervision.

4542. Not a man of known character, and long service?—Even then, these women are very ready in making statements and very often they get these bullies to corroborate their statement Supposing you have that man by himself, you have these two persons to come forward and swear that he was seen for a certain time in a certain place, and he had done certain things, and he would only have himself to get out of it.

4543. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It is for his protection then—that is the object of it?—Yes.

4544. (Mr. Dickinson.) In what way does he stand in any different position to a man who is alone, but in uniform?—A man in uniform is always under supervision. He has not the same chance of getting away and doing anything that a man in plain clothes has.

4545. Does it not occur to you that this system of dividing into very small beats renders it more difficult, according to what we have heard to-day, for these constables to carry out this particular work?—No, it does not.

4546. Do not you agree with the constable who says that the woman may take a hansom cab or a 'bus and go some little distance, or go from one beat to another, to get out of the view of the constable?—That is frequently done; I have seen it done myself.

4547. If a woman is at all clever, after being cautioned, she goes to another policeman's beat and is cautioned there, and then goes away?—That is so.

4548. That is not a very effective way?—If a man had a larger beat that difficulty could not be overcome.

4549. If you had men specially put on for the purpose who had no particular beats, that would meet that difficulty?—Yes.

Inspector F. McKay

31 July 1906.

4550. What do you say to this case of the young constable, I do not wish to blame him in the least, but he saw this woman over and over again and said that he could not caution her because he could not get at her. But somebody could have done it?—Oh, yes; and it is very possible she had been cautioned by other constables, but we were not in a position to prove that, and when the constable took the prisoner before the magistrate——

4551. I am speaking of the system. According to him the difficulty he was under was having to caution her, to catch her, so to speak, and he could not find her to get at her. She escaped him. Assuming that you wanted to take her prisoner, that difficulty could be met by having special men in uniform for the purpose?—I am afraid not, because the same difficulty would arise then. You would have to allot these men to special patrols, otherwise you would have no supervision over them at all. They would simply go off their patrol, and the same thing would occur.

4552. Do I understand your answer to me to be that you cannot conceive any means whereby the police can more effectively deal with the question of clearing these streets, assuming it is advisable; I do not want you to go into the question of whether it is advisable or not?—No, I cannot. I feel from my experience perfectly satisfied with existing arrangements so far as prostitution is concerned. I know for a fact that the nuisance has become considerably less of recent years, and it is getting less year by year or day by day.

4553. Is that due to the police?—It is.

4554. What have the police done now that they did not do before.—That I could not say. It is possible that they did not act so vigorously as they have done in recent years.

4555. Are they acting more vigorously now than before?—We have been trying to clear the streets.

4556. Do the figures of arrests show any larger increase?—They do considerably.

4557. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs) I am tempted to ask you something more; because you have given us such great assistance. Supposing you did away with the warning, would there be any practical difficulty if a constable had, for example, to report at the police station describing a woman to the best of his ability, instead of giving the warning before he made the first arrest. Would that be a practical difficulty?—I am afraid it would.

4558. I will tell you why I am putting it to you Apparently from what we have heard to day from the constables who were called here, what seems to make the system comparatively ineffective is the warning?—Yes, that is so.

4559. There is no difficulty in detecting the woman as a prostitute; because apparently the man on the beat very soon finds that out. He sees what goes on and he sees the solicitation, and apparently sees it day after day or night after night, but cannot get near enough to warn her. The result of that appears to be that the warning defeats the operation really of the law?—That is so, but if the constable has to arrest the woman ultimately, he brings her before the magistrate, and the magistrate says "You saw her committing this offence: why did you not caution her?" "I did so, your worship." That is the answer.

4560. There are many offences committed in which no caution is given?—Yes, but not in trivial cases. We usually caution people in trivial cases.

4561. In this particular department of the law the effect of the warning as we see is practically to give the women a good deal of immunity?—There is no doubt about that. It gives them every facility.

4562. I want to see whether you can assist us from your practical experience as to what the result would be if you did away with the warning. So far with regard to the woman if there was no doubt of the woman being a prostitute, and no doubt of the fact of her having solicited, and of he having been seen more than once soliciting, which I daresay would be very properly required?—We should never entertain a charge if the woman had only been soliciting once.

4563. No, but supposing you had such a case as this, supposing you had it clearly established that the woman was a prostitute and that she had been soliciting we will say, three nights running, is there any practical difficulty why she should not be convicted, if it is an offence to solicit?—No, there is not.

Inspector F. McKay.

31 July 1906.

4564. Speaking generally, there is no reason why she should not be convicted?—I do not think a constable would be in a position to say a woman was a common prostitute on three nights' observation

4565. As it appears, but take a concrete case like P.C. Sims gave us, that he had seen this Madame D'Angely for part of the month of February and practically during the whole of the month of March almost every night, and had seen her many times soliciting?—Yes.

4566. According to that she was committing an offence against the law for a considerable period to his knowledge?—Yes.

4567. And within his sight?—Yes.

4568. And yet he did not arrest her?—No.

4569. And his real explanation is that he did not arrest her, and that he could not arrest her, until he had given a warning under the regulations?—That is so.

4570. What I want to put to you is this: that Sims told us that he was quite convinced from what he had seen that she was a prostitute in the beginning of March?—Yes, but he has to convince other people as well.

4571. I know; but he had been seeing her during the month of February a good many times, and he sees her in March, and then the instance that I was putting to you arises; he has arrived at a definite point that she is a prostitute, and he is convinced of that from his observations, and not from a mere conjecture, but from seeing her night after night, for some weeks during which he was on duty in February?—Yes.

4572. He has come to the conclusion that there can be no doubt that she is a prostitute, and then he sees her at the beginning of March for three nights running soliciting but never can get close enough to her to give her a warning. What I want to know is; what is the practice?—In that case?

4573. I will tell you what I am thinking of. Suppose for example the law or the regulations was that if no warning could be given, and the woman had been seen soliciting three times during a short period, and then there should be an arrest, and a charge made without the warning. Is there any practical difficulty in that?—Yes, I think there is in this way: It is a very great responsibility for a constable to say that a woman is a prostitute from seeing her three or four times on three or four nights.

4574. That is not giving effect to the hypothesis that I am putting to you. I am assuming that the man has seen her, as we have the evidence, during the whole month of February, and there is no doubt in his mind from his observations about her being a prostitute. I quite appreciate the difficulty that there is in first of all determining that; but assume it to be clear that she is a prostitute, you have still to get the next step to make the offence complete, which is the soliciting?—Yes.

4575. And before the police make the charge there must be something more, which is the warning?—That is so.

4576. What I am dealing with is the last part. I want to see whether that can be got rid of. If you once assume your policeman to have found that she is a common prostitute, to be satisfied as to that from his observation, then supposing he saw her soliciting three nights running but had never been able to get near enough to her to warn her, would there be any practical difficulty then?—No, there would not be, but I am afraid the woman would want to know the reason he did not caution her.

4577. I suppose he would give the woman the same reason that he has given to-day, that every time he tried to get near her she got away from him, and therefore he did not caution her? That is the difficulty, that when a woman is known to be a common prostitute and there is no question about identity at all, then I do not see there is a great deal of importance attached to the caution.

4578. That is what was occurring to me, but apparently the constable would not arrest her without having given her the caution, and so long as she could manage to get away from the constable and to evade the caution she would not be arrested?—The caution must be administered when the offence is committed. It would be rather a dangerous practice for a constable to go up some minutes after and caution a woman and say he had seen her speaking to a gentleman in the street some minutes before.

4579. Your last answer is rather puzzling to us, because according to that the warning that has to be given is even more difficult than we thought, because it has to be given at the time of the offence being committed?—That is so, that is the proper course to adopt, because, for instance, supposing a constable does not caution the woman at the time, and he afterwards sees her walking in the street, and he goes up to her and cautions her, it is very possible she would turn round and become offensive, and a breach of the peace would be occasioned by his own action. She was doing nothing at the time for him to interfere with her for.

4580. Supposing, for example, a woman is seen soliciting, and the constable tries to get near her and she gets away from him, about half-an hour afterwards, we will say, he comes face to face with her. Why should he not give her the warning then?—No, I think that would be rather a bad policy, if she was doing nothing at the time. It is very possible she might turn round and say, "You have made a mistake; how dare you speak to me?"

4581. That seems to lead to this, that it makes the law more impotent even than we thought it was with regard to this matter?—I am afraid it is so.

4582. That is what we want to ascertain with your assistance. If she can only be cautioned when the offence is actually being committed—she must be committing it within sight, and not only within sight, but almost next to the constables?—Yes.

4583. Which is the last thing she would do, is it not?—She might come round the corner all of a sudden, or the constable might be in some secluded part.

4584. It may be that he comes upon her unawares, but apart from that, the thing that a woman would do who was a hardened offender, would be to solicit in a place where the constable is not close to her?—Yes.

4585. According to that she could do it with impunity?—Yes, to a certain extent.

4586. And go on doing it night after night with impunity?—No, I would not expect that.

4587. So long as she recognises the man in uniform. That seems to be all the trouble?—If she came to the same district night after night she would not avoid the constable very long, if he was at all an active man.

4588. You mean that he would chase her after the offence had been committed—run after her?—He would get some means of carrying out his duty.

4589. What puzzles me is when we have had a man like Nelson Sims, who is a young and active man of 25, he had seen this offence being committed many times during February, March, and April before the arrest of this particular woman D'Angely?—Yes.

4590. Then I do not understand why he could not have cautioned her. He is active enough?—Yes, that is so. He seems to have had some difficulty over the matter, whereas Page did not seem to have much difficulty on that night.

4591. One other matter with regard to this warning. Supposing you had police constables in plain clothes, your difficulty, I understand, that you have suggested with regard to policemen in plain clothes, would apply equally to giving the warning, would it not?—No. I think they would have better facilities on that point.

4592. So it occurred to me. If the men in plain clothes go about standing amongst these women they could have the opportunity of giving the warning?—Oh, yes.

4593. Then I suppose the difficulty with regard to that would be that they could not do it often without being known, the same as if they were in uniform?—Yes, that is so.

4594. If you put a new man on, he has got to know the women?—Although I am not very frequently in Regent Street at night in plain clothes I feel confident a large number of the women know me. They very soon get to know you; you are pointed out to them.

4595. Is there any special regulation with regard to those men who may go out in plain clothes?—Yes, they are not allowed to go out in plain clothes without the Commissioner's authority.

4596. As I understand from what you have told us, they do go in plain clothes, or somebody goes in plain clothes, to the bookmakers?—Yes, they are sent out in plain clothes by the Commissioner's authority. I would recommend men for plain clothes duty for a certain period to the Commissioner.

4597. You make the recommendation, and the Commissioner approves?—Yes, through the superintendent.

4598. I suppose they are specially trusted men?—Yes.

4599. (Chairman.) I would ask you to return and give further evidence on general matters at a later date?—Certainly, sir.

Inspector F. Mckay.

31 July 1906.

4600. (Mr. Muir.) On the question of plain clothes men, would that open the door to blackmailing of women by men who pretend to be policemen?—Yes, that is what I had in my mind at the time I spoke.

(Chairman.) You had better postpone questions on the general law and as to any possible amendments till a later date. Have you any further witnesses in regard to Eva D'Angely and René D'Angely.

(Mr. Muir.) Yes, sir, two, who are important as showing the dates at which they came to England.

Miss Helen Blackburn; sworn.

Miss H. Blackburn.

(Mr. Muir.) If you will allow it, sir, this young lady does not desire to give her address in public.

(Chairman.) Very well. We have got it?

(Mr. Muir.) Yes, sir.

4601. Does your mother keep a boarding-house at the address which you have given in your statement?—Yes.

4602. On the 1st of January, 1904, did you have a Mr. Gonzales living with you?—About that date.

4603. Did he introduce Mr. René Soubigere?—Yes.

4604. Who stayed with you for about a month?—Yes.

4605. Would you look at the photograph which has been produced? Is that the person?—Yes.

4606. Did he say that his home was in Littlehampton?—Yes, he said he had a house there.

4607-8. Is that his signature at the bottom of the right hand page of your visitors' book? (Handing book to the witness.)—Yes.

(Chairman.) The identity does not seem to be disputed in any way.

(Mr. Muir.) This is a new name, and I want to produce a leaf from the bail book in order that the Commissioners may compare the handwriting.

4609. After Christmas last did you see the man Soubigere again?—Yes.

4610. Did he bring a lady with him?—Yes.

4611. Did they come to stay?—Yes, for about two months.

4612. Would you look at the photograph. Is that the lady he brought with him?—Yes.

4613. Did he say who she was?—He said that she was his wife.

4614. What Christian name did he call her by?—I think he called her "Eva." I am not sure.

4615. Did he say where they had just come from?—From Algiers, he said.

4616. Did they stay with you for four or five weeks?—Yes, about two months, I think altogether.

4617. Two months altogether at that time?—Until the end of February, I think.

4618. When they left did they owe you any rent?—Yes.

4619. Did they leave any security for it?—They left their boxes, but we found there was nothing in them afterwards.

4620. Were the boxes afterwards opened?—Yes, we opened them, but there was nothing in them.

4621. How much did they owe?—About £6, I think.

4622. Will you look at that visitors' book again. Is that the man's signature, and the date the 1st January, 1906?—Yes.

4623. He gave his address as "Marseilles"?—Yes.

4624. Mr. René Soubigere, Marseilles?—Yes.

4625. After he left did Mrs. Soubigere call?—She called once or twice for letters.

4626. Did any letters arrive there in any other name than Soubigere?—Yes, a letter came for her in the name of Clavel.

4627. Did you know for whom it was intended at all?—We did not then until she said.

4628. She told you?—Yes.

4629. Whom did she say it was for?—For her.

4630. How many came altogether?—I do not know exactly how many, but two or three times I think they came.

Mr. William Gaze; sworn.

Mr. W. Gaze.

4631. (Mr. Muir.) You reside at 33, Twyford Mansions, Little Marylebone Street, W.?—Yes.

4632. Do you hold the lease of No. 25, Twyford Mansions?—I do.

4633 You have held that since the 28th February 1906?—I began on February 28th, 1906.

4634. Did you try to let the flat furnished?—I did.

4635. And about the 3rd or 5th March did D'Angely come and apply?—That would be about the date.

4636. Did he give you a reference to Mrs. Lyons, of 12, Providence Terrace, Earls Court Road?—He did.

4637. And after making inquiries of Mrs. Lyons did you let him the flat?—I did make inquiries, but you have inserted the word "after." I had better not accept that, I had the reference given to me, and I saw her subsequently.

4638. You let the D'Angelys into possession first and then inquired about them afterwards. Is that it?—I am afraid I must admit I did.

4639. When did they go into possession?—They moved in on the 12th March during the afternoon.

4640. Up to what date did they remain in possession?—I found they had gone without giving me notice on Saturday, the 19th May, I believe early in the morning, about 8 or 9 o'clock.

4641. That is when you found out they were gone?—No, that is when I found out by inquiries that they had left. I found it out later in the day.

4642. The same day, the 19th May?—Yes, on Saturday.

4643. Without giving you notice that they were going?—Yes.

4644. Had they paid their rent?—Unfortunately not.

4645. How much did they owe when they went away?—They were four weeks in arrear altogether after frequent applications.

4646. That is at 2½ guineas a week?—Yes.

4647. So that it was about £10?—Yes.

4648. Would you look at the photographs? Are those the persons you are speaking of?—Certainly. That is D'Angely and that is Madame D'Angely.

4649. (Mr. Dickinson.) Was it the fact or not that Madame D'Angely told you what the name of her father was?—Clavel.

(Mr. Muir). There is a witness whose statement you have a copy of at page 15, who seems to be a material witness speaking of the residence at No. 12, Providence Terrace, Nellie Lyons; but inasmuch as they gave that as the place from which they had come when they went to Twyford Mansions I do not know that it is very material to call her. We have not been able to secure her attendance here to-day.

Mr. W. Gaze. 31 July 1906.

(Chairman). To my mind, and I think to the minds of the other Commissioners, it is not at all material.

(Mr. Muir). Those are all the witnesses I propose to call. As to the Algerian statements, I understand you do not desire to have them.

(Chairman). We do not take them as evidence. I understand that Miss Blackburn clearly proves that the two D'Angelys, or rather Soubigere, and the lady whom he called his wife, came there shortly after Christmas and stayed two months.

(Mr. Muir). And said they had come from Algiers. She was called "Eva" by him, and she had letters coming to her addressed in the name of Clavel.

(Chairman). At present that will quite suffice.

(Mr. Muir.) That is all the evidence I have to call in this case.

(Chairman.) The Commissioners propose to adjourn until October 16th, when they will resume the taking of evidence in public. If any person desires to give evidence he or she should communicate with Mr. Leslie, the Secretary, at the offices of the Commission, and Mr. Leslie, or somebody on his behalf, will take their evidence, and due notice will then be given to the witnesses when we propose to take their evidence.

(Mr. Muir.) There is one question I should like to ask, in order to have it quite clear as to the returns which the Commissioners desire to be made. As I understand they are these:—Full statements as to any complaints made throughout the whole Metropolitan area against the Police, either authenticated or anonymous, of blackmailing prostitutes over the period of ten years. A like statement over the same period with regard to bookmakers. Also full details as to any inquiries which were held by the Assistant Commissioners or superintendents with regard to these allegations, and the full result thereof.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You must add something to that which I must call your attention to—licensed victuallers and restaurants.

(Chairman.) Suggestions have reached us that the police are in the habit of receiving money from licensed victuallers and from restaurant keepers, and, therefore, it might be expedient for you to include in the Return any complaints or charges or convictions of the police of anything of that kind.

(Mr. Dickinson.) There were also some other returns which Sir Edward Henry promised.

(Mr. Muir.) They have been noted. It is only with regard to those that have been mentioned to-day that I wanted to be sure.

SIXTH DAY.

Tuesday, 16th October 1906.

PRESENT:

Sir David Brynmor Jones, K.C., M.P. (Chairman).
Rufus Daniel Isaacs, Esq., K.C., M.P.
Willoughby Hyett Dickinson, Esq., M.P. (Barrister-at-Law).
Charles Algernon Whitmore, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law).
J. W. St. Lawrance Leslie, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law) (Secretary).

(Chairman.) We will take Clinch's case first.

(Earl Russell.) I do not know what the procedure of the Commissioners has been in these cases. Would you desire me to call the witnesses and examine them?

(Chairman.) Do you apply for liberty to examine the witnesses?

(Earl Russell.) I think that would be the most convenient course.

(Chairman.) Then let it be so.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) May I mention this: The Chief Commissioner is here. He understood you desired his attendance. Do you desire to examine him to-day? I understand Dr. Gerothwohl asked that he should be here.

(Chairman.) Is Dr. Gerothwohl here?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) Yes, Sir

(Chairman.) Do you wish to make an application?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) I desire to put some questions to Sir Edward Henry.

(Chairman.) I do not think we wish to call Mr. Commissioner Henry as a witness at present. I understood that you wished to make some application to us, or to make, to call Mr. Commissioner Henry, and put some questions to him with regard to the procedure at Scotland Yard which followed the hearing of our case, and to ask him about the treatment meted out to my complaint.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) That is the application I meant to make some further statement.

(Chairman.) Mr. Commissioner Henry is going to be recalled to give further evidence before us, but I do not know that we intended to call him to give evidence in reference to your complaint and Mr. Lavalette's complaint against the police.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) May I make an application that he be called?

(Chairman.) I want to know whether you propose that we should ask Mr. Commissioner Henry to go into the box in order that you may ask him general questions about the conduct of the police, or whether you propose to ask him questions with reference to your own matter.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) In reference to our own matter.

(Chairman.) What do you say to that, Mr. Bankes?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I have no objection at all. I understand what Dr. Gerothwohl wants to do is to inquire into the question about a letter which he wrote to Sir Edward, and we are quite prepared to deal with that.

(Chairman.) Then if Mr. Commissioner Henry is here perhaps he will be good enough to go into the witness box.

Sir EDWARD RICHARD HENRY recalled.

4650. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) Do you remember reading an account of the first day's proceedings at Marlborough Street?—I probably did.

4651. It did not strike you then as anything unusual?—No.

4652. Did you read the account of the second day's proceedings in the evening papers of the 11th?—I could not be sure at this interval of time. I probably saw all the accounts at some time or other, but whether I read them at the time I could not say.

4653. The case was dealt with at rather an unusual length in the Press?—It may have been.

4654. It is not your custom to read the police-court reports regularly?—Yes, I read them all, but not necessarily the very same day, and I do not depend on the Press reports, because they are not always accurate. I always have a report from the officers concerned.

4655. When was your attention first called to our case?—I really could not say.

4656. Do you not recollect?—I do not recollect the particular day.

4657. Do you remember when the first communication with regard to the case reached you from any quarter, whichever quarter it was—about when?—No, I cannot say that I do. I suppose you are referring to your visit to Scotland Yard, are you not?

4658. That or any other?—That is perhaps what you are referring to. I did not know of that until six weeks afterwards.

4659. Your attention was called to our case surely before that?—I read it in the papers but it had nothing to do with me at the time. It was before the magistrate.

4660. It was finished on the 11th before the magistrate?—Then probably on the 11th you wrote to the Home Office. That is probably the form in which it reached me. You wrote to the Home Office saying you wanted a further inquiry, or perhaps they might prefer having questions put in the House. I think that is the form in which it reached me. I will not be quite sure, but I think so.

4661. When this letter was left it never reached you?—No.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Which letter are you speaking of?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) The note which was left at Scotland Yard on the evening of the 11th April.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) It is hardly right to say the evening.

(Witness.) Perhaps I may explain. On the Wednesday before Good Friday at a little before midnight Dr. Gerothwohl came to Scotland Yard and demanded to see me. The inspector on night duty told him that I was probably in bed, and then he asked for some paper and he wrote a note requiring me to make an appointment with him for the next day, Thursday, or, failing that for the next day, Friday. He left this letter, and it was sent up by the night inspector the next morning to my secretary, who in the ordinary course of events would have put it before me. But I imagine that I came a little later than usual to the office; I was not there by 11 o'clock, I think I may have gone to the Motor Car Commissioner Office, because I was one of the Motor Car Commissioners. At any rate, I do not think I was in the office by 11 o'clock, and consequently my secretary took all the papers, because there are generally a great many papers, and he put them down on my table instead of bringing them in to me. Having put them down on my table he could not gain access to me because one person and another came in, some of my colleagues and others, and what he did was to put his head in and say "I am off." He was going away for the week end—it was Easter time, and he was going out of town, so he did not put the papers before me in the way in which he ordinarily does. I did my work, and I apparently never came to this letter, and I heard nothing more about it until about six weeks afterwards, when Dr. Gerothwohl wrote to the Home Office, and represented that I had not given him an interview. Then when I made inquiries I ascertained what I have told the Commission, and I suppose that is what Dr. Gerothwohl is alluding to.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) Yes, that is it.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) We have the letter, and perhaps it would be convenient that the Commission should see it. (Letter and card handed to the Commissioners.)

(Witness.) I need hardly say if I had had the letter I should have certainly given him an interview.

(Chairman.) We will ask our secretary to read these documents.

(Secretary.) "11th April, 1906.—Mr. M. A. Gerothwohl presents his compliments to the Chief Commissioner and requests of him the favour of an interview in connection with the Boat Race night case dismissed this morning at Marlborough Street Police Court. With anticipated thanks. To-morrow afternoon or Friday would suit Mr. Gerothwohl perfectly. Address, 8, Alma Terrace, Kensington."

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) The 11th was Wednesday, Thursday was the 12th, and the 13th was Good Friday.

(Secretary.) Then there is Dr. Gerothwohl's card, and a note on it: "11.45 p.m., 11th April, 1906, called," and then "Mr. Edwards" is written underneath.

4662. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) Is it not customary in Government offices to formally acknowledge, at any rate, a letter which has been received?—Yes. I should, of course, have written to you and given you an interview if I had seen the letter. That is quite certain.

4663. We have already had it that police reports were called for on the 13th, or they are dated the 13th, and something has been heard of those reports in the course of this inquiry. Were you not aware that police reports were called for?—Oh, yes, I probably saw them all.

4664. Then your attention must have been called to it on the 12th?—To what?

4665. To our case, because the reports are dated the 13th?—I went out of town. It was Good Friday, and I could not say exactly whether I saw them on the 12th or the 14th. I probably did not. I went out of town for the Friday and Saturday and Sunday and Monday; but I saw them within a few days, no doubt.

4666. Did you call for them?—They are called for in the ordinary course of events. I did not call for them, but it is a matter of practice when any case is taken up which appears at all contentious that we always do call for police reports. I do not call for them necessarily, but they are always put before me.

4667. Then it did appear contentious?—Obviously, because, as you have said, the Press took it up.

4668. When did the reports come to your notice?—Very shortly afterwards. I could not say the exact date.

4669. By that time you would have received a formal complaint?—A complaint about what?

4670. About the conduct of the police?—I really could not say, without looking at the papers, whether I had received a formal complaint. I do not know that you made a formal complaint to me. I do not remember that. I think you probably addressed the Home Office. The papers would have come over as a matter of course.

4671. As the result of that complaint which reached you, did you make any further inquiry?—Oh, yes, an inquiry was made by the Assistant Commissioner. The officers were sent for, and the Assistant Commissioner made a careful inquiry.

4672. I think in the note I left at Scotland Yard on the 11th, and also in the formal complaint made to the Home Office, I requested the favour of an interview with you?—You certainly did in the letter that we have referred to, but I have said that letter did not reach me personally, so I could not comply with it.

4673. You saw the officers implicated?—I did not. The Assistant Commissioner did.

4674. Is it customary only to see one party in the matter?—The case had been dealt with in Court, and what we wanted to satisfy ourselves about was with regard to the officers who were concerned in the case,

Sir E. R. Henry.

16 Oct. 1906.

those constables, how it was that they were in that particular place. It was essential to see whether they could in the ordinary course have come on to the spot as they alleged they had, and that was very carefully gone into. When they heard the noise one officer came down Conduit Street, and another came down Air Street, and another came down Piccadilly Circus. That was the point. There were three concerned.

4675. May I ask you whether you would not see or did not hear the other side of the case?—There was no other side to hear. I do not sit in review on the decisions of magistrates. I am only concerned with the conduct of the police.

4676. Can you make an inquiry into the conduct of the police if you do not know exactly what the other side alleged?—Oh, yes, because the other side put in writing what they alleged.

4677. They put it very briefly, because they were requesting an interview?—Obviously it would be quite improper for me to sit in review on the decision of every magistrate that was called in question.

4678. When a request is made for an inquiry to the Home Office, or a complaint, of course it is referred to you so that you may investigate it, is it not?—Yes.

4679. I understand that the Home Office have no other means of independent information but through your channel?—Not on a matter like that, clearly.

4680. Therefore I should presume you would make a very careful and impartial inquiry into the matter?—We make as good an inquiry as we can.

4681. Do you say you did so on this occasion?—Yes, I think there was a careful inquiry made.

4682. We have heard about the reports. Did the conversation of the authorities in Scotland Yard with the officers bring out something further than the reports?—No, I did not hear of anything further.

4683. When you saw those reports, did you note the omission of the constables in their reports of any mention of our protest?—A good deal would always be omitted from a report. You cannot get into one or two pages all that could be said about the particular occurrence.

4684. But you read the inspector's report also?—I read all the papers.

4685. Did you notice the discrepancy between the inspector's report and the three constables' reports?—No, I do not remember noticing any discrepancy.

4686. You are very practised in reading these reports?—I get a good deal of practice.

4687. Then you would notice the slightest irregularity?—No, I should not notice the slightest irregularity straightaway.

4688. You are aware now that there was a discrepancy?—I do not know what you refer to.

4689. The omission of any mention of our protest?—I should not call that a discrepancy, because I fancy in all these cases there is always some sort of protest.

4690. That is not an answer to my question. The inspector mentioned that there was a protest, did he not?—I do not remember, really. If you give me the report I can tell you, but it is no use examining me on papers when I have not got them before me.

4691. You cannot ask me to produce the reports?—If they are here they can be produced.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) The reports have all been read already.

4692. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) You know, of course, the inquiry we asked for was refused?—No, I do not know that it was refused. We made the inquiry.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Refused by whom?

4693. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) In Parliament an inquiry was suggested. I understand that when a request for an inquiry is made, the merits of that request would depend very largely on the information supplied by you to the Home Office?—Yes, we would report exactly what we had been able to ascertain.

4694. Therefore when that inquiry is refused, it is, of course, refused, as I say, practically on the information which you supplied?—But the inquiry was made; it was not refused.

4695. It was refused to us. It was granted afterwards in another case?—I do not follow you.

4696. We were referred to the Law Courts on two occasions. I have the answer of the Home Secretary on the 27th April.

(Chairman.) Is that a letter from the Home Secretary to you?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) That is the Press account, but I have the letter itself if you would prefer to have that.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) What is the date of the letter from the Home Secretary?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) The 28th April, 1906. "Sir,—I am directed by the Secretary of State to say that he has caused careful inquiry to be made in the matter of your letters of the 12th and 22nd instant with regard to the conduct of certain Metropolitan police officers on the night of the 7th-8th instant, and while he fully accepts the decision of the magistrate dismissing the charge of drunkenness, and is glad to believe that the police officers who were maintaining order in Piccadilly in circumstances of great difficulty were mistaken in this point, he finds himself unable to take action of the kind suggested in your letter. If the grave charges you make against the officers in question are to be carried further, the only way in which this can properly be done is by proceedings in a Court of Law. It is open to you to institute such proceedings if you are so advised, and the Secretary of State can assure you that no obstacles will be placed in your way by the police authorities, but he cannot accede to your suggestion that the materials placed before him are sufficient to justify him in taking further action."

(Mr. Whitmore.) Who is that letter signed by?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) By M. D. Chalmers.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That is from the Home Office, and I notice from the documents before us that on the 25th April Sir Edward Henry had reported to the Home Office; therefore the letter is written three days afterwards.

4697. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) I infer from that that the information supplied to the Home Secretary was not of a satisfactory nature—at least, it was not favourable to our request?—I presume the information supplied was to the effect that, so far as we could gauge, the account given by the police was correct.

4698. You stated that in face of the magistrate's decision?—Yes. I say that, so far as we could gauge, the account given by the police was correct. That is the conclusion we came to. We may have been wrong.

4699. In fact, in your official capacity I understand you set yourself against the magisterial decision?—Oh, no, I do not.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) The letter expressly says not.

4700. (Dr. Gerothwohl.) If the police account was correct, how were the police mistaken?—Mistaken in what?

4701. Your contention is, after making your further inquiries, the magistrate's decision was wrong?—No, I do not say that.

4702. If the police account was correct, I must ask you whether in your correspondence with the Home Office you endeavoured to influence the Home Office authorities to adopt any course in Parliament or otherwise that might be prejudicial to our interests.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) May I ask whether this is relevant? Dr. Gerothwohl had your permission to ask some questions about a communication he made to Sir Edward. Is it material, or does it assist the Commissioners, to ask Sir Edward's personal opinion on all these matters?

4703. (Chairman.) We are not here to discuss the conduct of the Home Secretary or the conduct of the magistrate. I understand Mr. Commissioner Henry says that he examined the reports sent in by the police-constables concerned in this matter, and that he came to the conclusion there was no reason for his taking any action with regard to these officers. (To the Witness.) Is that so?—That is so.

4704. And you told the Home Office so?—I told the Home Office so.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) And Sir Edward Henry has just expressed the view, as I understand, that the police were correct.

(Witness.) I think that probably the Commission have a copy of what I submitted to the Home Secretary.

(Chairman.) Yes, I think it is with the documents.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) The expression actually used by Sir Edward Henry is in accordance with what he has just said, "I regret that I am unable to carry this case any further."

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) May I be favoured with a copy of Sir Edward Henry's letter?

(Chairman.) No, I do not see any reason for granting that request at present. Mr. Commissioner Henry has told you very frankly what conclusion he came to, and he, upon the request no doubt of the Home Secretary, informed the Home Office he could not carry the case any further; that he had come to the conclusion that there was no such misconduct on the part of the police-constables as justified his taking any disciplinary action.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) We have a copy of the letter which Dr. Gerothwohl is asking for. It has been supplied to us as one of the documents that has passed between the Home Office and the Commissioners of Police.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) The question I was putting to Sir Edward Henry is, whether in his correspondence he endeavoured to influence the Home Office in any way prejudicial to us.

(Witness.) The Commission have my report, and they will be able to judge for themselves.

4705. Or to throw any doubt on the justice of our acquittal?—My views are expressed in the communication I submitted to the Home Secretary.

(Chairman.) All the communications that passed between the Home Office and Sir Edward Henry are before the Commission already, and have been from the very commencement of the inquiry.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) In the course of that correspondence, did you repeat the charges which had been originally made against us in any form?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I must ask your ruling, sir, about this.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Let the question be repeated.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) I ask Mr. Commissioner Henry whether in the course of his information to the Home Office he repeated in any form the charges which had been originally made against us by the police.

(Witness.) I think that the Commission have my report, and they will be able to see for themselves.

4706. (Chairman.) You mean your report to the Home Office of the 25th April?—Yes.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I might point out to Dr. Gerothwohl we have the letter, and we have read it again and again. We know what passed, and we know what there is in the letter. No answer of the witness can add to it, because it is merely a question of what is in the correspondence which is before us. We are in a position to deal with the matter upon that.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) Of course, I accept the ruling that the correspondence is not to be made public, but I rather regret I have not had an opportunity of examining it and asking Sir Edward some questions upon it.

(Chairman.) Do I understand you are anxious to see that letter?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) Yes, sir.

(Chairman.) The Commission see no reason why you should not look at it.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I should like to take instructions about that, because, of course, it may be made a difficult precedent in other cases if the communications between the Police Commissioners and the Home Office are to be made public in any way. I should like to take Sir Edward's view about it. Of course, I suppose you have the power to direct it.

(Chairman.) Sir Edward Henry has been verbally answering questions put by Dr. Gerothwohl, and he has himself referred to the letter.

(Witness.) The only thing I would say is that it is not my property, it is the property of the Home Office. I have no voice in the matter at all. Once I sent the letter it became the property of the Home Office.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) Referring to Mr. Bankes' plea that the correspondence should be withheld ——

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I beg your pardon, that is a most unfair observation. I make no plea that it should be withheld at all. I am quite certain that Sir Edward's desire and mine is that the contents should be made public, but there is a question of public policy involved here, and unless it is going to serve some public purpose, I ask the Commissioners not to make an order without considering the matter in all its bearings.

(Chairman.) I understand that Sir Edward Henry has no objection. He does not consent to it and he does not ask for it. I see no reason for that letter being read as part of the evidence before us.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) Probably what Mr. Bankes said about precedents would be met by the statement that this is a special inquiry. It is not an ordinary tribunal, and therefore the argument put forward that it would be wrong to create a precedent in that respect does not hold here.

(Chairman.) What are you asking for? What is your request to the Commission?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) To see the correspondence between Sir Edward Henry and the Home Office.

(Chairman.) I think we will confer about that. We will consider that question, and inform you later on of our decision. Have you any further questions to ask Sir Edward Henry?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) No, I have none. From the course the whole action has taken with regard to my complaint and my request for an inquiry, and so forth, it appears to me that Scotland Yard did not take an altogether unbiassed view, as they should have done.

(Chairman.) We quite follow your suggestion, but we cannot allow you to argue the matter now. You have no further questions to ask Sir Edward Henry?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) No.

(Chairman.) I hope there is no misunderstanding, Dr. Gerothwohl, on your part or on my part with regard to this correspondence. I first of all asked you whether your application was to see the letter.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) Yes, it is.

(Chairman.) There is all the difference in the world between your seeing the letter and the document being published and made part of the evidence. I do not think you apprehend the distinction.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) I want to see the document and to examine Sir Edward Henry on it afterwards if the occasion should arise.

(Chairman.) I think you understand the difference now. Is your request limited simply to a request that your yourself should look at the letter?

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) And ask questions about it.

(Chairman.) That means that you want the letter to be published, because if you ask questions upon it it must come into the evidence.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) Yes, I presume that is so.

(Chairman.) We will consider what answer we will make to that request. In the meantime you have no further questions.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) No, sir.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) So that we may be clear with regard to this, upon Dr. Gerothwohl's application to see the letter personally, you intimated that he might see the letter, and we saw no objection to his seeing it, but when it came to a question of publishing the letter, that introduces at once other matters of precedents of greater importance than this one particular case. We have no objection, as I understand the Chairman's view, in which we all agree, to you, Dr. Gerothwohl, seeing the letter so as to satisfy yourself that there is nothing in the letter except that which bears upon the evidence in the case, which is all before us with this copy of the letter.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) It may be that when I have seen the letter I may withdraw my application to examine the witness upon it.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) The precedent applies to seeing it as well as using it, because it is a document passing between various branches of a Government department, and with great submission I think the rule is almost uniform that those documents may be used as they have been supplied to the Commissioners, but not to be used for any other purpose.

(Chairman.) The only material application for the purpose of to-day is that the letter should be made public—in other words, you wish to have the letter in your hand and then you want to cross-examine Sir Edward Henry upon it.

Sir E. R. Henry.

16 Oct. 1906.

(Dr. Gerothwohl.) Yes.

(Chairman.) In answer to that, at present I can only say that we will consider it, and inform you later on whether we will allow that course to be taken. Do you wish to ask anything, Mr. Bankes?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes, sir.

4707. Was it on Wednesday, the 11th April, that the case was before the magistrates on the second occasion when the defendants were acquitted?—I think so.

4708. Will you tell the Commissioners the time it was when Dr. Gerothwohl came on what he calls the evening of the 11th?—It was just before midnight on the 11th. He asked to see me. The inspector on duty said ——.

4709. We can call him if necessary, but the time was just about midnight?—Yes.

4710. You were not at the office at that time?—No, I was in bed, I think.

4711. The next day was Thursday, the 12th, and you told us you were occupied by some public duty, and arrived late at the office. Were you fully occupied with your official duties until the time came when you left the office to go away for a holiday?—Yes, until quite late.

4712. And the time at your disposal did not enable you to reach this particular communication?—No, it did not. I never heard of it.

4713. So you left without having seen it?—Yes.

4714. You came back, I understand, on the Monday?—No, I came back to the office on the Wednesday.

4715. Of course, by that time the application had ceased to be of any importance, because it was for an appointment on the Thursday or the Friday?—Yes. I presume my secretary when he looked through the papers saw those and took it for granted that it had been disposed of in his absence, and therefore did not bring it to my notice.

4716. At any rate, the application was for an interview on the Thursday or the Friday, and the letter did not come to your notice until the Wednesday?—Yes. I may say if Dr. Gerothwohl had written on Monday, Tuesday, or Wednesday, or on any day, and asked for an interview, he could have had it, of course.

4717. With regard to the other dates, the Police Reports were made in the ordinary course on the 13th, that would be the Friday. They are dated the 13th?—Yes.

4718. They would be made in the ordinary course in consequence of the acquittal of the defendants. Is that so?—Yes.

4719. And I think the inquiry before Major Wodehouse was on the 25th?—Yes.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) When you say "in consequence of the acquittal," does that follow?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I thought you had that last time.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You used the expression.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) The reports commence by the statement by the officers that a report has been called for. The reports begin "With reference to the report called for re the arrest."

(Witness.) I presume that on reading the accounts in the papers it was looked upon as a case in which reports should be called for, and they were called for by the superintendent in the ordinary course.

4720. Am I right in saying that in every case of acquittal a report is called for, or is a report called for when the superintendent thinks it is a special matter?—I think in many cases of acquittals reports are called for in most of them.

4721. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Not in every case?—No.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That is what I was objecting to you putting.

4722. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) My recollection of the evidence was not quite accurate, but at all events those reports were called for and made on the 13th?—Yes.

4723. Then on the 25th the inquiry was held before Major Wodehouse?—Yes.

4724. After that you wrote your letter to the Home Secretary?—Yes.

4725. You have been asked as to why you did not summon Dr. Gerothwohl to give evidence. Have you any jurisdiction to hold any inquiry except amongst your own officers?—None whatever.

4726. Was the fullest inquiry held that it was competent for you to hold?—Yes.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I can call Mr. Edwards, the secretary, if you think it necessary to go into the question about the letter.

4727. (Chairman.) What is the general practice on the receipt of a complaint from a member of the public?—The superintendent of the Division would be called upon to make a report upon the facts. Then he would make his inquiry, and submit his report, and that would be considered, and if it was deemed advisable, as it was deemed advisable in this case, the particular officers concerned would be sent for and examined and questioned separately, and a conclusion come to.

4728. Examined separately before you?—Before the Assistant Commissioner. He would probably have one in at a time, and he would put to him such questions as he thought were necessary.

4729. That examination is not upon oath, I suppose?—No, we have no power to administer an oath.

4730. Can you recollect what took place in this particular matter of Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette, which Commissioner examined the constables in that case?—Major Wodehouse.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) You have his report, I think, before you, sir.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I do not think so.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Have you not an account of the whole inquiry?

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) No. I am speaking of the documents before me.

(Chairman.) I remember we have had the fact that an inquiry did take place before Major Wodehouse, but I have never seen any shorthand note or any note of what took place before him.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Or any report by Major Wodehouse to Sir Edward Henry.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) It can be supplied if you wish it.

4731. (Chairman.) We should certainly like it. Were there any notes kept of the proceedings before Major Wodehouse?—Oh, yes.

(Chairman.) We should like to have those notes and the report which he made to the Commissioner.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Certainly, sir.

4732. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) So far as I understand, the only information that you had was such as was supplied to you by the reports of the police-constables themselves, by the inspector's report, and then eventually by Assistant-Commissioner Wodehouse?—That would be all.

4733. You, personally, would have no knowledge of it, except what you could get from those reports?—None whatever.

4734. It is upon those reports that you wrote that letter of April 25th to the Home Secretary?—Yes.

4735. I want to ask you about the reports that the police made of this case. You said (I do not remember the exact words) that very often the police did not put in their reports everything that had happened, but what I wish to point out to you is, suppose in this case the persons arrested protested from the first moment against the arrest, and said that they had come to the police station for the purpose of complaining of the brutality of the police, do you not think that that ought to have appeared in the reports made by the police-constables?—The great difficulty about reports by police-constables is that they are sometimes extremely illiterate; a better procedure would be to take from them a statement. Many of these men find great difficulty in writing reports. Their education when they join the force is defective, and it is not always remedied, and the consequence is that when they have to make a report about anything it is not a very satisfactory document, and I myself think it would be a better procedure if a statement were taken from them which they should sign. Owing to their defective education they do not really put into the report all that they might put in.

4736. There are the three reports in this case of the three constables, Isaacson, Wallington, and Divers, and no doubt you have also read or heard the questions that have been put to them upon these reports, because in those reports which were submitted to you they omitted a very important thing, namely, that Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette protested from the first against the arrest?—Yes.

4737. It is quite plain, is it not, with the knowledge that you now have, that that is not a satisfactory report to have made to you?—It is not a satisfactory report. The report was not full enough. They ought to have mentioned that.

4738. Is it not rather more important than that. Does it not give a wrong impression of what has taken place. I will tell you what I am rather anxious to get your views about. The three reports say that no answer was made to the charge, but omitted the fact that these two gentlemen had been protesting for some time before the charge was read against the arrest, and stating their view of why they were there. Is not that a very important factor which ought to have appeared in the reports?—Yes, I think it ought to have been in the reports.

4739. Without it, apparently, as I read those reports the impression would be created that they had never denied the charge, and that therefore it was to be taken that they admitted it?—Yes, the reports are no doubt defective, and, as I say, a statement ought to be taken from the constable, which he should sign, because his education is so defective that he is almost certain to leave out points that are of material importance when he tries to make a report, and, of course, there is always the danger that we have experienced that they talk it over together, and perhaps they are rather inclined to write the same sort of report, which throws discredit really when no discredit should be thrown, and it is a great difficulty. It is because of defective education. We are trying to remedy it.

4740. I point out, in view of the questions that I have put, that Inspector Berry's report was sent to you which did state the important fact. Inspector Berry said that which the other constables had apparently omitted?—Yes, but he is more accustomed to writing reports.

4741. I was wondering whether there was any reason for the police not having stated it except the reason that you have given?—No, I think there was no reason whatever except that. Their reports are frequently very defective.

4742. In this particular case, when the reports came before you, you had got the important fact which I have just been referring to contained in Inspector Berry's report supplementing the police-constables' reports?—Yes.

4743. Reference was made to some rule which I will not say was suggested as a justification, but which was put forward as the ground of the police having made a mistake in omitting this important fact from the reports. Can you give me the reference to that rule?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) It is Rule 209, page 253.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) "The charge as entered upon the sheet is always to be read over to the prisoner, not with a view of extracting an answer, but to inform him of the nature of the offence with which he is charged, but any observation he makes is to be noted and attended to." I suggest to you that that rule is one which makes it necessary for the police-constables to note any observation which the prisoner makes which may relate to the charge?—Is that after the charge has been read over?

4744. "The charge as entered upon the sheet is always to be read over to the prisoner"?—And after it is read over any remark that falls from him is to be noted. That rule would apply to that?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) If you look at Rule 284, on page 266, that is a rule dealing with the statement made by the prisoner when charged, and if you read that with Rule 282 there is rather an indication that they are to disregard anything that happens before.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Surely Rule 282 has no reference to this matter. That is dealing with a confession.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I am not arguing it, sir, but Rule 282 conveys the view that you are not to attempt to get anything in the nature of a confession, and then Rule 284 says a statement made by a prisoner when charged is to be accurately written down at the time by the sergeant and reported to the magistrate who hears the case.

4745. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It is quite plain, is it not, that the duty of the police would be, upon a charge being made as was made in this case, to put in the report not only what the answer to the charge is, but the statements which had been made by the prisoner with reference to the charge. I thought you agreed that?—I think he certainly ought to if he is capable of doing it, but I think you would like to consider the question of what happens on occasions like this. On a particular night like this there is a great number of prisoners very often. On one occasion there were as many as 87 prisoners one night at Vine Street, all of whom had to be dealt with during the course of the night. Whether it was possible to attend to all the requirements in the instructions on that night I cannot say, but I should think not.

4746. I am not dealing with the question of what they would have to do that night. I am dealing with the reports that the police made on the 13th April, which is four or five days afterwards?—But I mean to say there would be a good deal of confusion on a night like that if there were 87 prisoners there. They would very rarely have as many as that, but they sometimes have as many as 20 or 30, and that makes it difficult for the police to attend to all the directions they ought to attend to. On ordinary nights there is no excuse for them not doing so, but on these special nights there is some little excuse.

4747. But they are not making the material statements till four or five days afterwards?—You find it in the statement of the Inspector, because he is a man of better education. You do not find it in the reports of the constables, because of their defective education, and, as I say, that is really the only explanation I can give.

4748. I understand that, but what I want to make quite plain in the questions I am putting to you, so that there should be no confusion about it, is that there is nothing in the rules which would justify the policeman not giving the report of the statements made before the charge?—There is nothing in the rules which would justify a policeman in suppressing anything that tells in the prisoner's favour. That is absolutely certain.

4749. I read those rules because it was suggested by one, at least, of the policemen that that is what justified him in not having stated it?—That is an instruction which is specially laid down for their guidance when they join the Force, and they are personally told that. I see every recruit who comes in, and he is always told that one thing he has to remember is to be fair, and if he knows anything in a man's favour, he is bound to state it, just as much as if he knows anything against him. We always try to make them understand that. Therefore if they suppressed something which told in favour of the accused on an occasion like this they were doing that which was wrong.

4750. What would happen supposing in an ordinary case a constable did that and suppressed something which was in favour of an accused person?—I have no doubt he would be dealt with—that is to say, if he purposely suppressed it.

4751. Supposing he purposely suppressed it, would he be dismissed the Force?—Not necessarily dismissed the Force, but he would be punished. There are graduations of punishment. I do not know that he would be dismissed the Force. But if he purposely suppressed anything that brought about a serious miscarriage of justice, no doubt he would be dismissed the Force.

4752. Could you give me any instance in which a policeman has been punished for having suppressed a statement which told in favour of a prisoner or an accused person?—I have no doubt I could get cases of making misleading reports.

4753. That is not quite the same thing. A man may make a misleading report, but what I wanted to get at was the suppression of something which tells in favour of the prisoner. You would agree, would you not, that is a most important element that should be stated by the police-constables upon the report?—Yes.

4754. I wanted to know whether there is any instance on record?—Of course I could not say whether there is an instance on record, because it might be on record without my knowing it, but that is a very difficult question to answer. I do not remember an instance myself. I could not answer the question in the form in which you put it with any accuracy at all. Sins of omission are always so much more difficult to deal with than sins of commission.

4755. With regard to this letter which you did not reach on the 12th, in the ordinary course is there any note made of letters which you have dealt with? Sometimes an initial is put to show you have dealt with it. Is that your practice?—I should think probably in the case of a letter like that I should write across it, "Fix such and such a date at such and such a time."

4756. I do not quite follow why the Secretary, if he saw you had not reached that particular letter, did not bring it to your attention again. According to what you have told us you never heard of it again for some six weeks?—I really could not tell you why, but my Secretary is here, and he could tell you all about it.

4757. It rather looks as though he ought to have brought it before you?—I dare say he ought. He might be able to say. It is such a very unusual thing for a man to come at midnight and ask for an interview the next day, that such cases do not often occur. If it had come by post the letter would probably have reached me. When Dr. Gerothwohl did not get an answer, it was quite easy for him to have written and said, "I wrote you for an interview, and you have not answered me." He could have got an interview by writing. Letters occasionally do go wrong. If he had written afterwards, and I had not answered him then, then I should certainly have treated him with discourtesy, but as a matter of fact it was a very unusual course to adopt to come at midnight and ask to see an official the next day.

4758. It occurred to me there might be another reason for it (I do not know whether it is right or wrong), and that is that soon after that request had been made the matter was discussed publicly, and reports were called for from the Police?—It was not because he called at Scotland Yard that reports were called for.

4759. No, but what occurred to me was that he had called and asked for the interview, and then, almost the next day before you had reached the letter from him, this matter of the arrest of Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette was being discussed in the Press, and you had asked for reports, or one of your officials had asked for reports, and that, therefore, you did not deal with the letter. I do not know which it is, and I only want to ascertain?—Oh, no, I never saw the letter. I did not see it till six weeks afterwards, when Dr. Gerothwohl complained to the Home Office that he had asked for an interview, and I had not granted him one. Then they sent his letter over to me, and I said, "What is this? I did not know of any interview," and then we looked up the papers and found he had applied on the 11th, and I never saw the letter. But my Secretary can tell you more about it than anybody else, really.

4760. (Mr. Dickinson.) You said just now with reference to the illiteracy of the constables that that resulted sometimes in their being obliged to draw up their reports together?—No, I did not say that. I said there was always that danger.

4761. Is that a danger which has actually come to your notice?—Yes.

4762. It is common to find reports drawn in a similar manner?—No, we have taken steps to try and prevent it. It has been brought to our notice, and has come out in court, that the reports were obviously so much alike that it looked as if one had written a report and the others had copied it. That has happened, but it is owing to the fact that it is such a difficult task for an uneducated man to make a report.

4763. Is it a common practice?—No, I should hope not.

4764. You say it is not?—I hope not.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Do you wish to hear Mr. Edwards upon this point of the letter?

(Chairman.) If he wishes to give his explanation, we will hear him, but we attach no importance to it.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) It is no good taking up time if you do not attach importance to it, but he is here, willing to give you full information, if you wish it.

(Chairman.) Very well. Before we go into another case, the Commissioners wish to confer for a few moments on the question of the correspondence referred to by Dr. Gerothwohl.

(Chairman.) The Commissioners do not think it necessary to publish the correspondence between the Home Office and Sir Edward Henry. The Commissioners have heard all the evidence on both sides, and the correspondence referred to which has been before us from the commencement of the Inquiry does not throw any further light upon the matter.

4765. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Dr. Gerothwohl, I should like to ask you this question: P.C. Wallington in his evidence at Question 1428 says that you said to him that he would lose his coat. Did you ever make that statement to him?—I never made the slightest statement. I never made any statement to him.

4766. Did you know the meaning of that expression?—No, I did not know it. I never heard it before I heard it here.

4767. (Chairman.) I do not think we ever asked you what your age is?—It was given. It is 29.

4768. Was Mr. Lavalette's age given?—Mr. Lavalette is 27.

JAMES CLINCH, sworn.

Mr. J. Clinch.

4769. (Earl Russell.) Do you live at 5, Benson Avenue, Upton Park?—Yes.

4770. You are in the service of the Post Office, in the Letter Section, at Mount Pleasant?—Yes.

4771. For how long have you been there?—14 years.

4772. You are a married man?—Yes.

4773. It is part of your duty to go to your work at various hours of the day and night?—Not recently—not for the last 12 months. I have been at one fixed time for the last 12 months.

4774. Were you going to your work on the 16th October, 1905?—Yes.

4775. Will you tell the Commission in what way you were going. You were going to Mount Pleasant?—Yes.

4776. About what hour of the night was it?—At 12.10. I had to be on duty at 20 minutes past 12. I was passing Rosebery Avenue at 10 minutes past 12.

4777. On your way you came to a place called John's Mews?—Yes.

4778. Will you tell the Commission what happened there?—I was going down Rosebery Avenue to the Inland Section, and I suddenly called in at John's Mews for a necessary purpose, and just as I pulled up at the second cart in John's Mews I was surprised to hear a shuffling of feet. I at once observed a constable.

4779. Where was the shuffling of feet?—Between the carts against the wall.

4780. On which side of you?—In front of me. I observed a constable with a female, which surprised me very much; the female's clothing was very much disarranged, and he was acting in an immoral manner.

4780*. About how far from you were these people?—About the width of a cart really; that is, taking the circumference of the front wheel of one cart and the back wheel of the other cart, and the woodwork between the two carts, it would make about the width of a cart.

4781. Was there anything between you and them?—Nothing whatever.

4782. When you observed this did anything further happen?—I noticed the female's clothing fall. I observed the white clothing. It was a great surprise to the policeman, I suppose, to find me pull up against the wheel of the cart while he was acting in this immoral manner, and he pulled his overcoat over him in that way (illustrating). He turned round and asked me what did I want there. I said "Nothing; I simply came here for a necessary purpose," or "to make water" to explain myself more straightforwardly. He said, "Have you any property here?" I said "None whatever; I only came for what I have told you." With that he said "Out of it," and he gave me a severe blow behind my head, at the same time walking on my heels. The first blow on my head which I received from him seem to stun me somewhat. I went out of the mews in a dazed condition, and as I got to the entrance to the mews he also struck me another blow on the left side of the face, at the same time knocking my cap off my head. He at once kicked my cap, and told me to pick up my cap. I really did not know what to do at the time as I was in rather a fixed position, having to be on duty at 20 minutes past 12, and this was at 10 minutes past 12. I shouted for the police.

4783. When was that?—After he had knocked my cap off.

4784. Where were you when you shouted?—I was at the entrance of the mews.

4785. You had moved out?—Yes, I had moved out. Three young men stood next door but one from the entrance to the mews. I should say, roughly speaking, it would be about 7 or 8 yards; they stood at the top of the steps of No. 77, Rosebery Avenue. I drew their attention to the matter and asked them if they saw the policeman strike me. I found they were not Englishmen, but foreigners. Whilst I was asking them if they saw what had taken place, one of them directed me to a policeman who was crossing the road.

4786. How did he direct you?—They were at the top of their own steps, and whilst I was asking them if they saw what had taken place, one of them pointed out a sergeant crossing the road. I thought, "I am relieved," because I wanted——

4787. Never mind what you thought. What did you do?—I ran off to the sergeant and told him I had been assaulted and struck twice by a policeman who was in the mews; and I said I wish him to come to the mews and see for himself the woman and the policeman together.

4788. What had the policeman done after this. Where was the policeman at this time?—The policeman was still in the mews with the woman. When he knocked my cap off he returned back to the mews and was still in the mews with the women when I reported the matter to the sergeant.

4789. When you saw the sergeant what happened?—I said: "Come with me to the mews; there is a constable and a woman in there; he struck me, and I wish to charge him with assault; he struck me on two occasions." He said "Where is the policeman now?" I said "The policeman is still in the mews with the woman." "With the woman?" I said "Yes." I said "Do come in and go up the mews for yourself and see that the policeman and woman are there." He said "Keep quiet; if the policeman and woman are up there they must come out this way because there is no other way out." Whilst we were waiting at the entrance to the mews—I, the sergeant, and the three witnesses—we waited, I think, for about four minutes—the sergeant endeavoured to take the names of these witnesses. I said "Never mind the names; go in there and see for yourself." He said, "You keep quiet, they must come out this way." After waiting for about four minutes the woman came out in a crouching manner, and she turned to the left of Rosebery Avenue to run towards the Angel. The sergeant called after her to stop, but she took no notice. The sergeant called a second time, and she took no notice; but when the sergeant (I believe it was Sergeant Lane, No. 18) attempted to run after her she stopped. As she came back to the sergeant, and just before she got up to the sergeant, out came the policeman. The sergeant told the policeman that I charged him with an assault, and he made no reply. The sergeant told the constable and the woman that they would have to go down to the police station, and also the witnesses.

4790. Did the constable say anything at all apart from making no reply to the charge? Did he make any charge against you?—No; we all went down to the station. On getting into the station there is a room on the right which, I think, but I do not know, is a sort of sitting or recreation room. I saw several policemen in there. On the left, where we went, was the place where the charge was taken. The policeman went into that room where the remainder of the police were, and as he opened the door he said something which caused the other policemen to laugh. The female, the witnesses and I went into the charge room, where I charged the constable with the assault.

4791. Where was the constable who you say had been in the mews? Did he go into this room with you, or not?—No. The policeman went into the room where the remainder of the policemen were sitting, and as he went in there he turned to the right, and we turned to the charge room.

4792. The constable who had come out of the mews did not accompany you to the charge room?—Not when we first got in; he went into the room where the other police were; and as he opened the door he made some remark, which caused the other policemen, who were in the room, to laugh. I charged him with an assault of having struck me on two occasions.

4793. Whom did you see in the charge room?—The Inspector.

4794. You made the charge to him?—Yes. When I made the charge to the Inspector he called the policeman from the other room, and he came in.

4795. Did you make the charge verbally at that stage?—Yes. The Inspector then asked me if he should write it down or I. I said, "I prefer to write it down myself." He said, "You prefer to write it yourself?" I said, "Yes." He said, "All right: just as you please." With that he gave me a pen and paper, and I wrote down my charge concerning the whole facts of the case, and handed it to the Inspector.

4796. You wrote it down yourself, and gave it to the Inspector?—Yes.

(Earl Russell.) I call for that document. It is in the custody of the Police. (Statement produced).

(Chairman.) Do you wish to put that in?

4797. (Earl Russell.) Yes. I propose to put it in after showing it to the witness.

4798. Is that the statement you wrote out at the time?—Yes.

4799. The head of the statement, of course, is not in your handwriting?—No.

4800. The centre part of it is in your handwriting?—Yes.

(The Secretary.) "Metropolitan Police, G Division, King's Cross Road, 16th October, 1905.—Statement of James Clinch, porter at Post Office, Mount Pleasant, 5, Benson Avenue, Upton Park, E.—I beg to state that whilst walking along Rosebery Avenue, I went up a mews behind some carts to make water. Whilst there I observed the Policeman 215 G with this woman in the corner against a cart, the woman at the time having her clothes in an improper manner. She at once dropped her clothes, when the said policeman came up to me and struck me a severe blow, at the same time remarked to be off, and if I had any property up there, and he also walked on my heels until I got on the footpath, when he struck me another severe blow on the left jaw, knocking off my cap. I at once reported the matter to the sergeant who was passing across the road, when he took the case up. I was on my way to the G.P.O., Mount Pleasant, due on duty at 12.20 a.m. —Yours sincerely, James Clinch. The P.C. asked no questions.—F. Gadd (inspector); W. Hammond (superintendent.")

4801. (Earl Russell.) After you had written that statement did anything take place with regard to the woman? Did the Inspector say anything to the woman?—Yes. The Inspector asked the woman to make a statement, and after a little time she wrote out a statement. The statement was read over to me, and it ran as follows, to the best of my recollection.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Had not we better have that statement produced?

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) We had better have the statement, Lord Russell.

(Earl Russell.) Certainly.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I do not know whether we might have the witness's recollection. He volunteered his recollection.

(Chairman.) I understood you to ask that the statement should be put in.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes; but it was only as regards the sequence of events. I am entirely in your hands.

(Earl Russell.) It is a matter of perfect indifference to me.

4802. (Chairman.) We had better have the woman's statement. (To the Witness.) Did you hear the statement of the woman?—I heard it read out. I should be sorry to give the statement verbally at the present time as it was read out to me. I should be very sorry to read out the statement of such immoral people. If you do not mind my giving it verbally as it was read out to me in the presence of ladies, of course I do not object.

Mr. J. Clinch.

16 Oct. 1906.

(Earl Russell.) I think perhaps the Commission had better have the statement itself. I am quite willing to test his recollection of it, if you like.

(Chairman.) He need not read it out.

(The Secretary.) "Metropolitan Police, G Division, King's Cross Road Station, 16th October, 1905.—Statement made at King's Cross Road Station on 16th instant, by Freya Lehmann, 23, Swinton Street, W.C. (housemaid).—I was making water in the corner from the mews, and the policeman say to me, 'What you doing here?' I said, 'I have been in the corner.'—Freya Lehmann. No questions.—F. Gadd (inspector); W. Hammond (superintendent.")

4803. (Earl Russell.) When these two statements were written was the constable who had been in the mews present?—Yes.

4804. Was anything done then by the Inspector? What did he do with the statement you had made?—I had to get on duty as quickly as I possibly could. He kept my statement, as far as I know.

4805. Was it read over while you were there to anyone?—My statement was read over to the constable and the female.

4806. While you were there?—Yes.

4807. Did the Inspector do anything after reading it over to the constable?—The statement of the lady was read over to me first, but the statement of the lady during my presence varied very much from what has been read out now.

4808. I want to know about the reading over of your statement. You said your statement was read over to the constable by the Inspector?—Yes.

4809. Did the Inspector do anything after reading it over, or say anything to anybody about it?—No.

4810. Did the constable say anything?—No.

4811. Did the Inspector say anything to the constable after that?—He simply told the constable, "You understand what charge he has made against you?" He said, "I fully understand it."

4812. Did the Inspector ask the constable to say anything, or to make a remark, or anything of that sort, while you were there?—The constable made a report whilst I was there. He went into the room where all the other policemen were. I think he was there about three-quarters of an hour making out the statement. I asked the Inspector to see about it, as my time was limited, and I wanted to get to the Post Office, and as he was a long time, would he kindly see if he was making it out. With that the Inspector went into the next room, and spoke to him about it. Soon after the constable came in with the statement.

4813. To whom did he give that statement?—To the Inspector.

4814. Was that read over to you?—Yes.

(Earl Russell.) Will you, Mr. Bankes, please produce that statement?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes. (Statement produced.)

4815. (Earl Russell.) When this constable wrote that statement, had he heard your statement read out or not?—He had heard my statement, in fact he was there when I was writing it out, and he wanted to look over my shoulders. I asked him to mind his own business, as it was not for him to look at what I was writing about.

4816. It was after that he wrote his statement?—He wrote the first statement in the other room.

(The Secretary.) "Metropolitan Police, G Division, King's Cross Station.—I beg to report at 11.50 p.m., 15th instant, I was on duty in Rosebery Avenue, when I saw a man and a woman go down John's Mews. I went down to see what they were doing, and saw the man coming up from the mews. I asked him his business, and if he had any property down there. He replied, 'No.' I then told him to get away home, and rushed him out of the mews. I went back and saw the woman, and asked her business. She replied, 'I have come down to make water.' I turned her out, then looked round the mews, went out, and saw her speaking to P.S. Lane, who stated that a man had complained of being assaulted by a P.C., and we accompanied complainant to the station.—Walter Gibbard (P.C. 215); G. W. Hammond (superintendent.")

4817. (Earl Russell.) The Inspector read that statement over to you?—Yes.

4818. What did you say?—I told him that every word was untrue.

4819. What did the Inspector do after that?—The Inspector went into the room where the other policemen were, and left P.C. Gibbard, the female, and I together.

4820. Was anyone else there?—No. My witnesses had gone then.

4821. What then took place?—Whilst we stood there in this room where everything was taken down, the policeman said, "Look here, old chap, the first time I see you out of doors, I'll lock you up: you would put a bloke away." I told him I did not want any threats from him or any accusation whatever, and that I would tell the Inspector when he came from the next room. When the Inspector came from the next room I told him what P.C. Gibbard had said. The Inspector said, "Why don't you be quiet, Gibbard? The case is bad enough."

4822. Did anything else happen in the way of statements. Were any more made or read?—No. I left the police station, and when I did so the woman, the constable, and the Inspector were in the station.

4823. You left them there behind you?—Yes.

4824. Did anything happen about a doctor?—I asked to see the medical officer.

4825. Whilst you were at the police station?—Yes. There was a medical officer brought in. I told him where I had been struck, at the back of the head, and on the left side of the jaw. He examined me. He said something to the effect, "You may have been struck, but I cannot feel your pain. As far as I am concerned I do not see a wound or any cut, or anything to indicate that you have been struck." He said "I see you have got a jagged tooth." I said "Yes." None the more for that, I told him I felt the blow on my left jaw very much, and my face was a very tender part, and even if there was no wound to be seen, or any blood flowing, if you get a blow with any force whatever there it will put you in very great pain, which I was suffering from.

4826. What was your condition the next day?—I felt very weak indeed; in fact, for a couple of days I hardly knew how to stand; I continued to come over dizzy, and, more or less, I have had more headaches since that time than ever I did have in my life before. I did not wish to go off duty ill; otherwise I should have done so. Being a Government servant I think it is nothing but my duty to keep on my feet and work as long as I possibly can.

4827. (Chairman.) Did you notice anything peculiar when you got home on the night that you were attacked?—I did not notice anything, only the side of my face felt sore, and also the back of my head.

4828. The next day, at any time, or the next night, did anything peculiar about yourself strike you?—On Tuesday night, being on night-work, and having to commence at 12.20, which would be like early morning on the Wednesday, I noticed blood continued to flow from my head into the throat in clots, and it continued so right until six in the morning, which I thought very unpleasant.

4828*. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) What was the day of the week in which you had been in the mews?—On Monday, the 16th October, 1905, at 12.20 in the early morning.

(Chairman.) When did the blood come?—On the Wednesday morning. As the doctor in the station remarked, if I had been struck in the manner that I said, the blow would show itself in due course.

4829. (Earl Russell.) You say this was Monday night?—I am not quite sure whether it was Sunday night or Monday morning.

4830. It was literally on Monday morning, because it was after 12 o'clock. Did you go off duty at all?—I went off duty at six o'clock on Monday morning.

4831. Did you ask for leave to go off duty?—Yes.

4832. To whom did you apply?—I went to the book room, and told the book inspector how I felt.

4833. He was the proper official to whom to go?—Yes. I had my handkerchief, covered with blood, in my hand at the time.

4834. What was his name?—Sandy. He was the book inspector.

4835. Did you see any doctor at the Post Office?—Not that time.

4836. At any time?—Afterwards; Mr. Sandy gave me leave to go home. Whilst I was speaking to him I brought up a clot of blood. He said, "Oh, dear; that's nasty." I said, "I feel weak, and I feel I want to go home." He said, "You must see to that." I went home at six in the morning.

4837. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) How long after was this from the time of your being struck?—That was on Monday morning, and this was Wednesday morning—two days afterwards.

4838. (Chairman.) On Wednesday at six o'clock in the morning?—Yes.

4839. (Earl Russell.) When did you see a doctor?—I came back and saw a medical officer at 10 o'clock in the morning, and explained the whole of the facts to him.

4840. On which morning was that?—On the same morning.

4841. On Wednesday morning, later?—Yes, at 10 a.m.—four hours afterwards.

4842. You mean you saw the official Post Office doctor?—Yes.

4843. What was his name?—Dr. Sinclair. I told him how I had been struck, and how it came about, and, whilst I was speaking to him, blood came up from my throat. I produced the same handkerchief to him.

4844. Now just go back for a moment to the time when you were at the police station in connection with the taking of this charge. The whole proceedings took some little time?—Yes.

4845. Was anything said to you about your being kept away from your work?—No, but the Inspector volunteered to send up to the Post Office and tell them I was there. I declined the offer.

4846. Did you see the Inspector again at any time?—Yes, I saw him about half an hour after I got into the Post Office, after I left the police station. The Inspector came and asked the doorkeeper if he might be allowed to see me. I was sent for, and when I came I saw the Inspector in the passage.

4847. At the Post Office?—At the Post Office, Mount Pleasant. He said, "I just thought I would drop in and see you with reference to this case. Of course, it is not for me to persuade you either one way or the other, what to do, but do you really intend to charge the constable, and to take it further?" I said, "Under the circumstances I feel that I must." He said, "Of course, it is rather hard that one servant should go against another."

4848. What did you understand he meant by that?—I took it that he was a policeman and that I was a Post Office official. I told him I felt I must under the circumstances. He said, "You cannot say for certain, then?" I said, "I will not say for certain, but I will think it over." He said, "By what time?" I said, "If I do not really intend to take the matter further I will call down at the police station when I leave off duty and tell you." After the inspector had gone, I thought the matter over very, very seriously, and I felt that I must take up the charge against him—it did not matter what came or went, or where I got the few shillings from to take out the summons against him.

4849. You did, in fact, proceed with the hearing of the charge against P.C. Gibbard for assault?—Yes.

4850. I think you had counsel?—Yes.

4851. Before the hearing came on, did anything happen as to putting off the hearing?—Yes.

4852. Was there any date fixed, and was a change made?—Yes, a great change, to my surprise

4853. What was the date originally fixed?—I could not just exactly say the date when the summons was fixed for, but I had a typewritten letter from the solicitors for the defence to say that the case would be adjourned for about eleven days.

4854. Had you had any notice of that adjournment before the letter?—No, none.

4855. You had not consented to it?—No. I was surprised when I got the letter from the solicitors to the defence.

4856. The case was ultimately heard at Clerkenwell on the 7th November, by Mr. Bros?—Yes.

4857. After hearing the evidence the summons was dismissed by him?—Yes. Mr. J. Clinch. 16 Oct. 1906.

(Earl Russell.) This is the letter from the solicitors for the defence. (Producing.)

(The Secretary.) "103, King's Cross Road, London. 24th October, 1905. Sir,—Yourself v. P.C. Gibbard. We beg to give you notice that, on our application this morning, the magistrate adjourned the summons herein, which was fixed for hearing on Friday next, until Tuesday, the 7th prox., at 2 o'clock. You and your witnesses need not attend the Court until the latter date. Yours obediently, W. T. Ricketts and Sons. Mr. James Church, 5, Benson Avenue, Upton Park, E."

(Mr Rufus Isaacs.) They were solicitors for the defendant?

(Earl Russell.) Yes.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Do you make any point of that?

4858. (Earl Russell.) Yes; the point I make is that the case was adjourned without any notice to the complainant, on an ex parte application. Is there any truth at all in the suggestion made by P.C. Gibbard that you accompanied this woman down the mews?—No.

4859. Is it a fact that you were in the mews, as he suggests, with this woman, when he was not in the mews?—No. I was passing the mews. I had just filled up my pipe; I wanted a smoke. To wait until I got to the office I should have had to go through the office yard to the lavatory, and throw my pipe full of tobacco away. As a rule, if I want to finish my smoke, I stand at the gate or in the main thoroughfare in Farringdon Road and smoke, and then go in. I did not like the idea of lighting my pipe and going to the office for a few minutes and then coming out again and throwing my tobacco away; and, by the time I went in and came out again, it would be 12.20.

4860. Did you know the woman before?—I never saw her in my life.

4861. Did you know the constable before?—I never saw him in my life. May I also say that, when I received the letter from Messrs. Ricketts, I at once went to the Police Court and insisted upon seeing the Magistrate. I asked him why, and how, my case could not come off on the day it was dated for. He said: "I do not know; a remand has been asked for." The Magistrate said to me: "Have not you been informed, or was not your permission asked, that an adjournment should be made?" I said: "None whatever." He said: "Mr. Ricketts is for the defence, and if you will go over to Mr. Ricketts, he will tell you. Try and make an arrangement with him if your case can come off when it was first fixed for."

(Chairman.) Do you ask for liberty to cross-examine the witness, Mr. Bankes?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) The case has developed since I first heard anything about it, because there is now a reference to the Inspector, and so forth. I am not in a position to cross-examine this witness fully to-day, and it will be more convenient if you will allow me to get information and then ask the witness some questions later.

(Chairman.) Then I understand this is a case in which you do ask for liberty to cross-examine?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) If you please.

(Chairman.) But you say you are not ready to go on to-day?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Of course, I could ask him some questions, if you thought it convenient, leaving it to a later period to ask anything further, or I will do it all at once.

(Chairman.) I do not think you had better cross-examine in that piecemeal way. You do not ask him any questions now, but you would like to cross-examine him at a future date?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes.

(Chairman.) So be it.

(Earl Russell.) There is only this difficulty. This witness will attend as often as required, but, with regard to the Italian witnesses, and so on, it is extremely difficult to bring them before the Commission, and I should be glad if my friend would deal with them when they come.

(Chairman.) We will deal with the witnesses when they come. Would you be able to go on with the cross-examination to-morrow morning, Mr. Bankes?

Mr. J. Clinch.

16 Oct. 1906.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) If it would equally suit your arrangements, it would be more convenient to those who instruct me to do it on Thursday.

(Chairman.) I think you ought to be able to go on to-morrow morning.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I will do my best to-morrow morning.

(Chairman.) Have you any other witnesses in support of Mr. Clinch's evidence?

(Earl Russell.) I have the Italian witnesses, but I understand they were informed that they might go away until to-morrow.

(Chairman.) I understand what they said was that they could not attend to-day, as they had nobody to attend to their shops, but that they would come to-morrow morning. Have you any other witnesses, apart from the Italian witnesses?

(Earl Russell.) Yes, I could call Mr. Yelverton the gentleman who conducted the case before Mr. Bros.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I do not know that I have any locus standi, but might I suggest that it should be indicated what this gentleman, Mr. Yelverton, is to speak to, and what points relative to this inquiry he can give any information about.

(Chairman.) This is a Royal Commission, and Lord Russell has called Mr. Clinch first. We consider that it is a case into which we may, to the public advantage, inquire. Lord Russell now says that he is going to call Mr. Yelverton. Mr. Yelverton is a member of the public, as far as that is concerned.

(Earl Russell.) I will call Mr. Yelverton, the counsel who appeared in the case, not with a view of his delivering arguments, but of stating certain things that occurred on that occasion. I think it would be more convenient if Mr. Bankes objected to the specific questions when I come to them.

(Chairman.) Do you wish us to hear you, Mr. Yelverton?

(Mr. Yelverton.) I do.

Mr. R. D. YELVERTON, sworn.

Mr. R. D. Yelverton.

4862. (Earl Russell.) You are a barrister, and you appeared at Clerkenwell Police Court on the 7th November, 1905, on behalf of James Clinch, to prosecute P.C. Gibbard for assault?—I did.

4863. Before the case came on did you think it necessary to see certain documents?—I thought it most essential.

4864. You addressed a letter to the Commissioner of Police asking for those documents?—I did.

4865. What were they?—They were the statements made by the respective persons which have been put in to-day, and also the report, or whatever it was, that the Inspector himself had made after those statements were made; that is to say, I wished to know what is called in France the dossier.

4866. Did you mention any date by which you wished to see these documents?—I asked that they might be furnished to me by the sitting of the Court, so that I might prepare the case on behalf of the complainant.

4867. Did you, in fact, get those documents?—No, I did not. I went specially to the police station, and I saw the Inspector, and he refused to show me any one line of them.

4868. Did you write a letter to the Commissioner?—Yes.

4869. (Earl Russell.) I call for that letter (same produced). "3, Pump Court, Temple, London, November 4th, 1905.—Sir,—I am, as a member of the Bar, supporting the summons at the Clerkenwell Police Court, on Tuesday, against P.C. Gibbard, for assaulting a person named Clinch, who has for 13 years been in the employ of the General Post Office. It is in my opinion essential for the interests of justice that I should see, before Tuesday, the statements which were given in writing to the Inspector at King's Cross Police Station when the charge was entered—I believe, about October 16th. On inquiry at the police station I am informed that these statements have been sent to you, and that you will be returning them to the police station. I have to request that you will either fix a time on Monday when I can see them at Scotland Yard or that you will direct the Inspector to show them to me on Monday at King's Cross Police Station. In the latter event, kindly inform me.—Yours faithfully, R. D. Yelverton. The Commissioner, New Scotland Yard." Have you the reply?—I have not got the reply. I forget what it said. I think it was merely an acknowledgment of the receipt of the letter, but if Mr. Bankes has the reply it can be put in. I am not sure, it may have been said it was not according to the Regulations to show them, but I am under the impression that it was only an acknowledgment, or, I think I should have followed the matter up.

4870. You have not the original now?—No, I think I handed it to the solicitor, Mr. Phillimore.

4871. Was there any difficulty with regard to the questions put to the foreign witnesses?—Very considerable, and Mr. Bros unfortunately interrupted me so frequently——.

(Chairman.) You are not making any complaint, I presume, against Mr. Bros, the magistrate, and if you were, I am afraid we could not go into the question of the justice or injustice of your complaint. We will hear any evidence that Mr. Yelverton may give that bears upon the question of whether the police misconducted themselves or did not misconduct themselves in reference to Mr. Clinch.

(Earl Russell.) It is material only in this way. It may be put against me that this case has been heard by a judicial tribunal upon its merits, that all the evidence was called before the magistrate, and that the case was dismissed. I simply want to suggest that part of the reason is that the evidence was not properly understood, and Mr. Yelverton, who did conduct the case, does complain of the way in which it was conducted.

(The Witness.) Most decidedly.

(Chairman.) I do not think we can go into what took place at the police court. If you will call your witnesses we will hear them, and we will form our judgment upon the matter.

(Earl Russell.) If you please. If I may regard the inquiry as being in no way prejudiced by what took place at the police court, then I think I need not trouble the Commission with any evidence upon that head.

(The Witness.) I should like to say that the adjournment was most irregular. I was briefed as counsel. I was not communicated with in the slightest degree. I am entitled to say that it was most irregular to adjourn a case without any reference to the complainant or to his advisers.

(Chairman.) We do not wish to hear any evidence as to what took place at the police court.

(Earl Russell.) Then the other witnesses will be the Italian witnesses, who were standing at the mouth of the mews.

4872. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) A letter has been put in which was read to the Commissioners. At the time were you instructed on behalf of Mr. Clinch?—I was.

4873. By whom?—Mr. Phillimore, I believe it was.

4874. Are you not sure. I should like to know the name of the solicitor who was instructing you at the time you wrote that letter to the Commissioner?—Mr. Phillimore instructed me in the case on behalf of Mr. Clinch.

4875. Is Mr. Phillimore a solicitor?—He is a solicitor in Chancery Lane.

4876. Were you instructed by him at the time to write that letter to the Commissioner?—May I look at that letter again? (The letter was handed to the Witness.) It is dated November 4th. I imagine I was.

4877. Is that all you can say to the Commissioners—that you imagine you were instructed by a solicitor at the time you wrote that letter?—Yes, because I had not had the brief at that moment.

Mr. R. D. Yelverton.

16 Oct. 1906.

4878. But had you had instructions to act on behalf of this man from Mr. Phillimore?—Yes.

4879. That is all you are able to say?—That is all I am able to say.

4880. Did you keep the reply you received from the Commissioner?—I think I handed it to Mr. Phillimore.

4881. Is that all you are able to say about the reply?—That is all I am able to say about the reply.

4882. From whom first did you hear of this case of Clinch?—From the gentleman who sits behind you, Mr. Timewell.

4883. Who is Mr. Timewell?—He sits behind you. I only know him as Mr. Timewell.

4884. Why should Mr. Timewell mention Clinch's case to you?—He came down to see me.

4885. Is Mr. Timewell a solicitor?—He is not.

4886. He came to see you about this case, did he?—He did.

4887. Is he the gentleman who is responsible for the publication of this pamphlet?

(Earl Russell.) I think my learned friend had better wait until Mr. Timewell goes into the box, if you are willing to hear him. It has nothing to do with this case.

(Chairman.) The only evidence of which I have taken a note is that Mr. Yelverton wrote a letter to the Commissioner of Police.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Do you want to know the reason why I ask these questions, because they are relevant?

(Chairman.) If you say they are relevant, go on.

4888. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Can you fix the date at all when it was Mr. Timewell came to see you?—I cannot, but probably it was very early in November.

FERDINAND ALTFULDISCH, sworn.

Mr. F. Altfuldisch.

4889. (Earl Russell.) You are a German subject?—Yes.

4890. You have been in England about sixteen years?—Yes.

4891. During that time you have carried on business as a tailor?—Yes.

4892. Not on your own account, but working for other people?—I am a journeyman tailor.

4893. You worked for Carr and Son, of Conduit Street, for four years, Hodgkinson's, in Pall Mall Place, ten years. Eade, Peckover and Company, of Sackville Street, for eight years, and Harman and Company, Duke Street, for seven years?—Yes.

4894. You do your work in your own home?—Yes.

4895. Employing how many people there?—It all depends on the season—between five and six.

4896. Since you have been in England you have lived two years in Wardour Street, four years in Carnaby Street, three years in Ganton Street, where you were a householder, and for the last six years you have occupied the upper part of Mr. Lombarde's house, 17, Great Marlborough Street, which is three doors from the police station?—Yes.

4897. What rent do you pay there?—£100 per annum.

4898. You are a life governor of the German Hospital at Dalston?—Yes.

4899. Have you ever had any charge before this incident we are going to deal with brought against you?—Never before.

4900. On Saturday, the 16th December last year, did you go to a meeting of a society in Greek Street?—Yes, to a meeting of a Florists' Society, held at Wede's Hotel, Greek Street.

4901. At whose invitation did you go?—A friend of mine who is a florist, Mr. Ruppert.

4902. You had known him before for some time?—I had known him for close on two years.

4903. About what time in the evening did you arrive there?—About 10 o'clock.

4904. While you were there did a man named Reuscher come in?—Yes, he was invited as well by Mr. Ruppert to be present that night.

4905. Up to what time did you stop there?—Up to closing time, just before 12 o'clock.

4906. What did you drink in the way of intoxicating liquor while you were there?—I did not have very much to drink, not above half a glass of lager beer, because I did not feel well that night.

4907. When you came out, just before 12 o'clock, who came with you, if anybody?—Reuscher came out with me.

4908. What did you do as you came out?—We had to wait outside for Mr. Ruppert, because he had to stop behind to settle the account of the people and pay the bill, and he requested us to wait outside for him.

4909. How far from the house were you waiting?—Just on the pavement, three or four yards away from the door.

4910. Was anything going on in the street?—The street was very noisy and very full of people that night.

4911-2. Did you see the police at all?—Yes, I saw them engaged in moving about the crowd.

4913. After you had waited there a few minutes was there still a big crowd?—After a little while the crowd was cleared away, and there was no one round me within quite ten or fifteen yards.

4914. At that time the street was clear?—Quite clear. There was no one round me.

4915. Did Reuscher do anything then?—Reuscher said, "While you wait for Ruppert here I will go off and get my bag," because we live close together, and wanted to go home together.

4916. Where did he go to get his bag?—To Wardour Street, quite near, and it would not take him many minutes to go there and get his bag.

4917. At that time the part of the street where you were was quite clear?—Yes.

4918. How clear, should you say?—There was no person near me within ten or fifteen yards.

4919. While you were standing there you were alone?—Yes.

4920. What happened?—I was suddenly attacked from behind and pushed across the pavement. I looked round and saw a policeman behind me. I know him now as a police inspector. I did not know then who he was.

4921. Was anybody with him?—No one; he was quite by himself. He gave me a push, and I went across the pavement, and he used very violent language towards me.

4922. Did anything pass between you? What did he say to you first, when he pushed you?—"Clear off here; what are you standing about here for?" I said I was waiting there for a friend of mine who was inside.

4923. Who was that?—Mr. Ruppert.

4924. Did the Inspector say anything to you then?—He said, "Come off, what are you standing there for; we know you; you are very well known to us," and then he used very insulting words to me.

4925. Let us hear what he said to you?—Excuse me, but he called me a b—— ponce. Of course I was very much annoyed at that, because it was insulting to me, and I said to him how dare he call me such a name, and I told him he would have to prove it to me, and he said, "I know you very well, and I will prove it. You are very well known to us; you are just the very man we want." He never let go of me, and I could not go away at all.

4926. When did he take hold of you?—At the same time as he first touched me. He never let go of me.

4927. What did he do with you?—He arrested me, and took me away, and at the same moment Mr. Ruppert came out from the place.

4928. Was anybody else there besides Mr. Ruppert?—No one at all. When I turned round I saw another policeman, who I now know as an Inspector, come along, but he never touched me or spoke to me.

Mr. F. Altfuldisch.

16 Oct. 1906.

4929. How far off was the other Inspector?—When I turned round he was then behind me.

4930. He neither touched you nor spoke to you?—No.

4931. Did he say anything to the other policeman?—No.

4932. Did you say anything to Ruppert?—I called out to him in German to tell my wife what had happened to me, and the Inspector asked me what I wanted from Mr. Ruppert.

4933. What words did you say, can you remember?—I told him to go home and tell my wife what had happened, and that I was locked up. Then he said to me, "Who is Ruppert, and what do you want from him?" I told him "He is the man I told you I was waiting for," then we went along towards Soho.

4934. Did he say anything in answer to that?—No, he did not say anything. Except when he got a little further up the road he said, "I will teach you lazy loafers to walk about here with big walking-sticks."

4935. Had you got a big walking-stick?—I had. Then nothing occurred. I saw my friend Ruppert following me, and nothing occurred till we got to Dean Street, and the Inspector who had me in charge turned round.

4936. Do you know his name now?—McKay. He turned round to my friend and asked him what he wanted, and my friend answered him.

4937. Your friend Ruppert?—Yes. He said he was going home to tell my wife what had happened, and then he said, "Well, then, go your way," and Ruppert said, "I am going my way."

4938. Did Inspector McKay say anything further?—He then turned to the other Inspector and told him quietly, "You had better take him, too," and Ruppert, my friend, stood perfectly still, and the other Inspector—I do not know his name—took him in charge without any provocation.

4939. What happened to you and your Inspector?—Then he let go of my arm and he took hold of the collar of my coat, and pushed me along violently.

4940. How far did he push you along?—He pushed me to and fro until we got to Great Marlborough Street, just outside the De Dion Bouton Motor Garage, and asked me quietly, "What are you doing for a living now?" I told him I was not going to answer him; there was a proper place and time for that. I was too disgusted with the treatment I had received and with everything altogether, so I was not going to answer him. Then he said, "Won't you answer me?" And he said, "I will teach you then." And he pushed me down, and shook me violently till my cap fell off. He asked me to pick the cap up, and I did not do that at once, so he pushed me right down on the pavement to pick the cap up.

4941. Did he use any expression to you during that shaking?—Yes. He said, "I will shake your very entrails out, you thin-gutted herring." And at that time my friend, Mr. Ruppert, was marched past by the other Inspector.

4942. What do you say the Inspector did after your cap fell off?—He pushed me down violently to pick it up.

4943. Where had he hold of you?—By the neck—by the collar.

4944. When that was happening, what happened to Ruppert?—At the same time Mr. Ruppert was marched past by the other Inspector, and nothing occurred until we got to the station. My friend, Ruppert, was led into the charge room—what I now know as the charge room—and I was taken into a dark room in the back, where I was assaulted—struck.

4945. Can you describe exactly where this room was as you got into the station?—Straight through at the back, if you go in at the front door.

4946. On the same level as the door?—Yes.

4947. Who took you in there?—Inspector McKay.

4948. What happened after he had taken you in?—He shut the door, and he began to strike me both on the head and shoulders and all over my body.

4949. How?—With his fist, and saying at the same time, "I will teach you dirty ponce not to answer me." And he struck me so long that I shouted "Murder" and "Help," till I slid down on a seat—what I discovered was a seat afterwards—quite exhausted.

4950. What were you doing when he was striking you?—I protected my head. I did not know what was happening to me. He struck me very violently.

4951. After the Inspector had done that, what happened?—Then he went outside, and a few moments after a plain clothes man came in, and he began the same treatment with me, only not striking me so long.

4952. What did he do?—He knocked me about as well, with his fist.

4953. After this had happened, what next took place?—Then I was taken into the charge room and charged.

4954. Up to this time you had not been taken to the charge room, and you had not been charged?—No.

4955. You were taken into the charge room, and what happened when the charge was made?—Then I was charged with disorderly conduct. That was all.

4956. Did you make any complaint to the Inspector?—No, not at all. I was too frightened to say anything, because I did not know what would have happened to me if I had complained. I was too frightened. I was determined to state my case, at any rate, to the magistrate, and I thought I would get satisfaction there.

4957. After being charged, what happened to you?—Then I was taken up to the cells, and I asked if I could have bail. The police constable or the officer who took me upstairs said, "I will see about that later on."

4958. What time was it when you were put in your cell?—I looked at my watch, and it was about 12.45.

4959. About what time was it when you were arrested?—I should say a little after 12—10 minutes after 12. It would not be more. I do not know the exact time.

4960. After you were in your cell, did you feel any effects of this treatment?—I was very ill, and did not know what to do with myself. When I sat down I thought I was going to die. I had to lie down, and when I laid down I had to get up again, so I rang the bell dozens of times, but no one came answered it.

4961. What kind of bell was it?—An electric bell. I could hear the bell ring plainly. Later on I heard a noise outside in the gangway, and I knocked, and a little hole in the centre of the door opened, and a police constable asked me what I wanted? I said, "What about my bail, and I should like to have a doctor, because I feel ill. I have been ill-treated down there in the station." He said, "Oh."

4962. You made a complaint to him then?—Yes.

4963. Who was he, do you know?—No.

4964. Was he a person in uniform?—He was in uniform.

4965. What was the complaint you made to him exactly?—I told him I was ill-treated and knocked about in the station, and I should like to have my doctor. He said, "Then you had better give me your bail, and I will see about it," and I was bailed out about 5.30 in the morning.

4966. Who by?—By my wife.

4967. What did you do as soon as you were bailed out?—I went at once to my doctor.

4968. What is his name?—Dr. Groth.

4969. You were examined by him?—I was examined by him.

4970. And by another doctor afterwards?—Yes, because Dr. Groth was very ill at the time, and he thought it better to have another medical man, who could appear at the hearing.

4971. Who was the other doctor?—Dr. Frye.

4972. Had you been guilty of any disorderly conduct in the street?—No.

4973. Had you been swearing or shouting or anything?—Nothing at all.

4974. Were you drunk?—I was not drunk.

4975. Did you say anything to the policeman beyond what you have told us to provoke him in any way?—Not a word.

4976. Will you explain to the Commission what the meaning of this word "ponce" is, that you say he used to you?—I did not know the meaning exactly, but I know the meaning now more fully than I did at that time. I should not like to be called that by any man on the earth.

4977. (Chairman.) What do you say now is the meaning of the word?—It is a man who lives on the wrong earnings of a woman.

4978. (Earl Russell.) On the earnings of immoral women. That is what you understand the word to mean?—Yes. I was not charged with that, but he called me that.

4979. Can you identify any of the other officers besides Inspector McKay? Do you know now who they were? Do you know who the second man was who came in and knocked you about?—Yes.

4980. What is his name?—I do not know his name, but I can identify the man if I see him.

4981. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That is the man in plain clothes?—Yes.

4982. (Earl Russell.) Have you identified him since that day?—I was never asked to do so. I had never seen him before, and I have never seen him since.

4983. Were you abusive to the policeman in any way?—Not at all. I was very angry, of course, to be called such names and to be arrested for doing nothing. I was not abusive, but I was very angry.

4984. Was the question of the injuries you received at the station gone into at the hearing of your case or not?—Not at all.

4985. What happened. You were in fact fined 20s. for disorderly conduct, were you not?—Yes.

4986. (Chairman.) Were you represented by counsel or solicitor?—I was represented by a solicitor and by counsel.

4987. (Earl Russell.) Did you find out afterwards from your wife at what time she was asked to come and bail you out?—Yes.

4988. What time did they come to her?—A little after four, as far as I remember.

4989. And you had asked for bail at what time?—I could not say what time it was. I asked for bail before I was put into the cell.

4990. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) This incident took place on the 16th December, did it not?—As far as I remember.

4991. You tell us that you made no complaint to the Inspector of this ill-treatment, because you were afraid, and reserved it for the Magistrate?—I did.

4992. You were brought before the Magistrate on the 18th, were you not?—The case occurred on the Saturday, and I was brought up on the Monday.

4993. You made no complaint on the Monday to the Magistrate of ill-treatment by the police at all, did you?—Because I wanted more witnesses to bring up, and asked for a remand.

4994. That was the reason you made no complaint at all. Then your case was remanded till the 26th, and you were then represented by counsel and solicitor?—Yes.

4995. And you told your story then to the Magistrate at length, did you not?—The same as I have done now here.

4996. Did you say anything then of any other constable having assaulted you, except McKay?—I did.

4997. Did you make any complaint to the Magistrate about having rung the bell, and nobody coming?—I did.

4998. You are quite sure of that?—Quite sure.

4999. You had been examined by a doctor, had you not, shortly after you were bailed out?—Yes.

5000. Did you call the doctor before the Magistrate?—I was not allowed.

5001. Your counsel and solicitor knew that you had been examined by a doctor?—They did.

5002. Had the doctor spoken to the solicitor, or had your solicitor seen the doctor who examined you?—Yes.

5003. And although he had seen him he was not called before the Magistrate?—He was not called. I do not know for what reason.

5004. At any rate, that doctor could have told the Magistrate the state in which he found you quite shortly after you were released?—Yes.

5005. Can you tell the Commission what time it was the doctor examined you?—About 6 o'clock in the morning, or a little after 6.

5006. On the Sunday morning?—Yes.

5007. Now I will go back to the occurrence on Saturday night. You say you had been to a florists' meeting?—Yes.

5008. Was it a dinner or a supper?—No, not at all. It is a florists' society, and they hold their meeting once a month in this place.

5009. Do they discuss business?—They discuss business.

5010. How came you to go there?—My friend invited me because I interest myself in flowers.

5011. Do they discuss flowers?—All sorts of questions, and putting young men into places, if they are out of a place.

5012. How many people, about, would be at the meeting?—I should say between twenty and thirty; that is a rough guess; I did not count them.

5013. Had any dispute taken place at the meeting?—Not at all.

5014. Did you all leave the room together?—Not altogether, but one after the other.

5015. Did the meeting close and everybody leave at the same time?—As the landlord said it was time to go, everybody put their coats and hats on as quickly as they could and went out.

5016. When you got out was there any crowd in the street other than the people coming out of this meeting?—There was a rare lot of noise and a rare lot of people about the road.

5017. Were those people fighting and quarrelling amongst themselves?—I did not take particular notice of that, because it had nothing to do with me.

5018. What did the noise sound like?—Like people who were angry?—It was a buzzing noise.

5019. Like people who were angry?—I did not take any particular notice. It was a buzzing noise; people rushing up and down, and it was just closing time, and the people were coming out of the public-houses. I did not see any fighting whatever going on.

5020. Were they mostly foreigners who were in the street as far as you could see?—I did not speak to any of them.

5021. You are not in a position to say who they were? Is that so?—Not at all. The people I was with that evening were mostly foreigners.

5022. The street you were in when you came out of this place was Greek Street, was it not?—Yes.

5023. Before anything happened to you did you see the police arresting a man?—I did not see any arrest whatever made.

5024. In answer to your counsel you said just now "The street was very noisy and full of people, and I noticed the police moving them away." Is that right?—That I did see. I saw the police coming up and down the street, and saw them moving people on, but I did not see any arrest made.

5025. You saw them moving people on?—Yes.

5026. You saw the police there and you saw a crowd?—I did.

5027. You did not see any man arrested?—No.

5028. Do you suggest the first thing that happened was that you were pushed across the road from behind?—I stood on the edge of the pavement with my back towards the door of the hotel waiting for my friend, and I was attacked from behind from the road side.

5029. Do you know Inspector Manning?—I never saw Inspector Manning before or after this occasion. I saw him that night after I was arrested, and I saw him at the station

5030. Did he speak to you?—Not a word.

5031. I must put this to you. Did he speak to you and tell you to pass along?—Not a word.

5032. And did you move on a few yards?—No one spoke to me to tell me to move on.

5033. After that did McKay come up and did he tell you to go away?—I was attacked from behind, as I told you a little while ago.

5034. When he told you to go away did you shout out and say, "We shan't; why should we go for"—using an offensive word—"the English police?"—Nothing of the sort.

5035. That is an invention?—Yes.

Mr. F. Altfuldisch.

16 Oct. 1906.

5036. Did you say "Don't think you have a ponce to deal with?"—Nothing of the sort. I never used that word.

5037. Did you or did you not know the word at that time?—I knew the word, but I had no occasion to use such a word at all.

5038. Did you know roughly what it meant?—I did.

5039. Was it after you had said that, and only after you had said that, that he arrested you?—I did not say anything of the sort.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I do not know that it is necessary for me to go through this story if there is a direct conflict?

(Chairman.) You must do as you think fit, Mr. Bankes.

5040. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) There are one or two points I must put to you. After you were arrested did you go from Greek Street into Soho Square?—We did.

5041. Did you go from Soho Square into Carlisle Street?—We did.

5042. And from Carlisle Street into Poland Street?—Yes.

5043. And so to the station?—And so to the station.

5044. That is the way you went?—In Carlisle Street my friend Ruppert was arrested.

5045. I am not sure about that. Were you struggling and resisting?—Not at all.

5046. Did Inspector McKay fall down at all?—Not at all. He might have fallen down, but not while he had me in charge.

5047. I am speaking of while he had you in charge?—Not at all.

5048. Did he fall down because you tripped him up or tried to trip him up?—Not at all.

5049. Did you catch hold of the railings of Soho Square?—We were not at the railings at all; we were in the middle of the road.

5050. Did you call on your friend Ruppert to assist you?—I called him to tell my wife what had happened to me, and that was all.

5051. That was in Greek Street?—That was all I called to him.

5052. I suggest that this happened in Soho Square or Carlisle Street. Then your friend was arrested, was he not?—He was arrested at the crossing of Dean Street and Carlisle Street.

5053. And he also was brought before the magistrate?—He was.

5054. And he has never made any complaint up to this moment as to the way in which he was treated. Was he convicted by the magistrate?—Yes.

5055. And up to this moment he has never made any complaint at all about the way in which he was treated so far as you know?—So far as I know.

5056. And he was arrested because he attempted to rescue you at your request?—I never requested anything of the sort.

5057. That is what the police said against him at the Police Court in your hearing?—I was not there at the hearing.

5058. At any rate, he has never complained in any sort of way so far as you know?—No.

5059. When you got close to the station did some constables come to McKay's assistance because you were so violent?—I did not see any constable at all. I saw a constable passing down Wardour Street who saluted McKay and passed along, but nothing else.

5060. Will Sergeant Crayfourd and Police Constable Miles stand up? Did you see either of those men before you got to the station?—No.

5061. Did either of them take any part in bringing you to the station?—No.

5062. Or did either of them deal with you in any way when you were in the station?—Not at all. They had had nothing to say and never did anything to me.

5063. Just a word about Sergeant Crayfourd. Is it a fact that Sergeant Crayfourd and Police Constable Miles together went from Great Marlborough Street and met you with Inspector McKay, and that you were then shouting and struggling, and that Sergeant Crayfourd assisted to take you to the station by taking you by the wrist and the arm?—Most decidedly not.

5064. And that Police Constable Miles assisted?—Most decidedly not.

5065. As a matter of fact, you arrived at the station with Inspector McKay and Sergeant Crayfourd and Police Constable Miles?—Most decidedly not.

5066. All assisting in taking you?—Most decidedly not.

5067. Is it the fact that after you got in the station you were very violent and that the sergeant and Police Constable Miles assisted in quieting you and holding you?—Nothing of the sort.

5068. And that it was Sergeant Crayfourd who took you into the charge room in order to be charged?—Nothing of the kind.

5069. You suggest that Inspector McKay pummelled you with his fist until you did not know where you were. Where do you suggest he struck you?—On the head and shoulders, because I protected my face with my arms.

5070. You say another man came in afterwards and pummelled you?—Yes.

5071. Can you give me any indication as to who that man was?—I never saw the man before, and never saw him after.

5072. Can you describe him in any way, was he in uniform?—He was in plain clothes, a dark man.

5073. Can you give me any other description that would enable me to find him?—I dare say I could pick him out if he was in plain clothes again.

5074. You say that you rang the bell dozens of times, and that you were put into the cell. Did you say that you said something about that before the Magistrate?—I did.

5075. I do not find it in the note of the evidence given before the Magistrate. Before coming here to-day had you read what had been said by Dr. Gerothwohl as to what happened in his case? Did you read the account in the newspapers, or anywhere, of the evidence that Dr. Gerothwohl gave here before this Commission?—I had nothing to do with Dr. Gerothwohl.

5076. Had you not taken any interest in his case?—Not at all.

5077. Did you not read any account of what he said before the Commission?—I did, but not all of it; I only looked at the papers just when I had the time. I did not take any interest at all in it.

5078. Did you read his description of what happened to him in the cell?—No.

5079. Are you sure?—Yes, because I have not the time to read newspapers.

5080. But you read some account of what he said?—When I had the time I did read it, but I did not read just that.

5081. That was the one part you did not see?—It might not have been the only part. It might have been dozens of different parts I have not seen.

5082. Did you read about any complaint being made that persons that Dr. Gerothwohl wanted were not sent for?—No.

5083-4. Did you not read anything about that?—No.

5085. Have you ever said before that too long a time elapsed before you were bailed out?—I do not know what you mean.

5086. Have you ever said before to-day that you think the police did not bail you out or allow you to be bailed out as soon as you ought to have been?—I made a complaint that morning in the police court.

5087. Did you say so before the Magistrate?—Yes, I did.

(Earl Russell.) This is a case in which we have not had the depositions of what took place before the Magistrate. If my friend has them I should be glad if the Commission would order that we should be furnished with a copy.

(Chairman.) Have you applied at the police court for a copy of the depositions?

(Earl Russell.) No, sir, we have not in this case.

(Chairman.) Is there any difficulty about obtaining copies of the depositions if you do apply?

(Earl Russell.) There has been in some cases. I cannot say whether there would be in this case. Of course, if the Commission expressed a view, there would not be any difficulty.

(Chairman.) What are the rules relating to the supply of depositions according to your information?

(Earl Russell.) The usual rule is that you do not get depositions except when you want them for the purpose of appealing to Quarter Sessions, or something of that sort. We have been refused depositions before in cases we wanted to bring before this Commission. I do not know how far they are material, because the important part of the case is not the hearing before the Magistrate or the disorderly conduct.

(Chairman.) They are material for cross-examination of the witnesses?

(Earl Russell.) Precisely so. I have not had the opportunity of knowing yet what has been said.

(Chairman.) The witness has been cross-examined by Mr. Eldon Bankes apparently from the account of what he said before the Magistrate?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I have a copy of what he said.

(Chairman.) Is there any objection to your showing it to Earl Russell?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I will show it to Earl Russell, certainly.

(Chairman.) If you ask for a copy at the police court I do not suppose, after what has been said here to-day, they will refuse you.

(Earl Russell.) May I say the Commission think it a fit case to grant it?

(Chairman.) We think it is quite a fit case for your having a copy of the depositions.

(Earl Russell.) If you please, sir. Now I do not propose to re-examine this witness on the questions Mr. Bankes asked originally as to why a portion of his case was not gone into, because I propose to call Mr. Cockle, who conducted the case, and who will tell the Commission why it was not gone into. He probably understood a great deal better than the prisoner.

(Chairman.) You mean you wish Mr. Cockle to give an explanation of that circumstance?

(Earl Russell.) Yes, sir.

5088. Dealing with Mr. Bankes's last question, this occurrence took place on the 16th December last year. When did you first make this statement to your representatives about the treatment you received at the police station?—I could not do it on the Sunday, because I could not find any solicitor's office open, but I went the first thing on the Monday morning.

Mr. F. Altfuldisch.

16 Oct. 1906.

5089. Anyhow, it was before the hearing on the 26th December, 1905?—It was on the Monday morning, after the Saturday I was charged.

5090. At that time you made a statement about this ill-treatment?—Yes, to the solicitor, Mr. Wisbey.

5091. (Chairman.) You saw him on Monday, that would be Monday, the 18th?—I saw him on the Monday morning before going into Court.

5092. Then you were remanded, as I understand?—Mr. Wisbey, my solicitor, told me he could not properly conduct the case the same day, and he had better ask the Magistrate for a remand, and so I was remanded till Boxing Day.

5093. December 26th?—Yes.

5094. You do not mind answering the question, but of course it is private, and if you do not want to go into what took place between your solicitor and yourself you need not?—I will answer any question for your information, sir.

5095. Did you make a full statement to your solicitor of the facts in much the same way as you have told them to us to-day?—Yes.

5096. Then it was arranged that counsel should be instructed?—Yes.

5097. And counsel did appear for you on the hearing of the case on the remand?—Yes.

5098. Did you make any complaint to any public authority after the result was known to you? You were present in Court, I suppose, on the 26th?—Yes.

5099. And the Magistrate convicted you?—Yes.

5100. And fined you 20s.?—Yes, or 14 days.

5101. Did you make any complaint to anybody thereupon?—Only to the Magistrate.

5102. What did you say to the Magistrate after he had convicted you?—I did not say anything after I was convicted. I did not know if I was allowed.

5103. Who asked you to come here to give evidence before us?—I had to have counsel, and I am not in a position to pay for a counsel, so I knew there was the Public Vigilance Society, and I gave my case into the hands of this Society. I am very much indebted to the Society for what they have done up to now for me in this case, and the Society has conducted the case up to now.

5104. You have not written to the Home Secretary?—Not at all.

5105. I suppose in due course you received a communication from somebody connected with this Vigilance Society?—Yes.

(Chairman.) That is all we require from you at present.

Mr. Ernest Cockle, sworn.

5106. (Earl Russell.) You are a barrister practising at 2, New Court, Lincoln's Inn?—Yes.

5107. You were instructed to appear for the defence of Ferdinand Altfuldisch on the 26th December, at Marlborough Street?—Yes.

5108. You were instructed by Mr. Wisbey, of 8 Argyll Place, Regent Street?—Yes.

5109. Is this the brief you had on that occasion (handing document to Witness)?—Yes, that is so.

5110. Does that contain proofs of witnesses, including one of Altfuldisch?—Yes, marked by myself.

5111. That was handed to you before the hearing of the case?—Oh yes. Mr. Wisbey brought it personally to the conference when I first heard of the case.

5112. I put that in because there has been a suggestion that this statement was made subsequent to reading something in the newspapers, and therefore I will put in the whole brief?—I had that before I had the conference with him at my chambers.

5113. (Chairman.) I have not gathered what the charge was. Do you remember the exact words in the charge book?—No.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I have it here, sir—"Disorderly conduct and using obscene language in Greek Street."

(Chairman.) Under what section would that be?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Under the Vagrancy Act.

Mr. E. Cockle.

5114. (Earl Russell.) Was any evidence given on the hearing of the charge of obscene language?—I believe so.

5115. Apart from the actual charge made against him of this disorderly conduct and the obscene language, there was a complaint made of ill-treatment in the Police Station?—Yes.

5116. Did you call the defendant as a witness?—I called the defendant as a witness, and as it appeared to me that everything that happened on that occasion and everything which was done by the constables also was relevant I proposed to go at some length into the question of the defendant's treatment by the police constable, not only while he was being taken to the Police Station, but also in the Police Station. The Magistrate at once stopped me and said that anything that happened after he got into the Police Station was irrelevant. I argued strongly against that, but it was not admitted.

5117. Did you also tender some medical evidence?—I had two doctors there to speak to serious injuries. I had seen them myself personally, and I was most anxious to call both of these doctors to speak to these injuries, but as the magistrate said that anything that happened after the defendant got into the station was irrelevant, and as these injuries were undoubtedly chiefly occasioned there, I did not call them simply for that reason, because the magistrate had ruled that.

5118. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Had you proofs of their evidence?—Yes. That proof was marked by myself before I had the conference.

5119. (Chairman.) I suppose the Magistrate in the course of the argument referred to the exact nature of the charge before the Court?—Yes.

5120. And said it did not matter what had taken place in the Police Station, because it was not relevant to the case before him?—Yes, that was his argument. I argued against that, but he would not admit the evidence.

5121. (Earl Russell.) The Magistrate was Mr. Denman?—Yes.

5122 (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) The last witness then was under a misapprehension when he told me that he had told the Magistrate all about this violence and about the ringing of the bell? Was he not referring to the first occasion when he was there alone?—I was not there then.

5123. I think no evidence was given by him then at all?—I do not know what happened.

5124. On the second occasion he is under a misapprehension that he told the Magistrate about it?—No, I think not, because he certainly answered the first question or two to the effect that he had been assaulted by these police officials, and of course that much had got out before Mr. Denman said: "This is inadmissible," and, being held to be inadmissible, I presume the answers did not get on the depositions.

5125. You have not got the depositions in your mind. He spoke about Inspector McKay having struck him, and that appears on the depositions, but he did not say anything about any constables having assaulted him other than Inspector McKay?—I am not sure. He gave some evidence to the effect that he was assaulted after he got to the police station.

5126. (Chairman.) Tell us exactly what the order of proceedings was. Was there any opening statement of the case on the part of the prosecution. Did any policeman speak, or were the witnesses called simply?—I think Inspector McKay gave his evidence first, but I really forget, as it is nearly a year ago.

5127. When the case for the prosecution closed, did you make any statement or did you call your witnesses?—No, I believe I commenced by calling my first witness. I know I addressed the Magistrate at the end.

5128. It was while you were examining the defendant and leading up to what took place in the Police Station that the Magistrate interposed?—I think in cross-examination, when I was putting questions to Inspector McKay, the question was first raised. It is nearly a year ago, and I had not occasion to refresh my memory until yesterday.

5129. You did not make any note of that on your brief?—No, I made no note of that point at all.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) The Statute is the 2nd and 3rd Victoria, Chapter 47, and Section 54, Sub-section 12, makes it an offence for any person to use any profane, indecent, or obscene language to the annoyance of the inhabitants or passengers. The section which deals with disorderly conduct is Section 64 of the same Act, which gives power to any constable to take into custody without a warrant all loose, idle, and disorderly persons whom he shall find disturbing the public peace.

THEODORE RUPPERT, sworn.

Mr. T. Ruppert.

5130. (Earl Russell.) You live at 23, Blandford Street, Baker Street?—Yes.

5131. And you are a florist in the employ of Messrs. Anthos and Co., of 72, Baker-street?—Yes.

5132. You know the defendant, Mr. Altfuldisch?—Yes.

5133. How long have you known him?—About two years.

5134. Have you seen him at home as well as at other places?—Yes.

5135. What should you say about his character?—I know he has a very good character, as far as I know.

5136. What do you say about his temper?—He is a good-tempered man. I could not say anything else.

5137. On Saturday, December 16th, you were present at the social evening we have heard of of the Florists' Society, which was held at Wede's Hotel, in Greek Street?—Yes.

5138. How long has that society been using that same house for their meetings?—As far as I know, for twenty-seven years.

5139. You were the host on that occasion, and you invited Mr. Altfuldisch and another man, Mr. Reuscher?—Yes.

5140. They came about what o'clock?—Mr. Altfuldisch about ten o'clock, and Mr. Reuscher a bit later.

5141. How long did they remain?—Till just about 12 o'clock.

5142. When you were leaving did you make any request of them?—I said: "Just wait outside for me," as I had to settle the bill with the restaurant keeper.

5143. You let them go on while you stopped to do that?—Yes.

5144. About how long did that take you?—Not quite ten minutes.

5145. When you got outside what was the first thing you saw?—I came out of the restaurant and I saw Mr. Altfuldisch arrested, standing between two inspectors. I was surprised to see him, and I did not know what to make of it.

5146. About how far from the door was he when you saw him there?—About fifteen or twenty yards.

5147. What did Mr. Altfuldisch say?—Mr. Altfuldisch called me twice, and asked me: "Will you go home to my wife, and tell my wife what is the matter with me." Certainly I did not know what had happened before.

5148. Did you know why Mr. Altfuldisch had been arrested?—No, I did not know anything about it.

5149. What did you do when you saw him arrested?—I said I would send some other friends who had been at the same meeting, and I turned down the street to find some of his friends. I found some about ten yards or further down the street, and I asked them, "Do you know why Mr. Altfuldisch is taken by the police?" No one could tell me.

5150. You inquired the reason for his arrest, but could not find out?—No.

5151. With regard to character, have you ever known him use obscene language?—As far as I know, no.

5152. What did you do when you were unable to find out why he was arrested?—I was returning back the same way. I certainly had to go the same way as Mr. Altfuldisch with the Inspectors, and I was coming behind the Inspectors.

5153. On your way to where?—On my way to the station. Mr. Altfuldisch lives three houses from the station.

5154. Where were you on your way to?—To Baker Street. I went to his wife.

5155. She lives three doors from the station?—Yes.

5156. You were coming along. How far behind were you?—I was about five yards behind him at first; suddenly the police told me to go away, and I stopped about ten yards behind the police and Mr. Altfuldisch.

5157. Did the police ask you anything?—They said, "What do you want here?"

5158. Who said that?—Inspector McKay.

5159. Did you tell him what you wanted there?—I told him I must go the same way to see Altfuldisch's wife. He said, "We do not want you here; move along," and at the same time he said to the other Inspector, "You had better take him as well," and I was taken as well.

5160. Did you understand then that you were arrested?—Certainly not. I had never been arrested in England. I thought I must go to the station and explain to the police what I knew.

5161. You did not know you were under arrest?—No.

5162. Did you struggle at all on your way to the station?—Not at all.

5163. You went quietly?—I went quietly.

5164. You made no complaint of your own treatment?—No.

5165. And you never have made any complaint of your own treatment?—No.

5166. Were you able to see what was going on between the Inspector and Mr. Altfuldisch on the way to the station? Were you in sight of them on the way to the station? Could you see them?—I was behind them walking along, and coming to Great Marlborough Street I was near to the Inspector and Mr. Altfuldisch.

5167. Do you mean nearly level with them?—Nearly level.

5168. Then did you see anything?—Yes, I saw the Inspector push Mr. Altfuldisch along a few times, and he pushed him very hardly.

5169. Just explain. How did he push him along?—He had him by the neck, and he pushed him like this. (Illustrating.)

5170. Did you see Mr. Altfuldisch struggling?—No.

5171. Was he shouting or crying out?—No, he was very quiet.

5172. Did you see anything in Great Marlborough Street, just before you reached the station?—Yes; I saw Mr. Altfuldisch pushed along. I saw he was pushed.

5173. (Chairman.) What policeman had hold of you?—Another Inspector.

5174. (Earl Russell.) Do you know his name?—I know his name now. It was Mr. Manning, I believe.

5175. Is that the Inspector?—Yes.

5176. (Chairman.) How had he got hold of you?—He had my arm—simply walking.

5177. He did not say, "Consider yourself under arrest," or "Come to the station with me," and not touch you. He touched you in some way?—Yes. They were taking Mr. Altfuldisch, and they said, "Take him as well." It was a mistake. He took me walking along with him.

5178. What did he do with you?—He only took hold of my arm.

5179. (Earl Russell.) You knew you were being taken, but you did not know you were being taken as a prisoner?—I did not know I was being arrested.

5180. What did you think you were going to the station for?—Only to explain to the officer there what I knew and what I had seen.

5181. When you got to the station, what did you find then?—I was put in the charge room. The Inspector came in there and pushed me in a chair, and said, "Sit down." I did not know I must sit down. I stood up again. He said, "Sit down."

5182. You do not make any complaint of your treatment?—No.

5183. You were charged?—Yes.

5184. With what?—With standing in a crowd of foreigners, fighting, and using bad language, and with interfering with the police.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I have not the charge sheet, but I think it was for obstructing the police in the execution of their duty.

5185. (Chairman.) You were put in the charge room?—Yes.

5186. Who spoke to you there?—Not in the charge room. I heard in the police court the next day I was charged with standing in a crowd of foreigners, fighting, and using bad language.

5187. Before you were taken to a cell, did anybody in the charge room at the police station speak to you?—Only asked me my name and where I lived.

5188. (Earl Russell.) When you were brought into the charge room were you not told to stand up in a certain place, and told what you were accused of?—Yes, certainly. I was not asked what I was doing.

5189. But were you told what the charge against you was?—Yes.

5190. What did they say the charge against you was that night?—I cannot remember. Certainly I did not take much notice. I did not know I was arrested like this.

5191. Anyhow, you understood that you were taken to a cell and locked up?—Yes. I did not know anything about it.

5192. (Chairman.) Who spoke to you about a cell, or who ordered you to be taken to a cell, or what took place?—A policeman took me to the cell.

5193. Which policeman?—The policeman who took the charged people to the cell—the policemen who were in there. I did not know anything about what I had done.

5194. Do you mean to say that you did not know that you had been arrested until you actually found yourself in the cell?—Quite right, I did not know I should be put in a cell. Two men coming in the cell asked me if I had friends to fetch me out. I did not know I could do this. I said if I could be fetched out I will ask for a friend, and I did.

(Chairman.) I think, Lord Russell, you might ask him a little more particularly with reference to what took place upon his arrival at the police station.

(Earl Russell.) I have extracted from him all I can. He did not understand the procedure in the charge room, and not unnaturally, being a foreigner, and no charge having been made against him before.

5195. (Chairman.) There is no charge made against him, as far as I am concerned. I only want to know what took place when he got to the charge room. Apparently, if I rightly followed him, he said nothing took place in the charge room, and he did not know he was arrested?—I did not know it. Certainly I was surprised to be charged like the other people who had been there before me.

5196. Were there many people in the charge room when you got to the police station?—Three or four.

5197. Three or four men in plain clothes—I do not mean constables, but not in uniform?—Quite right.

5198. Where were they standing or sitting?—Round the wall.

5199. Was there a table in the room?—I think so.

5200. Was there any inspector or policeman of any kind at the table?—No.

5201. Was there any book in the room?—Yes.

5202. Where was the book?—In the middle of the room.

5203. On the floor or on a table?—On a table.

5204. On a table in the middle of the room?—Yes.

5205. Did anybody write anything in that book while you were in the room?—Yes.

5206. Who did that?—The Inspector.

5207. Which Inspector?—I could not say.

5208. Was it the Inspector who had taken Mr. Altfuldisch or you into custody?—It was another Inspector.

5209. A third one?—Yes.

5210. Did you see him write in a book?—Yes. He signed the names of the people in the book which was there.

5211. He wrote the names of the people who were there before you in the book?—Yes.

5212. Did you notice him before he spoke to Mr. Altfuldisch? Did he write anything about him?—I did not see Mr. Altfuldisch after he had been taken to the station.

5213. He was not in the room when you got there?—No, I was in the room about eight minutes after Mr. Altfuldisch.

5214. Were you there eight minutes at least before you were taken away to the cell?—Yes.

5215. Did anybody charge you, or read you anything, or say anything to you?—Yes.

5216. Who did that?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I think I can identify him. It was Inspector Remfry.

5217. (Chairman.) Is that the man?—Yes.

5218. What did he say to you?—I cannot remember. I only gave him my name. Certainly I was not asked for anything but my name and address.

Mr. T. Ruppert.

16 Oct. 1906.

5219. You understand English, do you?—Yes, I understand English, but I cannot speak very well.

5220. After the Inspector had asked your name and address, and you had given it to him, what did he say to you before you were taken to the cell?—I do not think he said anything.

5221. (Earl Russell.) After you were charged you were taken to a cell?—Yes.

5222. Let me take you back again for a moment. Before you got to the police station you passed Mr. Altfuldisch in custody just before you got there?—Yes.

5223. How far off from the door of the police station?—I could not say.

5224. Was it 10 yards, or 100 yards?—As far as I can remember it was about 20 yards.

5225. You got into the police station about 20 yards in front of Mr. Altfuldisch?—No, not quite so much—I passed him.

5226. How long were you in the charge room?—About five to eight minutes.

5227. Did you see other prisoners there being charged?—Yes.

5228. During the time you were in the charge room was Mr. Altfuldisch brought into the charge room?—No.

5229. Did you see him again?—No.

5230. When did you next see him?—At the time his wife fetched him out, about five o'clock in the morning.

5231. You got bail too?—Yes.

5232. You saw him next when you were both bailed out. Is that right?—Yes.

5233. When you got to the cell did you hear anything unusual?—Yes. I heard three or four times loud screams, and I knew Mr. Altfuldisch's voice.

5234. You recognised it was Mr. Altfuldisch?—Yes. I could not say what he was screaming for.

5235. Could you hear at all what he said?—"Help." It was very near to my cell. I could not say how far it was.

5236. Did he continue to scream loudly, or did the screaming go on for any length of time, or not?—He screamed a few times loudly.

5237. You were ultimately bailed out, I think, at four o'clock?—Yes.

5238. Did you say anything to Mr. Altfuldisch when you met him the next morning, about what you had heard?—Yes. I asked him what was the matter.

5239. Did he say anything to you?—He told me——.

5240. (Chairman.) In consequence of what took place did you go somewhere with Mr. Altfuldisch?—Yes; his wife was there with him, and I was going in his house close to the station. He showed me his collar and his neck. His collar was quite black. You could see marks of fingers on the collar, and on the neck as well.

5241. At what time do you say you saw these marks?—About half-past five or a quarter-past five.

5242. As soon as you two met the next morning?—Yes.

5243. You made no defence to your own charge?—No.

5244. You were brought up and fined?—Yes.

5245. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I understand you to say you heard your friend Mr. Altfuldisch cry out "Help" after he got into the police station?—Yes.

5246. Did you hear him crying out for help on the way to the police station?—No.

5247. You did not hear that?—No.

5248. Was he shouting out for assistance, and shouting out to you and others to help him on the way to the police station?—No.

5249. You did not hear it on the way to the station, but you heard it after he got into the station?—Yes; but it was after I was in the cell.

5250. Mr. Altfuldisch was actually arrested, as I understand, before you came out of the restaurant?—Yes.

5251. And the first thing you saw was that he was standing in the custody of two Inspectors?—Yes.

5252. You are quite clear about that?—Yes.

5253. And then they marched him off to the station, or one of them did (McKay) and you went from Greek Street into Soho Square and Carlisle Street and Poland Street?—Yes.

5254. And you were following?—Yes.

5255. You were arrested in Carlisle Street?—Yes.

5256. You understood quite well that you were being arrested?—I did not know. If I had not done anything, certainly I did not know why I was arrested.

5257. We will come first of all to the place. It was in Carlisle Street?—Yes.

5258. It was Inspector Manning who took you?—Yes.

5259. He took hold of you?—Yes.

5260. And he led you away?—Yes.

5261. Did you understand that he was arresting you?—I understood I must go with him, and it could not be helped.

5262. That is your understanding of being arrested, is it?—Yes.

5263. So that you understood quite well in Carlisle Street that you had been arrested?—But it was a different meaning on his part.

5264. You mean you had not done anything worthy of being arrested?—Yes.

(Chairman.) Of course he is a foreigner, and he has said in examination in chief that he thought he was bound to go to the police station at the request of authority.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) What I understood was in his mind was that he did not understand he was arrested; he thought he was going as a witness, or something of that sort.

(Chairman.) That is exactly what he says.

5265. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) He says he did not think he ought to have been arrested, but he realised that he was arrested.

5266. You understood you were arrested, but you did not think you ought to have been?—Certainly not. I did not think I must go in a cell and stop there.

5267. When Inspector Manning arrested you did he speak to you? Did he tell you why he had arrested you?—No.

5268. Before he arrested you had your friend been calling upon you to help him?—No.

5269. And had you gone up to help him, and taken hold of Inspector McKay's arm?—No. I do not know anything about it.

5270. You say that did not happen?—I do not know anything about it.

5270*. You went with Inspector Manning to the station?—Yes.

5271. He had hold of you all the way?—Yes.

5272. And you went quite quietly?—Yes.

5273. You have no complaint to make of the way in which he treated you?—No.

5274. After you got into the station were you put into the dock?—Yes.

5275. Did Inspector Remfry speak to you when you were in the dock?—Yes

5276. Did you understand then that you had been arrested?—Certainly. I was taken away to a cell.

5277. You understood then that you had been arrested, and were not taken there merely as a witness?—Yes.

5278. You were placed in the dock, and then Inspector Remfry began to speak to you. You then understood you had been arrested. Did Inspector Remfry ask for your name?—Yes.

5279. Did he write that in a book?—Yes.

5280. Did he ask you for your address?—Yes.

5281. Did he write that in a book?—Yes.

5282. Did he then write in the book the charge that was made against you by Inspector Manning?—Must be, perhaps.

5283. But after he had written in the book the charge against you did he read out to you what the charge was. Did he tell you you were charged with disorderly conduct, and with obstructing the Inspector in the execution of his duty?—I could not remember it.

5284. You are not prepared to say it did not happen?—I do not know.

5285. After he wrote in the book surely he told you what you were there for. He told you why they had brought you there?—They did not tell me. I did not know at the time. He did not speak to me like this—"You have been arrested for this and for this." I could not say so.

5286. Did he not say, "The charge against you is that you have been guilty of disorderly conduct, and of obstructing the Inspector in the course of his duty"?—I cannot remember this. Certainly I was not obliged to be taken away like this, like other people in the room. I did not listen to this.

5287. At any rate, you did not say anything to the Inspector. You did not tell him you had been wrongly taken?—No, I did not know I was allowed to speak anything.

5288. I am not going into the reason, but as a matter of fact you did not complain, and you did not tell him that anything was wrong?—No.

5289. You then went down to the cell?—Yes.

5290. And someone there told you that you could get bail. Did you ring the bell?—Yes.

5291. And someone came?—Yes.

5292. Did you ring once or more than once?—More than once.

5293. How many times?—About three or four times.

5294. Quickly, one after the other, was it?—Yes, certainly. The police were walking about in the passage. I knocked on the door as well.

5295. They came reasonably quickly after you rang?—Yes.

5296. You make no complaint about that?—No.

5297. Then you told them you wanted bail, and you gave them some names?—Yes.

5298. Did they get the bail as quickly as you thought it could be got?—I think so.

5299. There is no complaint made about that. The next day, on the Monday, you went before the Magistrate?—Yes.

5300. Did you hear the police give their evidence against you?—Yes.

5301. Did you hear Inspector Manning say that you had attempted to rescue your friend, Mr. Altfuldisch from the custody of Inspector McKay?—I cannot quite understand it.

5302. You went before the Magistrate, did you not?—Yes.

5303. Amongst the witnesses who were called against you was Inspector Manning?—Yes.

5304. Did he tell his story to the Magistrate?—Yes.

5305. Did he tell the Magistrate that you had attempted to rescue your friend, Mr. Altfuldisch?—I think so.

5306. Did he tell the Magistrate that he had arrested you because you had attempted to rescue your friend?—I am not quite sure.

5307. Did the Magistrate ask you whether you had got anything to say?—Yes.

5308. And you said you had nothing to say?—I explained to the Magistrate everything, the same as I have said to-day.

5309. Did you?—Quite the same.

5310. (Chairman.) Were you sworn?—Yes.

5311. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Did you give evidence?—Yes.

5312. I am afraid I have not any note of what took place. Who else was called as a witness, besides Inspector Manning?—I do not know.

5313. You say you were sworn?—Not on Monday, but the second time we went to the Court.

(Chairman.) Mr. Bankes is now dealing with Monday.

5314. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I think there is a mistake about this. You were called as a witness for your friend, Mr. Altfuldisch at a later date?—Yes.

5315. I am now only speaking about your own case, when you came up before the Magistrate on the Monday?—Yes.

5316. The Magistrate asked you whether you had anything to say?

5317. (Chairman.) Was that before or after Inspector Remfry had spoken?—I cannot remember. I cannot say.

5318. Do you remember your case being called on?—Yes.

5319. I mean at the police court, before the magistrate on the Monday?—Yes.

5320. Did you go into the dock?—Yes.

5321. Did the Magistrate speak to you?—Yes.

5322. At once?—Yes.

5323. What did the Magistrate ask you?—I cannot remember. I cannot say.

5324. The Magistrate did ask you something?—I think so.

5325. Did the Inspector then give his evidence?—Yes, I believe so.

5326. Just apply your mind to the question?—I do not know anything more about his case. I cannot remember it.

5327. We are dealing with your case on the Monday?—Yes, I understand. I was very busy in the shop, and I could not stop any longer. I did not make any explanation about my case.

5328. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Evidence was given against you. I am not going into the reason for the moment, but the fact is you did not contest it. The fact is you did not say anything to the Magistrate to suggest that all that was said against you was not true?—Yes; as far as I know I explained it the same as what I have said to-day.

5329. I am asking you what happened. Perhaps we may get more information from somebody else, but the result of it all was that you were fined 20s.?—Yes.

5330. You have never made any complaint about that, have you?—No, I could not. I would not take the case further. I thought I had better lose the 20s. I did not wish to lose my time.

5331. Here is the charge, which was that Theodore Ruppert was behaving in a disorderly manner at Dean Street, and further with resisting and wilfully obstructing McKay in the execution of his duty at the same time and place. I thought it was at Carlisle Street, but I am told that they are the same. You were called before the Magistrate to give evidence for your friend?—Yes.

5332. And then you gave evidence for him?—Yes.

5332*. Did you say this: "When I left, the prisoner then left with other friends. I asked him to wait outside for me." Did you say that?—Yes, quite right.

5333. "When I left I saw the prisoner in the hands of two Inspectors, about twenty yards from the house. The prisoner called out for his wife"?—Quite right.

5334. "There was no crowd, no people about, and no disturbance"?—No.

5335. "The street was very quiet"?—Quite quiet.

5336. Do you want to represent that as being accurate?—It is quite right.

5337. You have said that you saw marks on your friend's collar?—Yes.

5338. Do you mean the collar of his shirt?—Yes.

5339. What sort of marks were they?—Finger marks.

5340. You had seen the Inspector, had you not, with his hand on his neck?—Yes.

5341. You had seen that as they were going along together?—Yes.

5342. That would account for the finger marks on the collar, would it not?—Yes.

5343. Did you see anything else about your friend?—He was pulling him.

5344. Did you see any other marks on your friend, except the marks on his collar?—On his neck.

5345. What sort of marks were those?—His neck was quite red.

5346. Did you see any other marks on him anywhere?—No.

5347. But you looked for them, did you not?—Certainly, because he told me, "I feel very bad in my neck."

Mr. T. Ruppert.

16 Oct. 1906.

5348. Were there any marks on his face that could be seen?—No.

5349. You looked for them and there were none?—Yes.

5350. The only marks you saw were finger marks on his collar, and redness on his neck?—Yes.

5351. (Mr Rufus Isaacs.) How long have you been in this country?—Three years.

5352. Have you been in employment the whole time?—Yes.

5353. In the same employment during those three years—where you are now?—In the same employment.

5354. I mean you are there now?—Yes, at 72, Baker Street.

5355. On the Monday morning when you saw your friend Mr. Altfuldisch, did you know he was going to apply for a remand for the purpose of calling witnesses?—Yes.

5356. So as to set up a defence?—Yes.

5357. Did he know you were going to allow your case to be dealt with on the Monday. Did he know that you were not going to ask for an adjournment?—Yes, he did know it.

5358. That you were not going to call any further witnesses?—Yes.

5359. Did he ask for his case to be put off before yours was heard?—I do not know.

5360. Did he ask that his case should not be taken that day before your case was heard?—No, he did not ask.

5361. When did he ask for his case to be put off from that day to another day?—After I was finished. My case was coming first, and Mr. Altfuldisch's case was coming afterwards.

5362. Then your case was heard first. Is that it?—Quite right.

5363. Do you mean he did not ask for his case to be put off until you had been fined 20s.?—I do not think so. I could not speak to him.

5364. (Mr. Dickinson.) When you came out of the hotel, or wherever you were, what made you stay behind? You came out from the hotel. Your friend came out first, and you came out afterwards?—Yes.

5365. What made you stay behind?—I had to pay the account of the restaurant keeper.

5366. How long were you?—Not quite ten minutes.

5367. When you came out, where was Mr. Altfuldisch?—Opposite the hotel, between two Inspectors.

5368. Just in front of the door?—Yes.

5369. (Earl Russell.) When this happened you had only been two years in this country?—Yes.

5370. Have you improved in your English since then? Are you able to speak English better now than you were?—No.

5371. About the same?—Yes.

5372. Did you see anything on Mr. Altfuldisch's neck when you were looking at the collar of his shirt?—Yes.

5373. What did you see?—Red points, or red marks, on his shirt.

HERMANN REUSCHER, sworn.

Mr. H. Reuscher.

5374. (Earl Russell.) You live at 50, Munster Square, Regent's Park, and you are a hairdresser?—Yes.

5375. You have known Mr. Altfuldisch about two years now, have you?—Yes.

5376. For about 12 months at the time of the charge?—Yes.

5377. You have both been members of the same cycling club?—Yes.

5378. What do you say about his general character?—As far as I know him, he is a very quiet man, and a very peaceful man.

5379. We have all heard that you were one of the last witness's guests at this entertainment. You were a guest of Mr. Ruppert, were you not?—Yes.

5380. And you were there about an hour and a half with Mr. Altfuldisch?—Quite right.

5381. Did you take any notice of what he had to drink?—He had hardly anything to drink. While I was there he had nothing. He had one half glass of beer standing there, and he did not even finish that.

5382. You and Mr. Altfuldisch left the house together?—Yes.

5383. What was Mr. Ruppert doing?—Mr. Ruppert was waiting behind to pay the bill.

5384. You got down to the street. While you were waiting there was there any sort of disturbance in the street?—Some more people came out that were a bit jolly, but we were quite apart from those people, and two Inspectors came and told them to move along, which they did. Then we went along and waited by ourselves.

5385. Did the Inspectors move along with them?—Yes.

5386. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Did I catch your answer just now that people came out who were "a bit jolly"?—Yes.

5387. (Earl Russell.) The Inspector told them to move on, and as far as you saw they went off, and the Inspectors after them?—Yes.

5388. After that what state was the road in. Was it noisy?—No, a little while after that it was quiet, and I went round to a friend's to fetch my bag.

5390. Was anyone else near him—any policeman?—Not near him.

5391. No other member of the public or anybody?—No.

5392. You came back how long after?—It could not have taken me long. I went round to Wardour Street, a couple of hundred yards, and when I came back he had gone.

5393. That is all you know about it?—Yes. I never saw him any more. I went home.

5394. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) When you came out of the restaurant was there a noisy crowd about there?—There was a noise. There were some more people coming out of the restaurant.

5395. Did the noisy people come out of the same restaurant, or out of another one?—There were several people, and some came out that were a bit jolly, I daresay.

5396. Did these jolly ones come out of the same restaurant that you had been in?—Yes, there was one.

5397. Was there any fighting in the street?—There was no fighting whatever—nothing of that sort.

5398. Was there any shouting?—I could not say there was shouting—not near me.

5399. From which direction did you see the Inspectors approaching? As you came out of the restaurant and stood in the street, in which direction were the Inspectors when you first saw them?—We were standing in the road, and the Inspectors came from my left and went down that way.

5400. In the direction of which street?—I do not know in which direction. I only saw them when they were close by.

5401. To your left?—My left.

5402. Were they driving the people in front of them?—They told them to move on, and they walked with them.

5403. People were passing you and going to your right?—Yes.

5404. Did the Inspectors go past you?—Yes.

5405. They passed you before you left your friend to go to Wardour Street?—Yes.

5406. Had they passed right by you before you went to Wardour Street?—Yes, some distance.

5407. Then you went to Wardour Street?—Yes.

5408. What happened afterwards you do not know?—I came back in a few minutes. I do not know what happened.

5409. You had to go 200 yards?—Perhaps more than 200 yards.

5410. Can you give us an idea how long it would take you?—About five minutes.

5411. Five minutes to go and five minutes to come back?—No, altogether, because I was running.

5412. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You have said that some of them who came out were "a bit jolly." How did that show itself?—Speaking and larking together.

5413. Singing?—One of them sung, but he left off when the Inspector told him to leave off.

5414. Were they shouting to one another?—No, no one shouting to one another.

5415. Were they speaking loudly at all?—There was some loud speaking, but I did not take any notice of it, because they were of another party.

5416. (Mr. Dickinson.) Did the Inspectors tell you to move on?—When they came on the Inspectors came along and asked them to move on.

5417. Did they ask you to move along?—No.

5418. He did not speak to you?—No, he did not speak to us.

5419. And you did not speak to him?—No, I was standing speaking to my friend.

5420. Why did you move on?—My friend and I were a little further away.

5421. You did go away?—There did not appear to be anything but a crowd. We went a little further along.

5422. Although the policeman had not spoken to you?—No, not to us; he only spoke to the people near the pavement.

5423. (Chairman.) Did I understand you to say the people who were "jolly" were the people who had been at the society meeting that you had been at?—Some of them came out of the house a bit jolly.

5424. Does this society meet in a public room or in a private room?—In a private room.

5425. About how many had gathered together there that evening?—I dare say about twenty or thirty. By the time we left there were some fifteen to twenty. Some left before that.

5426. Is there not a public room? It has been described as a restaurant?—I do not know. This was the first time I had been in the restaurant.

5427. Would there be a room where people take supper or meals?—I cannot say.

5428. Did the door you came out by open into Greek Street?—Yes.

5429. Is that the only door from the hotel into the street?—I went in at the door, walked up the passage, and up the stairs.

5430. This was an ordinary passage?—A passage on the ground floor, and I went upstairs.

5431. Was the room on the first floor?—The room was on the first floor.

5432. You say about fourteen or fifteen men were left in the room?—Yes.

5433. And all except Ruppert went out of the house about the same time?—Yes.

5434. There would be about fifteen altogether?—About.

5435. And Ruppert remained behind to pay the bill?—Yes.

5436. Were you among the first of these fourteen or fifteen people?—That I could not say. We all walked out. I cleared out of the room as quickly as I could with my friend.

5437. Did the others disperse in different directions?—Yes.

5438. Who is the man you referred to as singing?—I did not know anybody there except Mr. Ruppert and Mr. Altfuldisch.

5439. The man who was singing in the street I was referring to. Had he been a member of your party?—That I could not tell you.

5440. There were fourteen or fifteen of you left at the end of the entertainment, I understand?—Quite right.

5441. Mr. Ruppert remained behind. You all went down about the same time, and on leaving this room you went downstairs along the passage and came to Greek Street?—Yes.

5442. Were you amongst the first of these fourteen men?—I expect we were about the first.

5443. That is you and Mr. Altfuldisch were?—Amongst the first.

5444. When you got to the door what did you and Mr. Altfuldisch do?—Walked out of the door into the road, and waited there for Mr. Ruppert.

5445. Into the middle of the road?—Yes.

5446. Not standing on the pavement?—At first we stood on the pavement, and afterwards we got into the road.

5447. When you got into the road was there a large crowd of people?—Not a large crowd, but people were coming out, and standing there, and one was singing, and the Inspector came and told him to move along.

5448. Then I understand one of the 14 was singing?—Most likely; I did not take particular notice who it was.

5449. Was this knot or group of 14 the only party, so to speak, in the street?—There were 14 or 15 standing at the door when I went out.

5450. You said you were about the first to come out. What did you notice the others do?—Some went in different directions home.

5451. Some went one way and some went another. Did any of them remain near you?—That I do not know. At first they came out, and then we went into the middle of the road.

5452. Were there any other public-houses, or places of public entertainment, disgorging people at that time?—Some public-houses round there people were coming out of; and there were some other people moving about at that time.

5453. Was the street there full whichever way you looked?—You saw people nearly everywhere, but it was quiet; and by the time I left my friend there was nobody near us; we were standing quite alone.

5454. You say you moved on. Did you move back to the pavement further on in the street?—Not on the pavement at all.

5455. Then you left Mr. Altfuldisch standing in the road?—We were standing on the pavement at the time I left him.

5456. You went back to the pavement?—Yes.

5457. How far were you then from the door of the restaurant or hotel that you had left?—I did not judge the distance.

5458. Some ten yards?—We were some yards away from the door when I left him to fetch my bag.

5459. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) How many do you think were "a bit jolly"?—I did not take particular notice of that. There were one or two speaking and larking altogether—what I call "jolly."

5460. When the police came upon the scene were they good tempered when you saw them?—Yes.

5461. Apparently they told the people to move on?—Yes.

5462. (Chairman.) In saying that were they speaking without offence to your party?—No, not to us.

5463. Were they speaking to the gentlemen who had come out of the hotel?—They said "Move along."

5464. It was said to the people in whose company you had been, and who had just come out of the restaurant. The command to move on was given to them, was it not?—I expect so.

5465. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) A number of people were coming out of a number of places?—Yes, and they went along quietly, too.

5466. (Chairman.) They were not addressing themselves particularly to your friends?—No.

5467. Are you certain that your friend Mr. Altfuldisch was perfectly sober?—Quite sober.

5468. And Mr. Ruppert, too?—Yes.

(Earl Russell.) The only other witness I have is Dr. Frye, but I am afraid I cannot get him here until to-morrow morning.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Is he the gentleman whose report you have?

(Earl Russell.) Yes.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I have no objection to your putting in the report.

Mr. H. Reuscher.
16 Oct. 1906.

(Earl Russell.) You have the report of Dr. Groth. If we may put that in that will satisfy me without calling Dr. Groth. I should like to call Dr. Frye to-morrow. I am told that Dr. Frye is ill in bed.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I do not mind this report being read at all. This is, apparently, a certificate by Dr. Groth. It is headed: "22, Panton Street, Haymarket, S.W.," and it is signed by "H. Groth, M.D. Berlin, L.R.C.P."

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Anyhow, we might hear what that says.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes. "On Sunday morning, December 7th, 1905, at 6.45 a.m., I was called up by Mr. Ferdinand Altfuldisch, of 17, Great Marlborough Street, whose regular medical attendant I have been for several years past. He stated that he had been released from custody but a short time previously, and while so in custody he had been assaulted by the police, and he complained of pains in the head and tenderness about the neck, scalp, and shoulders. Upon examination I found a slight superficial scratch upon the right side of the neck about the level of the upper part of the thyroid cartilage, and on the left at about the same situation were three or four livid spots. His left ear was red hot, with marked tenderness behind it. The scalp upon palpation was tender in spots, especially over the occipital region, or posterior part; there was, however, no swellings or visible signs of marked injury. He was in a high state of nervous tension; his pulse was rapid, but the pupils were normal—that is to say, they were equal and reacted to light and accommodation; he was coherent, not thick in his speech, his gait was steady, and in my opinion he showed no signs of either present or recent intoxication. I prescribed an opiate, together with nerve sedatives, and sent him to bed in the evening. I again saw him about 7.30; the head pains still persisted, his temperature had gone up from normal 98.4 deg. Fah. to 99.8 deg. Fah., and his pulse had quickened to 98 per minute. I recommended rest, continuation of the medicine, and a calomel purgative; but in consequence of my own serious indisposition I transferred the case to Dr. Henry Frye, of 23, Hampstead Road, in whose hands Mr. Altfuldisch now is. In my own mind the opinion I formed was that I was dealing with a man who had recently gone through great mental stress, and whose condition was compatible with the statement that he had been buffeted about the head, and the line of treatment I adopted was that usually indicated in cases of injury to the head and scalp."

(Earl Russell.) With the exception of Dr. Frye that concludes the case of Mr. Altfuldisch.

(Chairman.) You have no further evidence with regard to the complaint made by Mr. Altfuldisch?

(Earl Russell.) No. That disposes of everything as regards Mr. Altfuldisch.

(Chairman.) Are you, Mr. Bankes, ready to go on with the police evidence?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Quite.

(Chairman.) Then you might call one of your witnesses.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Certainly.

Inspector FRANCIS MCKAY, sworn.

Inspector F. McKay.

5469. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I think you are Subdivisional Inspector attached to the Marlborough Street Police Station?—Yes.

5470. I believe about 12.30 a.m. on the 17th of December last you were in company with Inspector Manning?—Yes.

5471. In the course of your duty you had to pass through Old Compton Street, Soho, to come to Greek Street?—Yes.

5472. Will you tell the Commissioners what you found when you got into Greek Street?—When we were at the junction of Greek Street and Old Compton Street we saw a crowd in Greek Street; we hurried up there, and on arriving there we found two men rolling on the ground; they were fighting, and they were making use of obscene language to each other. We got them up, and they started to renew the fight. I took one into custody. I then called a constable who was coming down the street, and I handed this man over to him.

5473. That man's name, I think, was Mander, was it not?—Yes, and he took that man away to the station. We remained behind, trying to disperse the crowd, which became very hostile. It appeared to be some squabble between two gangs that had met there. One party had come out of Wedes' Hotel, or Restaurant, and the other out of the Café Turk. Both places are close together. I knew a large number of those who were present, including Mr. Altfuldisch.

5474. Had you known him for some time?—Yes.

5475. Did you know what his occupation was?—I did.

5476. Did you know where he lived?—I did.

5477. He is a tailor he has told us?—Yes. I first came in contact with him whilst attending those meetings at Wedes' Hotel. It was a place that was under my observation for some time, and I visited it for that purpose.

5478. You have told the Commissioners you noticed him there?—Yes.

5479. Would you mind going on from that point, and tell us what took place?—We were trying to get them away. I told them to go away myself several times, and Inspector Manning did likewise. They moved slightly down towards the Café Turk, where the crowd increased. Mr. Altfuldisch turned round and said "No we shall not." That was after we had told him to go away. "Why should we care for the f——— English police. You are not dealing with ponces." Things began to become serious, and I took him into custody. He screamed and shouted to the crowd to assist him. I told Inspector Manning to keep the crowd back and I would manage him. We struggled along till we got to Soho Square, right opposite the Hospital. He was shouting all the time to his friends, and said "I will show you what I will do with your bulldog English policeman," and at that moment he threw his legs around me. We struggled and fell. He seized hold of the railings of Soho Square and had to be forcibly dragged away.

5480. Did you do that yourself, or did Inspector Manning help you?—Inspector Manning assisted me. We then went along to Carlisle Street, when Ruppert came in front. He was shouting and saying, "You shall not take him," and he got in between Altfuldisch and myself. We could not get rid of him. Inspector Manning took him in custody, and we decided to send for more assistance.

5481. Then I think Inspector Manning went on ahead with Ruppert?—Not exactly then. We went on until we came to Portland Street—that is a few yards further, about 20 yards further. Mr. Manning passed me there and went on ahead.

5482. With Ruppert?—Yes. When I got into Poland Street, at the junction of Marlborough Street, Sergeant Crayfourd and Police Constable Miles came running to my assistance. Altfuldisch struggled all the way, and he threw his legs out to one side first and then to the other. He was taken to the police station.

5483. Who was taking him at that time?—I was, with Sergeant Crayfourd.

5484. Was Sergeant Crayfourd helping you?—Yes, he had hold of his right side or his left side, I am not very positive which.

5485. At any rate, he had hold of him?—He had hold of one side.

5486. And so you went to the station?—Yes.

5487. When he got to the station, what was done with him?—He was put in the waiting room by me.

5488. Why was that?—Because the charge room was full of people, and there were charges being taken. I saw it was utterly impossible for the officer to get on with his work with the disturbance Altfuldisch was making.

5489. So you put him in the waiting room?—So I put him in the waiting room.

5490. Did you go in the waiting room with him?—I did.

5491. Did you stay there with him?—For a few minutes. I put him on the seat in the waiting room, and as soon as I turned my back he rushed after me. I pushed him back on the seat again, and he struggled and screamed. He sat down for a few moments, and Sergeant Crayfourd and Constable Miles stood in the doorway. I stood by him till some of the charges were disposed of.

5492. And you say he screamed. What was he screaming out?—About "You b—— policeman," and all sorts of things.

5493. His friend says he heard from the cell that he was shouting for help. Was he shouting for help?—I believe he was.

5494. Had he been shouting in that sort of way the whole way from the point at which you had arrested him?—He had.

5495. Did he make any difference in the kind of shouting or screaming after he got into the waiting room from what he had been doing before. Was it the same kind of shouting?—He became more fierce when he was in the waiting room.

5496. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Will you tell us what he shouted when he was in the street?—About "You b—— English police," and "How dare you talk to me," and some words to that effect.

5497. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Did he call for help when he was in the street?—Yes, he did several times.

5498. Did you remain in the waiting room until he was brought out into the charge room?—Not in the waiting room; close to the door.

5499. Was Sergeant Crayfourd and Police Constable Miles in the waiting room with him?—Yes, they were standing in the doorway.

5500. Were they in a position to see all that happened from the moment you took him into the waiting room?—Oh, yes, they were between him and me.

5501. You were not in the room alone with him, so that nobody could see what was going on?—Never.

5502. Is there any truth in the suggestion that you hit him or ill-treated him in the waiting room?—Not at all—not a particle of truth in it. There certainly was a struggle in the waiting room.

5503. What was the reason of that?—His own conduct. He tried to rush out when I put him on the seat in the first instance.

5504. Then he was taken or went from the waiting room into the charge room, and the charge was taken in the usual way?—He was placed in the dock, and the charge was repeated to him. My evidence was repeated to him in front of the Inspector who took the charge. The charge was taken down in writing, and put on the charge sheet. After it was put on the charge sheet it was read over to him. First of all, he was asked for his name and address in the usual way, and his age. He was then taken out of the dock and asked if he had a knife, and I put my hands in his pockets to see if he had a knife or anything to injure himself with, and he was put back in the cell.

5505. (Chairman.) I thought he had come from the waiting room?—After the charge was taken he was put in the cell.

5506. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Did you remain in the station after that, or did you leave?—I remained for a short time, not long.

5507. You do not know anything that happened after that?—No.

5508. He says now that he rang the bell ever so many times. You do not know anything about that?—No, that was not so. There were several persons who said they had informed his wife of his being in the station.

5509. (Mr Rufus Isaacs.) I did not catch what you said just now in answer to Mr. Bankes about the bell. You said "No," which was an answer to Mr. Bankes's question that you knew nothing about it, but I understand you to go on and say "that was not so"?—About the bell being rung—no, I could not say that.

5510. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) He said at the time you arrested him you called him a ponce. Is there any foundation for that?—No foundation whatever. I knew the man perfectly, and I knew those who were in his company perfectly. There certainly were, if I may be pardoned the expression, ponces there, because I knew them.

5511. But you knew this man?—Yes, I knew him well. I had known him for some time.

5512. (Chairman.) You knew of this meeting on this Saturday night?—Yes.

5513. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Then on the Monday he was brought up before the Magistrate?—Yes.

5514. And was the case of Mander the first case that was dealt with?—Yes.

5515. He was the man you had arrested on the ground fighting?—Yes.

5516. Did he in any way contest the charge before the Magistrate?—No.

5517. Whose was the next case that was dealt with?—Ruppert's.

5518. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) What happened to Mander?—He was fined 10s.

5519. (Mr. Whitmore.) Did Mander come out of the same restaurant?—Yes, Mander was one of the men we found fighting on the ground when we reached there.

5520. (Chairman.) He was one of the Florists' Society?—Yes.

5521. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Coming out of the Wede's Hotel?—Yes.

(Earl Russell.) This was not put to my witness.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) The name was not put, but it was said that somebody was arrested there.

(Earl Russell.) I am told that it is not so.

5522. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) It is said that that statement is going to be challenged. How do you know that Mander had been in these men's company?—Mander told me himself he had been there. Mander is himself a gardener, and that was what they call the gardeners' meeting.

5523. The next case that was dealt with was Ruppert's?—Yes.

5524. Who gave evidence against Ruppert?—Inspector Manning.

5525. Did you give evidence or not?—I corroborated Inspector Manning's statement.

5526. He was the person who gave evidence, and you went into the box to corroborate him?—Yes.

5527. Did Ruppert say anything to the Magistrate?—No.

5528. And he did not contest the case either, did he?—No.

5529. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Did he give evidence?—No.

5530. Did Mander give evidence?—No.

5531. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) He was fined 20s.?—Yes.

5532. Then I think Altfuldisch's case was remanded to the 26th?—Yes.

5533. And then he was defended by counsel?—Yes, he was defended in the first instance by Mr. Wisbey. I gave the whole of my evidence then on the first day, and so did Inspector Manning.

5534. Were you cross-examined by the solicitor?—No.

5535. Were you cross-examined on the further hearing?—I was cross-examined on the further hearing, but Mr. Manning was not.

5536. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) When you gave this evidence in Altfuldisch's case was Ruppert present on the first day?—That I could not say. There was a number of people at the back of the court, and I could not say whether he was there or not.

5537. As I understand, Ruppert's case had been dealt with? There was first of all Mander's case, then Ruppert's, and then Altfuldisch's case, and then on that day you gave your evidence in Altfuldisch's case against him, did you?—Yes.

5538. On the same day?—Yes. The charge against Altfuldisch was some considerable time after Ruppert's. I know Ruppert paid the money and went out shortly afterwards, but whether he stayed behind at the back of the court or not I could not say.

5539. You did not know whether they were taken one after the other?—No.

5540. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) On the second occasion, with reference to the case of Altfuldisch, you were called after Inspector Manning was called?—Yes.

5541. Was the sergeant called?—No.

5542. No question was raised at that time that made it necessary to call him up to that point?—No.

Inspector F. McKay.

16 Oct. 1906.

5543. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Was Sergeant Crayfourd present?—Yes.

5544. And Police Constable Miles?—Yes.

5545. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Then Altfuldisch himself was called?—Yes. After I was cross-examined Altfuldisch was called. Inspector Manning was not cross-examined, so he gave no evidence on the second day.

5546. Then Ruppert was called?—Yes.

5547. And Reutscher was called?—Yes.

5548. And Burton was called?—Yes, and Peckover.

5549. Those two last witnesses were witnesses to character?—Yes.

5550. It was after hearing all that evidence that the Magistrate gave his decision?—Yes.

5551. There were no summonses taken out against the police for assaults upon this man, were there?—No.

5552. Although the case had at the request of the solicitor been remanded till the 26th?—I had no idea why it was remanded in the first instance. There was no suggestion made to us that it was because the man was assaulted.

5553. The remand was granted, so there was an opportunity of taking out a summons if he wanted to?—Distinctly.

5554. But, as a matter of fact, no summonses were ever taken out against the police for assault?—No.

5555. And then when the question came up the Magistrate then said that that question was not material?—No. I think the question was gone into rather fully.

5556. Tell us what your recollection about that is. I do not see any note with reference to that, but we have been told that the Magistrate said that the question of violence was not material.

5557. (Chairman.) Violence in the police station?—This is as near as I can recollect the text of my cross-examination; in fact, I believe these are the notes of my evidence. (Referring to a document.)

5558. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) What were you asked?—These are my answers. "Someone had been previously arrested. There was a crowd when prisoner was arrested and still disorder. Prisoner was in the crowd. I spoke to him there. I arrested him on the pavement near the door of the restaurant." That is near the Café Turk, not Wede's Hotel. "He was not waiting quietly. There were a number, who claimed to be his friends; I knew prisoner; I used no nasty names to him. I did not say: 'We want you, you b—— ponce.' I know him well. I do not think he is a ponce, and I did not then. On the way to the station he struggled and tried to trip me up, and called on the crowd to release him. I do not know that he received injuries. I should not be surprised if he was injured. I used force. It was necessary. I did not ask him what he was doing for a living now. His cap fell off several times. I did not put him into the cell; I brought him into the waiting-room. There were several others there. He lives at 17, Great Marlborough Street. He has not been charged before. I was astonished at his behaviour. I think he is a hard-working man. I was not alone in the room with him. I did not assault him."

5559. Are those your answers to the questions put to you by his counsel?—Yes.

5560. Are you now reading from the Magistrate's clerk's notes or a copy of them?—Yes.

5561. (Earl Russell.) How long have you known Altfuldisch?—Close upon three years.

5562. About two years at the time of this occurrence?—About that.

5563. How well do you know him?—I had seen him daily or nightly—mostly at night I used to see him.

5564. Walking about the street?—No, I have seen him standing at his own door and I have seen him at Wede's Hotel, in Greek Street.

5565. You have seen him at this place before?—Once or twice at meetings.

5566. Did you know his occupation?—I did.

5567. I think I understood from those answers you read that you already agree that he is a respectable man in regular employment?—Yes, he is a working tailor.

5568. Of good character?—I have nothing to say against him.

5569. That is as far as the police ever go, is it not? He did live three doors from the police station, and I suppose most of you knew him. Do you say you knew him well?—Yes.

5570. Did you speak to him often, and that sort of thing?—I might have passed the time of day, and no doubt I have.

5571. You knew him to be a man of quiet disposition and good behaviour as a rule?—Yes, although I certainly did not admire the company he kept on several occasions I had seen him.

5572. What sort of company?—I would call them undesirables.

5573. Undesirable aliens?—Yes.

5574. That is short for it, is it? But you do not apply that to Mr. Altfuldisch himself, do you?—No.

5575. In answer to Mr. Bankes you said: "There were ponces there." What do you mean by "there"?—In the crowd.

5576. In the crowd in the public street?—Yes.

5577. You do not suggest there were ponces among this party at the hotel?—I have no hesitation in saying there were.

5578. Among this party that took place at the hotel?—The ponces came out of the hotel.

5579. The hotel has more than one room in it?—I was not in the hotel. I did not see the party in the hotel that night.

5580. The hotel has more than one room?—Yes.

5581. You told us it was your special duty to watch this hotel for some time, and therefore you knew it?—Yes, it has been.

5582. You knew this party that attended at the Florists' Society took place in a private room?—It is not a private room, it is a public room. There are no private rooms in the hotel with the exception of a few bedrooms.

5583. Do you believe they had the room to themselves for the night?—Anyone can walk in there who likes to.

5584. Are you really prepared to say that?—I am. I have never been challenged, and I have seen other people walking in there without being challenged.

5585. I understood it was your official duty to inspect the place?—That is so, but I have never seen anybody challenged going in.

5586. How do you know they were not invited guests?—They may be so.

5587. In the first place are we agreed when you use the word "ponce" you mean a person who lives on the earnings of immoral characters?—I do.

5588. Do you say amongst this party of the Florists' Society there were ponces?—I say amongst the party who came out of the hotel all standing round there there were ponces, well-known ponces, and ponces who have since been expelled from the country.

5589. You say there were some in the street?—Yes, there were a number.

5590. You do not say there were ponces at this party?—I could not tell you whether there were ponces in the society or not.

5591. Or if they had been at this party?—I know this, the very last man I have dealt with, and who has been recommended for expulsion, had a card belonging to this society found upon him.

5592. That is not what I asked you. What I asked you was whether ponces were present at this party, and whether you can say there were some in the street afterwards?—There were a number.

5593. If a party came out from a private room in the Criterion into Piccadilly Circus I suppose there would be a good many undesirable characters in Piccadilly Circus, would there not?—Yes, there are a number.

5594. What made the conversation between you turn on these curious people at all when you met Altfuldisch. Was there any conversation between you when you met him in the street?—On that night do you mean?

5595. Yes?—No.

5596. He said you started by calling him a ponce?—Nothing of the kind. The word "ponce" was certainly freely used there amongst the crowd.

5597. You did not even call him what you called him just now—an associate of ponces.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) He has not called him that.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) No, I do not think so. He said "I have seen him in company with men who are undesirables." He did not say he was an associate of ponces.

(Earl Russell.) I understood him to begin by saying that among this company there were ponces.

(Chairman.) That is not the same as calling him an associate of ponces.

5598. (Earl Russell.) No, perhaps it is not. You do say he is an associate of undesirable characters?—I say I have seen him in the company of undesirables.

5599. More often than you would like?—It is not a question of my liking. It is his own liking.

5600. Do you include among "undesirables" ponces?—Yes.

5601. You do say now he is an associate of ponces?—I do not.

5602. He associates with them, but he is not an associate of them?—Yes.

5603. I will follow you to the police station without troubling about how you came to take him. You say on the way to the police station he was very violent and very excitable?—Yes.

5604. Screaming?—Yes.

5605. Kicking?—Yes.

5606. Struggling?—Yes.

5607. Holding on to the rails in Soho Square?—On one occasion he did.

5608. When he was in Soho Square?—Yes.

5609. Shouting all the way, every kind of shouting, including the word "help"?—Yes. He was shouting to his comrades to come and help him.

5610. Calling on people to come and rescue him?—Yes.

5611. Do you say he was the worse for drink in any way?—I did not suggest at the time he was. I made no mention of drink. He had had quite sufficient. He was not drunk, but I say he had had quite sufficient.

5612. You have heard the evidence about his only having half a glass of Lager beer?—I have heard of these things before.

5613. You do not accept that?—No, I do not, because I know what goes on there better than you do.

5614. On general principles you think he must have been drunk?—I do not suggest it.

5615. He said quite distinctly that he had only half a glass of Lager beer, and the other witnesses said so also?—It depends on the size of the glass. Inspector F. McKay.

5616. Do you say that is not true. Do you say from your own opinion of his condition you do not believe it?—I say it entirely depends on the size of the glass. When Lager beer is sold, it is sold in various kinds of glasses. 16 Oct. 1906.

5617. Have you ever known of a glass that held more than a quart?—I have known them to hold a quart.

5618. Do you suggest that there are such glasses at that hotel?—Yes.

5619. Then half a glass would be a pint?—Yes. I would call a glass half a pint.

5620. You will not tell me whether you think his condition was consistent with that?—No. It depends on a man's constitution entirely how drink affects him.

5621. Do you accept the evidence of the witnesses as to his being quiet, sober, and well-behaved at this period, or up to the time when he came down into the street?—I cannot say what he had been doing there.

5622. What was he doing when you first set eyes on him?—He appeared to be rather excitable, and I should think he was debating the point with someone over some dispute; he appeared rather excited when I first set eyes on him.

5623. What was he doing when you first set eyes on him?—He was talking to someone in German in rather an excited tone.

5624. How far from the door of the hotel was this?—He was, I should say, about halfway between the "Café Turk" and the timber yard—that is, opposite Bacon Street, or near it.

5625. About how many yards from the hotel?—About ten yards, as near as possible.

5626. Talking to one other person?—There was a crowd there.

5627. Do you know who the other person was?—No, I do not. There was a crowd there. That was immediately I picked up this man who was fighting out of the street.

5628. When you first saw him he was talking rather excitably in German?—Yes.

5629. To one person, or more?—There were several others there.

5630. Were they all excitable?—He was the principal speaker.

5631. Were they fighting?—They were not fighting, but they were certainly on the borders.

5632. Using bad language?—I could not say what they were saying then. They were speaking in German, and I do not understand it thoroughly.

5633. You desired them to move on?—Yes.

5634. What did they say then?—They moved away down towards the "Café Turk."

SEVENTH DAY.

Wednesday, 17th October 1906.

PRESENT:

Sir David Brynmor Jones, K.C., M.P. (Chairman).

Rufus Daniel Isaacs, Esq., K.C., M.P.
Willoughby Hyett Dickinson, Esq., M.P. (Barrister-at-Law).
Charles Algernon Whitmore, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law).
J. W. St. Lawrance Leslie, Esq., (Barrister-at-Law), (Secretary).

(Chairman.) Earl Russell, have you got your two Italian witnesses here?

(Earl Russell.) No, not at present, but I have Dr. Groth here, whose certificate was put in yesterday. Mr. Bankes tells me he has no questions to ask him, so, unless the Commissioners wish to call him, I should not propose to call him.

(Chairman.) Is Dr. Frye here?

(Earl Russell.) Dr. Groth has seen Dr. Frye, and tells me he is not in a condition to attend to-day, and will not be in a condition to attend to-morrow. Dr. Frye has sent a certificate, but Mr. Bankes says he cannot admit that without having him here to cross-examine.

(Chairman.) Have you seen Dr. Frye's statement, Mr. Bankes?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes, I have, sir.

(Chairman.) You do not care to admit that without he submits himself to cross-examination?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) No. It seems to have been written either to-day or yesterday, and it was not written at the time. There is a distinction between that and a certificate.

(Chairman.) We quite understand.

Inspector FRANCIS MCKAY, recalled.

Inspector F. McKay.

17 Oct. 1906.

5635. (Earl Russell.) I do not want to take up the time of the Commission longer than is necessary, and perhaps you will answer one or two questions shortly as to Altfuldisch's character, so that we can finish with that. I understand you stated at the police court he had a good character, and you say so still as far as you know?—Yes.

5636. All you do say is that you think he associated with undesirable people sometimes?—I have seen it.

5637. I would like you to be definite about that. Can you give me the name of any person with whom he associates who lives upon the immoral earnings of women?—I do not use the word "associate." I say I have seen him in the company of those people. I would not call it associating. I would not call it being in close friendship with those people.

5638. Will you tell the Commission exactly what you do mean. In what relation have you seen him with these people?—I have seen them talking—several of them together.

5639. In the street?—Yes, and at Wede's Hotel.

5640. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Several of whom together?—The class of men I referred to yesterday.

5641. Undesirables?—Yes.

5642. (Earl Russell.) You have not seen him in what you call friendly relations with them except by having conversation in the street?—That is so.

5643. Apart from that particular class of undesirables can you give me the name of any person who has been convicted criminally who you say he associates with?—No, I could not.

5644. As to this Wede's Hotel, did I understand you to say yesterday that Mr. Altfuldisch has been there frequently?—I have seen him there.

5645. Inside the hotel, or coming out of the hotel?—Inside the hotel.

5646. About how often?—I should think about seven or eight times, roughly speaking. I could not say exactly.

5647. You heard the evidence given as to what was going on in the hotel, and you told us that you saw him talking excitedly or somewhat excitedly with other people?—Yes.

5648. But not in such a way that you would call that disorder in the street. You would not have arrested him for that, I understand?—No, if he had gone away when I asked him I should certainly not have done so.

5649. Was that all you meant, that he was talking excitedly, when you stated at the police court that he was not waiting quietly?—Yes.

5650. You did not mean that he was fighting?—No, he was not fighting.

5651. You said at the police court also, and it is consistent with what you told us yesterday, that on the way to the station he behaved like a wild beast?—He did.

5652. Can you tell me what, in your opinion, caused him to change suddenly into behaving like a wild beast from the inoffensive behaviour that was described before?—He was not behaving quietly when I saw him, because when I saw him first he was labouring under a very strong excitement over some matter, and that excitement only increased until it became what was nothing more than outrageous.

5653. You cannot give any reason why he changed into a wild beast except that his excitement increased?—That is so.

5654. I suggest to you that it was due to your arresting him and to the way in which you handled him?—No, it was not. There was no roughness used. The roughness was commenced entirely by himself.

5655. Did Inspector Manning have to assist you in actually holding the prisoner on the way to the station?—Yes, he did.

5656. You were not able to control the prisoner yourself?—No, he assisted me once or twice.

5657. I know the occasion you have spoken of with regard to pulling him away from the railings, but apart from that did he have to assist you in holding him while you were on the way to the station?—Yes, between Soho Square and Carlisle Street.

5658. What was the prisoner trying to do at that time?—He was struggling.

5659. Were you afraid he would escape?—No, I was not.

5660. Now, with regard to his cap falling off. You said at the police court that it fell off several times on the way to the station?—I did.

5661. Did it, among other times, fall off in Great Marlborough Street opposite the De Dion Bouton shop?—I do not think it did. I am not positive, but I do not think it did fall off there.

5662. It fell off in several places?—Yes. I had assistance there, so that I do not think it fell off.

5663. Whose assistance had you there?—Sergeant Crayfourd.

5664. Were you in court when Ruppert gave evidence yesterday?—Yes.

5665. You heard Altfuldisch describe how you made him pick up his cap in Great Marlborough Street?—Yes.

5666. Do you say there is no truth in that?—I say it is wrong.

5667. The whole thing is an invention?—It is.

5668. Nothing like it happened?—It did not.

5669. Will you tell me exactly what the change was in the behaviour of Atlfuldisch that caused you to arrest him. The words you used yesterday were that things became serious?—Yes.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I think he said: "Things looked serious."

(Chairman.) I think the word he used was "looked."

5670. (Earl Russell.) Anyhow, you tell us to-day when you first saw Altfuldisch he was doing nothing that made it necessary to arrest him?—If he had gone away.

5671. How had his conduct changed?—I saw he was not taking any notice of what I told him to do, and he was surrounded by a number of persons who were looking to him as their leader. The mob that he was surrounded by, as I have said before, was a very undesirable mob, and with a man like him acting in the way he did I could only see one ending to it. He was defying me to clear these people out of this street, and they were looking to him for their leadership, as it were. They were following his advice.

5672. The actual thing which he did, which you thought made it necessary to take him into custody, was to refuse to go away when you ordered him?—Yes, and making use of the words he did.

5673. So that you agree with him that that was the immediate cause of his arrest, that you ordered him to move on and he did not?—It was not the immediate cause.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) The words were, "Things began to become serious." Those were the actual words used yesterday?—

(The Witness.) I may say this, that Greek Street, Soho, is one of the very worst streets I have to deal with, in fact it is the worst street in the West End of London, without exception. There is a crowd of people that gather there nightly, and they are nothing more nor less than pests, and I go further than that, and I say this, there are some of the vilest reptiles in London living there and frequenting there, and I think for a respectable man to take up the position he did and try to obstruct the police, making out that they had no right to interfere with these people, was serious.

5674. (Earl Russell.) You heard his account of this, that you addressed him with an offensive name, and he said he would not be called such a name?—I did not.

5675. You used no language of that kind, and made no suggestion of that kind?—I used no language of that kind. It was continually referred to, as I said yesterday, and the word was frequently used amongst the crowd. "Why do not you clear away these dirty ponces" some people were shouting from the windows in the street.

5676. You mean other persons were asking you why you did not clear them away?—Yes. They were shouting, "Clear them away."

5677. Persons of a more respectable character than the usual frequenters of the street who you have described?—Yes.

5678. Is it true that the first intimation that Altfuldisch had of your presence was that you pushed him from behind?—No, it is not. I did not speak to him first, according to the evidence.

5679. He spoke to you first?—No, another inspector spoke to him—Inspector Manning—first.

5680. You say you were both there together when he was first spoken to?—We were not exactly together, we were perhaps one or two yards apart. We came out of Old Compton Street together, and we started to deal with this crowd together.

5681. You were near enough to hear what Inspector Manning was saying, and to see what he was doing?—No; the row was too great. I could not hear him distinctly.

5682. There was some conversation between him and Inspector Manning before you came up that you did not hear?—No. I was there; but Inspector Manning was ordering him away.

5683. That is what I asked you just now, whether you were near enough to hear what passed between Altfuldisch and Inspector Manning?—I could not say, I was not paying attention to what Inspector Manning was saying at that particular moment, but I know he was trying to disperse the crowd, the same as I was.

5684. I quite understand that; but there was some conversation between Altfuldisch and Inspector Manning, according to you, which you did not hear?—According to the evidence I am going on that was given in Court.

5685. You also told Altfuldisch to go away after that?—I did.

5686. Is Altfuldisch correct in saying that another inspector who was there did not touch him or speak to him?—He is not.

5687. Did you hear Altfuldisch, when you had arrested him, call out something to Ruppert?—No, not to Ruppert. He was calling on the crowd.

5688. Did you hear him call out something in German?—He was speaking in German sometimes and sometimes in English.

5689. Can you say that he did not call out the name of Ruppert?—I could not. What he said in German I certainly could not say, because I am not conversant with German.

5690. Did you ask him who Ruppert was?—No, I did not.

5691. Did he say anything to you to the effect that he was waiting there for a friend?—He did not.

5692. He did not give that as his reason for not moving on?—He did not.

5693. Now, tell me exactly what Ruppert did on the way to the station that made it necessary to arrest him?—He was aggressive from Soho Square, and when we got into Carlisle Street, near Dean Street, he got right in front of us and got in between us.

5694. Between you and your prisoner?—Yes. He was talking wildly, and sometimes in German and sometimes in broken English.

5695. What sort of thing was he saying?—Something about "You shan't take him" and a lot of things. Really it is so long since that I could not for the moment say.

5696. He stood in front of you, and to what extent did he get in between you and your prisoner?—He came in between us so (describing), and caught hold of the prisoner's arm and my arm, and began to clamber round me and pushing himself in sideways.

5697. He physically threw himself in between you?—Not physically; he more pushed his way, if I can so explain it. I would not say he threw himself right in between us.

5698. Still, he took hold of your arm?—Yes.

5699. Where was Inspector Manning at that time?—He was behind.

5700. Walking close behind?—Not closely, because I did not want the people who were following to come very close.

5701. Five yards?—About that.

5702. Did you ask Ruppert where he was going and what he wanted?—No. I do not think I had any conversation with Ruppert at all.

5703. You did not tell him to go away?—Not that I recollect. I told him to go away certainly when he came too near me. I certainly said that to him; but as regards any other conversation I do not think I had any.

5704. Did Inspector Manning take Ruppert into custody on his own account, or on your instructions?—On his own account.

5705. Did you not turn round to him and say, "You had better take him along too"?—No, I did not.

5706. Then you say Inspector Manning took him into custody because he saw what he was doing?—Yes, I think so.

5707. Did you ask your prisoner Altfuldisch on your way to the station what he was doing for a living now?—I did not, because that question would be ridiculous. I knew perfectly well what the man was doing for a living.

5708. Do you deny altogether any conversation between you, and any irritation on your part on account of his objecting to the names you called him?—That is so.

5709. There is not a word of truth in that?—There is not a word of truth in it.

5710. Now we come to the police station. What is the position of this waiting room that you say you took him into?—It runs direct from the front door parallel with the charge room. When we come in at the front door we go along so that the charge-room is here and the waiting room is here. (Describing.)

5711. It is, as he has described it, at the end of the passage as you come in at the door?—Yes.

5712. How long after Ruppert did you get to the station?—That I could not very well say, because he was some distance in front of me.

5713. You saw him go into the station?—No, I did not.

5714. How far in front of you were they—more than twenty yards?—Oh, yes; they must have been a considerable distance more than twenty yards.

5715. Tell me what happened to cause that delay, because Ruppert at the time he was arrested was actually alongside you and Altfuldisch?—He was arrested close to us.

5716. How came he to get to the station so long before you?—He would not have got to the station before me if my prisoner had walked away quietly and walked along quietly as the other prisoner did, but he did not do so; he was struggling.

5717. How long did it take you from the time that Ruppert was arrested to get your prisoner to the station?—I should think about eight or ten minutes.

5718. And what was the distance?—About 200 or 300 yards, probably.

5719. And you had the assistance of another constable?—No, I did not—not all the way. I did not get the assistance of the other constable until I came to Poland Street at the junction of Great Marlborough Street.

5720. How far did you have to take him to the station?—I had to take him from Carlisle Street or from

Inspector F. McKay

17 Oct. 1906.

Dean Street, to the junction of Great Marlborough Street and Poland Street.

5721. That is about how far—200 yards?—Yes, about 200 yards as near as possible, roughly speaking.

5722. What happened during that time to the crowd which Inspector Manning had been keeping back behind you?—Some of them came along to the station.

5723. Was there any other constable behind you then, keeping the crowd back?—No, there was not.

5724. Was any attempt at rescue made by this crowd?—No.

5725. After that 200 yards you got the assistance of Sergeant Crayfourd?—Yes.

5726. Anyone else?—Police-constable Miles.

5727. Both of them?—Yes.

5728. Did those two accompany you and your prisoner up to the door of the station?—Yes.

5729. You say that distance took you eight or ten minutes?—Oh, no.

5730. The whole distance of 300 yards?—From Dean Street.

5731. From the time that Ruppert was arrested?—No; the distance I was assisted by Sergeant Crayfourd I do not suppose took more than two or three minutes.

5732. The whole time from the time when Ruppert was arrested took you eight or ten minutes?—Yes.

5733. A distance of 300 yards, about?—About that. It may be a little more or less.

5734. According to you, how long before you had Ruppert got into the station? You did not see him in Great Marlborough Street at all?—No, I did not.

5735. It is not true that you and Altfuldisch were passed by Ruppert in custody when Altfuldisch was in front of the De Dion Bouton shop?—No.

5736. You are sure of that?—I am positive.

5737. When you got to the station you took your prisoner to the waiting-room, you say?—Yes.

5738. Why?—Because he was so disorderly and making such a tremendous row that it would be impossible for the Inspector who was taking the charges to get on with his work, and there were several other charges there waiting.

5739. Were you able to see that as you came into the station?—Yes.

5740. You were able to see it for yourself?—Yes.

5741. Has the waiting-room a door?—Yes.

5742. Did you shut it?—No, I did not shut it.

5743. Did you close it?—No.

5744. You did not push it to at all?—No.

5745. That statement is false?—Yes.

5746. Were you alone with him in the waiting-room?—No.

5747. Who was there?—Sergeant Crayfourd and Police-constable Miles.

5748. Where were they standing?—In the door some part of the time.

5749. In the open doorway?—Yes.

5750. Where were you standing?—I was holding the prisoner when I went inside first.

5751. Inside the room with the prisoner?—Yes.

5752. Is it true that you assaulted him there in any way?—It is not true.

5753. You did not force him down on the bench?—I did force him down on the bench.

5754. But you did not strike him any blows with your fist?—I did not.

5755. Did you let go at all while you were in the room?—Oh, yes.

5756. After you forced him down on the bench?—Yes. In fact, we both almost fell down on the bench.

5757. And after that you took your hands off him?—Yes, he sat quieter then.

5758. Where did you stand then?—I went out in the passage leading to the waiting-room.

5759. Why?—Waiting till the Inspector got rid of the charges to take mine.

5760. Have you any instructions in your instruction book as to where you should take a prisoner when you take him into the station?—Oh, yes; we are to take him into the charge-room if there is room, but we cannot take more people there than they can deal with. It is important that the charge-room should be kept as orderly as possible, so that everyone can hear and carry on their business properly, and to bring a man in there who was screaming and shouting and behaving disorderly, and could not do it.

5761. And if you cannot take him to the charge-room where are you to take him to?—To the waiting-room.

5762. Were there any men there in plain clothes?—Yes.

5763. Who were they?—Sergeant Crayfourd and Police-constable Miles.

5764. They were both in plain clothes?—Yes.

5765. (Chairman.) In the waiting-room?—No; they came to my assistance. They were the two officers who came to my assistance.

5766. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Were they in plain clothes when they assisted you at the junction of Great Marlborough Street and Poland Street?—Yes.

5767. (Earl Russell.) Do you agree with Altfuldisch to this extent, that you did take him into this room?—Yes.

5768. You agree with him that after you had taken him into this room you went out?—Yes. I did not go out of the room because I was standing close to the room—as close as I am to this bench here.

5769. I thought you said you went out in the passage leading to the waiting-room?—Yes.

5770. Then you did not go out of the waiting-room?—Not in the sense of going right away.

5771. (Chairman.) You did not shut the door?—These two officers stood in the doorway and stood between me and the prisoner.

(Earl Russell.) What I meant by going out of the room was that you passed through the door which led out of the room.

5772. (Chairman.) You went into the passage but you did not go far off?—No; I stood immediately outside the door in the passage.

5773. (Earl Russell.) You agree with Altfuldisch to this extent, that there was a man in plain clothes there?—There were two.

5774. (Chairman.) Where do you say there were two plain clothes men? Were they in the waiting-room or in the passage then?—They assisted me in with the prisoner, and they remained in the doorway while I was struggling with the prisoner in the first instance.

5775. (Earl Russell.) Do you agree with him that it was after he had been in the waiting-room that he was taken to the charge-room and then charged?—Yes.

5776. But you say that while he was in the waiting-room the door was not shut, and no assault of any kind took place?—I do.

5777. How soon after he was charged did you go out of the station?—It might be, I should think, from twenty minutes to half an hour. I could not be positive now. It is rather a long while since. I know I came back to the station again about two o'clock.

5778. Did you take him down and put him in a cell yourself?—No.

5779. Who was the gaoler?—The officer on duty.

5780. You had nothing more to do with him after he was charged?—No, nothing.

5781. You can tell us nothing about what happened to him after he was charged?—No.

(Chairman.) Have you any question to ask, Mr. Bankes?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) No, sir; I have no question.

5782. (Chairman.) At what time did you go into Greek Street on Saturday evening?—It would be very shortly after twelve o'clock, as near as I can remember now. I know the houses had closed, and they close at twelve o'clock on Saturday nights.

5783. You were, of course, not on the beat on that night, as I understand?—No, I was patrolling my sub-division.

5784. Was Inspector Manning also with you out patrolling that evening?—Yes, I saw Inspector Manning in Compton Street.

5785. Then you and Inspector Manning were in and about Greek Street in addition to the constables who were on the beat?—Yes.

5786. Something, I think, was said by you in your examination in chief, as to meetings being held in various houses in that street?—Yes, that is so.

5787. And then these houses would empty, I suppose, at midnight?—Yes, they are licensed houses. Some are licensed by the Inland Revenue, and some by the Justices, so that all houses that are licensed have to close at the hour of 12 on Saturday nights, and 12.30 on other nights.

5788. Under which category does the Wedes Hotel fall?—It is a Justices licence, it is a wine licence for the sale of wine on the premises.

5789. Is there often considerable disorder when these houses shut and people come out of them?—It depends upon the locality. In some parts we have no disorder at all and no trouble. My subdivision I take from High Street, Bloomsbury, to Park Lane, along Park Lane to Mount Street, and then I come along through Regent Street, Compton Street, taking the Seven Dials to High Street, Bloomsbury, again. That is the circumference. The western portion of my ground, that is west of Regent Street, I have no trouble with at all, but the eastern portion is where we have all the trouble, because, I suppose, about 95 per cent. of the population are foreigners.

5790. The thing, if I recollect rightly, that first attracted your attention on this evening, was a fight going on between a man who was arrested, named Mander, and somebody else?—Yes.

5791. Did you see the fight commence?—No, I did not see it commence. I saw them on the ground. They got up, and we tried to get them away, but they would not go, and they started again, so I took Mander into custody.

5792. Did anything suggest to you that they belonged to different clubs or gangs, or parties of men?—There are two different gangs, undoubtedly, that meet at this very spot, because one gang that goes there frequents a place called the Café Turk, which is a very low class place, and the second gang frequents the Wedes Hotel.

5793. Is the Café Turk a licensed house?—It is licensed by the Inland Revenue as a refreshment house.

5794. (Chairman.) Both houses then are in the same category?—Yes; Italians and Frenchmen frequent one place, and Germans the other.

5795. You do not know what was the cause of the quarrel, if quarrel it was, that led these men to fight?—No, I could not say.

5796. Was there considerable excitement on the part of the men who were round about the people fighting?—Yes, there was. They conversed in foreign languages, and, as they always do, they were throwing their arms about and shouting wildly.

5797. It is not very important, and you need not, so far as I am concerned, answer the question unless you like, but you had no special information about this so-called Florists' Society, had you?—No.

5798. It is a bonâ fide society?—Oh yes, distinctly so. I had this information, if I may say so, that there were a number of people going there mixing amongst these working men. Some of them are respectable men, undoubtedly, but a number of people were going there mixing with them, whom I call undesirables.

5799. Undesirables for different reasons, I suppose?—Yes, that is so. These men try to make themselves respectable by mixing with respectable men. That is one of the greatest difficulties we have to contend with.

5800. Some of the men were undoubtedly of the character that you have referred to as "ponces"?—That is so. I know them very well, because I have found these cards of respectable societies on these men when I have searched them, and they do that to give them an air of respectability.

5801. But, apart from that class of undesirables, there are also men, I suppose, who are associated with political societies?—Yes, there are.

5802. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Did you anticipate any trouble at all in Greek Street that night?—I do every night; every Saturday night especially.

5803. Saturday night is worse than any other night?—Yes, it is, and we have a difficulty in this way, that constables are called away to take charges to the station, and for the time being their beats are left alone.

Inspector F. McKay.

17 Oct. 1906.

5804. How many constables were there in Greek Street that night when you were there? Were there any that you saw?—Yes, there was a constable that I handed the prisoner over to.

5805. (Chairman.) You mean you handed Mander over to the constable on the beat?—Yes.

5806. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Were there any other constables on the beat who would have been there, if they had not been taking prisoners to the station?—Yes, there are three or four beats that pass through that street. We always keep as many men round there as we possibly can, but when these charges arise, the men are taken away, and they are frequently called away for some reason or another, and they are absent. It is a matter that cannot be very well met.

5807. Was it for this reason that you were patrolling Greek Street at this time?—It was. On each Saturday night, I make it a standing rule to patrol that part of my district.

5808. Because of the difficulties that you know arise?—Yes, that is so.

5809. You told us you were keeping watch—I do not know if I am using the correct expression—on this particular hotel?—No, I was not keeping special watch myself, but I will use this term, the place has been under my notice for some considerable time, and I have directed special attention to be paid to it.

5810. I do not want details at all, but is that because it was frequented by undesirable persons. Is that the reason?—That is so.

5811. It was not because there was any question of infringing the Licensing Act?—No.

5812. But because of the persons who frequented the place, or some of them?—Yes. There is a number of those undesirable men, Germans, who make that their headquarters, and they gather there. I can generally find one when I want him there.

5813. When you want a particular man?—I can find him there.

5814. Was there any reason if Alfuldisch was standing alone without anybody near him, for some ten or fifteen yards, why you should have arrested him?—I certainly would not have arrested him. I should be the very last man in the world to interfere with him if he was standing alone.

5815. As far as I understand, you knew him as a respectable man?—Yes, a man I had seen, I suppose, almost daily.

5816. Sergeant Crayfourd and Police Constable Miles were not called at the police court, were they?—No.

5817. I do not think we have heard who were called. Did you conduct the case?—I simply gave my evidence. I have a note of my evidence here that I gave in the first instance that I can read.

5818-9. We have got it before us?—I simply gave my evidence on the first day, and Inspector Manning gave his, and on the second occasion I was called back into the box and cross-examined, as I said yesterday, and Inspector Manning was not, so there was no further evidence called for the police.

5820. Who would have to decide whether further evidence should be called for the police?—The Magistrate.

5821. Would he call the police?—Yes, he would if he thought it necessary.

5822. You say Sergeant Crayfourd and Police-constable Miles both assisted you at the junction of Great Marlborough Street and Poland Street to take charge of the prisoner?—That is so.

5823. That, according to his story, is quite incorrect?—That is so.

5824. It was of some value, was it not, to have the corroboration of these two constables as to what you had stated as having taken place at the junction of Great Marlborough Street?—Yes. Of course, when our case was closed, I had no idea what they were going to say.

5825. Crayfourd and Miles had not seen what had taken place when you arrested the prisoner?—No. Of course, if I had known the attitude the defence were going to take up, I should have adopted a different policy.

Inspector F. McKay. 17 Oct. 1906.

5826. You would have called the sergeant and the police-constable to state what happened?—Yes, and we should have been represented, so that these witnesses could be cross-examined.

5827. (Chairman.) According to the depositions, the case for the prosecution closed with the end of the evidence of Inspector McKay on the second day, and the defendant himself was called, and witnesses as to character, and then the Magistrate convicted?—Yes.

5828. But the Magistrate had declined, as we have heard from another source, to receive evidence as to ill-treatment?—I do not agree with that.

5829. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Nor did I understand that that was so stated. What the Magistrate declined to do was to receive evidence of what had taken place in the police-station?—Yes.

(Chairman.) That is what I mean.

5830. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) The question I was putting was as to what took place when the prisoner was taken in charge before he was brought to the police-station?—If I may say so, I do not agree with that, because Mr. Denman heard the case at very great length. He occupied the greater part of the morning and the greater part of the afternoon in hearing the case, so the case was gone very fully into.

5831. You say the case was gone very fully into. Do you mean both as regards this incident of which we have heard, and the incident to which the Chairman referred just now, that is the alleged violence and ill-treatment at the station?—Yes, Altfuldisch certainly made reference to it in the witness-box, and that was brought out on every possible occasion it was possible to bring it out.

5832. I understand these witnesses were not called because they did not relate to the main incident, which was the arrest, and it was not thought necessary?—No, I certainly did not think it necessary.

5833. They were in Court ready to be called if the Magistrate wanted further evidence?—Yes. I had no idea, as I have said before, that the defence were adopting the course they were adopting.

5834. (Chairman.) The Inspector is right in saying that the Magistrate did receive some evidence of what took place in the station, because I find that Altfuldisch himself said, "There was a pair of steps there, the door was shut by Inspector McKay, and he then assaulted me." That is in the waiting-room in the police-station?—That is so, sir.

5835. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I think I understand now what you mean about it, but there was your evidence and Inspector Manning's, and you also had there Sergeant Crayfourd and Police-constable Miles, they being all the police who had taken any part in the arrest and conducting Altfuldisch and Ruppert to the station?—Yes.

5836. But that was the only reason according to you why they were there?—That is so.

5837. It was unnecessary to call them owing to the course the case took?—That is so. Certainly, if I had known what I know now, I should have taken a different line altogether, as I said to the solicitor for the defence at the time. I said, although I was a police officer I was entitled to a little fair play, and I could not see why he should adopt the back door policy he did. If he wanted to make out that these outrageous things did occur, why not apply for a summons against me?

5838. There was no summons for assault against you applied for?—None whatever.

5839. With regard to Greek Street and these other streets I understand you that language is very often used there of a character that you do not understand, that is, some foreign language which presumably you cannot always understand?—Yes, frequently.

5840. That adds to your difficulties?—It does.

5841. You get a crowd of these men talking to one another in a foreign language which you do not understand, and I suppose that makes it more necessary that you should act swiftly?—It does, because they are so impetuous; they stab each other or shoot each other. We have had several cases of that kind occur. It is certainly, as I have said before, one of the worst streets we have to deal with.

5842. And I suppose that also involves the greatest danger to the police, who have to patrol the streets?—Yes, there is no question about that. Those persons are very dangerous, especially when a prisoner is being taken to the station; there is a danger of them coming behind and stabbing constables, or something of that sort.

5843. There is the danger of one of the prisoner's friends doing it?—Yes, it is a very great danger, and it is so difficult to recognise them afterwards.

5844. Have you known cases yourself in which policemen have been stabbed in the street?—Yes, it has occurred. We have had several cases of shooting and stabbing.

5845. Why was it that two Inspectors were there that night patrolling?—I met Inspector Manning more by accident, I think, in Compton Street. He is round that part at this particular time as well.

5846. Is that also a dangerous part?—Yes; that leads into Greek Street. That is a street which crosses several streets that run direct into the heart of Soho. Take Greek Street, Dean Street, Frith Street, Wardour Street—they all run into the middle of Soho, and Compton Street is the main artery.

5847. (Mr. Dickinson.) Is Inspector Manning one of your subordinates?—Yes.

5848. How many Inspectors have you got there?—Five.

5849. Does each have a particular district?—No; they take their turn of duty. They have to perform eight hours of duty during the day, and they have to take their tour of duty at intervals.

5850. Over the whole district?—Yes.

5851. You did not know Ruppert?—No, I did not.

Inspector William Manning, sworn.

Inspector W. Manning.

5852. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Are you an Inspector of the C Division, stationed at Great Marlborough Street?—That is so.

5853. Were you patrolling in Old Compton Street on the early morning of the 17th December, about half-past twelve?—I was.

5854. And did you meet Sub-Divisional Inspector McKay there?—Yes.

5855. By accident?—Yes.

5856. Not by appointment, but quite casually?—Casually.

5857. Did you see anything when you were at the junction of Old Compton Street and Greek Street?—Yes.

5858. What was it you saw?—I saw a crowd some 100 yards up the street in the centre of the road.

5859. Was there any house or café opposite them where the crowd were?—Yes, the Café Turk, a little further up on the right by the Wede's Hotel.

5860. What did you do?—I went with the Inspector up the street. We hurried up the centre of the roadway into this cowd. I saw two men on the ground, and I saw the Inspector go to them. They got up. I was in the crowd trying to disperse it, and saying "Pass along." I saw Altfuldisch there. He was not on the pavement then; he was in the crowd. He was excited. I spoke to him, and said, "Pass along," in the ordinary course of business. He did move, because I passed him. I should think he stepped back two or three yards. I went round and saw Inspector McKay afterwards with this man in custody.

5861. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Which man?—Mander. I followed him some six or eight yards, and I saw a constable come from the top of Greek Street from Soho Square down into Green Street, hurrying towards us. I let Inspector McKay go on then, and went back and helped to keep this crowd from pressing forward. Inspector McKay came back, and I suppose he had handed the prisoner over to the constable who came up, and he and I afterwards passed one another in this crowd, and I was calling out "Pass along" until I saw him arrest Altfuldisch.

5862. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Did you see the actual arrest?—Yes; I heard him make use of the expression "f——g police."

5863. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You heard whom?—Altfuldisch, and "ponce." I heard that word repeated in the crowd. They were very excited, all of them—foreigners.

5864. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) How near were any other persons to Altfuldisch at the time that he was arrested by Inspector McKay?—They were all round us.

5865. Would it be true to say that he was standing alone?—No, not at all.

5866. They were close to Altfuldisch?—He would be there in the crowd exciting them. I heard him say, "Do not go away," and I recognised him as the man I had spoken to before.

5867. What was being said by you Inspectors at the time Altfuldisch was saying "Do not go away?"—"Pass along" and "Get away out of it," in the usual way with an excited crowd.

5868. And Altfuldisch was saying "Do not go away?"—Yes.

5869. To whom was that addressed?—To his particular friends in the crowd, I expect.

5870. When Altfuldisch was arrested what happened then?—The crowd surged behind, and I followed behind. I caught hold of him one side, on the right side, and we went into the square and I let go again.

5871. How did Altfuldisch behave after he was arrested?—He was very violent. We crossed the square to the enclosure side, and he caught hold of the railings there. I myself released his hands from the railings.

5872. At Soho Square?—Yes; he was still excited and violent there. We passed through into Carlisle Street. Where Carlisle Street crosses over Dean Street there was a temporary halt. I was keeping the crowd back, and I saw a man was in front of McKay and the prisoner, almost between them, and I got six or eight yards up to them again, and he got behind them, and he caught hold of Inspector McKay's arm, pulling it, I immediately arrested him.

5873. Who was that man?—He gave the name of Ruppert. I then followed Inspector McKay with his prisoner through the posts into Chapel Street, and crossed Wardour Street into Portland Street. There I passed him.

5874. You went on ahead?—Yes. Ruppert treated the matter with great levity. He hurried along. I had a job to keep up with him. We turned into Great Marlborough Street and into the station. When I got to the door I saw two plain clothes officers, and I told them to hurry down the street to Inspector McKay's assistance.

5875. Who were they?—Sergeant Crayfourd and Police-constable Miles. I took my prisoner into the waiting-room. There were, I think, two charges waiting then to be taken, and I saw Inspector McKay and these other two officers enter the station afterwards with Altfuldisch.

5876. How was Altfuldisch behaving then?—He was then very violent, struggling and shouting.

5877. Saying anything or making any noise?—I cannot exactly say the exact words he was using, but he seemed to make trouble of his arrest. He did not like being arrested, I should think.

5878. What tone of voice was he using?—"Why am I here for?" He was very excited.

5879. What was done with him?—I saw Inspector McKay stop and halt at the charge-room door and take him through the passage into the waiting-room. He was then brought out in his turn and charged.

5880. Did you hear him charged?—Oh, yes.

5881. Did he make any complaint at all of his treatment?—None whatever. He quieted down while he was in the dock. I do not think he spoke except to give his name, address ,and occupation to the Inspector.

5882. After he had been charged was Altfuldisch taken to the cells?—Yes.

5883. In the ordinary course?—Yes.

5884. Did you stay in the station?—No; I left the station to continue my patrol.

5885. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Sometimes we have been speaking of Poland Street and sometimes Portland Street. Are they two different streets?—Yes; Portland Street runs into Poland Street opposite the infirmary. (The witness explained the locality on the map to the Commissioners.)

5886. (Earl Russell.) I do not understand, Inspector Manning, that you heard the conversation between Inspector McKay and Altfuldisch?—Some of it.

5887. The beginning of the conversation just before he arrested him?—I heard him tell him to pass along.

5888. He was saying that to the crowd in general or to Altfuldisch in particular?—Yes, and I saw him address Altfuldisch too.

5889. Did you hear Altfuldisch say that he would not go away?—Yes.

5890. You said you heard him say: "Do not go away," to his particular friends who were with him?—That is so.

5891. What language did he say that in?—In English.

5892. About how many of these friends were there round there at the time?—I should think at least forty to fifty people in the crowd.

5893. Among those round Altfuldisch who you refer to as his particular friends?—I could not say whether they were his friends or not. They were very antagonistic, some against the others.

5894. After he was arrested, the first time you handled him yourself was when you took him away from the railings in Soho Square?—No, I think I took hold of his arm in Greek Street into the square, and I let him go again to keep the crowd back.

5895. Did he become violent the moment Inspector McKay laid hands on him?—I should say yes, a certain degree of violence.

5896. How did he show it. Did he attempt to strike Inspector McKay?—He resisted his apprehension, trying to release himself, and pulling himself away.

5897. As a man might do, saying "What have you arrested me for; why am I in custody?"—That is so.

5898. You did, in fact, hear him asking even afterwards in the police station why he was in custody?—Yes, he asked me after he had been charged and the charge read over.

5899. He said: "What am I here for?"—Yes, he did.

5900. But you did not see him attempt to strike Inspector McKay in any way?—No.

5901. Did you hear him call on any persons in the crowd to rescue him?—I heard him say "Come along—come on," and that kind of thing to bring the crowd on.

5902. That is what you took it for?—Yes.

5903. Did you hear him speak to Ruppert or cry out to Ruppert?—No, I cannot say that I did. Ruppert is the man I saw in front of Inspector McKay in Dean Street and behind him on his arm, but before that I had not seen Ruppert—at least, not to recognise him.

5904. You cannot say it is not true that he called out in German to Ruppert to go and tell his wife that he was arrested?—No, I cannot say.

5905. The first time you took particular notice of Ruppert you say you saw him throwing himself between the Inspector and his prisoner?—That is so.

5906. What did you understand Ruppert to be doing?—Endeavouring to pull them apart to get Altfuldisch away.

5907. To effect a rescue?—Yes.

5908. Did Inspector McKay say anything to you when Ruppert interfered with him?—No, I cannot remember that he did. I do not believe that he did.

5909. Did you hear Ruppert say that he was going to Altfuldisch's wife to tell her that he was arrested?—No.

5910. If he had been going there he would have been going the same way as you, would he not?—Yes.

5911. She lives three doors from the police station?—Yes.

Inspector W. Manning. 17 Oct. 1906.

5912. You would both have been aiming at the same place?—Yes, that is so. After I saw Ruppert in front he got behind, and that caused me to come up again and arrest him.

5913. Was there much of a crowd following you at the time you arrested Ruppert?—Yes, some twenty or thirty people, or there might be more.

5914. They were only following you?—They were rather angry.

5915. Were they trying to pass you?—No, I was trying to keep them back, and some would be getting on in front on the pavement while I was in the road, and I would drive them back.

5916. Still, it was such a crowd that, although there were twenty or thirty of them, they did keep behind you when you made them?—That is so.

5917. Not a very dangerous crowd?—I should not like to say that.

5918. How long before Inspector McKay did you get to the police station?—I should think some five or eight minutes.

5919. You got there some five or eight minutes before him?—Yes. It is some time to throw one's memory back, but I should say it was between five and eight minutes.

5920. When you saw Inspector McKay come into the station with his prisoner had your prisoner been charged?—No.

5921. How many were there in front of you to be charged when you came in?—Two, I think.

5922. You brought your prisoner straight into the charge room, and found two prisoners in front of you?—Yes, one was the man previously arrested, Mander, and another was a woman, I think.

5923. Then those two had to be charged first, and your man was the third, you think?—Yes, and I believe Altfuldisch was the last.

5924. Before your man was charged you saw Inspector McKay come into the station?—Yes.

5925. You think that was as much as five or eight minutes after you got there?—I should say it was, to the best of my recollection.

5926. Where did you find Crayfourd and Miles?—They were standing at the station door.

5927. In plain clothes?—Yes.

5928. Were they on duty or off duty?—I think they were going off duty. I do not know whether they had reported off-duty or not. I think so.

5929. What were your instructions to them?—"Hurry up the road," I said, "Inspector McKay has got a violent prisoner." He was not then in sight. I looked round the corner.

5930. There was, I suppose, plenty of opportunity while you had Ruppert in custody and Inspector McKay had Altfuldisch in custody for the two men to shout to each other. They were near for a good part of the time?—I think I passed Inspector McKay in Portland Street, so we would be behind him some 150 to 200 yards. He was still then violent, as I say.

5931. Did you see Altfuldisch when he was charged?—Yes.

5932. Was there any mark upon his face then?—I never saw one—none whatever.

5933. By the time that Altfuldisch was brought into the station how many of the two prisoners waiting in front of you had been disposed of?—I think all had been charged when Altfuldisch was brought into the room.

5934. Not when he was brought into the charge room, but when you saw him brought into the station?—None of them.

5935. You mean, although you had been there five or eight minutes, none of the three had been disposed of?—No, I think the Inspector was taking a charge when I entered; in fact, there was a prisoner in the dock.

5936. Making a fourth?—Yes.

5937. About how many minutes does it take to take a charge?—That all depends on the investigation.

5938. You said that Ruppert almost ran to the station?—Yes, he did. He hurried on. I had a job to keep up with him.

5939. Wat did you say to him when you laid your hands upon him?—I said, "I shall take you to the station." He said, "What for?" I said, "You have obstructed that officer, and I shall arrest you."

5940. He came across quite quietly, and quite easily and willingly?—Yes.

5941. So far, that would be consistent with his story that he thought he was going there to give evidence on behalf of Altfuldisch?—It would be consistent in one respect. He said he did not know what he was arrested for, but I told him.

5942. Supposing he had not understood you, the way he came with you would be quite consistent with his wishing to come, in order to help the other prisoner?—Yes.

5943. What had happened to Altfuldisch to turn him from this raging wild beast into the quiet man that he was when he was put in the dock?—I cannot say.

5944. How had he been quieted down in those few minutes?—I suppose he had had time to sit down and calm himself in this room.

5945. What went on in the room, you, yourself, know nothing about?—No, there was nothing, only this shouting. If he had been assaulted, I should have heard that.

5946. You heard shouting?—Somebody said they heard cries of "Help."

5947. I ask you what you heard?—I never heard that. If it had taken place, I should have done.

5948. If there had been any cries of "Help" from this waiting-room you would be bound to hear it?—Yes, decidedly.

5949. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) With regard to the state of the light in this waiting-room, there was a point I omitted. I think Altfuldisch said he was taken into a dark room and assaulted?—I can hardly think that. There is a light there that has a by-pass to it, but at night time, when it is being used, this light would be always on. But if the by-pass was down it would not be dark.

5950. On the night in question, are you able to say, from looking into the room, whether the room was light or dark?—I cannot say. I do not remember.

5951. You did not happen to notice?—No.

5952. You have been asked as to whether Ruppert knew what he was charged with. Did you tell him?—Yes. I told the Inspector the circumstances of his arrest.

5953. But when you arrested him, did you tell him what you were arresting him for?—Yes. I said, "You have obstructed that officer."

5954. And when the charge was made against him, was it read over to him?—Yes.

5955. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Did he answer anything to that when you said, "You have obstructed that officer"?—No, he did not answer.

5956. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) But he came with you?—Yes, he treated the whole matter as a joke, I thought.

5957. Then the charge was read over to him, and did he say anything then?—Nothing at all.

5958. Then when the evidence was given by you before the Magistrate about what had happened, did he say anything to the Magistrate then?—I do not think he did. I believe he pleaded guilty. I am not sure. He never contested the case.

5959. (Mr. Dickinson.) How long does it take you to get from Greek Street to the police station?—Six or seven minutes.

5960. Can you fix at all the time you were in Greek Street?—It was after 12 o'clock I know, because when I met Inspector McKay it had gone 12, and I had been keeping observation on a licensed house that was rather late in closing.

5961. When does it close?—12 o'clock.

5962. You did not see anybody coming out of this hotel?—No, it was already closed.

5963. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Did you know Altfuldisch before?—No, I did not. I cannot say I had seen the man before, although I have seen him several times since.

(Earl Russell.) I am very sorry to interpose, but the Chairman was good enough to say that when these two Italians arrived, I could call them. I am told they are here, and we cannot guarantee them being here after this morning.

(Chairman.) It will not discompose you, Mr. Bankes, I suppose, if we interpose them now?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Not at all.

(Chairman.) Their evidence relates to Clinch's case.

(Earl Russell.) Yes, sir.

Inspector Manning.
17 Oct. 1906.

FRANCESCO D'ANGELIS, Sworn.

(Earl Russell.) I am told the witness does not understand English.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I am quite willing that the statement that this man made at the police station and the evidence that was given at the police court should be used if it is of any assistance to my learned friend.

(Earl Russell.) I am told the other Italian witness can speak English, and can interpret this witness's evidence.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) What do you say to Mr. Bankes's suggestion?

(Earl Russell.) I cannot accept it.

(Chairman.) Then the other Italian gentleman will kindly act as interpreter, and the oath had better be administered to the witness through the interpreter.

Francesco d'Angelis.

ANGELO DELICATES was sworn as Interpreter.

FRANCESCO D'ANGELIS sworn, the oath being administered through the Interpreter.

5964. (Earl Russell.) Do you live near John's Mews, at 77, Rosebery Avenue?—I do not live there.

5965. Where do you live?—31, Warner Street.

5966. Do you remember a night in October, 1905?—I say what I said before.

5967. Did you see Mr. Clinch on a night in October, 1905?—Yes, I did see him.

5968. Did you see anyone else on that night with Mr. Clinch when you first saw him?—I only saw Mr. Clinch.

5969. Did you see Mr. Clinch going into or coming out of John's Mews?—I saw him when he went in.

5970. When did you next see Clinch?—I saw him about a minute or two afterwards.

5971. What was happening then?—I saw a constable come out, and saw him pushing Mr. Clinch—pushing a gentleman out of the mews.

5972. What was Clinch doing?—He started shouting out.

5973. Where did Clinch go to then?—He came forward twice.

5974. What did Clinch do or say?—He asked me to be a witness that I saw the policeman strike him.

5975. Was any other policeman seen?—The sergeant came afterwards.

5976. Where did he come from?—He came out of another street.

5977. What happened then?—After this the sergeant came across and asked Mr. Clinch what was the matter.

5978. What happened then?—Then the sergeant ordered the policeman to follow to the station with him.

5979. Did you see anyone else beside the sergeant and the policeman?—I saw a young lady.

5980. What was she doing, and where did she come from?—She came out from the same mews.

5981. What did she do when she came out?—As soon as this young lady came out she started running on the footpath, and the sergeant called upon her to stop, but she would not stop.

5982. Will the young woman stand up? Do you recognise her? Is that the woman?—Yes.

5983. What happened then? What did the sergeant do when the woman ran away?—He ordered her to stop, and then the sergeant ordered her and the constable to go to the station with him.

5984. What did you do when the other people went to the station?—I went to give my evidence.

5985. Where to?—To the police station.

5986. At once?—At once.

5987. Did you make a statement at the station?—Yes, I gave my evidence to the inspector.

5988. Did you make it yourself, or was there an interpreter?—There was an interpreter.

5989. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) How long had you been standing outside the mews before you saw Mr. Clinch go into them?—About ten minutes. My friend was speaking with me.

5990. Did you see the woman go into the mews?—Yes.

5991. How long did she go into the mews before Mr. Clinch went in?—About five minutes before.

5992. Did you see the policeman go into the mews?—When he came out, but not when he went in.

5993. You did not see the policeman go into the mews at all?—No.

5994. You say the woman went in about five minutes before Mr. Clinch. Did you pay any particular attention to the time at the moment?—I paid no attention to that.

5995. It is the fact, is it, that the woman went into the mews shortly before Mr. Clinch went in?—Yes.

5996. You went to the police station, did you not, and you wrote a statement there?—Yes.

5997. This gentleman here, your friend, acted as interpreter for you?—Yes.

5998. What you said in your statement was: "I saw the policeman push him (Clinch), and he said to him 'Pick your hat up'"?—Yes.

5999. That statement was correct, was it not?—Yes.

6000. What you saw was that the policeman pushed the man. You did not see the policeman strike the man?—I only saw the policeman push him, and not punch him.

6001. Was he pushing him out of the mews with his hands on his back in this sort of way (illustrating)?—He was only pushing him.

6002. Was Clinch pushing back? Was Clinch resisting? Did Clinch appear anxious not to come out of the mews?—He did not do any act back.

6003. I do not convey my meaning exactly. Did Clinch appear reluctant to come out of the mews?—No, he did not.

6004. (Mr. Dickinson.) How long had you been standing at the doorway of that mews?—About ten minutes.

ANGELO DELICATES, sworn.

6005. (Earl Russell.) On the 16th October, 1905, you were living at 77, Rosebery Avenue?—Yes.

6006. The last witness on that occasion was there talking to you?—Quite right.

6007. Whereabouts were you standing when you were talking?—Just near the door.

6008. Whose door?—My door. I was unlocking the door.

Angelo Delicates.

Angelo Delicates.
17 Oct. 1906.

6009. When you first saw anything happen, about how long had you been standing there—the two of you?—About ten minutes, or a quarter of an hour, or something like that.

6010. What was the first thing you saw happen in John's Mews?—I saw a constable striking a gentleman. I heard the constable say "Pick up your cap and go," and this gentleman went back to the mews again.

6011. When you say "this gentleman," do you mean Mr. Clinch?—Yes. I did not know his name at the moment.

6012. You saw a constable. What was the constable doing exactly?—I saw him punching him. He was striking him, and this gentleman was holding his hands up.

6013. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Can you show us with your arm what you saw the policeman doing with his arm?—I saw him go like that. (Illustrating.)

6014. (Earl Russell.) Clinch, you say, was doing what?—He was holding his hands up.

6015. What sort of light was there in the mews? Was there a good light or a bad light?—There was no light there.

6016. You heard the constable say "Pick up your cap and go," you say?—Yes.

6017. What happened after that? What did Clinch do then?—He came forward at once, and he asked us if we saw the constable strike him. We answered "Yes." In the meantime, when speaking to us, I saw a sergeant crossing the road.

6018. The sergeant was not in the mews?—He was crossing the road.

6019. What did you say?—I said: "Here is a sergeant crossing the road; call him, he will put everything right for you." He did. The sergeant came across, and whilst he was taking our names this young lady came out.

6020. Did Mr. Clinch say anything to the sergeant when he came up?—He said he had been assaulted by a policeman.

6021. Then the sergeant started to take your names?—Yes.

6022. Whilst that was taking place what happened?—The young lady ran out on the footpath.

6023. Do you recognise her now?—Yes.

6024. What happened when she ran on the footpath?—The sergeant ordered her to stop. She still kept running, so the sergeant ran after her and stopped her, and brought her back to the mews. In the meantime the policeman came out of the mews.

6025. Before the sergeant came back, or at the same time?—At the same time. When the sergeant got to the mews the policeman was coming out.

6026. Did you hear the sergeant say anything to the policeman?—The sergeant said to the policeman, "This gentleman charges you with assaulting him."

6027. What did the policeman say?—The policeman denied it.

6028. What happened then?—The sergeant asked us to go to the station with him. I went to the station. The Inspector asked me: "Do you know anything about this?" I said "No," because I thought as a foreigner I ought to mind my own business, and I did not like to be in an affair like this. I was subpœnaed by the Magistrate to appear at the court.

6029. You told the Inspector at the police station you did not know anything about it?—Yes.

6030. After that you were subpœnaed to the court?—Yes, by the Magistrate.

6031. Were you in the charge room at the station when the charge was made?—Yes.

6032. Did you see Clinch and the Inspector in the room?—Yes.

6033. What happened after the statement had been made by Clinch? What did the Inspector do?—He said: "Gibbard, keep your place," or something like that.

6034. Did you hear the Inspector read the statement to the policeman?—Yes.

6035. What did the policeman say then, or what did the Inspector say? Did the Inspector say anything when he read it?—No.

6036. Did he ask any question of the policeman?—He said, "This gentleman is charging you with assaulting him, Gibbard; is that right?" The policeman did not answer.

6037. Did you hear Clinch ask the sergeant at the station anything about the woman coming out of the mews?—No, I never heard that.

6038. After you had been to the station you came away?—I came away.

6039. You and the last witness?—Yes, with my friend.

6040. Did you leave the others at the station?—The young lady.

6041. Who else?—Clinch and Gibbard, the constable.

6042. (Mr Eldon Bankes.) How many of you were there standing talking together at the entrance to the mews?—Three.

6043. You, the last witness, and another person?—Yes.

6044. Were you engaged in conversation talking with each other?—That is right.

6045. There is no light in these mews, is there?—No.

6046. You were standing in the street just at the entrance?—Not at the entrance. Where I live is three doors before the mews, and there is a lamp-post there.

6047. You were standing at your doorway, were you?—Yes.

6048. And your friends were standing with you?—Yes.

6049. Three doors away from the mews?—Yes.

6050. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Do you mean there is a gas lamp there?—Yes, in the street.

6051. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) There is a gas lamp in the street by your door?—Yes.

6152. Is there an archway over the mews?—Yes.

6053. There is no light there at all?—There is a lamp there, but that night there was no light at all. They had vans in there.

6054. You and your friends were standing close together?—Yes.

6055. What he saw you saw?—Yes.

6056. And what you saw he saw?—Yes. At the time this happened I was just putting the key in the keyhole, and was saying "Good night," and we saw the constable come out.

6057. Did you notice the woman go into the mews?—No.

6058. Did you notice Clinch go into the mews?—I saw Clinch go in. Neither did I see the policeman go in.

6059. I mean you, I suppose, were engaged in conversation with your friends, and not paying any attention to this; but you happened to notice Clinch go in?—Yes.

6060. The next thing you noticed was the policeman and Clinch coming out together?—Yes.

6061. Your friend has said that the policeman was pushing him?—That is what he says.

6062. But is that right?—Yes, it should be.

6063. Is that right? Is that what the policeman was doing?—No. I saw him strike him.

6064. Do you mean to say you saw him strike at him, or hit him?—Hit him. I saw him hit him at the back of the neck somewhere, and Clinch was going like this (illustrating). The constable said, "Pick up your cap and go," and he walked to the mews again.

6065. Your view is that he struck him with his fist, is it?—Yes.

6066. You gave evidence at the police court, did you not?—Yes.

6067. When you went to the police station you told the Inspector you did not know anything about it?—That is right.

6068. But afterwards you did give evidence? We will just see what you said there. You said: "I was standing outside my door." That was right?—That was right.

6069. "Near John's Mews I saw the complainant and defendant; I saw the police-constable go to strike Mr. Clinch." Is that what you said?—To strike him?

6070. That is what was taken down.

(Chairman.) We have not got that.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) We have not copies. I have the original note. This is the clerk's note of evidence at the police court.

6071. "His cap fell off; the police-constable said, 'Pick your cap up and go away'"?—That is right.

6072. That is what he was telling him—to go away?—Yes.

6073. "Clinch spoke to me. The police-sergeant came up and took my name. I stood at the entrance to the mews. A woman came out and commenced to run on the footpath. The police-sergeant called on her to stop. She would not. The police-sergeant run after her and brought her back. The police-constable came out. The prosecutor said, 'I charge this man with striking me while I was making water'"?—Yes, that is right.

6074. The charge was not striking him outside, but striking him inside?—No, outside.

6075. Listen. You told the Magistrate that Clinch said "I charge this man with striking me while I was making water"?—Yes, but this happened after—when the striking came.

6076. Mr. Clinch made a statement in writing. The Inspector read it out. The police-constable said nothing?—The Inspector said, "Did you strike the man." The police-constable said, "I pushed him"?—That is what he said. That is right.

6077. If that is right, how came you to tell these gentlemen a moment ago that when the Inspector read out what you said was the charge the constable said nothing?—When this occurred at the police station, I told them I did not know anything about it.

6078. You told the Magistrate that the Inspector said, "Did you strike the man"?—That is right.

6079. "The constable said 'No, I pushed him.'" Is that true?—I did not say that. I said the policeman struck him.

6080. No. You were telling the Magistrate what you heard take place at the police station. Did you hear the Inspector say to the constable, "Did you strike him"?—Did I hear that at the police station?

6081. Yes, did you hear the Inspector say to the constable, "Did you strike the man"?—That is right—"Did you strike the man or push the man."

6082. Did the constable say, "No, I pushed him"?—The constable said, "I pushed the man" only.

6083. If that happened, how came you to tell these gentlemen that the constable said nothing? A moment ago you told these gentlemen the constable said nothing.

(Chairman.) No, that was when he was charged before the sergeant.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Both, I think. There was no charge made. In this case the man was not in custody, and no charge is made except where a man is in custody.

(Chairman.) I took down a very hurried note that, when charged by the sergeant, the policeman did not answer.

(Witness.) That is quite right.

(Chairman.) That is what I took down.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) That is right. He said both.

(Witness.) When the sergeant said, "This gentleman charges you with assaulting him," Gibbard did not answer at all.

(Chairman.) I took that down with reference to what took place in the street.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) That is right; but he also said that when the charge was made by the Inspector the constable said nothing.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That is only giving a technical meaning to the word "Charge." He used the same expression, but he probably did not mean it to have the same technical effect as you do.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Quite. My point is that when before the Magistrate he did say that when what he now calls the charge was made by the Inspector, the constable's answer was "No, I only pushed him."

(Chairman.) He agrees to that now.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes, he does.

6084. You were cross-examined. Listen to the cross-examination: "I went to the police station. I interpreted my friend's evidence"?—That is right.

6085. "I live about two doors away. I agreed with what my friend said"?—No, that is not right.

6086. It is written down here.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Is that signed?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) No, it is the clerk's note.

6087. Do you say you never said that?—I never said that.

6088. "My friend said he saw the police-constable push the prosecutor. He said nothing about the police-constable striking the prosecutor. I said I did not see anything; I did not want to go against the Force"?—Quite right.

6089. Did you say "My friend said he saw the police-constable push the prosecutor"?—Yes. I interpreted for him.

6090. "He said nothing about the police-constable striking the prosecutor"?—No.

6091. Did you say "I agreed with what my friend said"?—No.

(Chairman.) I do not know whether you make any point of distinction between pushing and striking, but the dramatic action of the witness in the box suggested to myself a push, although he called it a strike.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) It will be for you to say. You have the medical evidence, and you will hear our witnesses.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It was consistent with either, but it looked to be more like a push than a blow. A push might be a blow.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) It is difficult to draw a line when a push ceases to be a push and becomes a blow.

6092. (Earl Russell.) Both when you gave evidence at the police court, and to-day, there has been a difference between you and Francesco de Angelis. He said it was a push, and you said you thought it was a strike?—Yes.

6093. How long after Clinch went into the mews did you see him come out again, followed by the policeman?—About three or four minutes.

6094. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) How long have you been in this country?—Since I was eight years of age.

6095. That is how long ago?—I am twenty-five now.

6096. That is seventeen years ago. And your friend?—Four years.

6097. What is your occupation?—A hairdresser.

6098. Do you carry on that business at 77, Rosebery Avenue?—No, at 19, Great Bath Street. I live at Rosebery Avenue.

6099. How long have you lived at 77, Rosebery Avenue?—Three and a half years. I am living there now.

6100. I do not think we heard what your friend's business is?—He is a hairdresser, too.

6101. Does he work for you?—No.

6102. He works somewhere else?—Yes.

6103. He is an assistant hairdresser?—Yes.

6104. When you interpreted your friend's evidence at the police court, did you interpret it sentence by sentence?—Not at the court, but at the police station.

6105. I should like to understand what you did there. How did you interpret it?—Just the same as I did just now. The Inspector told me to ask him what he saw, and I told him what he said.

6106. You repeated it in English?—Yes.

6107. (Mr. Dickinson.) After Clinch went into the mews did you see the policeman go in?—I did not see the policeman go in.

6108. Were you not sufficiently observant of what was going on to look?—No, I did not pay attention to that. I was with my friend. I did not see the policeman or the young lady go in. I only saw Clinch go in, and I saw him when he came out with the constable.

6109. Perhaps you do not understand the question. Between the time when Clinch went in and went out was only two or three minutes?—Yes.

Angelo Delicates.

17 Oct. 1906.

6110. In those three or four minutes are you able to say that no police constable did go in?—Yes, no one went in then. It is not very far. It is only about ten yards.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) He did not see the woman go in.

(Mr. Dickinson.) I said between the time when Clinch went in and went out.

6111. (Chairman.) I saw you recognise a young woman in court?—Yes.

6112. Is that the young woman who came out of the mews?—Yes, that is the young woman who came out of the mews.

6113. Had you seen her before that night?—I have seen her going home sometimes at night. I have seen her visit a coffee-stall there.

6114. Had you seen her before you saw her come out of the mews that night?—Only that night I saw her come out of the mews and run on the footpath. I never did before.

6115. This was a little after 12 o'clock, was it not?—About ten minutes past 12.

6116. You did not see her go into the mews?—I did not.

6117. You saw her come out?—I saw her come out and run on the footpath.

6118. Was that the first time you had seen her that night?—Yes.

6119. Did you know her at all?—No. I never spoke to her at all. I know her by sight.

6120. Does that mean that you had seen her going along the street?—Yes, I have seen her pass by. There is a coffee-stall there, and I have seen her visit the coffee-stall.

6121. There is a coffee-stall there, and you have seen her at it occasionally?—Yes.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Mr. Bankes, I want to call your attention to this. This witness and Delicates say that Clinch made a statement in writing. Someone read it out.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) The Inspector.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) "The police constable said nothing. The Inspector said, 'Did you strike the man?' the police constable said, 'No, I pushed him.'"

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) That is what I was reading.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That is at the end of the evidence in chief.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Then he is cross-examined. He says: "I went to the police station; I interpreted my friend's evidence. I live two door away." Then he says: "I agree with what my friend," and then it stops there.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I am afraid I put in the word "said."

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It goes on as if he were making some correction, because the next sentence is "My friend said he saw the police constable push the prosecutor." He said nothing about the police constable striking the prosecutor. Apparently he is drawing a distinction.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) There is a word there omitted.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) There is the cross-examination, and there are at least two questions before the one upon which you lay stress.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Certainly. The only reason I called attention to it was because I understood the witness to say here with regard to his recollection that when the Inspector made the charge, or said whatever he did say to the constable, the constable said nothing.

(Chairman.) This is in cross-examination, so that he may not have finished the answer. The note runs thus: "I agreed with what my friend," and then it stops. "My friend says he saw the police constable push prosecutor." That may have been an unfinished sentence.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) The answer I relied upon came next after that: "The Inspector said, 'Did you strike the man?'"

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) No, forgive me, that comes before the cross-examination. The question you are referring to is at the end of the examination-in-chief, where the police constable said, "No, I pushed him." That is the point you are making.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes. Does it make any difference where it comes?

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I am not going to argue that with you. I am only pointing out that you are wrong in saying that it is after the statement you are referring to; it is before it. The statement is made at the end of the examination-in-chief of this witness that the police constable said, "No, I pushed him." Then he is cross-examined. The only point of my calling your attention to it is that you were putting to this witness that he had agreed with the statement that his friend had made.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) So I thought.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I am pointing out to you that that is in answer to a question in the Clerk's note: "I agreed with what my friend," and then it stops, and goes on to point out a distinction between what his friend had said and what he, the witness, was saying.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Quite. I do not understand exactly what the point is. There are two quite distinct questions. One is whether the constable pushed the man or whether he struck him. These two men did not agree on that.

(Chairman.) I pointed out that this witness in his dramatic action made such an ambiguous action that as far as I am concerned I should have thought it was a push rather than a blow.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I am obliged to you. Therefore we have got rid of that point. The other point was in his evidence he led you to think that the constable said nothing when he was charged with striking the man, and therefore in substance he admitted it, whereas when he gave evidence either in chief or in cross-examination, I do not care which, at the police court, he said, on the contrary, when the Inspector asked him whether he struck the man, his answer was: "No, I pushed him." Those are two quite distinct points.

(Earl Russell.) The passage Mr. Isaacs read out first was that he answered nothing when the whole thing was read over to him, and when the Inspector said: "Did you push him or strike him?" he said: "No, I pushed him."

6122. (Mr. Dickinson.) You say you saw Clinch go into the mews?—Yes.

6123. The statement written by the constable says: "I beg to report that at 11.50, 15th inst. I was on duty in Rosebery Avenue when I saw a man and a woman go down John's Mews." You say there was no woman with him?—There was no woman with him.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) It is not suggested that they went together.

(Mr. Dickinson.) I only want to know whether Clinch when he was in the mews went down with the woman or not, because the statement of the police constable is that a man and a woman went in.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes, but it is not suggested that they went together. If you look at the evidence which the police constable gave before the Police Magistrate it is plain that he does not suggest that they went in together. That statement may possibly lead you to think that his suggestion is that they went in together. I am only explaining that that is suggestion.

(Chairman.) I daresay he will be called before us.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes. There are one or two other questions I should like to ask the witness.

(Chairman.) Yes.

6124. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I understand that you and your friend were standing talking at your doorway?—Yes.

6125. You had no particular reason for watching the mews?—No, we were not watching the mews at all.

6126. You did happen to see Clinch go in?—We saw him go in.

6127. You all of you saw Clinch go in?—Yes.

6128. Your friend saw the woman go in, but you did not?—I did not.

6129. You did not happen to see the woman go in?—I did not.

6130. You did not see the constable go in?—I did not see the constable go in.

6131. But you know he went in?—No.

6132. You saw him come out?—Yes.

6133. Therefore he must have gone in. There is no other way of going in except that way?—No.

(Mr. Dickinson.) I understand him to say the constable did not go in after Clinch. He told me that he was perfectly certain the policeman did not go in after Clinch.

6134. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) You have told us you were all talking together. You did not happen to notice the woman go in?—No, I did not see either the woman or the policeman go in. I only saw Clinch go in, and, afterwards, Clinch and the constable come out again.

6135. After Clinch went in, did you watch the mews, or did you go on talking with your friends?—We were smoking.

6136. Did you watch the mews after Clinch went in?—We watched the man go in.

6137. Did you keep your eyes fixed on the mews, or did you go on talking?—We were not talking. I was saying "Good night" when the constable and Clinch came out.

6138. You saw Clinch go in?—I saw Clinch go in.

6139. What were you doing after Clinch went in?—We were still speaking.

6140. Doing exactly what you were doing when the woman went in?—No, we were still speaking.

6141. That is what you had been doing when the woman went in?—Yes, but at that time there were three of us together on the footpath, and after I said "Good night" I put the key in the door. The mews was on this side, and we were saying "Good night," and then we saw the constable come out.

6142. Here is the street, here is the entrance to the mews, and here is your house?—Yes.

6143. You three men were standing on the pavement talking together?—Yes.

6144. Whilst you were so standing, a woman went into the mews?—I did not see her go in.

6145. No, you did not, but your friend did. That means he happened to notice her and you did not happen to notice her?—I did not notice her.

6146. Shortly after Clinch went in?—Yes.

6147. And you happened to notice him?—I happened to notice him.

6148. After Clinch had gone in, did you continue standing on the pavement talking?—Yes.

6149. And you were continuing standing talking in exactly the same position?—No, not in the same position.

6150. Why?—I was unlocking the door when I saw the constable come out.

6151. But after Clinch came in, did you for a minute or two stand talking where you had been talking before?—We were not in the same place. I was at the door and they were on the footpath.

6152. That was when the constable came out?—Yes. But before, when Clinch came in, we were on the footpath.

6153. How soon after Clinch had gone in did you move from the footpath?—About two or three minutes after.

Angelo Delicates.

6154. So that for two or three minutes after Clinch had gone in you remained in the same position?—About two or three minutes. 17 Oct. 1906.

6155. And you were standing for those two or three minutes after Clinch went in in exactly the same position as you had been standing before Clinch went in?—No, we were not standing in the same position at all.

6156. You were standing on the pavement?—Yes.

6157. You know now that a woman went in without your seeing her?—I did not see her.

6158. Then Clinch goes in?—Yes.

6159. You saw him go in?—Yes, but in the meantime we had changed our positions.

6160. To what extent did you change your positions?—The mews was here, the three of us were standing here, and I was standing here after the young lady went in. I said, "It is late, I must go to bed," and I turned round and said "Good night." After that I was unlocking my door.

6161. Had you your back to the mews?—No, the mews was on this side, and I go in on this side. If I had my back to it I should see neither Clinch nor anyone else. I was on this side when Clinch and the constable came out of the mews.

6162. Did you change your position after Clinch went in?—Yes, because I went to open my door. That changes the position, does it not?

6163. The constable says he went into the mews after Clinch?—No.

6164. You say "No"?—No, I only saw Clinch go in.

6165. I agree you only saw Clinch go in; but the question is, whether you were observing the mews in such a way from the time Clinch went in that you are prepared to swear that no one went in after him?—No, no one went in after him.

6166. (Mr. Dickinson.) Were there any other people in the street?—No, only the three of us.

6167. In the whole street?—In the whole street. It was late. It was Sunday night. All the people were away.

6168. (Chairman.) You have no doubt that the police-constable did not go in after Clinch had gone into the mews?—No, I did not see the constable go in.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) We quite agree you did not see him go in.

(Earl Russell.) I am very much obliged to the Commissioners for allowing me to interpose these witnesses.

(Chairman.) Now, we must revert to the Altfuldisch witnesses.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Is that your evidence, Earl Russell, in Clinch's case?

(Earl Russell.) There is only the medical evidence, but the doctor is not here.

(Chairman.) Apart from the medical evidence, you have called all your witnesses on your side?

(Earl Russell.) That is so.

Sergeant CRAYFOURD, sworn.

6169. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Are you a sergeant attached to the C Division, stationed at Great Marlborough Street?—Yes.

Sergeant Crayfourd.

6170. Were you on duty on the night of the 17th December?—I was.

6171. We heard that you were standing outside the station when Inspector Manning came up with his prisoner?—That is so.

6172. Were you in plain clothes at the time?—Yes.

6173. Were you on duty, or had you come off duty?—I was just going off duty.

6174. Did Inspector Manning speak to you?—He did.

6175. What did he say?—I would not be sure of his words, but he told me something to the effect that Inspector McKay had a violent prisoner, and he wanted me to go to his assistance.

6176. Did you and Police Constable Miles go in consequence of that communication?—Yes.

6177. Where did you go to?—We ran along to the end of Marlborough Street.

6178. Did you run?—Yes.

6179. What happened then?—I met Inspector McKay with Mr. Altfuldisch. They were struggling. They appeared to be at a standstill. I took hold of Mr. Altfuldisch's left arm and assisted him to the station.

6180. At what point exactly did you come up to them?—It was near the refuge in the centre of Great Marlborough Street, at the corner of Poland Street.

6181. At that time did you help the Inspector to take Mr. Altfuldisch to the station?—Yes.

6182. Did you hold him the whole way?—All the way.

Sergeant Crayfourd.

17 Oct. 1906.

6183. What part of him had you hold of?—I had his left wrist in my hand, and I held his arm with my right hand.

6184. How did he behave?—Violently—kicking, struggling, and shouting all the way.

6185. When you got to the station, what happened?—We took him to the charge-room door, and from there straight through to the waiting-room.

6186. What happened in the waiting-room?—He continued his violence for about three minutes, and I assisted Inspector McKay to restrain him. After that he got somewhat quieter, and sat down by himself.

6187. What was the state of light in the waiting-room when you took him in?—A bright incandescent gaslight.

6188. Was Inspector McKay at any time in the room with that man alone?—No.

6189. Was any violence used towards him in that room?—No violence. There was restraint put upon him.

6190. Just describe to the Commissioners what sort of restraint was put upon him?—After we took him into the room he was asked to sit down. He sat down at first, and then he jumped up and rushed towards the door as if he was going out of the police station. He was then restrained by Inspector McKay and myself, and he sat down again.

6191. Was anything more done to him, or did he remain seated?—He remained seated.

6192. Did he remain seated until his turn came to be taken into the charge-room?—That is so.

6193. He has suggested that the Inspector struck him continuously whilst in that room. Is there any foundation for that?—That is false.

6194. Was the door shut at all?—It was not.

6195. Were you and Miles there the whole time?—Yes.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It is suggested also that somebody else struck him.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) He has spoken of a plain clothes man besides the Inspector assaulting him.

6196. Were there any plain clothes men there except yourself and Miles?—No.

6197. Did either you or Miles assault him?—No.

6198. Then he was taken into the charge-room and put into the dock. What was his condition then?—He seemed to get excited again after he got into the charge-room. He shouted and screamed for a bit, and then he got quieter again.

6199. Was the charge taken down and read over to him?—Yes.

6200. Did he make any complaint then of an assault?—He said nothing at all.

6201. Had you anything to do with him after he had been put into the dock and charged?—No.

6202. Who was it took him to the cell?—The man on reserve—the jailer and the officer on duty.

6203. (Earl Russell.) What is his name?—The officer on duty?

6204. Yes?—Inspector Remfry was on duty.

6205. I want the name of the officer who took him to the cell?—That was Inspector Remfry.

6206. The same man who took the charge, was it?—That is so.

6207. When you first joined Inspector McKay at the junction of Poland Street and Great Marlborough Street was there a large and violent crowd still around them?—When I arrived there there were about ten or a dozen, I should say.

6208. Around Inspector McKay?—Behind him.

6209. He was without assistance other than yourself at that time?—Yes.

6210. What was the crowd doing?—They did not appear to be doing anything in particular. They were shouting something in a foreign language that I did not understand.

6211. There was no attempt at a rescue by this crowd of ten or a dozen when you got there?—I did not see it.

6212. They were not taking hold of Inspector McKay or taking hold of the prisoner?—No.

6213. Was the prisoner rather violent?—I was rather struck with the force he used.

6214. Was it as much as Inspector McKay could do to hold him?—It appeared to be so.

6215. He had this crowd of 12 people around him who were not helping the prisoner to escape?—That is so.

6216. Although he had his hands full. Did you hear Mr. Altfuldisch's story about his cap falling off and that he was forced on to the pavement to pick it up?—I do not remember it falling off, but I will not say it did not.

6217. The statement that he was forced to pick it up is entirely false?—It is.

6218. If it was picked up, who picked it up?—It might have been Miles. He was behind the prisoner.

6219. He was with you?—Yes.

6220. Did you hear the prisoner asking what he was arrested for?—I do not remember that. He may have asked, but I do not remember.

6221. You do not remember his asking "What am I here for?" when he was brought into the station?—I do not remember that.

6222. You remember Inspector Manning saying in the charge-room he heard that?—Yes.

6223. You were nearer to him than Manning?—Yes.

6224. You do not remember his saying it?—I do not remember his saying it.

6225. You took no notice?—No.

6226. I understand you to say when he was first taken into this waiting-room he sat down quietly himself by the bench?—He sat down in the natural course of events.

6227. Do you mean because you lent heavily on him and made him?—No. That is the usual place where they sit down when they are taken into the station.

6228. You did not have to force him down?—No, we did not force him down in the first place.

6229. Did you hear Inspector McKay say that when he was first taken in he had to force him down on to the seat?—Not when he was first taken in.

6230. You say he sat down in the first instance fairly quietly, and then bounced up and made a rush?—Yes.

6231. You and Miles were in plain clothes?—Yes.

6232. Were you on or off duty?—I was just coming off duty.

6233. Had you been on duty?—Yes.

6234. You were just going off duty?—Yes.

6235. You are accustomed, I suppose, to taking in prisoners. It happens often, I think, at Marlborough Street?—Yes.

6236. What is the largest number you generally have in the charge room? Do you not often have half a dozen there at a time?—Not at a time. I have seen three or four there frequently.

6237. When you came in with this man there were three, were there not?—About that I should say.

6238. You have heard what he said. Is it not true that the door was shut?—It was not shut.

6239. It is not true that he was left along with Inspector McKay?—No.

6240. It is not true that you hit him at any time?—I did not hit him. I helped to restrain him.

6241. Gently. You did not shake your fist and strike a blow?—No.

6242. Nor in your presence did Inspector McKay or Miles?—No.

6243. You are perfectly positive that the whole three of you were practically all together while he was in that waiting room?—That is so.

6244. When he says he was left alone with the door shut that is false?—That is false, absolutely.

(Earl Russell.) May I make an application with regard to two witnesses in Clinch's case? Mr. Sandy, who is an Inspector in the Inland Section at Mount Pleasant, and who saw Clinch after the occurrence, and Dr. Sinclair, the official doctor of the Post Office. I shall be glad if the Commission would issue an order to these two gentlemen to attend, because it would facilitate their coming. We are not able to enforce their attendance without such an order. I understand there will be no difficulty in their attending the first thing to-morrow morning if that is convenient to the Commission.

Sergeant Crayfourd.

(Chairman.) We will summon them for to-morrow and see when their evidence can be taken.

17 Oct. 1906.

Police-constable ALLEN MILES 79 C, sworn.

P.C. A. Miles.

6245. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I think you are a police-constable attached to the C Division at Marlborough Street Police Station?—Yes.

6246. Were you coming off duty on the night of the 17th December in company with the last witness, Sergeant Crayfourd?—Yes

6247. Did Inspector Manning speak to you just outside the station?—Yes.

6248. What did he say?—He told me to hurry to Poland Street, as Inspector McKay had a violent prisoner. I immediately ran with Crayfourd there.

6249. I do not know whether it is necessary to go through the story at length, but have you heard the sergeant's account of what took place?—Yes.

6250. Is that accurate?—Yes.

6251. Did the sergeant take hold of Altfuldisch?—Yes.

6252. Did he keep hold of him until he got to the station?—He did.

6253. What was Altfuldisch's condition? How did he behave?—Very violent—shouting; he was very violent indeed. "You b—— English police" was his principal expression.

6254. After you got to the station where was Altfuldisch placed?—In the waiting room.

6255. What was the state of light in that room?—It was lighted.

6256. Did the Inspector remain in the room alone with him at all?—No.

6257. Were you in the room the whole time or in the doorway?—In the room standing by the doorway.

6258. Did you hear what the sergeant said as to what happened?—Yes.

6259. Is that accurate?—Yes.

6260. Is there any foundation for the statement that the Inspector struck the man?—None whatever.

6261. Is there any foundation for the statement that either the sergeant or yourself struck him?—No.

6262. Were there any plain clothes men there except yourself and the sergeant?—No.

6263. (Earl Russell.) May I see the charge sheet? (The same was handed to the learned Counsel.) After you had got into the station and been in the waiting room did you accompany Inspector McKay to the charge room?—No, I went down stairs to the section house.

6264. Did Sergeant Crayfourd accompany him?—Yes.

6265. Sergeant Crayfourd accompanied him, and you did not?—Yes.

6266. Is the charge sheet signed by the police-constable making the charge as a regular thing?—Yes.

6267. But only by one of them, not by all of those who are concerned in the arrest of the prisoner?—No.

6268. Were you in court when the case came on against Altfuldisch?—Yes.

6269. On both occasions?—Yes.

6270. And Sergeant Crayfourd?—Yes.

6271. Have you any occurrence book or any book in which you make a note of what happens?—Do you mean myself?

6272. Yes, yourself. Would you make a note of an arrest?—I should if I had one.

6273. Would you make a note of assisting to take a violent prisoner?—No.

6274. What would you make a note of?—If I had arrested a person myself I should make a note.

6275. But not if you had arrested a violent prisoner?—No.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) You mean assisted in arresting.

(Earl Russell.) Yes, assisted in taking a violent prisoner to the station. What would be the object of the note if you had arrested a man?—To keep in remembrance the times and things.

6276. When you came to give evidence the next day?—Yes

6277. Would you not have the same object if you had assisted in taking a violent prisoner to the station?—For such a short distance you would think you might keep it in your mind.

6278. But if you had effected an arrest at that distance you would still write it down in your book?—Yes.

6279. The object is to refresh your memory before you give evidence of what happens?—Yes.

6280. In the case of assisting to take a violent prisoner, although you would have to give evidence you would make no note?—I should think of it.

6281. You have never made a note in a case like that?—No, I do not remember it.

6282. You were both in plain clothes and both just coming off duty?—Yes.

6283. Did you make any written report, either you or, to your knowledge, Sergeant Crayfourd, about the assistance you rendered in taking this violent prisoner to the station?—Yes.

6284. You made a written report?—Yes.

6285. When?—On the 18th June.

6286. And the occurrence took place on the 16th December?—The 17th December.

6287. That was six months afterwards?—Yes.

6288. Is that the first time you ever wrote anything about it?—Yes.

6289. It is the first written note you ever made?—Yes.

6290. That was, I suppose, in answer to some inquiry from Scotland Yard, was it not?—I really do not know now. I think Sergeant Crayfourd mentioned it to me and we made out reports.

6291. You made them out together?—No, I made out mine, a very short one, of what had taken place.

(Earl Russell.) May I have the report? (Document produced.)

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It appears to be dated the 19th June.

6292. (Earl Russell.) This is the report:—"I beg to report that about 12.30 a.m. on the 17th December, 1905, I was at Great Marlborough Police Station, when I was directed by Inspector Manning to go to the assistance of Sub-divisional Inspector McKay. I accompanied Sergeant Crayfourd and met the Subdivisional Inspector in Poland Street with the prisoner, who was struggling and shouting. I assisted to get him to the station, and to restrain him in the waiting room until he was charged. He was not assaulted by me or any other officer." You do not know how you came to make that report on the 19th June? You do not recollect?—I really do not know. It is a long time ago.

6293. The 19th June?—Yes, but Sergeant Crayfourd said something to me to the effect that I had to make a report. Where he got his information from I do not know, but it was Sergeant Crayfourd who spoke to me about it.

6294. The 19th June is only four months ago, and the report relates to occurrences six months old when you wrote it, of which you made no note at the time?—Yes.

6295. You had no occasion to think of the occurrences in between?—I had, because the case was cited in the Police and Public Vigilance Society book, and there were pamphlets about it.

P.C. A. Miles.
17 Oct. 1906.

6296. When did you first hear of that?—It might have been a month after, or longer, but I remember the case very well from these pamphlets that were distributed, and I kept the matter in my mind.

6297. And yet you made no note of what happened until the 19th June?—No.

6298. Do you say the story of Altfuldisch is quite untrue?—I do.

6299. Nobody struck him in the waiting room, or, at any rate, you in plain clothes did not strike him?—No.

6300. And you swear you did not leave him alone with Inspector McKay?—Yes.

6301. And he was not brought to the station alone by Inspector McKay?—He was not.

6302. When you were in the police court was any note of the evidence you were prepared to give, or that Sergeant Crayfourd was prepared to give, given to the Magistrate, or to anybody, or to the magistrate's clerk?—No, I do not think it was.

6303. It simply remained in the knowledge of Inspector McKay himself that you were there and would give this evidence, if necessary?—Probably.

6304. You, of course, heard Inspector McKay give his evidence?—Yes.

6305. Did you hear him say in his evidence, or any part of his evidence, that he was assisted in bringing the prisoner to the station?—I could not say that I did. I do not remember all that Inspector McKay said.

6306. Did you hear Inspector Manning give his evidence?—Yes.

6307. You did not hear him say anything to the effect that he had sent you to assist Inspector McKay?—No.

6308. It was not brought to the knowledge of the Magistrate or of the defendant in that case at that time that you and Sergeant Crayfourd had assisted in the arrest, that is supposing he did not know it before?—I do not think he did.

6309. To whom did you first make any statement other than to Inspector McKay that you had assisted in the arrest?—No one else.

6310. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Can you give me any reason why the report was made on the 19th June?—From what Sergeant Crayfourd told me, that we had to report on Altfuldisch's arrest.

6311. Did he tell you why?—No.

6312. Have you never heard why?—No.

6313. And you do not know, except that you were told to report?—Quite right.

6314. (Mr. Whitmore.) To whom would the report be directed?—To Sub-divisional Inspector McKay.

Inspector JOHN REMFRY, sworn.

Inspector J. Remfry

6315. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Are you an Inspector of the C Division stationed at Great Marlborough Street?—Yes.

6316. In the early morning of the 17th December last was a man named Mander brought into the station?—Yes.

6317. Charged with disorderly conduct?—Yes.

6318. And also Altfuldisch?—Yes.

6319. Charged with disorderly conduct and using obscene language?—Yes.

6320. As well as Ruppert?—Yes.

6321. Charged with obstructing an officer in the execution of his duty?—Yes, and disorderly conduct, too.

6322. Did you take the charges?—I did.

6323. How did the prisoner Altfuldisch behave in the station?—When he was brought into the station he was very noisy and was shouting.

6324. When he was put into the dock to be charged, did Inspector McKay make a statement?—He gave me the information of the nature of the disorder and the obscene language.

6325. Did he state the facts of the arrest?—Yes.

6326. Can you remember what he said?—That he saw prisoner, with a crowd of others, behaving in a disorderly manner, shouting, and that he was told to move away. He declined to do so, and said that he was not going to move away for no f—— policeman—something similar to that. On those statements, of course, I took the charge.

6327. Did Inspector McKay say how Altfuldisch behaved on the way to the station?—He said he was violent on the way to the station.

6328. Did you take down the particulars of the charge?—I inserted them on the charge sheet.

6329. And read it over?—And read it over.

6330. Did Altfuldisch make any reply at all?—None whatever.

6331. Did he complain of the conduct of the police towards him?—None whatever. He made no complaint whatever.

6332. Was he taken to the cells?—Yes.

6333. Who took him to the cells?—Myself, assisted by the gaoler—the other police-constable on reserve.

6334. What took place? Did you hear anything afterwards of the ringing of bells—Probably he rang the bell, but there were other prisoners there as well ringing the bells.

6335. Did you go to the cells?—Yes, I went once, to my knowledge, afterwards.

6336. But did Altfuldisch speak to you when you went there?—Yes, on the question of bail.

6337. How long would that be after you had taken him to the cell?—I can hardly say now, because I was up and down the cell passage half the night really with other prisoners.

6338. You only went there once?—To my knowledge I only went personally to the cell once.

6339. What did Altfuldisch say to you?—I went to ask him a question about his bail—if I could send for bail for him.

6340. Was he bailed?—After I was relieved at 2 o'clock. I was only there till 2 o'clock.

6341. Before 2 o'clock you had gone to ask him some questions about his bail?—Yes.

6342. Before 2 o'clock you had gone to ask him some questions?—If I should send for bail for him—whether I should inquire at his address.

6343. Did he give you his address?—He said: "My wife knows I am here; she will see to it. I do not want you to go to the door to disturb her." I think that is just about the gist of what he did say.

6344. Did you know that he lived about three doors from the station?—No, barring the fact of the address that he gave me.

6345. That showed you?—Yes, but I could not say it was correct, because the man was a total stranger to me. I had not known him before, and had not seen him.

6346. You accepted it as correct?—I put it down on the charge sheet, but I could not say it was correct, because we get false addresses nightly.

6347. (Earl Russell.) Was Altfuldisch violent at all when he was in the charge-room?—He shouted a bit, but not when he was in the dock.

6348. Not when he came officially before you?—No.

6349. But when he was first brought into the door of the charge-room he shouted a bit?—When he was first brought to the station he was shouting.

6350. What sort of things was he shouting?—"Leave go my arm." Just the usual sort of shouting we hear every night from disorderly persons.

6351. Did you hear him asking anything about why he was brought there?—Not to my knowledge.

6352. You did not hear him say that?—No, because I was dealing with other prisoners.

6353. You are in the habit of being on this charging duty frequently?—It is my duty.

6354. You have a bench alongside the room where the prisoners wait their turn to be charged, have you not?—There is a bench there where they sit down.

6355. When would you consider the charge-room full? How many would you bring in at a time?—If I only had two prisoners there and they were very noisy I should consider it full. It is not giving prisoners a fair hearing, and not dealing fairly with them, if they cannot hear what the officer has to say.

6356. You want to keep your charge-room quiet?—Certainly.

6357. Was it by your direction or of his own motion that Inspector McKay took this man to the waiting-room?—He was taken there because Inspector McKay knew the work had to be done. It was no direction of mine. It is an understood thing.

6358. The waiting-room is a regular place to take prisoners to?—If the charge-room is noisy and full.

6359. What you say about the bell is that very likely Altfuldisch rang the bell and was not attended to for some time?—He may have rung the bell, and we have a lot of work to do, so that we cannot be running up and down; but I was up and down the passage all the night till about 2 o'clock.

6360. Are you perfectly certain that it was you yourself who asked Altfuldisch about the bail and not some other officer?—It was myself; I went myself.

6361. Are you certain?—Yes.

6362. Was it not an officer marked with smallpox?—I cannot say. That may have been the reserve man, and he might have put the question to him. I could not say; but I went myself.

6363. (Mr. Whitmore.) What is the practice of the police at your station about answering bells rung in the cells?—If we hear a bell rung we should go down to the cell as soon as possible.

6364. You would yourself as Inspector?—Yes. Of course, if I was engaged the other police-constable on reserve naturally would go down; but we get prisoners in the cells, drunken persons, and there they will stop, and will simply ring the bell, and if you go down you could stay outside the cell with them all night.

6365. Would you think it your duty to answer the first bell that was rung by such a prisoner?—Yes, it would be our duty; and if we saw there was that state of things we should know it was all right, and that it was simply done out of wantonness.

6366. Supposing you yourself were engaged in other duties and some other policeman was there?—I should order the police-constable on reserve to go down and see what was the matter.

6367. (Mr. Dickinson.) How is it that it took such a long time before the prisoner was bailed out in this case?—He declined to allow us to inform his wife or make inquiries at his address. That was up to 2 o'clock, when I was relieved.

6368. Did you know him personally?—No, he was a total stranger to me.

6369. But he lives three doors away from the station?—It may be so, but I do not live in the neighbourhood, and I only go in and out of the station on duty.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) How was Mander described in the charge-sheet?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) A gardener—a German subject.

6370. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That is what you took down from what he said?—Yes, from what he told me.

6371. Was Mander violent?—He was just like the usual disorderly persons coming in who shout and rave.

6372. But all disorderly persons when arrested are not violent when brought to the station?—He may have been violent. I could not say. It is so long ago now.

6373. Was there any difficulty in bringing Mander into the police station?—No, I do not think there was. There was a good deal of shouting going on the whole of the time.

6374. Was Ruppert violent?—He was shouting.

6375. Ruppert was?—Yes, shouting. There was a deal of shouting with him.

6376. What was Ruppert shouting?—"Let go of my arm." That is the usual shouting.

6377. You seem to have a form of putting this—"It is the usual thing." What I am asking you is about a particular case. Have you any recollection of this particular case?—It is a long time ago.

6378. But if you do not recollect it it is better to say so?—I cannot recollect definitely.

6379. Have you any recollection at all of Ruppert being brought to the station?—Certainly.

6380. Have you any recollection as to whether he was violent?—The only thing is that he was shouting. I know that.

6381. Do you recollect sufficiently to pledge yourself that Ruppert was shouting when he was brought to the station, or are you speaking from what you say is the usual thing?—I should say he was shouting.

6382. Do you recollect it?—He was shouting.

6383. Do you recollect that he was shouting?—Yes, I think I do. I think he was shouting.

6384. What was he shouting, do you remember?—"Let go my arm. What are you catching hold of me for?" He was shouting that probably. The exact words I cannot say.

6385. I want to understand what your evidence is. You say he may have been shouting, and probably he was shouting. I am asking you on oath to state what your recollection about it is. If you have no recollection about it I want you to say so. I do not want you to tell me what he probably did or what he may have done?—I cannot give the exact words.

6386. Was Altfuldisch violent when he was brought in?—Yes.

6387. Was there any difference in the behaviour of the three?—Yes.

6388. What was the difference?—Altfuldisch had to be brought into the station. He was resisting his way into the station.

6389. Altfuldisch was more violent than the others?—Yes.

6390. He was brought in with difficulty?—Yes.

6391. And the others were not brought in with difficulty?—No.

6392. Is that what you mean?—That is what I mean.

6393. That is what you recollect?—Yes.

6394. Are you clear about that?—Yes.

6395. Is your memory as good as it was when you made the report?—Yes.

6396. How came you to say this in the report dealing with Mander, Ruppert, and Altfuldisch, all three: "The prisoners were shouting, behaving in a very violent manner, and were brought into the station with great difficulty"?—Dealing with it as a general term I embodied it for the three—as a general term.

6397. Dealing with it as a general term you embodied it for the three. Is that your answer?—Dealing with it as a general term I described it in that way.

6398. Dealing with what as a general term?—That they were violent; Altfuldisch was violent on being brought into the station. The others were shouting, and I should class that as being violent.

6399. You say they were brought into the station with great difficulty. According to your evidence just now given to me in a series of questions the only one who was brought into the station with difficulty was Altfuldisch. How came you to say all the three were brought into the station with great difficulty?—I should say they were brought in; they were shouting and they had to be brought into the station. They were resisting.

6400. Who was resisting?—Altfuldisch was resisting; Ruppert was resisting and shouting, I should say.

6401. If Ruppert was resisting and shouting, do you mean he was brought in with difficulty?—I should say so if he was resisting.

6402. I do not understand you, because you told me just now that he was not?—If he does not come freely I would call that resisting, and violently, too.

6403. If struggling and not coming freely and resisting you are right in describing him as brought into the station with difficulty or resisting, but I should like to know which of the two is it you wish us to understand took place. Was Ruppert brought in with difficulty or was he not?—Ruppert was resisting, and was brought in with difficulty. I will put it in that way, he was resisting.

Inspector J. Remfry.

6404. What about Mander?—Mander was resisting.

6405. Brought in with great difficulty?—I cannot say with great difficulty.

6406. I am using your own words. Have you got this report of the 19th June, 1906, before you. Look at the report that you signed, and if it is a mistake say so. Do not answer till you have looked at the report? (Report handed to Witness.)—All the three prisoners were shouting when they were brought in. They were resisting coming to the station.

6407. Do look at your report and tell me whether you say that is true which you say there, "Prisoners"—that is all three of them—"were shouting, behaving in a very violent manner, and were brought into the station with great difficulty." Is that correct, or is it a mistaken impression of what had happened?—It is correct.

6408. Can you explain to me why it was that you told me just now they were not brought in with difficulty except Altfuldisch?—What I mean to say is that they were resisting when they were coming into the station, and, of course, you had to force them in.

6409. Do you mean that Ruppert was forced in?—Ruppert was brought in. He was forced into the station and brought in. He would not sit down when he was brought into the station. He had to be pushed on the seat and he got up again.

6410. Ruppert?—Ruppert. He was asked to sit down.

6411. Do you remember how you came to be asked to give this report?—I was told by Inspector McKay that the report had been called for, and I was directed to make a report.

6412. Were you told who had called for the report?—The Superintendent.

6413. In consequence of the Superintendent having asked Inspector McKay to get reports?—Yes.

6414. That is six months after the event?—Yes.

6415. You made no report before that?—None whatever.

6416. Did you hear any conversation with anybody about what had happened before you made the report?—None whatever.

6417. Was there anything to bring to your recollection what had happened?—Simply the charge book. I turned to the charge book and saw the prisoner's names and so on. Of course, I had seen the reports in the papers.

6418. But the reports in the papers were just shortly after the occurrence?—I had seen nothing since. It was the first intimation I had of it.

6419. At this time did you know that this case had been circulated in the Police and Public Vigilance Society's report or publication?—No.

6420. Did you tell Altfuldisch that he could have bail?—Yes.

6421. When was that?—After he was charged.

6422. You mean at the time he was charged?—Yes, at the time he was charged.

6423. Did he say he did not want it?—He said he did not want it. His wife knew where he was, and he did not want her disturbed.

6424. (Mr. Dickinson.) Did you tell Ruppert he could have bail?—Yes, it is the usual procedure.

6425. You know he said he did not understand anything about bail until he got into the cells?—Yes, I have heard him say that.

6426. Can you say from your recollection that you actually told him he could have bail?—To the best of my belief I did.

6427. Do you tell every prisoner he could have bail?—Yes, we will send to anyone. It is my usual practice as soon as the man is charged in the case of disorder and drunkenness to say that we will send for bail for him to anyone he wishes, a respectable householder if he has not got a good address, or send to his address. In many cases they decline to let us go to their address because they do not want their friends to know where they are.

6428. At what moment is that done?—As soon as they are charged; on their way to the cells, or before they are taken out of the charge room.

6429. Is that an intimation that you, yourself, as Inspector, give, or do you leave it for somebody else to do?—I do it as Inspector in charge of the station and taking charges.

6430. You make that the regular rule?—It is the regular rule and the regular practice.

6431. (Chairman.) I understand you have a distinct recollection of this Sunday morning?—Yes.

6432. Why?—There was such a noise at the time bringing them in, and from the statements afterwards that were made at the court. I heard of the case at the court and the allegations that were made.

6433. I understand that Mander was the first prisoner of this lot brought into the charge room that night?—Yes.

6434. And you were in the charge room then?—Yes.

6435. It would be, as I gather, a little after 12 o'clock?—Yes, just after 12.

6436. Was Ruppert brought in while Mander was in the charge room?—Yes.

6437. How long after Mander had been in the charge room?—I could not say. A few minutes probably; about five minutes probably.

6438. Was there anybody else in the charge room when Mander was brought in?—I think there was one person there then.

6439. Had you proceeded to take down the particulars about Mander and to charge him before Ruppert came in?—No.

6440. You were dealing with the other cases?—Yes.

6441. And then Ruppert came in?—Yes.

6442. Was he put into the dock at once?—No.

6443. Was he told to sit on the bench you have referred to?—He was told to sit on a seat.

6444. Were you sitting down?—I was sitting down at the desk.

6445. Is the desk in front of the dock or at right angles to the dock?—In front of the dock.

6446. Not quite near it?—No, not quite near it.

6447. Where is the entrance into the charge room?—To the right of the dock.

6448. How far is the entrance to the charge room from the entrance into the police station? Are there steps leading up to the police station?—No, it is practically on a level. There is one step.

6449. About how many feet is the charge room door from the entrance?—About 15 ft., I should say—three or four yards. It is not very far. Practically, by going to the door you can see the entrance.

6450. From where you are sitting can you see the waiting room?—No.

6451. During the time that elapsed from Mander being brought in to Ruppert being brought in you were sitting in your chair?—Yes.

6452. And you continued to sit there?—Yes.

6453. After Ruppert was brought in was Altfuldisch the next prisoner brought in?—Yes.

6454. That, I suppose, was about eight minutes or so, was it not?—Probably about that.

6455. Had Ruppert been cleared out of the room by the time Altfuldisch came in?—No.

6456. You were sitting in your chair then during the time Altfuldisch was in the waiting room?—Yes.

6457. How do you know Ruppert was resisting when he was brought to the entrance of the police station?—I heard a noise at the door; I turned round and partially walked towards the door.

6458. You turned round and partially walked towards the door?—Yes.

6459. May I remind you that you said a few minutes ago that you were in your chair all the time?—Yes, I was dealing with the charges; I got up and walked back again.

6460. The question I asked you was, were you in the chair during all the time that elapsed from the time that Mander was brought in to the time at which Ruppert was brought in, and you said "Yes"?—But I may have got off my seat. I had to take him to the cell. I should have had to have cleared the other prisoners out, and then, of course, I may have got off the seat when I heard the noise at the station door. I got off my seat when I heard the noise at the station door.

6461. You may have done so; but did you move from your seat between the time at which you took the charge against Mander and the time at which you took the charge against Ruppert?—No.

6462. Did Ruppert go out of the room before Altfuldisch was brought into it?—No.

6463. Did you leave your chair between the time at which you charged Ruppert and the time at which Altfuldisch was brought into the charge room?—No.

6464. Then when did you partially go towards the door?—When he was brought into the station.

6465. When who was brought into the station?—When Ruppert was being brought into the station I was dealing with another charge. Hearing the disturbance there, I got off my seat and walked towards the door, and he was brought into the charge room, and then I went back again and finished what I was doing.

6466. Did you leave your chair again?—Yes, I left my chair again when Altfuldisch was being brought in, owing to the shouting, to see what it was.

6467. You did not actually go to the entrance door and see the behaviour there of any one of these prisoners?—No, not to the entrance door.

6468. The only reason you have for saying that Ruppert, for instance, was resisting arrest and resisting being brought to the station is that you heard a noise at the door?—I heard a noise at the door, and saw him being brought into the charge room from the passage.

6469. "The prisoners were shouting, behaving in a very violent manner, and were brought into the station with great difficulty." That is in your report?—Yes.

6470. How do you know that?—When I heard the prisoners being brought into the station I was dealing with another charge, and I got off my seat and saw that they were being brought into the passage way and into the charge room. I saw that Ruppert when he was in the charge room was violent. He would not sit down. He was resisting, and had to be put down on the chair, and he got up again. When Altfuldisch was brought in, there was a noise at the entrance. I did the same thing, and he was conveyed from there into the waiting room.

6471. You did not see him taken to the waiting room?—Not after he passed the portals of the charge room door.

6472. You saw him pass the charge room door?—Yes.

6473. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) A question about your system of reports. First of all, when this report was asked for, do you mean that you had no idea what it was wanted for?—That it had been called for by the Commissioner from the Superintendent, and the Superintendent directed the Divisional Inspector to call for my report for the information of the Commissioner. That is what I should understand when Inspector McKay told me I should have to make a report on the matter.

6474. You have had a good many cases since then?—Yes.

6475. Did you talk it over with anybody?—No.

6476. Did you remember the names?—I was told the name of Altfuldisch.

6477. Did you remember who they were? Did you remember Ruppert and Mander?—Yes, it was the same case right through. The same officers were in the charge. Inspector J. Remfry. 17 Oct. 1906.

6478. Am I to understand that you did not have any conversation with anybody at all about this when you wrote the report?—No.

6479. That you had spoken to nobody about it?—No one whatever.

6480. You simply reconstituted in your mind what had happened, and then wrote it down in the report?—That is so.

6481. (Chairman.) Have you got here the original report that you wrote?—Yes. That is it. (Handing report to the Chairman.)

6482. Is it all in your handwriting?—It is all in my handwriting.

6483. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Did you know that Inspector McKay had reported, or was reporting?—I knew he would have to report, because that would be the procedure. All the officers concerned would have to report.

6484. Did you ever hear from Inspector Manning that Ruppert had been brought into the station with considerable difficulty? Did Inspector Manning ever say that to you?—No.

6485. He was the man who brought him?—He was the man who brought him.

6486. He never, so far as I understand, made that complaint against Ruppert. I am speaking from recollection of the evidence, but I think he said he came quite quietly.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Inspector Manning's statement was that Ruppert went so willingly that he outstripped the inspector.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) So I thought. That does not look like a man who is brought to the station with great difficulty. He seems to have hurried on.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I think it is an indication that there was no inter-communication in this case.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I am not going to answer that observation which you have made, Mr. Bankes, but you must not take that as admitted.

6487. (Mr. Dickinson.) Just take your report before you and look at this passage: "Sub-divisional Inspector McKay stated that he was dispersing a crowd of persons who had been fighting in Greek Street, when Altfuldisch shouted, 'We shan't go away for the f——g police,' and on being requested to go away he refused." When was it that Inspector McKay told you exactly that story?—Those were the terms used when he charged him.

6488. That was in December?—Yes. This is only a short report of the whole facts of the case. This report was made in June.

6489. You kept that in your memory from December to June?—Yes. On the charge of obscene language I should remember very little of it. It is a very small portion according to the other evidence.

6490. Did you know that Inspector McKay had drawn up a report on June 18th before that?—No, I did not know he had made a report on the matter.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) That is all the evidence I propose to give, but if there is any point the Commissioners desire to know about these reports, of course, we should be very please to deal with it.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I should like to ask a question from Inspector McKay about that.

Inspector Francis McKay recalled.

6491. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) How came these reports to be made in June?—I had a communication from the Superintendent asking for reports in connection with the case in question. Inspector F. McKay.

6492. From what Superintendent?—My Superintendent.

6493. Who would he be?—Superintendent Mann.

6494. Did he make that request in writing?—I think it was a telegram, as far as I can recollect now. A telegram was sent to him by the Commissioner. I think that arose from something that appeared in the book published by the Police and Public Vigilance Society.

6395. Calling attention to this case?—Yes.

6496. I see you signed this report of Inspector Remfry's?—Yes.

6497. Inspector Remfry seems to have made a mistake about it, does not he?—I think he does.

6498. That seems to me to be the only explanation of

Inspector F. McKay.

17 Oct. 1906.

it, that he remembered Altfuldisch's case, and thought that the other two cases were the same?—Yes. I saw each officer with the exception, I think, of Police Constable Miles, and I told the sergeant to tell him that I wanted a report of what occurred, and I think when I saw each officer I told him the facts of the case.

6499. Recalled them to their recollection?—Yes, that is so.

6500. (Mr. Whitmore.) As you recollected it?—Yes. That is how they made the reports, of course, getting the names and addresses from the charge book. Inspector Remfrey I know was extremely busy that night.

6501. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I can understand him making a mistake, but I am very anxious to know whether I am to take it that this report, in your view, is mistaken or correct?—I think it really is a mistake, because I know that Ruppert went along very smartly.

6502. He was only violent as regards pace, from what I understand?—Yes. I do not know how he behaved in the charge room; I could not say, but I know he walked along smartly.

6503. (Chairman.) There is no complaint of violence in the charge room?—No. When I came in with my prisoner they were there then, and, of course, they were quite orderly.

6504. (Mr. Dickinson.) With regard to this particular report you have said that you refreshed Inspector Remfrey's memory with regard to the facts of the case?—Yes.

6505. Did he write out this report of his own accord entirely, or did he do it in consultation with yourself?—No, he wrote that, I think, some considerable time afterwards, as near as I can recollect. He left it on my desk, and I found it on my desk when he had completed it. As far as I can recollect at the time he was on night duty, and I think I told him he was on night duty at 10 o'clock, and I refreshed his memory with regard to certain facts.

6506. And I suppose you refreshed his mind simply with regard to these particular words that you alleged the prisoner used?—Yes.

6507. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Is that the usual course, that the Inspector refreshes the recollection of the man who is to report?—Oh, no, unless it is in such a case as this that occurs so long afterwards. I mean an Inspector is dealing with hundreds and hundreds of charges, and it is impossible for him to remember every one without some assistance from the person who is dealing with them in the first instance.

6508. Without describing the case to bring it to his mind?—Yes.

6509. Did you read this report?—Yes.

6510. Did you notice that mistake in it?—I certainly did not notice it at the time.

6511. (Chairman.) I understand your signing it does not necessarily mean that you agree with the report, but it is simply to identify it?—Yes, that is so.

6512. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) And it is important from your point of view to point out that the complaint that was made with regard to unfair treatment was with regard to Altfuldisch and not with respect to Ruppert and Mander?—That is so. The difficulty is this, we are often found fault with in cases where we have to give evidence on these reports. Counsel very often raises objection if we tell a person what to say or ask him to make out more than one report. It is a very difficult matter, when we are dealing with reports of constables especially, to get them to keep to the point you want. I have myself in cases had to get them to make as many as five and six reports at one time before I could get what I wanted, and then I could not get what I wanted, and you cannot tell them because it is not considered right to tell them what to say. That is the great difficulty we have in dealing with reports.

6513. (Chairman.) Even when they are reporting as to facts which are within their own knowledge?—Quite so.

6514. (Mr. Whitmore.) That is the difficulty of expressing themselves in words?—They have a difficulty.

6515. What is material and important?—Yes, that is so. That is the great difficulty we have.

6516. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It seems to me the difficulty would be none the less if the Chief Commissioner's suggestion was adopted, which is that the policeman should make a statement of what had occurred. That is what the report is meant to be?—I think that would be very much better in this way, because you would know what you want, and you ask him questions.

6517. You mean by question and answer?—By question and answer. I think it would be a much better policy, especially in cases where there is some importance attached to it. It is much the better course. I say, and I have said it over and over again, it is an awful difficulty and an awful strain on officers to get reports on these matters. It is so difficult to get them to come to the point.

6518. (Chairman.) Do officers sometimes say they have no recollection whatever of the case?—Yes.

6519. Why do not they report that if it be the case?—In a case like that they are bound to have some recollection of it, although their memory may not be so fresh on the matter.

6520. (Mr. Whitmore.) Do not take this particular report, but take a corresponding case. When you find an Inspector in his report that you had called for of a particular occurrence had made statements in his report which you knew were not at all accurate, on reading it through what course would you take?—If the matter came under my own observation I would call attention to that fact, but I could not in this particular case because I did not actually know what occurred.

6521. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) In this particular instance (I put questions to Inspector Remfry about it) the important matter at issue was what had happened with regard to Altfuldisch?—Yes.

6522. There was no complaint as to the other two at all. It seems to have been treated as all being in the same category?—Yes, there was no occasion to mention the other two.

6523. Was not a report called for in respect of Mander and Ruppert?—I do not think so.

6524. You did not report?—I probably should detail what occurred. The question I know which was asked was with regard to Mr. Altfuldisch. I heard Inspector Remfry say he came towards the door, and he certainly did come some few steps towards the door.

6525. Do I understand that no complaint was ever made either by Ruppert or Mander after what had taken place?—No, none whatever.

6526. The only complaint that was made was with respect to Mr. Altfuldisch in respect of his case?—Yes.

6527. Was the report which you had heard of or seen of the Police and Vigilance Committee with reference to Mr. Altfuldisch's case, and not with reference to the other two?—Not with reference to the other two.

6528. (Mr. Whitmore.) In giving your directions to make a report, do you refer specifically to the case of the one man?—Yes.

6529. (Chairman.) I rather gather that you hesitate, when you look at a constable's report, to tell him to make another report, because you properly fear that comment may be made afterwards on the fact that you rejected one report and that another report is substituted for it?—That is so. That question is very often raised. It is very unfair to the constables themselves to treat the reports from another point of view.

6530. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I should suggest that when a constable does not recollect with regard to the behaviour of a man, he should state in his report when it is called for some time after that he does not recollect anything with regard to the behaviour of the particular man. Do they ever do that?—If it is a long while back we have frequently to call their attention to it.

6531. Supposing he says he does not remember. Supposing Inspector Remfry was asked for a report on the 18th June, six months afterwards, and supposing he had said, what appears to be the case, as far as I gather, that he really did not recollect much about Ruppert or Mander?—That would be very fair.

6532. Why does not he say that in his report?—He was going practically on the refresher that I gave him.

6533. (Chairman.) You would hardly have suggested to him that Ruppert was violent?—I did not do that. He was evidently misleading himself on that point.

6534. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Does that mean this, and just follcw what I am going to put to you. Does that mean that you told him what had happened with regard to Mr. Altfuldisch in refreshing his memory, and that you think he understood that also to apply to Ruppert and Mander?—I think that is possible. I know I called his attention to how the arrest took place.

6535. His recollection was not of very much value with regard to Ruppert and Mander, but he took it as a refresher from you, and assumed that was what had taken place?—Yes.

6536. Is that the way a good many police reports are made?—No, I cannot say that; in fact, I do not know that I have had a report in a case so long after as this one.

6537. It is unusual to report long after?——

6538. (Chairman.) Just six months?—In all my experience I do not recollect such a case.

6539. (Mr. Whitmore.) I suppose it was brought to your knowledge afterwards?—I never heard a word about the matter at all from the time it was dealt with finally at the police court. I never heard a word about it.

6540. It was not drawn to your attention?—No.

6541. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It was brought to your attention from the publication?—That was from the report.

(Chairman.) It was from seeing the pamphlet.

6542. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I understood from Inspector McKay, that what led to the report was the publication dealing with this case of Mr. Altfuldisch. I suppose in consequence a request was made that you should send in reports so as to have them in writing?—I think I am right in saying that there were statements in the pamphlet, but I have not seen it yet. It is only what I have been told.

6543. (Mr. Dickinson.) What is the object of your signature being under all these reports?—They come through me. It might be a matter I should have to deal with.

6544. Do you make a report?—My report would be a covering report.

6545. You make a covering report in addition?—Yes.

6546. Reports by the constables and the Inspectors are all signed by you as well?—Yes, that is so, to signify that they have come through me, and that these are all the reports of the officers dealing with the case.

6547. Do you think it necessary to look through the reports first of all to see, as far as you are aware, that they are accurate?—Yes.

6548. Then the signature means more?—Yes, with regard to the accuracy of them. I mean to this extent, I would not be justified in altering them.

6549. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Does that mean anything more than that you countersign the reports as having been received?—Yes.

6550. (Mr. Whitmore.) When you get a report, and you know it is not accurate, have you the power to alter it?—No, I have no power to alter a report.

6551. (Mr. Dickinson.) Suppose in a constable's report you find a mistake, what is your course? Would you send on the report?—No, I would not take the report under those circumstances. I am responsible for the whole thing that occurs in the division.

6552. (Chairman.) I should have thought that in your covering report you would have referred to the fact. Supposing a constable in the report makes a statement of fact which to your knowledge or in your opinion may be inaccurate, do you not make any report on that in your covering report?—I would get him to alter it. I would not take it from him if I knew it was wrong.

6553. (Mr. Whitmore.) In this particular case we are speaking of you raised no question, because you did not know what had taken place?—No, I could not say what had occurred in the station.

6554. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) If your attention had been directed to this passage which we have read several times you would have known from what had happened that this was incorrect?—I did know so far as the street was concerned, but I really did not know what had occurred in the station.

6555. (Chairman.) I understand you were not present on the occasion, but you knew by the 19th of June that Ruppert had not been behaving in a very violent manner, and had not been brought into the station with very great difficulty?—Yes.

6556. It escaped you, I understand?—As I said before, I certainly did not deal with Mander or Ruppert in that report.

6557. That is why you did not make any alteration?—Yes.

6558. It was true about Altfuldisch, and you did not direct your attention to the case of the other two men, that is what I understand?—Yes.

6559. Supposing Inspector Remfry had stated in this report, for example, that Mr. Altfuldisch had behaved quite quietly, entered the station quietly, and gave no trouble, and that disagreed entirely with your view, what would happen then?—I would not take it like that. I would certainly have some comment to make upon it.

6560. You would send the report back to him? Would you see him about it?—I would see him, certainly.

6561. Would you point out that you did not agree with him?—I would.

6562. Would you point out in what way you thought it ought to be corrected?—I would point out what occurred, being the person present there at the time, and knowing actually what did occur. I would simply call his attention to those facts. If he agreed with them would be a matter entirely for himself.

6563. Suppose he took the view that your recollection was wrong and that his was right, what would happen then?—I would not have power to order him to alter his report contrary to his recollection.

6564. You would not have power to order him to alter his report, but what would happen do you think?—Such a thing has occurred.

6565. I suppose his recollection would in the end agree with yours if you were his superior?—Not necessarily.

6566. Not necessarily, but most likely?—I have several officers who do not hold the same opinion as I do.

6567. This is a question of fact. It is not a question of opinion. If you pointed out what had happened, and you were the person in charge of this man, and you had brought him in and you said to Inspector Remfry "You are wrong about this. I brought the man in. He was very violent, and gave me a lot of difficulty." Do you mean that then Inspector Remfry would not have altered his report?—If that occurred, I would not expect him to put it in the report.

6568. If he had made a mistake and you had pointed that out to him in an ordinary case you would expect him to alter it?—Yes.

6569. But as it was true with regard to Mr. Altfuldisch's case you did not pay attention to the other two cases, which were unimportant?—I was not in the other two cases.

6570. (Chairman.) I suppose sometimes after conversation with a constable you would alter even your own report?—Yes.

6570*. When your recollection has been refreshed?—Yes.

6571. If a person deals with a matter directly, his memory has a better chance of being correct than the memory of a man who has had such a tremendous amount of work to do as Inspector Remfry has had to do. I may say, I suppose, that there have been just over six thousand prisoners since that time.

6572. Would it be his business to take charges?—No. They perform four hours' station duty. Their hours are these: The day duty Inspectors come on at six o'clock in the morning; one remains in charge of the station, and the other goes out patrolling. The one who remains in charge of the station remains there till ten o'clock. Then the officer who is out patrolling comes in and relieves him, and the other one who has been in first goes out for the next four hours. That is their eight hours. The same at two o'clock and the same at ten o'clock at night.

(Earl Russell.) There was a statement made about Mr. Altfuldisch which he is very anxious to contradict which was made by Inspector McKay. He was not cross-examined to-day. Perhaps you would allow me to ask him a question.

(Chairman.) Very well.

FERDINAND ALTFULDISCH, recalled.

F. Altfuldisch. 17 Oct. 1906.

6573. (Earl Russell.) You have heard Inspector McKay say he had seen you seven or eight times coming in or going out of Wede's Hotel?—Yes, I strongly protest against it.

6574. How often have you been there?—I have been there twice, on each occasion on the invitation of Mr. Ruppert.

(Chairman.) Do you wish to ask any questions, Mr. Bankes.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I do not think it necessary to go into these details.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Before we leave this case, have you the letter from the Commissioner asking for the report.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) No. I am told it was a telephone message.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That explains it.

(Chairman.) Then that closes the evidence as to the case of Mr. Altfuldisch?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes.

(Chairman.) Mr. Clinch has not been cross-examined. Are you ready, Mr. Bankes, to go on with Mr. Clinch's case now?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes.

(Chairman.) Lord Russell, you have finished the evidence in Clinch's case?

(Earl Russell.) With the exception of those two Post Office officials whom you have been good enough to send for to-day.

JAMES CLINCH, recalled.

J. Clinch.

(Earl Russell.) Before Mr. Clinch is cross-examined may I ask permission to put one more question to him?

(Chairman.) Yes.

(Earl Russell.) Might the witness have handed to him the original statement made by the woman in the charge room?

(Chairman.) Yes. (The statement was handed to the Witness.)

6575. (Earl Russell.) When you were in the charge room at the police station a statement was made by the woman in the case, you told us?—Yes.

6576. Who wrote that statement?—The lady wrote it herself.

6577. Did she sign it?—Yes.

6578. Did you see that statement yourself?—Yes.

6579. Did you have an opportunity of reading it yourself?—Yes.

6580. Was it read out?—I read it myself.

6581. You had it in your own hand?—Yes.

6582. Will you look at that statement which you have before you. Is that the statement that you had in your hand at the police station?—No.

6583. In what respect does that statement differ, according to your recollection, from the other statement?—It differs a lot from the statement that I read.

6584. Will you tell the Commissioners how you say it differs?

(Chairman.) You say "This is not the statement I read"?—No.

6585. Do you mean to say that it is not the same sheet of paper that was handed to you?—It was a sheet of paper similar to that.

6586. But this is not the sheet of paper from which you read?—The writing is different from what I read.

6587. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Do you mean the reading?—The reading or the writing of the young lady on that paper was different to the one I read.

6588. (Chairman.) I want to proceed by steps. You say that is not the paper you had in your hand at the police station?—No.

6589. (Earl Russell.) Will you look at that paper and tell the Commissioners in what respect the contents of that paper differ from the contents of the paper you read yourself?—The paper I read was to the effect that the young lady went up the mews to make water and she asked the constable to go up there with her and cover her while she did so.

6590. Do you find that statement there?—No.

6591. Are you positive about that?—Positive.

6592. You held a piece of paper in your hand with that on it?—Yes.

6593. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Where is it you live?—5, Benson Avenue, Upton Park.

6594. I do not quite know where that is, but that is a long distance away?—It is the station this side of East Ham.

6595. And Mount Pleasant that we have been hearing about is in Finsbury?—In Farringdon Road.

6596. So that you do not reside anywhere in the neighbourhood of this Post Office?—No.

6597. Have you any reason to suppose that this man Gibbard knew you, or knew anything about you?—No.

6598. You do not reside in the neighbourhood where he is stationed?—No, I have never lived up that way.

6599. You had no reason to suppose that he either knew you or knew anything about you?—No.

6600. I notice that at the police court you told the Magistrate you had been a soldier. Is that right?—Some years ago.

6601. You did say before the Magistrate that you had been a soldier?—Yes.

6602. Is that a fact?—Yes.

6603. You had been a soldier?—Yes.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) For three years, in the statement I have got.

6604. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) What regiment did you serve in?—The Scots Guards.

6605. You had no reason to suppose that Gibbard knew anything about that until you mentioned it at the police court, as far as you know?—No.

6606. Have you a house of your own where you live?—No, I rent it.

6607. Do you have rooms or the whole house?—The whole house.

6608. Have you got a family?—Yes.

6609. You live at home with your wife and family?—Yes.

6610. At what time did you leave home that evening?—The Sunday evening, as this occurred early on the Monday morning.

6611. Yes?—When I left home it was twenty past ten.

6612. You would have to go by train, I suppose?—Yes.

6613. You found yourself in the neighbourhood of these mews just about 12 o'clock, was it?—It was 10 minutes past 12 when I went past them.

6614. How far is that from the place where you work?—The mews?

6615. Yes?—I should say about 300 yards—five minutes' walk.

6616. Is there lavatory accommodation where you work?—In the office, yes.

6617. Had you ever been in these mews before?—Never in my life.

6618. You knew nothing at all about them?—No.

6619. The fact is, when you got into the mews you found they were absolutely dark, were they not?—The mews were dark.

6620. I mean it was 12 o'clock at night in October?—10 past 12.

6621. There was no artificial light in the mews at all?—Not in the mews—only a light about six yards to the left of the mews.

6622. We have heard from one of the witnesses that at the opening from the mews into the street there is an archway?—Yes.

6623. And the mews are quite narrow, are they not? Supposing these are the mews, there is room for a van to stand lengthways, and then there is a passage of about 3 ft.?—Yes, 3 ft. or 4 ft.

6624. So that really the mews are only about 9 ft. or 10 ft. wide?—Yes.

6625. So it is a very narrow entrance?—When carts are there.

6626. It is a narrow entrance—it is only about 10 ft. wide?—Yes, and about 3 ft. wide when the carts are in there.

6627. When carts are standing there, there is a passage-way of about 3 ft.?—Yes.

6628. On that night there was no artificial light inside the mews at all?—Not inside the mews nor outside the mews.

6629. The nearest lamp was a lamp in this direction, close to the house where the Italians live?—Yes.

6630. You do not suggest that that light would throw any light into the mews at all?—Just slightly. The light from the road would throw a slight light into the mews.

6631. It could not throw light far into the mews?—Yes, just a faint light into the mews.

6632. You say you turned into the mews, and that that was the condition of things. Were there vans standing along the mews right up to the entrance?—To the entrance of the mews.

6633. So that anybody turning into the mews in this direction would find a van on his left?—If he turned into the mews coming from the right he would find the vans on his left.

6634. Exactly. This is the position. The vans were standing lengthways along this side of the mews?—On the left of the mews.

6635. The Italians' house is here?—No, not there—on the left of the cart—on the other side of the cart.

6636. We will assume that the white is the street?

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Rosebery Avenue.

6637. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I mean the street, and this is the mews, opening out of the street. The vans are ranged along here?—Yes.

6638. And the Italians live here?—Yes.

6639. These are the mews, here is the street, and this is where the Italians live?—It does not run in that direction; it runs that way, from the way I am standing; but you are looking at it from the point of view of where you are standing.

6640. I have a plan here, but before you look at this plan, can you tell me this. How far does the mews go down from Rosebery Avenue?—I could not say exactly how far it goes down.

6641. You have never been down there and you do not know?—Never in my life.

6642. Do you know whether there is a corner, and that the mews turns round a corner and goes in another direction?—No, I was never down the mews; I have only passed it.

6643. Just look at that plan. (Handing.) Does that plan convey to you a correct impression? You see Rosebery Avenue at the bottom?—Yes.

6644. You see the mews, do you not?—Shall I take this broad arrow as the mews, up here?

6645. Yes. You understand the plan, do you not?—It does not state so.

6646. If you do not understand it, let me have it back again. (The plan was handed to the learned Counsel.) The broad arrow only points to the width of the road at that point?—If it had said "Mews," pointing that way, I should have understood it.

6647. Now, let us follow what happened on this night. You say there was a van. From which direction did you approach the mews—from the direction opposite to that in which the Italians lived?—Yes.

6648. So that you would turn to your right to get into the mews?—Yes.

6649. When you turned to your right you came into the narrow passage which the vans left?—Yes, leaving the vans on my left.

6650. Was there a van on that night which was just inside the mews?—The first van would be, I should say, a good yard inside the mews.

6651. A yard inside the mews?—About level with the brickwork of the other house.

6652. Had they got as many vans into the mews as they could get?—I do not know.

6653. That van nearest the road was almost up to the entrance to the mews?—I should say not, because the entrance to the mews would come right out to the end of the kerb.

6654. It would come in line with the archway?—Yes.

6655. Just tell us in your own way how far down the mews did you go?—I went against the first wheel of the second cart.

6656. Were they four-wheeled vans?—Yes.

6657. So you passed one van, you went as far as the first wheel, and you came to the second van?—It was the hind wheel of the second one.

6658. Of course at that point the mews would be quite in the dark?—Yes, with the exception of the light on the mews glittering from the roadway.

6659. With that exception it was quite dark?—It was not pitch dark, because I could discern anything.

6660. You told us when you were in that position you noticed the woman and the constable?—Yes.

6661. Just describe to the Commissioners where you say they were at that time?—When I pulled up against the hind wheel of the second cart, the policeman and the woman were between the first and the second vans. I stopped by the hind wheel of the second van. The hind wheel of the second van would be about a yard or so from the hind wheel of the first van, but there was quite sufficient passage between the two wheels, and you could go through, because the shafts of the van were tilted up, so between the wheels there was left a space. I pulled up at the rear wheel of the second van.

6662. You mean the first you came to?—Not the first wheel of the first van.

6663. It was the first wheel of the second van you came to?—Of the second van.

6664. Do you mean to say that the van was standing with its hind wheels towards Rosebery Avenue?—I could not say exactly whether it would be the hind wheels or the front wheels, but they were the wheels of the second van.

6665. The first wheels you came to of the second van?—Yes.

6666. Those were the wheels you were up against?—They were the wheels I stopped against.

6667. Where exactly do you say the policeman and the woman were between those two carts?—In opposition or in front of me where I pulled up.

6668. Just describe exactly how they were. Were they just standing between the two carts?—They were standing just between the two carts, with the woman against the wall.

6669. The woman was up against the wall of the mews?—Yes, on the left.

6670. How many statements have you made about this occurrence? Did you make a statement in the police station?—I made a statement in the police station.

6671. And you wrote down of your own accord what you had to say about it there, did you not?—Yes.

6672. Then you applied to the Magistrate for a summons, did you not?—Yes.

6673. And he told you you must put your statement into writing?—Yes.

J. Clinch.
17 Oct. 1906.

6674. So you made a second statement in writing?—Yes.

6675. Then you made a sworn information?—Yes.

6676. That was three. Then you gave evidence in the police court?—Yes.

6677. That was four?—I was compelled to do that.

6678. I am not saying you were not. I only want to know how many times you have repeated this story. That is four times before you came here?—Yes.

6679. Do you say it was light enough for you to see the woman's position in that mews?—Yes.

6680. You swear that, do you?—It was not only the light that enabled me to see the position of the woman in the mews.

6681. What else was there?—The disarrangement of her white clothing when I saw them fall.

6682. Do you think you could see that if there was no light at all?—Certainly. You can see white in the dark.

6683. So that, however dark it was, you think you could see a woman's white petticoat?—I think anybody could with eyesight.

6684. Was she standing up, or what was she doing?—Standing up.

6685. Was the constable doing anything to her?—Yes.

6686. If she was standing up he would have his back to you, I suppose?—Yes.

6687. What did you see the constable doing?—He was committing an immoral act.

6688. Actually committing an immoral act?—Actually.

6689. That is what you saw, was it?—Yes.

6690. You pledge your oath to that?—Yes.

6691. What was the first thing that happened? Did you say anything or do anything?—Nothing whatever.

6692. The constable had got his back to you?—He had got his back to me; but as soon as I pulled up to the wheel he very soon had his face to me, because he turned from the woman.

6693. When he turned round, what do you say he did?—He asked me what I wanted there.

6694. Was that the first thing he said?—Yes.

6695. He asked you what you wanted there. Had he turned completely round then?—He turned completely round, and left the woman against the wall.

6696. Had he moved towards you at all?—He was coming towards me, and as he came towards me so I walked away.

6697. I am asking about before you walked away at all. Did he speak to you before he left the woman?—As soon as he heard my footstep at the wheel, he turned from the woman at once. I was surprised to find him there.

6698. Do you mean to say that he first saw you when he turned round towards you?—Yes. I saw the back of him as soon as I pulled up against the wheel.

6699. Was he in uniform?—Yes; he had a big coat on.

6700. You say you saw him turn round. Did he turn round before he spoke, or did he speak before he turned round?—As soon as he heard my footsteps at the wheel he turned round at once, and the lady's clothing fell.

6701. Then did he come towards you?—At once.

6702. Did he speak as he came away?—He turned round in a quick way, and said, "What do you want here?"

6703. Did you answer him?—I said, "Only to make water."

6704. What did you do then?—I did nothing. I commenced to walk away out of the mews, and he came from between the carts and walked on my heels.

6705. So that, up to that point, he had not struck you?—He struck me as soon as I told him that I had simply come there to make water.

6706. You did not tell us that. I asked you to describe exactly what happened in the first place, in your opinion, and you said he asked you what you were doing there, and that you said you had only come to make water. I asked you what next happened, and you said you turned to go away, and he walked on your heels?—He told me to clear out, and he gave me a blow at the back of the head at the same time that he remarked "Clear out." That was just as I turned from the wheel, and he emerged from the wheels.

6707. Did he strike you before he emerged from the wheels?—He could not, because he was between the two carts.

6708. Do I understand, according to you, he spoke to you before he emerged from the cart?—He spoke to me as he was emerging from the cart.

6709. And you answered him?—Yes.

6710. Do you suggest he struck you then?—He struck me as he came from the carts.

6711. At that time you had started to go out of the mews?—I had not started. I was just turning away from the wheel.

6712. Can you understand why the man should have struck you?—I can suggest something.

6713. To an ordinary person it would occur to one, would it not, that if you had found the man doing this, the last thing he would have done would have been to strike you without reason. If you had found him doing this he would want to make friends with you, rather than offend you?—If I had known the man had been there I should not have gone near there. I should have left him there.

6714. Your suggestion is that without saying anything to him at all, except that you had gone there to make water, he struck you?—Yes.

6715. Then I understand you to say that he followed you up the mews treading on your heels?—He followed me out of the mews, and not up the mews.

6716. Is it up the mews towards the road?—I was going away then. I was going out of the mews.

6717. Outside you say he struck you again?—Yes, on the stonework.

6718. When you got to the police station you had full opportunity then to say anything you liked about, had you not?—I had full opportunity, but I was upset; I felt in great pain, and I was eager to get back to my work.

6719. Let me read what you said then. You said then, "I beg to state that whilst walking along Rosebery Avenue I went up a mews behind some carts." Did you ever go behind the carts at all?—Not behind the carts.

6720. This is your own statement which you made at the police station. Let us go by steps and let us see how accurate you are. "I beg to state that whilst walking along Rosebery Avenue I went up a mews behind some carts." The fact is, you never went behind the carts at all, did you?—It is not behind the carts, but I take it it is behind the carts from the direction I was passing.

6721. I will go on. "Whilst there I observed the Policeman 215 G with this woman in the corner against a cart." Is there any corner in that mews except where the mews turns round at the bottom to go in the other direction?—I do not know anything as regards where the mews turns to go in the other direction. I never was down there before. I placed, when I wrote that down, the position they were in against the wall, and in between the two wheels. I placed that as a corner under cover.

6722. This is what you said—"With this woman in the corner against a cart"?—Yes.

6723. There is no corner at all in the position in which you now place it?—I do not say as regards the corner of a building or a house, but the corner which I termed the corner is the position they were in. They were in a corner under cover of two carts and between the two wheels against a wall. I termed it at that time in a corner where they could not be seen.

6724. Your own language is "In the corner against a cart"?—In the corner between the carts.

6725. I will go on, "The woman at the time having her clothes in an improper manner"?—Yes.

6726. "She at once dropped her clothes, when the said policeman came up to me and struck me a severe blow, at the same time remarked to be off, and if I had any property up there, and he also walked on my heels until I got on the footpath when he struck me." You do not say there a word about having seen the policeman in the act of connection?—Yes, I have stated that all along in that paper. I say he was committing an immoral act.

6727. Do you. Let me read it. "Whilst there I observed the Policeman 215 G with this woman in a corner against a cart, the woman at the time having her clothes in an improper manner. She at once dropped her clothes, when the said policeman came up to me and struck me a severe blow, at the same time remarked to be off, and if I had any property up there, and he also walked on my heels until I got on to the footpath, when he struck me another severe blow on the left jaw, knocking off my cap. I at once reported the matter to the sergeant who was passing across the road, when he took the case up. I was on my way to the G.P.O., Mount Pleasant, due on duty at 12.20 a.m."?—Yes. I put it by stating that I saw the woman and the constable in what I term a corner under cover between the carts out of sight, the lady being against the wall and the policeman in front of her, and her clothing disarranged, and seeing her clothing fall, I leave it to anyone with common sense to say that they were not acting in any way decent.

6728. You had full opportunity at that time of stating all you wanted to say and all that you had seen. You were asked to say what you knew about this?—Yes, I said it briefly.

6729. You say nothing about that, and you say nothing about the constable having pulled his coat across when he turned round?—I did not state it because I had not time to state everything. Had I been asked about the matter on the following morning I could have given further particulars of the case.

6730. You made another statement when you had more time to think about it, when the Magistrate told you to put the facts in writing. Did you say anything about the constable having connection with a woman or of seeing him having connection with a woman in the second statement that you made before the Magistrate?—The Magistrate simply asked me to state sufficient to grant a summons. I did not take any note of what I had previously stated on the first account. All I troubled about was to put sufficient on paper for him to grant the issue of a summons. I did not take notice of anything else. I may have made a mistake in a word occasionally.

6731. After you had further time to consider, you made a statement on oath before the Magistrate, did you not? You gave your evidence?—I gave my evidence.

6732. Did you say this: "I am a porter in the General Post Office. On the 16th of October I was in Rosebery Avenue. I got as far as John's Mews, about 18 feet wide. I saw vehicles in John's Mews, on left two or three; I called in for necessary purpose against wheel of cart. I heard shuffling of feet. I saw a police-constable turn round from a woman; as he turned, he struck me on the back of the head." Is that the evidence you gave on oath before the Magistrate?—It is near it.

6733. Is that true?—It is so far as regards the cart. I only went from the passage on the right about three feet wide. I simply could see by the reflection from the road a little way down, and I imagined there would be two or three carts.

6734. I am not speaking about carts: "I called in for a necessary purpose against the wheel of a cart. I heard shuffling of feet. I saw a police-constable turn round from a woman." That means to say he had got his back to you?—Yes.

6735. "As he turned he struck me on the back of the head"?—As he turned from the cart, and was coming away from the cart.

6736. Is this what you told the Magistrate: "I saw P.C. turn round from the woman. As he turned he struck me"?—I mean to say by that just before he got away from the cart he was standing against he struck me a blow as I was turning round from the wheel.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Is that the statement made upon which the summons was applied for?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) No; this is the evidence given on oath?—It is near it, as far as my memory goes.

J Clinch.
17 Oct. 1906

(Chairman.) We have not had the depositions in this case.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) No; because we have not had time to copy them, but you shall have them directly.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That does not profess to be a verbatim note, does it?

6737. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) No; but you will see it is a full note. Perhaps it would be convenient if I read it? (Q.) You say: "I live at 5, Benson Avenue. I am a porter at the G.P.O. On the 16th October, I was in Rosebery Avenue. I got as far as John's Mews, about 18 ft. wide. I saw vehicles in John's Mews on left—two or three. I called in for necessary purpose against wheel of cart. I heard shuffling of feet. I saw a police-constable turn round from a woman. As he turned he struck me on back of the head. I noticed the woman's clothes disarranged and the constable behaving in an improper manner. As I came away from wheel the police-constable struck me on the back of my head, and then walked on my heels. He said, "Have you any property here?'" According to this statement up to this point, you found that he had struck you twice. He struck you as he turned round from the woman, and he struck you as you came away from the wheel?—He struck me as he turned from the woman, so—he stretched out like (illustrating)—making his way towards me and struck me. He simply turned round, one wide turn, and struck me as I was leaving the wheel of the cart.

6738. There was no room to make a wide turn between those two carts?—The circumference of the wheels of the first cart, and the circumference of the wheels of the second cart would leave almost the width of a cart between.

6739. When you were cross-examined about this you said: "At the Post Office we have ample lavatory accommodation. I was pressed at time, and rather than strain myself, I went down the mews. I saw no one about before going down the mews. I got about the second cart down. No room for two carts to pass." Did you relieve yourself in the mews?—No.

6740. Did you relieve yourself at the police station?—No.

6741. And as a matter of fact you remained for two hours after that?—Yes.

6742. Although you were so pressed at the time that you went to the mews rather than go to the General Post Office?—I went into the mews.

6743. But in spite of that you waited for two hours?—Yes; but it is not to say that I went two hours without going to a place of convenience. I do not say such a thing. I did go in the meantime.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Let me follow what he is saying.

6744. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I thought you told me you did not relieve yourself in the mews?—Not in the mews, and not in the police station.

6745. So for two hours you did not?—But I did other ways.

6746. What do you mean by "other ways"?—I made water down the leg of my trousers.

6747. Where?—Bit by bit, to ease myself.

6748. At the police-station?—Along the road going down to King's Cross Station.

6749. Will you swear that?—I will swear that.

6750. You did it bit by bit?—Yes.

6751. "I went down the mews. I saw no one about before going down the mews. I got about the second cart down. No room for two carts to pass, no light in the mews." I want you to say if anything put down here is something other than what you said. "I attempted to relieve myself against the wheel of a cart"?—Yes.

6752. "About 10 ft. from the entrance"?—The second wheel—just about 10 ft.

6753. "I heard a shuffling of feet between the carts. Police-constable was the width of the cart from me. He was between the first or second cart. I had reached to where he was. I was going to make water against outer wheel of cart. It was the first wheel of the second cart. Police-constable was between the first and second cart. I passed police-constable by about a foot"?—You may term it about a foot. That has all been explained; in fact I was practically in line, although I was against the second wheel of the cart, because where I pulled up I pulled up on the outer circumference.

6754. I do not understand the "outer circumference"?—The outer portion of the wheel.

6755. I understand your drawing up against the outside wheel of a van, but before you got there you say here: "I passed the police-constable at about a foot." If you did that he could not have been up against the wall with any woman, could he?—I would still be against the wheel, and still I could discern him.

6756. If you passed the police-constable at about a foot, do you mean you were about a foot away from him?—From the policeman?

6757. Yes?—No; I was the width of the cart from him.

6758. You say: "The police-constable was between the first and second carts. I passed police-constable by about a foot"?—I simply stood against the second wheel of the cart on the outer portion of the wheel, which would bring me parallel in line with the policeman.

6759. "I passed police-constable by about a foot. He was at off-side of cart." Which do you call the "off-side of the cart"?—I cannot tell the off-side from the on-side.

6760. But did not you tell the Magistrate this?—Not to my knowledge. I cannot say whether I used that word.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) We have the original here; it looks like the word "or." It certainly is not "off."

6761. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) "I passed police-constable by about a foot the other side of cart. I noticed no lantern. Police-constable struck me without saying a word." Is that right? You told us just now that the policeman came towards you, that he asked you what you were doing there, that you told him, and that it was not until he got from between the carts that he struck you after that conversation?—He had not got from between the carts. He struck me at the wheel. As he left the wall as I was turning from the wheel so he struck me.

6762. After he had spoken to you?—He simply asked me what I was doing there, and with that I got the blow.

6763. And you answered him?—I answered, "To make water."

6764. It was after that he struck you?—No, he struck me then. Then he struck me a second time on the paving-work of the entrance to the mews.

6765. Had he spoken to you before he struck you, or not?—As regards speaking to me, he simply said, "What do you want here?"

6766. That is speaking to you, is it not?—Yes. As he turned from the woman he made that remark, and at the same time he struck me.

6767. Did he speak to you before he struck you?—He simply made that remark.

6768. So that he struck you after he had spoken to you?—He simply spoke and asked me what I wanted there, as he turned from the woman, and struck me just at that second.

6769. After he had spoken to you?—Yes.

6770. How came you to tell the Magistrate: "He struck me without saying a word, on the back of my head"?—I meant to say by that I never said a word. "He struck me without saying a word." That is my statement. I did not say a word to him. He struck me without saying a word.

6771. I asked you to give your statement. You have just told me that he said, "What are you doing here?" that you told him you were only there to make water, and that it was after that he struck you?—He simply asked me what I was doing there; I said I had come to make water.

6772. You spoke to him, and he spoke to you?—He spoke to me first.

6773. And you answered him?—I answered, "To make water."

6774. You had spoken to him, and he had spoken to you before he struck you?—I had not spoken to him.

6775. You told him you had come to make water?—He spoke to me first, and I answered him.

6776. And it was after that he struck you?—After I had answered him to tell him why I was there.

6777. That excuse will not help you, because how came you to tell the Magistrate that the police-constable struck you without saying a word, on the back of your head, because you had spoken to him, and he had spoken to you?—That is my statement—that he struck me without my saying a word.

6778. But you had said a word?—No. He spoke to me first.

6779. But you had answered him?—Yes. He was the first to speak to me.

6780. Your answering is speaking a word?—And his questioning is speaking a word before the answering.

6781. You say: "I was unbuttoning my trousers; police-constable turned and came face to face. I turned to walk away. Police-constable struck me on the back of my head. Police-constable made a mumbling noise like 'Out of it.' I don't remember exactly what he said. He then walked on my heels. I first saw a woman when police-constable turned. He folded his overcoat. I never noticed a belt." Is it true that you first noticed the woman when the police-constable turned?—As he turned from her. I could not see the woman because the width of the policeman with the woman against the wall entirely covered her.

6781*. Is your statement that you never saw any woman at all until the policeman turned?—None whatever until he turned.

6782. Then how came you to tell the Commissioners just now what you did see was a woman with her clothes up, and that you could see her white clothing with the policeman's back?—That was when he turned. As he turned away to ask me what I wanted there then I could see the woman. It was the policeman hearing the shuffling of my feet at the wheels that disturbed him, and as he turned from the woman I saw her.

6783. I must put to you what really happened at these mews was this, that the policeman was going down the narrow passage of the mews between the van and the wall, and he met you coming up—No.

6784. And that he spoke to you and asked you where you were going to?—No.

6785. And that he told you to go away—No.

6786. And that you said "I can play the game of Tommy Atkins as well as you"?—Never.

6787. You had been a Tommy Atkins?—I never knew what Tommy Atkins meant until I once heard a song sung called Tommy Atkins.

6788. Are you telling the Commissioners that, having been three years in the Guards, you do not know who Tommy Atkins is?—No, because I do not consider I was there long enough to know much.

6789. That is your real suggestion, you had been three years in the Guards, and you do not yet know who Tommy Atkins is?—No.

6790. That is your deliberate statement?—I have heard a song of Tommy Atkins.

6791. You wish to say that although you had been in the army you did not know who Tommy Atkins was?—Yes.

6792. That is your deliberate statement on oath?—Yes.

6793. (Chairman.) When did you first know what Tommy Atkins meant?—I only heard that Tommy Atkins is a soldier. That was all I knew concerning the word.

6794. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) When did you know that?—I have oftentimes heard it, but not to make any great comment upon it.

6795. As long as you have been in the Post Office?—Yes, I have been connected with them more now than since I left.

6796. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) When he told you to go out of the mews you said you could play Tommy Atkins as well as he?—No, I never repeated those words.

6797. And you pushed towards him as though you were going to resist him?—No, that is false.

6798. And that then he pushed you out of the mews, a distance of about five yards, or something of that kind?—No.

6799. That he pushed you out of the mews, and that, having pushed you out of the mews, he turned back and went into the mews?—No, nothing at all about that. I can say when he first got rid of me. After asking me what I wanted there, and thumping me at the back of the head, he asked me if I had any property up there whilst walking on my heels, and at the same time, just as I was approaching the entrance to the mews, he struck me a blow again on the side of the face, and knocked my hat off and kicked it, and told me to pick it up.

6800. When you got outside you complained to a sergeant?—Yes.

6801. I suppose at that time you were very angry with the constable?—No, I was excited.

6802. And I suppose you were very angry with him for having struck you?—I felt upset at the idea of his having struck me for no purpose whatever—for no cause.

6803. So you were upset with him?—Yes, I felt in great pain at the time; I was dazed.

6804. I think in one of these many statements you said that when you got outside you found it would be a relief if someone would come along to whom you could repeat the accusation?—Yes.

6805. That was your feeling?—Yes.

6806. You could let off steam against the policeman?—I was so upset at the idea of having been struck for nothing whatever that if anyone had happened to approach on the scene I could report the circumstance so he would have had an opportunity of finding the policeman there with his own eyes with the woman.

6807. That is what you thought?—Yes.

6808. You were very much vexed with the policeman, and if anyone came along you thought you would tell him because if they would go down they would have found the policeman and the woman there?—Yes.

6809. You knew in these dark mews there was a policeman, and you knew in these dark mews there was a woman?—I knew they were both together.

6810. They were both together after he pushed you out?—No, but he went back into the mews.

6811. Being vexed with the constable, you thought you might get hold of somebody who would be able to find the constable and the woman in the mews?—I wanted to get somebody of some influence that I could report the circumstances to of having been struck, so that he could see them for himself in the mews.

6812. Your suggestion would be that they were behaving wrongly in the mews?—They were.

6813. Afterward you went down to the station, did you not?—Yes.

6814. I think you arrived at the station about half past twelve?—Yes.

6815. You did not leave till about two?—Somewhere about that time.

6816. Now let us go shortly through what occurred. You were asked by the Inspector, were you not, whether you preferred to write your own statement or whether he should write it out for you?—Yes.

6817. And you preferred to write it out for yourself?—I did not mind him writing it out at first, but he suggested, when I told him what I wished to put on the statement, that I had better write it myself, because what I suggested should be put in the statement he did not seem to care about writing himself.

6818. It took you a considerable time to write it out, did it not?—No, it took me only a matter of a few minutes.

6819. You were a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes before you finished it?—In a case of that description when making a charge you want to think of what you are writing.

6820. Naturally. But it did take you a considerable time, did it not?—I should say about a quarter of an hour. That is the whole thing, thinking and writing and considering the state of myself at the time.

6821. Then the woman had to make a statement, had she not?—Yes.

6822. And then the Italians had to make a statement, and their statements had to be interpreted?—Yes.

6823. That all took time, did it not?—Yes.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Only one Italian made a statement.

6824. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) The other was asked to make a statement, but he said he had not got one.

6825. After these statements had been taken, did you complain of feeling pain in your head?—I did.

6826. Did the Inspector then say to you "I wish you had complained of that before, because the surgeon has just been here for another case, and I would have asked him to have seen you"?—Something to that effect.

6827. But did he say: "I can send for him, and I will send for him"?—He did do so.

6828. The surgeon was sent for?—Yes.

6829. He did not come until 1.40, or thereabouts, did he?—I could not say. I did not take any particular notice of the time.

6830. After the surgeon had come and examined you it was that you then went away to your duty? The surgeon examined you about 1.40, I think the time was, and after he had examined you you had some discussion with him. You then went back to the Post Office to your duty?—Yes.

6831. Then I suppose you had to give some explanation of why you were late?—Yes.

6832. Before you went did the Inspector ask you what you wanted done about the matter?—Before I left the station?

6833. Yes?—How do you mean?

6834. Did he say: "You have made this charge against the constable; do you wish it to be dealt with by the Commissioner or will you take out a summons?"—No, not that I remember.

6835. Just think about that?—He may have asked me the question, and I may have answered in some shape or form.

6836. Did not the Inspector ask you before you left whether you would leave the matter or whether you proposed to apply for a summons for assault? Do you remember that?—What I do remember is that I intended to apply to the magistrate for a summons for assault.

6837. Did you say you did not know, but you must consider, and that you would be working till 7.30 a.m., and did the Inspector say to you that he would call at the Post Office to hear your decision about 3.30? Did the Inspector say to you that he would call at the Post Office to hear your decision?—No, he did not say anything concerning calling at the Post Office to hear of my decision, not at the police station.

6838. Do you say that?—Not that I am aware of. He called on me at the Post Office, and asked me a question at the Post Office, and not at the police station, if I would continue the charge.

6839. I suggest that before you left he asked you if you were going to take out a summons or would you wish it tried by the Commissioner?—Not to be tried by the Commissioner. I told the Inspector I was going to take out a summons against him, and that is why I wrote the charge against him.

6840. Did you say that you did not know at the moment, and did he say, as you were going to work until 7.30, that he would call at the Post Office at about 3.30 and ask you for your decision?—No.

6841. Did he call at the Post Office at about 3.30?—Yes, or twenty minutes to 4. It was about an hour after I got into the Office.

6842. Did you then have a discussion with him as to what you were going to do?—He asked for me.

6843. Did you then have a discussion with him as to what you were going to do, and did you say that of course you were all public servants, and so was the policeman, and that you did not really know exactly what course to take?—No. I will tell you the words used. I remember them quite well. The Inspector came into the Inland Section lobby and asked for me. I was sent for; I came into the lobby, and I was surprised to see the Inspector. He said, "I thought I would just call in as I was passing with reference to this matter," or something to that effect. "Do you really intend to charge the constable, or to take out a summons against him? Do you intend to follow it up?" I said, "It is very annoying, and of course, under the circumstances, I feel I must take out a summons and continuethe case." He said, "Well, of course, it is not for me to persuade you either one way or the other, but it is very hard for one servant to charge another."

6844. I suggest to you you said you had not made up your mind, that of course you were a public servant and so was the policeman, that he could not advise you, and that you said you would call round at the police station and tell him what your decision was?—He suggested (I did not suggest it) that we were both Government servants, and it seemed hard that one should charge another. I told him at the time I must think it over, and in all probability I would call at half-past seven at the police station and tell him what I intended to do. Instead of that I applied at ten o'clock for the summons.

6845. Now about the assault. Do you suggest to the Commissioners that you were struck two violent blows?—Yes.

6846. Really violent blows?—One blow would tell more than the other because, being struck on the head here, it is a much stronger part of the body than the side of the face.

6847. Which was the worst blow? The blow on the side of the face, was it?—They both felt very severe blows. The blow I received on the back of the head seemed to stun me, and I seemed to stagger as I went out of the mews.

6848. You went to your work on the Monday, you went to your work on the Tuesday, and you went to your work on the Wednesday.?—No, not on Wednesday.

6849. You told the Commissioners that the blood came from your throat?—The blood commenced to come from my throat on Tuesday about mid-day.

6850. You told the magistrate, "He struck me at the back of my head, and it seemed to stun me. Blood flowed from the back of my head to the back of my throat?"—It seemed to come from the back of my head into the back of my throat.

6851. Do you suggest that the blood that came into your throat came in consequence of the blow?—Yes; it seemed to be a kind of trickling noise through from the back of the head into the throat.

6852. You heard the blood trickling?—No. Inwardly the blood seemed to trickle through the head into the throat—not from the outside, because there was no outside.

6853. Did you hear or feel it trickling?—I seemed to feel it through the head.

6854. Trickling from the back of the head where he struck you?—Not from the back of the head, but through the face, as I put it.

6855. You felt it trickling from the back of the head through your head into your mouth—all inside?—All inside my throat.

6856. Did you tell that to the doctor at the Post Office?—I told him.

6857. He is the gentleman who is coming to describe that symptom, is he?—That I cannot say.

6858. You were examined, were you not, by the surgeon at the police station?—Yes.

6859. He said he could not find anything the world the matter with you?—He did not put it in that way.

6860. Not so bluntly?—Not by a long way. He spoke to me in a very gentlemanly way. He described things much different to the way you put it.

6861. Not quite so bluntly?—No. Later on I shall be able to explain.

6862 Then I think later you took the case before the magistrate?—Yes.

6863. Did you have a solicitor and counsel or only a solicitor?—A solicitor.

6864. Did you have a counsel too?—No, a barrister, I presume.

6865. Did you have a barrister?—A barrister only.

6866. No solicitor?—No, not that I am aware of.

(Chairman.) No solicitor took part in the conduct of the case in court, I presume he means?

6867. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I think it goes a little further. Who was your barrister?—Mr. Yelverton.

6868. You never heard mention of a solicitor in the case at all, did you? I mean you never employed a solicitor?—No, I never employed a solicitor.

6869. After the magistrate had heard the case did you hear what he said about it?—Yes.

6870. Is this what the magistrate said: "The evidence for the defendant contradicts that of the plaintiff, and if you wish me to say so, I say the constable was justified in pushing the complainant out of the mews. I believe the statement of the woman, who gave her evidence very frankly and fairly. To my mind it is not a question of the amount of violence used, but rather of the suggestion made against the woman and defendant by the complainant. The constable's duty was to protect property in the mews, and he was there for that purpose?"—That was a kind of a winding-up after the policeman had made his case good. It was previous to that.

6871. Then you admit the policeman made his case good?—But before that he was compelled to make his case good from the remarks made by Mr. Ricketts, the solicitor for the defence on his plea—whether it was taken down in writing or not I cannot say, but his plea was that he hoped the Magistrate would deal as leniently as possible with the constable, as if he convicted him upon the charge he would be dismissed from the service and stain the clothes which he wore. That was the plea of Mr. Ricketts to Mr. Bros.

(Earl Russell.) This is not quite consistent with your decision the other day not to go into what took place before the Magistrate. I called Mr. Yelverton, and he was stopped from going into what took place before the Magistrate, and to explain the reason why this was not gone into fully.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) It is because Mr. Yelverton made a statement of what took place that I desire to read what the Magistrate did say.

(Chairman.) Mr. Eldon Bankes has cross-examined the witness upon it, and I suppose he has some object in doing it, but the case may now present a different aspect to us, and if you wish to call further evidence as to what took place at the police court we will consider it. We said we did not think it was important to know what Mr. Yelverton thought of the Magistrate's method of conducting his cases.

(Earl Russell.) I feel equally satisfied you did not think it important to know what the Magistrate did after hearing the case, not at this length.

(Chairman.) We never said it was not important to know that the Magistrate had dismissed it, but we said we did not wish to take evidence of counsel as to the way in which the Magistrate had conducted the case. We would not try the case again. I said I did not understand you were making any complaint against the Magistrate, and if you were making a complaint we could not entertain it.

6872. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Will you please give careful attention to this, because it is an important matter. When yesterday you made your statement to these gentleman you said, as I wrote it down: "The Inspector asked the woman to make a statement, and after a time she made a statement. It was read out to me. I should be very sorry to say what was read out to me." The woman's statement was put in. Then you go on: "The statement by the lady read out to me varied very much from what I have heard now"?—From what I read then.

6873. First what I want to ask you is this, is it the fact that when the woman had made the statement the Inspector read it out to you, or is the fact that having made the statement the Inspector handed it to you?—The Inspector handed it to me to read to explain how the woman had gone there. I read it myself.

6874. If the Inspector handed it to you for you to read it for yourself he did not also read it himself to you?—He might have read it himself; I fancy he did. There were only two lines.

6875. Yesterday you said the Inspector read it to you?—Yes.

6876. Which is true—that he read it to you, or that he handed it to you for you to read for yourself?—He handed it to me, and I read it myself.

6877. Then is it true or false that he read it to you?—That I would not say.

6878. You did tell these gentlemen yesterday that he read it to you. Now I suggest to you that you never had any statement of the woman's in your hand at all, but that all that happened was that what you said yesterday happened—the Inspector read it?—The statement that the woman made I read, and I have just stated the way it did read, and my reasons for remarking yesterday that I would not like to state what the statement was, was because I have got better thought and feeling for myself in the company of females, and that was the reason why I say that the exact copy read different to the copy that I have read a few moments ago.

6879. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You told us what the statement did contain?—Yes, that is how it read.

6880. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Was there anything in that statement that was read out to you that you would be sorry to repeat?—Yes.

6881. You are alluding to that passage in it?—Yes.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) He has told us to-day the only addition is the covering by the policeman.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yesterday he said he would be sorry to read out what was in the statement.

(Chairman.) Because he observed there were ladies in the court.

(The Witness.) That was it, sir.

6882. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Do you say on your oath that that woman ever wrote down there any statement to the effect that she asked the constable to come up and cover her?—While she made water? Yes, on my oath, sir.

6883. Who heard that statement besides yourself?—The Inspector, the woman, the constable and me.

6884. You four?—Yes; I came away from the station and left them three altogether.

6885. (Earl Russell.) Do you remember going to a Mr. Phillimore?—In Chancery Lane?

6886. Yes?—Yes.

6887. You made a statement there about your case, did you not?—Yes.

6888. It was after that that Mr. Yelverton appeared in Court for you?—Yes.

6889. Do you know what Mr. Phillimore's occupation is?—He is a solicitor.

6890. You stated in one part of your evidence that in going down the mews, when you reached the wheel of this cart, you had passed the policeman by a foot. What exactly did you mean by that?—You may term it a foot or half a foot, or you may term it in line, because as I stood against the wheel I stood on the outer portion of the wheel, not against the axle, and not against the centre of the wheel, because if I stood against the centre of the wheel I should pass the policeman and the woman about a good yard and a quarter from there where they stood in line.

6891. I do not think you understand my point. You did not mean by saying that you passed him one foot, that you were one foot distant from him, but you meant that you were one foot further into the mews than he was?—Perhaps a foot or half a foot. It brought me just parallel in line.

6892. What do you mean exactly by saying that the policeman struck you without saying a word. There had been a conversation, as Mr. Bankes pointed out to you. What do you mean by saying "without saying a word"?—He struck me without my saying a word.

6893. You had said a word?—Not until he questioned me and I answered. His question was "What are you doing here"?

6894. Is not that what you call saying a word?—I said a word after he spoke first, but I did not speak first.

6895. Are you perfectly clear about this arrangement with the Inspector about calling at the Post Office?—Perfectly clear.

6896. You did not ask him to call there and see you?—No.

6897. You were not expecting him?—No, he called on me by surprise.

6898. He did, while you were in the police station, offer to send to the Post Office to say where you were, and that you also refused?—I refused.

6899. Do you see this woman in question in Court now?—Yes.

6900. Had you ever seen her before this occurrence?—Never in my life.

6901. Have you ever seen her since?—I have seen her for four nights out of six for three months out of four.

6902. Whereabouts—what doing?—At the coffee-stall round Rosebery Avenue, close to the fire station. She is well noted there.

6903. At what sort of hours have you seen her?—I have seen her four nights out of six at a quarter past 12, as I have been on duty at 20 minutes past 12.

6904. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) When?—In the early morning.

6905. Just past midnight, you mean?—Yes.

6906. (Earl Russell.) Have you ever spoken to her either before or after this occasion?—Never in my life.

6907. Did you ever speak to these Italians before this occurrence?—I never knew them.

6908. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) May I ask another question. I see you were asked at the police court some question about whether you had made a complaint against a City constable, and you said, "I do not remember making a complaint against a City constable." Have you thought it over since?—Not that I remember. I do not remember making any complaint against a constable.

6909. But surely that is a thing you would remember if you had done so?—In speaking to a friend I might say "That man did so-and-so," and I complained of him for that thing or the other, and that friend went and told him; that would be a complaint.

6910. You have made a complaint?—No, not that I know of.

6911. Surely you must remember whether you made a complaint against a constable?—If I made a trivial complaint of one person to another, would that be lodging a complaint?

6912. No, not as a formal complaint, certainly not; but have you made a formal complaint to begin with?—Do you mean have I made a complaint on paper?

6913. No, not necessarily a complaint on paper, but a verbal complaint?—To a policeman?

6914. Of a policeman to a police officer?—In the City?

6915. Yes?—Not that I know of; I cannot say.

6916. Surely you can remember?—I do not remember ever having made a complaint of a City constable.

6917. Is that all you can say?—Yes.

6918. The next answer seems to be also rather curious. You say, "There may have been reports against me at the Post Office"?—Sometimes these little trivial matters might come up as regards me speaking to an ordinary friend of mine, and I lodge a complaint to him about having seen a constable doing so and so.

6919. You do not understand. I asked you two separate questions; one was making complaints about constables, and the other was about reports having been made against you at the Post Office?——

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Not in relation to constables at all, as I understand your question.

6920. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) No, in relation to your conduct. I notice in the magistrate's clerk's note you give these two answers: "I do not remember making a complaint against a City constable"?—No, I do not remember.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Is that in the cross-examination?

6921. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes, in the very last two questions. "There may have been reports against me at the Post Office." Do not you know whether there were reports against yourself?—Official reports as regards the Post Office, the same as if a policeman commits himself on his duty, the same as I might commit myself in the Post Office, it would be recorded.

J. Clinch.

6922. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Any little matter reported would be entered in a book?—Yes.

6923. (Chairman.) There is a book in which all these things are entered?—Yes, everything.

6924. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Have there been reports against you?—Not that I am aware of.

6925. Surely if reports had been made, you would know of it?—Fourteen years is a long time, but not that I know of.

(Earl Russell.) If there is any suggestion about it let us have the actual reports.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) If you read to the witness the next answer, you will get an explanation of it.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) No, I think that refers to a third point.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I have a reason for saying that. If you do not read it I shall.

6926. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I will certainly read it. "Other persons suggested subscriptions." What was that an answer to. Was it with reference to taking these proceedings?—I cannot say about that, but what you are referring to was kept entirely from me until the matter was brought forward at the police court the day of the case, and as regards that, that is what I have just stated.

6927. There are three questions you were asked. The first is whether you have ever made a complaint against a constable, and your answer was, "I do not remember." I have dealt with that. Then the second question you were asked was, "Were there any reports against you at the Post Office," and your answer was, "There may have been"?—Yes, certainly.

6928. Do you really mean to suggest to this Court that you do not know whether there have been or not?—We have all got little reports of trivial matters recorded against us

6929. They may be trivial, but we know about them, The point I am asking you is this, Do you, or do you not, know whether there have been reports against you?—In my official capacity, do you mean?

6930. Yes?—Oh, yes, I am not infallible.

6930.* I know nothing at all about them, but what struck me as so odd was that you did not know whether they had been made or not?—There have been a lot.

6931. You say they are trivial. Were there any serious ones?—What I should term trivial or what I would term serious the outside public might say were nothing, simply because I am in the Government service, and we must abide by the rules, and if you break a little rule it would go against you.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Is not the test of this question, after all, whether he has risen in the Post Office while he has been there, because if it is, is it worth inquiring whether there have been small reports, which there must have been against everyone.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Not in the least. But the witness seems to be so indifferent with regard to it. I am not suggesting he is a bad character.

(Witness.) What has my character at the Post Office got to do with my present case? I am not here on any question with regard to my official capacity.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) The learned Commissioner wants to know what the last answer has reference to, as I understand. I have a newspaper reporter whose ear seems to be open to tit-bits, because he produces this question: "He also denied that he had opened a subscription list amongst his colleagues at the Post Office for his benefit in this case, and that he was so disliked that the total had not exceeded 6d."

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That is what I thought he meant by the reports.

(Witness.) With reference to that I have to answer that as regards that question, I knew nothing whatever about it until the day of the case being heard. The solicitor for the defence remarked about this in his statement, and asked me if I knew anything at all about it, and such a paltry sum having only been got together. I did not originate or cause this collection to be made to enable me to get a barrister, or to pay for a barrister or solicitor to defend my case. I did not bring that about at all, neither did I suggest it; but one or two, or perhaps a dozen, of my brother officers, who think I am worthy of something, suggested that such a thing should be done; but not to my knowledge and not with my sanction. They did it themselves, and also the week that this collection was being made there was also another collection being made for another gentleman, who was leaving the Service through consumption, and who was being dismissed from the Service, poor chap, with a little bonus and a collection that might be able to be got up amongst his brother comrades, and that is the reason why there was nothing subscribed towards me, because the majority of the men thought it would be far better to subscribe to the sheet that was very deserving, looking at it from a humane point of view, and let him have it, and I did the best I possibly could.

(Chairman.) I think you have given a very good explanation in answer to the suggestion made by the learned Counsel, who, I think, is very hard upon you.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I made no suggestion. I merely read it.

(Chairman.) You read the cross-examination.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I think Mr. Bankes only read the words, "Other persons suggested subscriptions," in answer to my observation, because I thought it qualified what had been said before, as I had read that report which the enterprising newspaper reporter had given you. I thought the two might be connected together, and one would explain the other.

6932. (Earl Russell.) I should like to get it clear from this witness about the complaints, if he understands what is meant. You understand we are not talking of complaints about the police, such as a complaint made to a personal friend of yours; but have you officially complained, either verbally or in writing, to an officer of police or to a police station of the conduct of any policeman, either in the City or elsewhere?—No.

6933. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) How long have you been in the Post Office?—Fourteen years.

6934. And are you getting more money now than you were when you first started?—Yes.

6935. Whether there have been reports or not against you at the Post Office, they have not prevented your rising?—No. I have always got my increments. I have never lost an increment. I have never had a case serious enough against me since I have been in the Service. The reports have been very trivial, but I have not had a report serious enough against me which would enable the authorities to take away an increment or defer an increment from me.

6936. You have got every increment to which you were entitled?—Yes.

6937. And I suppose reports would be made supposing you were late or smoked when you ought not to?—Yes; it is put in the black book if you are late.

6938. Things of that character?—Yes.

6939. That is what you mean?—Yes.

6940. Then we need not waste any more time over it. There is one other thing I want to call your particular attention to. You stated, in answer to Mr. Bankes, that you relieved yourself on the way from the mews to the station?—Yes.

6941. Is your memory very clear about that?—Yes, very clear indeed.

6942. Then I do not understand how you came to make this statement to the Magistrate: "I did not relieve myself till after I left the police station two and a half hours?"—I meant to say by that, in an easy manner, as I would if I went out of here now.

6943. No, no; that will not do, because I am using the words, "relieve myself." The words are, "I did not make water till after I left the police station two and a half hours." What is the explanation of that? Just look at it yourself?—I have read that. I mean by that not in the presence of either the sergeant or the Inspector, or constable, or anyone in the Court while they were in my presence going from the mews to the station; but I did not make it public, neither did I ask the inspector or sergeant going alone the road to tell them that I should step back for a moment, and I would catch them up in a second or two. I did not leave them like officially, which was an interesting and an important matter in the case; but I relieved myself easily a little bit at a time like, but not to have left anybody or for anybody to know that I had gone away to do such a thing. I could have done with so doing at the station, but I did not wish to leave the company that I was in for that purpose.

Mr. William Alexander Coote, sworn.

Mr. W. A. Coote.
18 Oct. 1906.

6944. (Chairman.) Are you secretary of the National Vigilance Association and Deputy Chairman of the London Council for the Promotion of Public Morality?—Yes.

6944*. How long have you been secretary of the Vigilance Association?—For the past twenty-one years If it would suit the convenience of the Commission I have prepared a statement which I could read, and then perhaps the Commissioners would ask me questions upon that statement.

6945. I think that would be a good course to take. Will you make your statement?—As Secretary of the National Vigilance Association for the repression of criminal vice and public immorality for the past twenty-one years, and for seven years Deputy Chairman of the London Council for the Promotion of Public Morality, I have personally, and through the agents of the two above-named societies, had a great deal to do with the police of the metropolis. In connection with our work our agents have been about at all hours of the night in various parts of London, and have been brought in personal contact with a large number of the unfortunate women who solicit in our streets, and whose lives are given up to public immorality. In connection with the London Council for the Promotion of Public Morality, we have specially dealt with the closing of disorderly houses, and this has naturally not only brought our agents in contact with women of the unfortunate class, but also with those who trade upon their vice. Having had such exceptional opportunities of judging of the way in which the police throughout London discharge their duties in connection with one section of your inquiry, the Earl of Aberdeen, as President of the National Vigilance Association, and the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of London, as President of the London Council for the Promotion of Public Morality, thought that in justice to the police, and to assist as far as possible the inquiry undertaken by the Commission, I should offer to lay before you the evidence that has come into my hands. I should like also to mention that both the Earl of Aberdeen, within the last ten days, and the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of London are prepared to stand to the statements which are made in this statement which I am about to make to you. During the twenty-one years that I have acted as Secretary of the National Vigilance Association, the question of public morality, with special reference to the condition of the streets in certain parts of the metropolis, has been one of the principal sections of our work, and in this connection I have interviewed hundreds of women of questionable character with the view of ascertaining how they became such, how they maintained themselves as such, and what treatment they received from the police in the various districts in which they plied their calling. While I have gathered interesting material on various phases of the social problem, I have not in one instance had a charge made against the police as a body, or against an individual policeman, of levying blackmail or of exacting bribes of any kind from these unfortunate women. On the contrary, I have known many instances in which the police have helped them with both money and advice. For many years I have made it my private business, in connection with my official duties, to question these women as opportunity offered, as to their relationship to the police in the pursuit of their calling, and the treatment meted out to them, in order to verify or otherwise the current statement as to blackmail. I have done this because in certain circles of good and bad society, amongst men, it has always been taken for granted that blackmail and bribery were weapons commonly used by the police in dealing with this class of women. Neither by foreign nor English women has it ever been admitted to me that they were asked to supply the police with hush-money, or that they were made the subjects of police tyranny owing to their refusal to give money.

The following case came under my notice, and as it relates to the police at Piccadilly Circus I quote it as emphasising the view I am stating:—A young woman, deserted, hungry, and in a fit of despair, betook herself one evening to Piccadilly Circus. She had been walking about for a short time when a policeman on duty spoke to her, and suggested that she was a stranger to that kind of life. She admitted that it was her first essay on that quest, and said that she had not a farthing in her possession, and was there from sheer necessity. He urged her not to start such a life, and told her of a home where she would be cared for. She agreed to go, and he saw her to the omnibus, and gave her the fare to Edgware Road, which was close to the home of which he had spoken to her.

Three years ago, when verifying evidence we were about to give before the Royal Commission on Aliens, we had occasion to seek private interviews with large numbers of the unfortunate women in certain areas of London, notably Piccadilly, Regent Street, Haymarket, Strand, Tottenham Court Road, Earl's Court Road, Whitechapel, etc. The object of our interviews was to ascertain what had led to their taking up such a life, and whether they would be willing to give it up if we returned them to their own country and gave them a fresh start. The lady workers who interviewed these women were necessarily out at all hours of the night. While many of these latter complained bitterly of the harsh treatment they received at the hands of the police, not one of them made a charge or admitted that they had ever been asked for money by any member of the force. When asked to explain in detail the harsh treatment to which they referred, their reply invariably was that they were never allowed to stand still, they dared not speak to a man, and were constantly threatened with being run in.

During this midnight crusade, however, our workers frequently heard interesting stories of kindnesses shown to these unfortunate women by the police in different districts As our workers became known to the police, they were over and over again appealed to by the police to try and save some young girl who, as the constable said, had only just come to the district, adding, "She is young; you may succeed with her."

During the last two years, since I have been working in connection with the repatriation of foreign women under the International Agreement of 1904 for the Suppression of the White Slave Traffic, I have dealt with some striking cases where women have been charged before the magistrate with soliciting in the streets, and where the defence has been a complete and absolute denial of the charge. The undermentioned cases have been investigated by myself, with the result as shown:—M. G., 26, a Frenchwoman.

6946. That means her age was 26?—Yes. A magistrate sent to ask our help on behalf of a French girl who had been charged with soliciting and was on remand. We at once visited her in prison, when she strongly denied the offence with which she had been charged, alleging that she earned her living honestly at charing and needlework in order to support herself and her illegitimate child. Believing her story to be true, we attended the police court on the second hearing, and on our undertaking to look after the girl the magistrate handed her over to our care. As she expressed herself anxious to return to France, we sent her back the same day, recommending her to the care of friends in Paris. From subsequent inquiries which we were able to make, we found her statement to be utterly untrue. During her six months' stay in London she had been living in a disorderly house with a well-known procuress.

Then there is the case of J. G., 22, French. Our help was asked by a magistrate on behalf of this young woman, who had been charged with soliciting, and was in Holloway Prison on remand. We interviewed the girl. She denied the statement of the constable who had arrested her, and so strongly protested her innocence that there appeared to be more than the possibility of a doubt in the matter. She consented to be repatriated, whereupon the magistrate discharged her. Feeling, however, that in justice to the girl the case should be further investigated, we placed her in a home for a day or two and made inquiries. Within a day or two we obtained overwhelming evidence that she was a well-known prostitute. When taxed with this, she stubbornly adhered to her former statement, but finally admitted that for three years she had been leading an immoral life in London. As she proved very troublesome, we had to send an agent with her to Paris, who placed her in the care of her relatives. In that case, I should like to say, the investigation took a long time. We got addresses from her which were not always accurate, but we investigated the whole matter, and she finally capitulated in the office, after having been on her knees swearing—and I believed her—that she was perfectly innocent of the charge which had been made against her.

Then E. F., 22, German. A police-court worker called at the office, on instructions from the presiding magistrate, to ask our help respecting a German girl who had been charged with soliciting and remanded for a week. We at once sent to Holloway to interview her. She strongly denied the charge made against her, and protested that she was living respectably by needlework. Here again on investigation we found the charge to be fully justified.

Then J. D., 20, French. At the request of a police court missionary we sent to Holloway to interview a French girl, who had been charged on remand with solicitation. Her parents were respectable people, and she was most anxious that they should not know of her disgrace. She practically admitted that she had gone wrong, but did not admit the present charge. She was willing to be repatriated, and we put her in the hands of ladies in Paris who work in connection with us in connection with this work. Then M. R., 22, French. This case was also reported to us by the police court authorities. The girl had been arrested for soliciting. When interviewed she stated that she came to London a year previously to seek employment, failed to do so, drifted into bad company, finally took to the streets, and, while soliciting in the Euston Road, was arrested. I took the girl in hand myself, and questioned her as best I could in endeavouring to get from her some declaration with regard to the police. I put my questions all round, with a view of finding out for my own information. She denied from start to finish that she had ever been asked by a policeman for money, or that she had ever been threatened by a policeman if she did not supply money.

6947. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) With reference to the last case that you were dealing with, you did not say anything about the police? Will you look at your statement?—In this last case I said she practically admitted it, and all I did with her was to ask her whether she admitted that the charge was true, and whether there was any way of preventing getting run in by the police, and whether she had ever done anything to offend them, or anything like that, and whether she had ever been asked for money. That was the point with reference to her case.

6948. The case of J. D., aged 20, is the case I am referring to. What I wanted to know was, if you can tell us whether you made an inquiry from her as to the behaviour of the police?—Yes, I did. In everyone of these cases I made that a special point. When a girl admitted that she was run in, I put the question to her, "Why did the police select you? Why did they run you in when there are so many others? Is there any reason? Have you ever been asked for money?" I put these questions plainly sometimes for my own personal satisfaction, and in every case I have got this absolute denial. Only within the last three weeks I was sending a girl to Hamburg, and I said to her, "Well, but surely there must be some reason why the police got you. You do not give them money." "Oh," she said, "they would not take money; you dare not approach them." In fact, my evidence goes to prove that there is a wholesome fear amongst these girls. I cannot speak so authoritatively on the English side of it as I can on the foreign side of it, but in the case of the foreign girls there certainly is.

6949. (Chairman.) A wholesome fear of the police?—Yes.

6950. Why?—Because of the way in which they are run in if they are found loitering about, or if they are discovered approaching men. My workers who are out at midnight have seen girls run away on the approach of a policeman in the distance.

6951. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Do you mean there is a wholesome fear on the part of these women of offering the police money?—A wholesome fear of coming in contact in any way with the police, either through bribes or their occupation being discovered.

6952. They would be afraid to offer the police bribes?—Yes. Then R. S., 35, Swiss: The police court missionary at Clerkenwell asked our help for this woman, who was under remand in Holloway Prison for soliciting. She strongly denied the offence, but her story was obviously untrue, and there was no doubt but that she had been leading an immoral life for the last fifteen years in London. We inquired of her as to the treatment she had received from the police, and she made no allegations whatever against them. We finally sent her to friends in Amsterdam. Then E. N., 20, German: While at police court in connection with the case of "J. D.," we were asked to interview a girl who had that morning been charged with solicitation, and was under remand, awaiting transfer to Holloway. We questioned her as to her experience of the English police, and, while complaining of the arbitrary way in which she had been treated, she stated that she had never been asked for or had given them money. She was handed over to our care, and we subsequently repatriated her.

That is practically the part of my statement referring to the National Vigilance Association. Then, as Deputy-Chairman of the London Council for the Promotion of Public Morality, I have had further opportunities of obtaining information. One section of the work of this Committee is to investigate evidence submitted with regard to disorderly houses in the Metropolis. We sift the evidence as a committee, and if we think it is good evidence, we pass it on to the Borough Councils, who, fortunately, in connection with the police, act energetically in this matter. Our agents have dealt with a great many such houses, and in their investigations have been brought in contact with the women who used them for immoral purposes. We have thus been in a position to unofficially obtain the actual facts concerning the police treatment of this unfortunate class. Here, again, the evidence corroborates my former statements. Many of these women have complained of the unfair way in which the police treat them, but have never uttered a suggestion as to bribery or blackmail being levied on them under any circumstances. The unfair treatment of which they complain is that they are compelled to keep moving, and that they are not allowed to speak to men, and that they are always in danger of being run in. I do not think it is absolutely a fact, but that is their feeling, and that is what they say. I do not say it is true. The question of the character of the streets has also formed the subject of much deliberation, and, while the Council feel that of late years a great improvement has undoubtedly taken place in what is understood and known as the area of vice, they would respectfully suggest that something further might be done to clear those thoroughfares of the flaunting vice, which is still too much in evidence there.

Having given the subject our most careful and serious consideration, we are more than conscious of the difficulties which always beset a special official effort to deal with this matter. The same difficulties would arise also in the administration of a new legislative enactment, unless it could be shown to deal equally with men and women. We feel, however, that such a law, to be effective, and to receive the support of the public, must inflict the same penalties upon men as upon women, where it can be shown that both have been guilty of the same offence. We would respectfully submit the following suggestion to the consideration of the Royal Commission. I may say we have had a number of meetings, and the names of those who have taken part in the discussion with regard to this question I am submitting would be a guarantee to you gentlemen that although it would not appear to be a solution, and may have some peculiar elements about it in the opinion of the public, yet, considering all the difficulties of this question, this is the combined wisdom of a number of experts on this very question. We suggest that a verbal or printed warning should be given to both men and women who in the opinion of the constables or constable on duty frequent a public thoroughfare for immoral purposes. After a second warning they should be liable to arrest, on the evidence of two policemen, for frequenting the place for the purpose of soliciting to prostitution. We further suggest that in the cases of minors charged with the above offence an effort should be made to place them under proper and legal guardianship rather than to send them to prison, or to inflict upon them a fine. We offer these suggestions as a method which, in our opinion, would effectually deal with this difficult problem, and at the same time safeguard the rights of the public, and to make it well-nigh impossible for official mistakes to be made in connection with solicitation in the streets for immoral purposes. We further think that as a warning and preventive power to men, especially young men, it would be all powerful in preventing the daily and nightly visits to the public rendezvous of vice, which are disastrous alike to the individual, the home, and the nation.

We venture further to call the attention of the members of the Royal Commission to the need of some alteration of the Act known as an Act to Amend the Vagrancy Act, 1824, wherein it is made a crime for a man to live wholly or in part on the earnings of prostitution. This Act has become largely inoperative in London owing to the legal difficulty of differentiating between personal means and those supplied by the women as the result of their immorality. If this Act were amended in the direction we suggest, and energetically worked, it would do much to improve the condition of certain streets in the Metropolis. I am therefore requested to respectfully suggest that the Act should be further amended in the following manner:—"Any man found to be living with a known prostitute shall be considered, for the purpose of the Act, as legally living upon her immoral earnings." I should like further to add that we are not feeling that London is such a very bad place. We are conscious that there has been a marvellous improvement in the condition of the streets, especially those streets which are regarded as the area of vice, and, knowing as I do pretty intimately Continental cities, I am prepared to say that our London streets can stand a very fair comparison with either Berlin or Paris at the present time on this very question of open solicitation in the streets. I am prepared to almost prove that from personal observation and from the evidence of others. We recognise, and it is in that connection that we are here to submit to you gentlemen, that this is owing to the judicious efforts of the police in connection with this subject, and we feel, and cannot help feeling, that the highest form of citizenship and national life is that where the citizens are able to link themselves with the officials in the interests of law and order. I have further to say that Mrs. Raspini, who is the head of the London Diocesan work for prevention and rescue in connection with the Church of England, was here yesterday to give evidence. Her evidence would be more in connection with English girls. She cannot possibly be present to-day, but she authorises me to say that her information and experience of the English girls whom she has had to deal with is on exactly the same lines as my experience with regard to foreign girls.

6953. (Mr. Whitmore.) Would she speak of the Diocese of London?—Yes.

6954. Not the Diocese of Rochester?—No. It is under the Bishop of Stepney. He is the chairman of the committee, and I think the Bishop of London is the president of it. The late Rev. George Brett was the secretary. Mrs. Raspini also conducts the whole of the mission work to fallen women.

6955. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Is she willing to come another day to give evidence?—Yes, I think so.

6956. She was here yesterday with the object of giving her testimony in that connection?—Yes. I am connected with the Gentlemen's Jewish Society, not directly, but indirectly in work, and they would be willing to bear the same testimony in connection with their work in the streets.

6957. (Chairman.) What is the difference, if any, between the aims of the National Vigilance Association and those of the London Council for the Promotion of Public Morality?—The National Viligance Association was originally formed 21 years ago for the repression of criminal vice and immorality. It was national, not confined to London, but it has since then become international for the suppression of the white slave traffic. The London Council was organised seven years ago to deal absolutely with London as an educative power. The idea is that there should be a committee of influence, and they have been interesting themselves in the Borough Council elections in educating public opinion with reference to a better tone and higher moral conditions in London, and they have also been doing what they could to urge the officials to do the work that should be done by them, and they have so far succeeded that Borough Councils now are foremost in moral work. They consider they have as much right to look after the moral tone of London as they have to look after the sewage of London, and I think they ought to.

6958. I see in the title of this society the words "public morality" are used, and you have used them in the course of your evidence. What distinction do you draw between public morality and private morality?—My distinction would be, as an illustration, the hoardings of London, which have been the subject of our work. We consider it is a great educational force to the young of London, and we have gone ourselves to people who have placarded the hoardings with what we have considered objectionable matter, not altogether legally indecent, because if it had been we could have gone for them, but very objectionable placards. We have so far succeeded in that matter that the Bill Posters' Association, having become educated, say now, "You need not trouble about this matter any longer, we will form a censorship committee, and we will prohibit these bills," so that now all we have to do (and this is an illustration of the educative power of the work) is if we object to a bill on a hoarding we write to the Bill Posters' Association, and they will withdraw it. Much of the blood and thunder that is so objectionable has been prevented, and never seen the light of day. Only recently I burnt something like 400 posters, containing ten or twelve colours, with blood all over them, but they were surrendered; they were never posted, owing to the action of the Bill Posters' Association. That is what we call public morality of the streets. That is an illustration of the public morality, and we are most concerned in preventing anything like the area of vice in London. I have known London for the last 40 years, and my memory goes back to quite 47 years. I knew the Haymarket and Piccadilly very well 47 years ago, and I say that London to-day, compared with what it was 40 years ago, is an open air cathedral. Then it was vicious in every particular. To-day the change is marvellous in the people, both in the crime and in the habits of the people. Everything has gone for the better. That is my conviction as a citizen of London, and I am proud of London.

Mr. W. A. Coote.

6959. Do I understand you to say that for a grown-up man to meet a grown-up woman in a public street and to hold a conversation together, the result of which is they go away for the purpose of having connection, is an offence against public morality?—Yes, I do. That is my opinion, and I think we are coming to the time when the public will say so. In this last twenty years you observe there have been great strides in these questions, not only here in London, but throughout Europe.

6960. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) When a man and woman make that arrangement, does it depend on her being a known prostitute in order to constitute an offence?—There are so many contingencies.

6961. (Chairman.) You know what the law with regard to solicitation in the public street is, I presume?—Pretty well.

6962. I need not, therefore, restate it to you?—Practically there is no law against a man soliciting, but a woman must not solicit. She is laid hold of persistently, but they leave him free. The woman solicits to the technical annoyance of anybody, and she can be arrested at once as a rogue and vagabond.

6963. What do you conceive to be the basis of existing legislation on that subject?—The basis is that it was all against the woman and all in favour of the man. I am not expressing that as a prejudiced opinion, because if I had been in the Legislature with the education they had twenty or thirty years ago I should have gone the same way. But all that is altering. All the blame and abuse and punishment has been thrown on the woman, and the man has practically escaped Scot free both legally, mark you, and socially; and we are now aiming, and the public are aiming, at making a better equality in this matter. I know the difficulties surrounding it, but if the man commits the same offence as the woman he should be subject to the same penalties and the same punishment, which he is not to-day. For instance, it would be known to the police—take Piccadilly, for instance—that certain men frequent there occasionally—not habitually, but occasionally—for the purpose of this immoral conduct.

6964. Let me put my question a little more clearly. Do you conceive that the real reason for the law regarding solicitation is that, in the view of the Legislature or in the view of the community, what I would call illicit intercourse between the sexes ought to be prevented?—I take it so, because we have further laws which say it is a crime to keep a house for the accommodation of those people, so it must be so. The law goes further, and says it is not only a crime to commence this idea in the street, but it is actually a crime for anybody to provide the means for the consummation of that crime.

6965. You do not think that the real ground of the legislation about solicitation is the annoyance that is caused to the citizen by being solicited?—I think it gives him his opportunity to punish anybody, but I cannot say. "Annoyance" is a technical term. For instance, I have been solicited in the street, and I said to the woman who came up to me and said something, "Well, you know, this means 10s. or seven days," and she ran away as though I had shot her, poor woman.

6966. I will not pursue this, but those questions were suggested by the suggestion that you yourself made for an amendment of the law?—Quite so.

6967. In your conversation with the girls that you have referred to, did you find any reason for thinking that the police differentiated in their treatment of foreign and English girls in the street?—No; I have no reason to think so; not the slightest.

6968. These foreign girls have never suggested to you that the police treat them more arbitrarily or more harshly than they treat English girls?—Oh, no; but the foreign girl comes here with her ideas of liberty, and she thinks it very arbitrary if she is not able to do absolutely what she likes in this particular. She comes here to break our law, and she calls it freedom. That is the bottom of it. I would like to further point out to you, gentlemen, that of course most of these women unfortunately are the subjects of foreign men, and nothing would be more delightful to the foreign men than to be able to bribe the police through their women. It would give those men such a hold on the Force that the thing would come out at once. To me it seems almost impossible that it should be so, and I really say that from studying the question.

6969. Do you know what police rules with regard to solicitation in the streets are now in vogue in Paris?—I think they are very loose, if you ask me.

6970. Do you know them?—No, I do not; but I think after seven o'clock the girls are not interfered with. I have been solicited much more in Paris. I do not care about saying this in public, because I shall be there in a day or two, but I have been solicited much more in Paris than I have been here, and sometimes in a more hideous form. I think anyone who knows the Frederichstrasse in Berlin would certainly compare Piccadilly favourably with that place.

6971. I was not thinking of asking you to compare the state of Berlin and Paris with the state of London. I only thought that perhaps you were acquainted with the duties of the police in Paris?—No, I am not.

6972. (Mr. Whitmore.) Is your experience of the action of the police with regard to these matters gathered from the whole of London or from any particular part?—From the whole of London; that is Brixton in the south and Hackney in the east, and that way, but chiefly from the centre of London.

6973. It is not restricted to the centre of London?—No. Tottenham Court Road, Piccadilly, Euston Road, Regent Street, Oxford Street, and all these places. We look specially to these places, and the result of our census is that I think there is a great deal of fiction as to the number of women, either foreign or English, who are walking on the pavement of shame in London. I do not think there is anything like the number that there are reported to be.

6974. Have you got the figures?—They are not reliable, but I should put the outside, myself, engaged in this public prostitution, both English, foreign, and everything, at 8,000, which is startling when we know it has been stated publicly that we have 80,000 in London. The common statement is that there are something like 60,000 to 80,000, which is a perfect fiction, because the same woman parades 20 times round the same points.

6975. You say that the number has very much diminished in forty years?—Very much so; and from a public point of view I am glad to believe, on the evidence, that prostitution does not pay from an English point of view—that is after they descend from the theatres and the music-halls into the streets. From 18 to 24, yes, but then they leave the different music-halls, and they are out of the proprietorship, and on their own account, and it does not pay. That is my conviction from what I have seen, and I am glad to know that honest industry pays better than most of the forms of vice so far as the English girls are concerned. Some it may pay, but only for a time.

6976. (Mr. Dickinson.) I see you say that something further might be done to clear the thoroughfares of vice, which is still too much in evidence. Would you tell me what, under the existing law, you think could be done further?—Under the existing law, if the police might only go back to the time before this Commission, and act as they were acting then, I do not think we should have much to desire in London. I think there has been since this Commission a few more in Piccadilly. Whether it is that the police have held their hands I do not know, but up to that time we felt they were doing everything possible with the law, which was unequal, mind you—strongly unequal—and they were making a marked improvement all round. Piccadilly is only bad by name to a large extent, or was a few weeks ago. There were not many bad women there, and those who were there were always kept on the round. There was no congestion.

6977. You are proposing that after one warning, then a person soliciting should be taken up. Are you aware that we have been told that the system of the police at present is that before a prostitute is taken up by a policeman he must on that same night have given a warning to her. Are you aware of that?—I am quite aware of that.

6978. Are you aware at all of the procedure in other towns with regard to this question?—Yes, I am, I think.

6979. Do you know whether that arrangement holds good in other towns?—In other towns you deal with a very, very small, narrow area, and the police know these women, and I do not understand that they warn them.

6980. We were told that that was the general construction of the rule, that they had to warn the girl before they could take her up, and then it is said that the girl is in the habit of going away to another beat. I want to ask for your opinion upon that as to whether that system could be improved?—It is complicated, but I think I suggested after the second warning they should be at liberty to arrest. Supposing a young man who is innocent is given this warning by the police, there is no publicity. The warning would state where it emanated from. He and his friends would go privately and have the whole matter investigated. It would obviate anything like a public mistake on the part of the police. Supposing a respectable woman was given a printed warning, her friends and she immediately—not in a police court, where everything is public, but in a private room before, say, the Chief Commissioner—could go and deal with it, and it would be investigated at once, and no harm is done practically. That is what we think, and, as I say, it would rid the place of the young men who would be in fear of getting this bit of paper.

6981. I only want to know exactly what you suggest. You suggest that after that warning has been given twice that then on any occasion when this person is seen carrying on that particular business he or she should be arrested?—Yes.

6982. Without any further warning?—Yes. Of course, there would have to be proof of these warnings. The details would be a little complicated, but it is a big question and worth dealing with.

6983. You told us that you think there is a very great improvement in London. Does what you say apply to that area immediately south of Euston Road, and all that part where we hear that a very great number of women and men who live on their immoral earnings reside?—Euston Road has always been a very bad centre. I do not think that I could say there is any very great improvement there, and, of course, of late years Tottenham Court Road has been made quite a centre of this vice.

6984. Have your Society made any special effort with regard to that area?—Do you mean to rescue women?

6985. Trying to rescue women or otherwise?—We do not do rescue work. We investigate, and send out information to the police. There is a large number of foreign women in Euston Road now who a few years ago used not to be there.

6986. Do you think those roads you have mentioned could be improved by further action by the police under the present law?—Undoubtedly.

6987. Are you at all able to say how?—I think that by using the same amount of energy as members of the Committee use in Regent Street and Oxford Street and Piccadilly that the thing would cure itself. As soon as ever the police make a certain area a danger zone, then the people get away from that area, and every effort—not at harassing these women, I do not say that—but every effort to make it more difficult for these women to ply their calling makes it less payable.

6988. I understand from what you say that the execution of these powers by the police is not uniform over the whole of London?—I cannot say that, of course. I can quite understand constables, owing to the public Press and public opinion, being afraid to tackle this question of morality to any great extent.

6989. If they are not afraid in one area, why are they afraid in another?—The public Press will not allow a constable to make a mistake, and that means official death. That is one of the difficulties they have to contend with, and rather than warn a women about whom he has some doubt—and it is a very difficult problem to decide in some areas, the arrest of the wrong woman from any point of view, even from associations and circumstances—sooner that risk it he lets it drift probably. I think I should do so myself if I was a constable. He knows, if he happens to make a mistake in speaking to the wrong woman or warning her, he may lose everything, and I say that should not be so. Public opinion should be a little more generous in these matters, because of the difficulty of the problem.

Mr. W. A. Coote.

18 Oc. 1916.

6990. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Is the result which you have given us of what you have arrived at yourself from your own experience wholly, or is it the result of the experience of all your agents?—It is the combined experience of all our agents.

6991. How many agents have you?—We have a staff of between 40 and 50, and we have perhaps about 20 agents. Under the International Agreement for the Suppression of the White Slave Traffic we are authorised by the Government to put ladies at railway stations to look after these girls, and from that source one is in a position to get a great deal of information.

6992. That is when they arrive?—That is when the girls arrive, and if they are going into a wrong quarter, but it is from the combined work of the two Associations that I am able to speak.

6993. I was only seeking to arrive at what the experience is, and of how many persons who have been actually taking part in this work. I only want to know approximately?—During the last four years I should say 20 officially, and, of course, a large number outside that—ladies who go about.

6994. Twenty paid agents?—Yes.

6995. Are they all females?—Not all; there are three or four males.

6996. Now a question or two about the suggestion which you have made to us in order to ascertain your views. First, is it your view that, supposing a young man succumbs to temptation offered to him by the solicitation of a prostitute, that that is a criminal offence on the part of the young man?—I have to ask myself, Socratic like, as to whether it is a criminal offence on the part of the young woman, and the law says it is a criminal offence on the part of the young woman for soliciting.

6997. The law does not say it is a criminal offence on the part of the young woman to be a prostitute?—No; but if she plies for the purpose of prostitution. With regard to the young man, I should like to say that the man was a prostitute as well.

6998. I do not want to go into a long discussion about this very difficult subject, but I want to get your answer upon this point, so that we may consider it. There is one important distinction which I should ask you to bear in mind—namely, that the woman is a prostitute who has been carrying on her trade of prostitution for a considerable time, and is an experienced prostitute. That is the case I am putting to you. The young man comes along the street, and is tempted by the prostitute, and falls. In your view ought that to be a criminal offence by the young man?—My answer is no—with this qualification, that if he comes week after week, if he habitually comes there, yes. But not in the case that you put.

6999. If he makes a habit of resorting to the place?—If the woman does, but my answer is no to your question.

7000. With reference to this printed warning, I do not quite understand what you mean by that. I am dealing now with the suggestion which you make to us of a verbal or printed warning being given to both men and women. Is it suggested that the constable should carry a printed warning with him?—Of course, I am old enough to know that there is always trouble when you go into details, but may I illustrate what I mean? I am acquainted with the Chief Constable of a very important town, and he has told off several officers of high standing and good character, and he himself does some of it—to go round between 9 and 11 at night, and where they find a young man or a young woman in a compromising position—let me put it in that way—they demand the name and address of these two, and the next morning either himself or one of his chief officers visits the parents and warns them of the conduct of their children. That has had such a salutary effect—it seems Utopian probably—in the town that there is even at present quite a transformation going on with regard to the character of the streets at night.

Mr. W. A. Coote.

18 Oct. 1906.

7001. (Mr. Whitmore.) Has he any right to ask the young man for his name and address?—I am afraid I should not like to answer that question. He does it as a friend, I presume. Of course, as a friend, I should have a right to do it. But I can tell you the result of it is that a number of parents have written to the Chief Constable and seen him and thanked him for the work he has done. That is a fact. Of course, I do not suggest the London police should do that.

7002. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I suppose the difficulty would arise, if the young man refused to give his address, was he committing any offence?—Yes, of course legally it is out of court, and I would not suggest it for the London police. I am afraid they would get into more trouble than ever, but in a town it is a totally different thing.

7003. I do not quite understand what you mean by the printed warning. You would not suggest, would you, that the constables should carry it about with them and hand it to the persons?—I think that certain constables should. You see at present a woman says "I was never there before." The constable says "I have warned her several times." All he has got to do is to prove that he gave this warning.

7004. It is no easier for him to prove that he gave a printed warning than that he gave a verbal warning?—Yes, if he has someone with him.

7005. But he might have someone with him who heard the verbal warning?—Quite so. It is not so much on the part of the constable as on the part of the individual. Supposing a constable gave me one of these warnings if I was up Haymarket or round there. I am not run in, and I am not brought before a court, and there is not a public scandal. I go right to the Chief Commissioner and say "This is a mistake," and the matter is investigated. Many of these cases which have done so much harm publicly would be obviated by this process. I know it is a little difficult, and it is a new idea.

7006. It is for that reason I wanted to work out what you meant by that. Then with regard to the other matter, when you spoke of the Act amending the Vagrancy Act of 1824 you mean, I presume, the Act of 1898?—Yes.

7007. I am not clear as to the alteration which you suggest should be made, because it rather seems to me that the Vagrancy Act provides for the very thing?—It is assumed to do so, and, of course, it is a question of administration; but the Act throws upon the man the responsibility of proving how he is getting his living.

7008. The Act says that if a male person is proved to live with or be habitually in the company of a prostitute, and has no reasonable means of subsistence, then unless he can satisfy the court to the contrary he shall be deemed to be actually living on the earnings of prostitution. Is not that sufficiently far?—It does not practically work out.

7009. The Act in itself goes sufficiently far to meet your view. It seems to go rather further even than you have suggested, because it makes it an offence, not only if he is proved to live with a prostitute, but also an offence if he is habitually in the company of a prostitute and has no visible means of subsistence?—Yes.

7010. Then he shall be deemed to be living on the earnings of prostitution, and comes under the Act unless he can satisfy the court to the contrary. Does not that carry out the very thing which you are suggesting?—Yes, it do s, practically.

7011. What I presume you mean is that there is a difficulty in administering the Act?—I have really brought this forward because I think in London we are suffering from want of administration of that Act, owing largely, not to the police, but to the courts, because the Act is so clear that upon the man is thrown the onus and responsibility of proof; but I think in some cases the Magistrates do not take the trouble to make him prove it, but accept a specious bank book, or something like that.

7012. They have to prove, first of all, that he has no visible means of subsistence?—I would rather stake the legal side on the "living with" if he can be proved to be living with a prostitute.

7013. If a man is found to be living with a person whom he knows to be a prostitute, and he is carrying on presumably the work of a prostitute, that is what you mean?—Yes, independent of what he can prove in the matter of personal wealth.

7014. (Chairman.) You mean that even if he shows that he himself is earning, say, £50 or £60 a year at some trade, yet it is to be an offence to live with a prostitute?—If she is carrying on the trade of a prostitute, yes. That is my idea.

7015. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That is to say, if you find him living with her, and getting the benefit really of her prostitution, you would make that an offence whether he has another means of subsistence or not?—Yes, I opine that the Act was for that special purpose.

7016. But in consequence of the words in the Act making it necessary to prove, in order to constitute the offence against the prisoner, that he has no visible means of subsistence, if a man is earning a small amount of money he says, "I have not committed the offence"?—Yes, "I am a waiter one day in a month."

7017. In reality he is committing, if anything, a worse offence?—Yes, that is exactly where we are.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) May I call attention to the 2nd sub-section of Section 1 of the Vagrancy Act, which applies to the male?

7018. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Under the Vagrancy Act of 1898 there is already a section, which says: "Every male person who (a) knowingly lives wholly or in part on the earnings of prostitution; or (b) in any public place persistently solicits or importunes for immoral purposes, shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond"?—Yes, with the ordinary male person we are absolutely ruled out of court. It does not touch solicitation. That was provided for a specific class of offence of a very heinous kind which is known to the police, and Sir Edward Clarke publicly stated that that clause was simply put in to lay hold of a certain kind of blackguard who is unmentionable in decent society.

7019. The Act of Parliament would have to be construed by the court according to the actual meaning of the words, and not according to the intention of the framers of the Act?—We have tried to go on that, but we have been beaten.

7020. I suppose that is really because of the word "persistently"?—Yes.

7021. Supposing you had the word "frequently"?—It is not so easy as it appears to the ordinary public.

7022. (Mr. Dickinson.) You say you have gone on that section, and you have been beaten?—We have not gone into court, but we have taken opinion, and we are advised it was provided for the special class of offence, and does not refer to ordinary solicitation by men.

7023. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) There is another matter dealt with in this Act—"Every male person who actually lives wholly or in part on the earnings of prostitution shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond." That seems almost to meet your case, does it not?—Almost.

7024. Because there you see if he actually lives in part on the earnings of prostitution it is constituted an offence?—My point would be, a man lives with a prostitute, and he says "No, I am not touching her money; I earn my own money." He is only evading the law. I want to lay hold of him, because he is living with her, and she is pursuing the calling of a prostitute.

7025. What you want to do is to make the proof easier of the thing which you know to exist?—That is it exactly.

7026. Which, by reason of the difficulties of giving legal evidence, enables the man to escape from the offence which he has undoubtedly committed?—That is exactly the position. I only wish the magistrates could hear that.

(Chairman.) I understand that the two Post Office officials are now in court in Clinch's case.

(Earl Russell.) Dr. Sinclair is here, at any rate.

(Chairman.) He is your witness, I think.

(Earl Russell.) Yes, sir.

Dr. John Sinclair, sworn.

Dr. J. Sinclair.
18 Oct. 1906.

7027. (Earl Russell.) You are one of the official doctors of the Post Office?—I am.

7028. (Chairman.) What are your qualifications?—I am a Doctor of Medicine, Member of the Royal College of Physicians, Licentiate also of the same body, and a Member of the Royal College of Surgeons.

7029. (Earl Russell.) Do you recollect, or are you able to tell us from any note, of a visit that Clinch paid to you on the 18th October, 1905?—The 16th October first.

7030. You saw him on two occasions?—Yes.

7031. What time on the 16th did you see him first?—In the morning I think it was.

7032. That was the actual day of the occurrence?—12.30 a.m. the occurrence was.

7033. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) What day of the week was it?—It was Monday morning that I saw him.

7034. (Chairman.) I understand that it was after midnight on the Sunday, so it would be Monday morning therefore?—Yes.

7035. (Earl Russell.) You saw him that same Monday morning?—Yes.

7036. (Chairman.) What time?—In the morning—before noon, I think.

7037. What was the next occasion you saw him?—On the 18th, that was the following Wednesday.

7038. Would you tell the Commissioners what you observed?—I only received the notice to attend here last evening, so I have not had time to make out a full copy of my notes, but I have here a copy of the report which I made for the information of the Postmaster-General on October 20th, and if that will satisfy you I will read it out to you. It contains the whole summary of the case. This is addressed to the head of Clinch's department: "The Controller. Porter Clinch attended this department on Monday, October 16th, and gave an account of an assault which he said he had suffered at the hands of a policeman the night before. Asked to state his injuries in order that the parts might be examined, he complained that he had been hit on the left side of the face, and this comprised the whole of his statement of injury. I examined him. I noticed a slight localised swelling of the skin and subcutaneous tissue over the seat of the articulation of the lower jaw, but was unable to discover anything else. The skin of the face and the inside of the mouth were devoid of any signs indicative of an act of violence having been committed. I did not see any signs of drink. On October 18th he attended again, and said that he was suffering from 'stunned feelings,' and that he was 'bringing up blood,' and added that he had been hit on his head by the policeman, and thought that the policeman must have used his truncheon. I examined his scalp, and was unable to find any signs of the alleged blow. I examined his nose and throat, and was of opinion that the blood which I saw upon his handkerchief came from his nose. As regards his 'stunned feelings,' I told him that these symptoms were appearing too late, that they should have been present on the morning of the 16th immediately after the assault. In both my examinations I did not see any signs of shock or concussion. I did not consider it necessary to recommend any sick leave."

7039. You did not see any spitting of blood except that which you have spoken of?—There was no spitting of blood. There was the blood on his handkerchief, and I examined his throat and nose, and I satisfied myself it came from the nose.

7040. You found no blood inside the mouth?—It was the back of the nose.

7041. The only injury you actually noticed was this external swelling over the lower jaw?—There was a little swelling there. There was no sign of abrasion. It might have been toothache or a little swelling from that.

7042. It was also consistent with a hard push?—No, a very slight blow. There was no abrasion of the skin.

7043. (Chairman.) There was no bruise there?—No.

7044. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Did he bring up a clot of blood while you were examining him on the 16th or the 18th?—I cannot tell you. I do not think so; but these are my notes. I did not see it.

7045. You think you would have noted it?—Yes, it is not an unusual thing if a man has had his nose bleeding for him to swallow a little and then bring it up afterwards.

7046. You have not noted anything of the kind?—No.

7047. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Supposing he had been struck a severe blow on the early morning of the 16th, in your view would it have been possible for him to have developed those symptoms only on the 18th—that is to say, the stunned feelings?—The stunned feelings should have followed immediately on receipt of the blow or the injury.

7048. Would it have been impossible for him to have felt stunned two days after the event?—Yes, in my opinion.

7049. It would be felt immediately after the blow?—It would be felt immediately after the blow.

7050. (Mr. Whitmore.) I understand on the first occasion when you saw him he only complained of a blow on the chin?—That is so. The statements did not coincide.

7051. He said nothing about a blow on the head?—No, on the 16th he said nothing about a blow on the head.

7052. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) He suggested, as I understand from your note, that he thought the policeman had hit him with his truncheon?—Yes. I could find no evidence of any blow or a sign of any blow, and I examined the scalp carefully.

7053. There would have been some indication?—There would have been some discoloration of the skin.

7054. Something from which you could have detected evidence of the blow?—Yes.

7055. There was no such evidence?—No such evidence at all.

Samuel John Sandy, sworn.

Mr. S. J. Sandy.

7056. (Earl Russell.) You are the official superior of this man Clinch at the Post Office?—I am an inspector, and I was on duty on the particular morning.

7057. It would rest with you to give him leave or anything of that sort?—Yes.

7058. When did you see Clinch first after this assault?—At 4 o'clock on the Monday morning.

7059. Will you tell us what condition you saw Clinch in then?—He came to me and complained of being unable to continue his duty. I questioned him as to the cause. He told me that he had suffered from an assault by the police when coming on duty at midnight on Sunday.

7060. About four hours before he saw you?—Yes. He explained to me the circumstances under which it occurred, and showed me his swollen face, and said that there was a cracking of the jaw—that is in the movement of the jaw—and he said he was suffering great pain. The suggestion was that it had almost been dislocated. He also said that he had received two or three severe punches on the back of the head, and blood was coming from his nose at the time, and his handkerchief was stained with blood.

7061. At the time you saw him?—Yes, that is at four in the morning.

7062. You saw the swollen face that he complained of?—Yes.

7063. And it was swollen?—Yes.

Mr. S. J. Sandy.

18 Oct. 1906.

7064. Did you see any blood coming out of his mouth?—Yes; both from his mouth and from his nose.

7065. Was anything said about his being dizzy?—Yes; he did remark that he felt in a dazed condition.

7066. Did you, as a matter of fact, allow him to go home after seeing him?—I relieved him, if I remember rightly, and suggested that he should attend the medical officer.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) I have no questions.

(Chairman.) We will now take the evidence of Mr. Platt.

ALFRED FRANCIS PLATT, sworn.

Mr. A. F. Platt.

7067. (Chairman.) Your name is Alfred Francis Platt, and you live at Lambeth?—Yes.

7068. At one time you were a cabman?—Yes.

7069. From the year 1886 up to and including this year (1906) you have been a bookmaker?—Yes.

7070. In what way do you carry on your business?—In the streets. At various times during the twenty years I have conducted betting premises, but until Inspector Shannon came to Lambeth there was never a raid made in Lambeth. Previously I used to pay a rental and bet in Oakley Street, Lambeth, but after the raids we betted in the streets.

7071. Will you explain a little more in detail how you carry on your business in the street—you yourself I mean first of all, without any agents?—I simply stand in the streets, and there are different persons who require to have money on different horses, and I simply stand there and take it.

7072. You have a book with you?—I cannot say that I have a book, because I carry it in my head more or less, but I have a book, perhaps, for certain names in the way of strangers.

7073. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Do you have what are called slips?—Yes, they always hand you slips.

7074. (Chairman.) We want to get upon the notes what you do. You stand in the street, and then what do you do?—In 19 cases out of 20 the people hand you a slip of paper with the names of horses and the amount they want on, and their names attached to it. It is quite possible for a man to come along and say, "I want five shillings on a horse," or "I want a sovereign on a horse." Knowing the man habitually, you know the man's name. It is recorded in the book, and you have done with it.

7075. You take a slip from him, and he pays the money?—Yes, at the very time.

7076. Then, when the race has been run, supposing he has won, what happens?—We pay him out the same evening or the following day.

7077. Then you go back to the place at a certain time?—Yes.

7078. And the men who have dealt with you expect to find you there at a given hour?—Yes.

7079. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Do you pay in the street?—Yes; or it is quite possible it might be a shop of some description, or it might be a public-house.

7080. (Chairman.) An appointment is made?—Yes.

7081. You have been carrying on that kind of business for 20 years?—More or less.

7082. Did you get into contact with the police at all?—I have, to my sorrow.

7083. Explain how you came into contact with them?—I have been in connection with them all the years I have been betting. In the different divisions of the police I have conducted betting I have always found that if I gave a certain price I could always get a man to do what I required. I could always buy him at his price, and we men who are betting in the streets know best ourselves how to handle them.

7084. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You say you could get a man. Do you mean a policeman?—Yes, or a detective officer.

7085. (Chairman.) You mean a police officer, to use the broadest term?—Yes.

7086. Where did you first start your business?—In Oakley Street, Lambeth.

7087. What police division is that?—The L Division.

7088. Did you make any arrangement with any of the constables of the L Division?—It was not necessary at that time when I first betted in Oakley Street.

7089. When did you first begin business in Lambeth, then?—In 1886.

7090. Did you commence paying your money as you say to the police?—I have always done so.

7091. From the very first?—Yes.

7092. What kind of arrangement did you make? What did you do, in fact, when you took up your stand in a particular street?—At that time the system was different from what it is at present. It was left entirely to a man like myself—what I thought of the man, and how I thought I could handle him and give him the least that I thought possible or as much as I thought. At that time the C.I.D. men, as they are termed, were the only officers of the police who arrested us sort of men.

7093. You mean the Criminal Investigation Department men?—Yes.

7094. They were the only kind of officers who at that time interfered with you?—Just so.

7095. You made these arrangements which you allege first of all with men of that division?—Yes.

7096. When did you make your first bargain?—I might say my first bargain was in 1903—what I would call a bargain—because there had been a system instituted, I really believe by the late Inspector Shannon, of sending out ordinary constables in plain clothes to arrest us sort of men, and I really believe that the C.I.D. department of the police, if it is fully traced out, the last twelve months or two years have not arrested any of us sort of persons.

7097. I want you to go back to 1886, when you first started this kind of business in Lambeth. When did you first have anything to do with any policeman at all?—The first day I started.

7098. The very day you started?—Yes.

7099. What happened on that day?—In a convivial way; a drink after I started business, which they very soon found out, and of course, "You can come round Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, whichever day is suitable and whichever hour of the day is suitable for you, and there is a trifle for you," whatever I thought at the time, according to what I thought of the man or according to his disposition, what I thought I would give him.

7100-1. And you habitually gave, I understand, from that time onwards certain sums of money to policemen?—Yes.

7102. Do you remember the names of any of the constables that you have bribed in this way in 1886, 1887, 1888, and so on?—Yes. If you ask me that question, there are several of them on pension, and several of them are dead. They are pensioned off at the present time.

7103. At what time did you carry on this kind of business in Lambeth?—I have never left off.

7104. Did anything take place in 1903 that altered your arrangements at all?—Yes.

7105. What was that?—The system at times was that they sent out police constables in plain clothes to arrest us sort of men, and knowing the feeling created amongst the different officers—it is a thing amongst us sort of men—we get hold of a constable by the ear. These men who were put on that special duty in 1903—I believe you will find it was continuous—were out for months, but I think at the present time they are changed every week, or every fortnight. At this particular time, 1903, these men were out continuously.

7106. What division of the police?—The L Division.

7107. Were they ordinary police constables?—Ordinary police constables sent out on this special duty in plain clothes. The first time that they apprehended me was in 1903. There was one senior officer who could not catch me.

7108. Until 1903 you had never been apprehended?—Yes, I was at Bow Street. I had a conviction for betting at Bow Street in the E Division, but I was never convicted at Lambeth until 1903.

7109. You had never been convicted in Lambeth until 1903?—No.

7110. Under what circumstances did your conviction come about?—Of course, I will say it was betting. One of these officers as well known as myself could never catch me because whenever he was within 100 yards, or 200 yards, I could always have a tip—I will put it in that way—that he was coming, and I discontinued my business for whatever time he was about. He brought out a fresh officer who was not well known to us at the time. It might be of service if we could have these men watched out of the station, and have a word of advice given to us. This man came and spoke to me—Police Constable Powell.

7111. What was his number?—206 L he was then, but I believe he is in another division now.

7112. He came to you, did he, on the same day?—Yes.

7113. On what day was that?—I would not be positive of that; it was in the month of April.

7114. In April, 1903?—Yes. He started speaking to me. Of course, I think it is very feasible for me, if I am looking at a man in the face, to look over his shoulder, and I suppose I can look at a man and stop him from coming near me, and that man has sufficient intelligence, knowing I am with a stranger, not to come near me, so I never took any bets.

7115. Did you have any conversation with Police Constable Powell?—Yes.

7116. What took place?—I represented myself as a clerk in an engineering department near where I was betting, and he really did not know any different till other officers who were with him sent out on duty 204 L, and he knew me as a bookmaker.

7117. But Powell did not?—Powell did not.

7118. Did Police Constable 204 L come with Powell?—No. We were in conversation for five or six minutes, and Powell was really walking away when Soer, 204 L, came up and said "We want you."

7119. Then Soer came up and arrested you?—Yes; he said I was wanted. Knowing I had betting slips on me, I knew——

7120. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You had not much defence?—No.

7121. (Chairman.) You were convicted on that occasion?—Yes, I pleaded guilty.

7122. Had you been on friendly terms with Powell, do I understand?—No.

7123. Had you been on friendly terms with any of the police in the L Division?—Yes.

7124. Before this incident of your arrest and conviction?—Yes.

7125. Do you know their names or numbers?—Yes.

7126. Will you give me some of them? We will not go very far back. Before April, 1903, can you give me the names and numbers of any of the constables who had accepted bribes from you?—The generality of them are pensioned.

7127. I am only wanting to give you the opportunity of telling us. You continued doing your business in Lambeth after this conviction in 1903?—In telling you that it is the first time I have said it. I am paying men to do a thing I cannot do myself.

7128. How have you continued to carry on your business there?—Similarly, in the streets.

7129. Yourself personally?—No.

7130. Then how do you manage to do it?—There is a system in vogue with us men that we do not allow a man taking sums of money for us to pay just what he likes.

7131. Did you give any instructions to your agents as to their dealing with the police?—No.

7132. Have you made any complaints against the police at all?—Yes.

7133. What kind of complaints?—I have made complaints since October, 1903. In the first instance I made complaints against 204, 206, 209 and 180 of the L Division. They were the four officers that continuously during 1903 did that special duty of apprehending us sort of men. 180 L was discharged from the police.

7134. Can you give us their names?—Yes. Soer, 204.

7135. P.C. 180?—Deed.

7136. P.C. 206?—Powell.

7137. P.C. 209?—Gunn.

7138. All of the L Division?—All of the L Division.

7139. What complaint did you make about them?—My complaint in the first instance I sent by letter, which I received no acknowledgment of.

7140. It was sent by letter to whom?—To Superintendent Noviss, of the L Division.

7141. What did you complain of?—I complained of this police officer trying to obtain money under false pretences.

7142. Which one?—180 L, and at the same time complained of the various sums of money I was paying these various officers.

7143. Did you mention that in the letter?—Yes.

7144. To whom was the letter addressed?—To Superintendent Noviss, of the L Division.

7145. Did you receive any reply to that communication?—No.

7146. What did you do then?—This man, with others, came demanding a sum of money from me amounting to £22 16s.

7147. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Was that 180 L?—Yes; and he threatened me.

7148. (Chairman.) Let me understand. £22 16s. I think you said was the amount?—Yes, which he tried to obtain by these means. Their pay day, as I term it, is on Tuesday.

7149. Whose pay day?—These officers'.

7150. Pay day by whom—by you?—Yes.

7151. Is there a kind of settled pay day between you?—Yes, whatever time suits their convenience. We arranged Tuesday. Of course, I have found them come round with a pitiful tale. They can come twice a week; it is quite possible for them to be greedy. Of course, I paid them the same amount again.

7152. Had you been in the habit of paying money to Deed on Tuesdays, or on other days?—Yes.

7153. What had you been in the habit of paying Deed?—A sovereign a week.

7154. How long had that been going on?—About eight months.

7155. Had you been in the habit of paying the other three?—The same sum.

7156. Each £1 a week?—Yes.

7157. That had been going on for some time?—For about eight months.

7158. You had apparently a dispute with Deed. What was that about?—It was not exactly a dispute in the way you put it. I have known them to come twice a week. On this particular occasion, in October, 1903, on a Saturday, which I think was the 15th of the month, I saw Deed and another officer, and we had a drink. He knows where I generally go. I went in. I had the two sovereigns in my hand ready to give them a sovereign each, when Deed turned round and made the remark, "We have not come for that Alf.; we have come to make a bet for the governor." Handing two sovereigns is not like handing 2s. I naturally opened the paper he gave me with the two sovereigns—there is a little counter with a little over-flap, so that anybody in the house should not see what I was doing—and I naturally looked at the paper like that (illustrating). I turned round to him at once, and said, "What races are these horses in?" "I do not know, Alf." The man never having had a bet previously with me, and never having talked racing to me, only more or less asking me how I had got on, I did not give him sufficient credit to have knowledge of these horses.

Mr. A. F. Platt.

18 Oct. 1906.

7159. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) At what time was this?—At 2.10.

7160. (Chairman.) In the afternoon?—Yes. A safeguard we have amongst us men is that as we take each paper after the time the first race is run we time each and every paper afterwards, so that if a man comes up at 4 o'clock in the afternoon and wants to be on the 2 o'clock race there is the time.

7161. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Does he have to state on the slip the race for which he is backing the horse that day?—There is rather a loose way of doing it. Some punters have a very precise way of writing out papers. They write the name of the meeting, the time of the race, and the horse's name, but the loose way is this—the generality of them generally put down the horse's name and the amount they want to have on it.

7162. How would you do supposing the horse is entered in two races the same day?—It does not matter how many races the horse is in—the money is on the first time it runs.

7163. (Chairman.) You took the slip and the money from him?—Yes, I took two sovereigns from him.

7164. What happened about that transaction afterwards?—At 6 o'clock in the evening he came round to my house. Up to a month previously I always paid out the same evening, but I discontinued that as I found it was too much for me. He came round to my house about 6 o'clock in the evening, more or less in a state of drink, demanding the sum of money from me.

7165. Deed?—Deed.

7166. What was the sum of money?—£22 16s.

7167. He alleged the horse had won?—The horse had won, but at the time he gave me the paper, 2.40, which I timed, that horse had already run and won the 2.10 race—which he knew—which he got by telephone.

7168. You say that the horse that was named in the slip that he gave you at 2.40 was the name of the horse that had already run at 2.10 or in the 2.10 race?—Yes.

7169. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) When I asked you what time he gave you the slip you said 2.10 in the afternoon?—Yes.

7170. If the race was not till 2.10 the race had not been run?—It is quite possible for them to get a winner up. It was the 2.10 race. I think I told you I missed the clock.

7171. (Chairman.) I do not know whether it is necessary for us to consider who is in the right, you or he. You had a quarrel with Deed, and you would not pay him the £22 16s.?—No.

7172. What happened with regard to the police after this dispute between you and Deed?—I gave him this credit. He tried to catch me for this money. He came for it, but if he was a just and proper man, knowing the time I timed that paper—2.40—he would not come and ask for money over a horse that had already run and won the 2.10 race.

7173. I quite follow your point about that?—He came at 6 o'clock in the evening on the Saturday—two came—and asked for his money. I had well thought it over in my way, and I came to the conclusion that I would ask other people in my line of business what they would do under the same circumstances as I was placed.

7174. It was, of course, an element in your difficulty that he was a police-constable?—Quite true, else if other persons had done what he had done I should have had such as him there to arrest them for trying to obtain money under false pretences.

7175. That is your view of the case. You did not pay Deed?—No.

7176. What next did you do with regard to the matter?—I asked him to call back again, and during the time I had allotted out for him to call back I went round to different persons in the same position of life as myself, and asked them what they would do under the same circumstances. The remark was: "Well, once a fool always a fool; if you pay under these circumstances once, having all these sort of men to deal with, you will always have to pay," so I came to the conclusion not to pay.

7177. Was it in consequence of that you made a complaint against the police?—Yes. I made an appointment with Deed to be at my house, and I sent a letter to Superintendent Noviss, of the L Division, asking him to send plain clothes officers to my residence, so that when these men came and demanded the money under the circumstances that they did, I wanted them there to arrest them. I have had police officers come to my residence under the same circumstances when I have had other men to deal with.

7178. Was Deed in plain clothes when you had this transaction?—Yes.

7179. The superintendent did not reply to your letter, I understand?—No.

7180. Did you write again?—No.

7181. Was Deed in plain clothes again?—Yes. They came to my house. Deed came to my house three or four times, and we had an altercation, and almost came to blows. On the Monday (they know my time of being what we term on "the pitch"; whatever street we bet in we call our "pitch"; they know the time I leave my house to be there to enable me to do my transactions during the day) these men stood outside my house and watched me, and kicked me on the heel; they back-heeled me, as I term it, until I got to Waterloo Station. I was on private ground there. I turned round to Deed, and said, "Do you think I am a fool? Don't you think that after all the words that have passed between us you will come demanding this money, and threatening me with what you will do, and stopping me from betting, which you have succeeded in doing to-day. I shall not tell you what I shall do. I will go and do it." I got in a train at Waterloo Station and rode to Vauxhall, and from Vauxhall I took a 'bus to Kennington Lane Police Station, and went in there and lodged my complaint, telling the local Inspector what had occurred in almost the same words that I have told you.

7182. Can you tell us the Inspector's name?—Yes.

7183. What is it?—Local Detective Inspector Knell.

7184. That was at Kennington Lane Police Station?—Yes.

7185. What did you complain of to the Inspector?—I complained of not having had any answer to my letter, of having no police officers sent to my residence, and of the thing that Deed had done.

7186. What thing?—Making the bet.

7187. Making the bet with you?—Yes, and coming round and threatening me with violence at my house.

7188. What happened then with regard to the matter?—He told me to call back later.

7189. Did you?—I returned home. When I went to my home I found Deed and others outside there, and we had a further altercation.

7190. Who were the others? Were they in uniform?—No, in plain clothes.

7191. There were other policemen there?—Yes.

7192. You had an altercation?—Yes. I returned back at once to Kennington Lane Police Station, and made a further report of what had happened, and asked them to send police assistance to my house.

7193. Did you write again?—No. At 6 o'clock on the same day I returned to Kennington Lane Police Station.

7194. That was the third time that day?—Yes. I returned and asked for police officers to come to my house, having previously made an arrangement for Deed to call back. I wanted him to be caught in the act.

7195. Did you go again to the police station that day?—Yes.

7196. That was the fourth time?—Yes. Then I saw Superintendent Noviss.

7197. The officer to whom you had written?—The first letter. He listened to my complaint. I told him I had an arrangement to meet Deed and these others at 8 o'clock in the evening. He told me to go back home, which I did, there meeting Deed and another person. I felt so much out of temper that I kept them talking, and sent my eldest daughter round for one or two friends, because I did not mind whether they had a tanning or me.

7198. Whether they had a what?—A tanning—a hiding.

7199. What did all this lead to?—This led to this—we adjourned to two different public-houses, and an altercation took place. There were friends on both sides, as far as that was concerned, and I returned home. The next morning, Tuesday, at 9 o'clock, I went to Kennington Lane Police Station and demanded to see Superintendent Noviss.

7200. Did you see him on that day?—Yes, it appeared that from after the time I went there at 6 o'clock on Monday evening to the time I met Deed at 8 o'clock he sent out Sub-divisional Inspector Spencer to watch my house and whatever took place with me. Sub-divisional Inspector Spencer gave a report in on Tuesday morning about what took place between Deed, others, and myself during the certain hours we were together.

7201. Did this lead to any inquiry?—I have made, repeatedly, applications. I think I have written as nearly as possible 112 letters.

7202. To whom?—The late Home Secretary and the Commissioner of Police, Mr. Henry.

7203. Did you keep copies of any of your letters?—Yes.

7204. Have you copies here?—No. They were impounded at Newington Sessions in 1904.

7205. When did you first write to Mr. Commissioner Henry?—On the 28th or 29th October, 1903.

7206. Did you receive any answer?—No.

7207. Did you write subsequently to Scotland Yard?—Yes, every other day.

7208. It might be convenient to ask you here how the documents came to be impounded at Newington Sessions?—Mr. Grain (I believe he is counsel for the police or assists the police in some shape or form) asked that the papers should be impounded. The next thing was this, Deed was dismissed from the force.

7209. Was Deed dismissed after inquiry?—He was dismissed within six days. I think my first statement was on the 13th October, and he was dismissed on the following Friday as I went at them on the Monday.

7210. You were not called before the Superintendent of Police or any other officer in connection with the dismissal, were you?—Yes.

7211. Where were you examined?—On the Tuesday morning I went to Kennington Lane, when, to my surprise (when Inspector Spencer had watched us), I was asked to make a statement.

7212. By whom?—By Superintendent Noviss in front of Deed. I went to Kennington Lane Police Station to make that statement, and Deed was in the same room as myself, and any questions that he wished to ask me he had to ask through Inspector Spencer, and any answer that I gave was replied through Inspector Spencer.

7213. Was what you said taken down?—Yes, I wrote it down and signed my name to it.

7214. Deed was, in fact, dismissed within six days?—Yes.

7215. How did you get to Newington Sessions?—Deed and Soer (204 L) had got various summonses over a man in the same occupation as myself. They came upon the day that Deed was dismissed. The man in the way of business came round and asked me positively if I knew he was dismissed. Within half an hour of Deed being dismissed from Scotland Yard he was in the same street as where I was betting and told me what a fine thing I had done for him, which I was very pleased with.

7216. What were the proceedings at Newington Sessions?—They were the summonses of Deed (180 L) and Soer (204 L); they had summoned another friend of mine.

7217. What was his name?—Chapman.

7218. The case came on for trial at Newington Sessions, did it?—No. The summons was at Lambeth Police Court. They came to me first knowing that Deed was dismissed, and knowing how they had obtained these summonses. We knew they had committed perjury. They appealed against those summonses.

7219. First, there were proceedings against Chapman in the Lambeth Police Court?—Yes.

7220. Was Chapman convicted?—He was fined, which he appealed against.

7221. Then he appealed to the Newington Sessions?—Yes, and the appeal came off at Newington Sessions.

7222. You took your documents to the Sessions, to the trial, did you?—Yes.

7223. Were you a witness at the trial?—Yes, I was a witness to what Deed had done, and to what business relations he had.

Mr. A. F. Platt.

18 Oct. 1906.

7224. Were you called before the Justices at Newington Sessions?—Yes.

7225. It was then that the copies of the letters were impounded?—Yes.

7226. Coming back to what I was asking you about these letters, how many times did you write to Scotland Yard or to Mr. Commissioner Henry?—I wrote to the Commissioner and I wrote to him in his private name as well—E. R. Henry, Esq. The letters I addressed to him in that way and registered. I really only got a formal acknowledgment that my letter had been received, and would be duly attended to.

7227. How many registered letters did you send altogether?—About 48.

7228. What were you writing about?—I was writing for the dismissal of these other three officers still in the police. At the same time I had a cab licence, and they took that away from me and gave me no reason why it was taken.

7229. (Mr. Dickinson.) Let me know who the three officers were?—209, 206, and 204.

7230. That is those about whom you wrote?—Yes.

7231. (Chairman.) Not only P.C. 180, but these three officers—204, 206, and 209—had been in the habit of receiving bribes from you prior to October, 1903?—Yes, dating back from April, 1903.

7232. A sovereign apiece, I understand, every week?—Yes. That is without any drink money.

7233. And in return for that they did not molest you on your "pitch," as you call it?—No.

7234. Without any drink money?—Or any money I would spend with them in the way of drink.

7235. Were they in the habit of going to public-houses with you?—Yes.

7236. In plain clothes, I presume?—Yes.

7237. What has taken place since October, 1903? I think you said you had carried on the business in Lambeth?—Yes.

7238. How do you manage to do that?—I pay men to do it, but I have been kept under the observation of the police. It came to my knowledge. How long they had been following me I could not say, but from the time I had a bother with the police—a fortnight after I lodged this complaint about the police. I deal in an article that I supply cabmen and 'busmen with, and of course a great number of cabs and 'buses go out of Waterloo Station, and I went up there to collect my weekly payments.

7239. From the cabmen and 'busmen?—Yes, and the railway men if they want anything. Inspector Spencer reported me to the South-Western Police that I was using their building for the purposes of betting, so to give them no chance whatever from the time I left my residence of a morning at 10 o'clock until after racing hours had concluded I never ventured on those premises or in the neighbourhood of where I live. Twelve months last February I had to undergo an operation in a hospital. When I came out I was more in the neighbourhood of where I live than I had been for two years. They caused inquiries to be made. Detective-sergeant Walton, late of the L Division—I think he is at Croydon at the present time—asked various persons I am acquainted with what I was doing. Then they had officers to watch me from my house in the morning, and what I did with my time during the day. On the 5th June, 1905, after they had followed me for three hours and 10 minutes (I walked them during that time), I went into Kennington Road Police Station and wanted to make a report to the effect that from five minutes to 12 as near as possible until 10 minutes past three by their clock I had been under the observation of their officers.

7240. What officers were they?—Police-sergeant No. 6.

7241. What are their names?—I cannot give you the numbers. I made that complaint, but the Inspector on duty refused to take it on the first instance unless I made it in front of the officers.

7242. What was the Inspector's name?—I could identify him, but I never asked for his name.

7243. That was at Kennington Police Station?—At

Mr. A. F. Platt.

18 Oct. 1906.

Kennington Road Police Station. The officers who had followed me about for three hours and 10 minutes were outside.

7244. Were you known to that Inspector before?—No, he was a fresh Inspector. He refused to take my complaint in the first instance, but when I turned round and told him I was going to notify the Home Secretary and the Commissioner and the Member for my Division —I suppose I spoke loudly—another Inspector came, and, knowing the complaint I had made, the complaint was taken down.

7245. What was that Inspector's name?—I should know him, but I do not know his name. I went from there, had my tea, and I went to Kennington Lane Police Station to see Superintendent Noviss, but he refused to see me. That was at six o'clock in the evening.

7246. You said you have been carrying on the business with certain other persons in Lambeth since this incident in October, 1903. Do they carry on business in the same way that you did?—Yes.

7247. Do you give them any instructions as to how to carry on their business? Mr. Rufus Isaacs reminds me that I am asking you questions which may tend to incriminate yourself, but I understand you are willing to come and make your own statement?—I am willing to do everything so long as I can have justice, but I do not wish to do a bad turn to men that I know are good.

7248. I will pass from the L Division now. You have been carrying on your business in the G Division as well?—Yes.

7249. Where is the G Division?—Clerkenwell.

7250. The G Division is in the Clerkenwell district?—Yes.

7251. Have you been in communication with the police of that division as well?—Yes.

7252. Will you tell us what you have done with regard to the police there?—I have been in the habit of paying 48s. a week there, but I really do not want to come to the front until I know how the case goes on.

7253. I think you must answer the question now that you have come voluntarily forward to give evidence, and although your answers may incriminate yourself, we have, under the Act of Parliament, power to give you a certificate of indemnity?—Why take the last thing that I quoted previously to the case that has been lasting three years? Why ask me that question?

7254. Because I think we have exhausted the L Division. You have given the names of four constables who received, according to your story, bribes from you?—Yes.

7255. We invite you to tell us the names of any other constables in the L Division who have received bribes from you or bribes from your agents. You say you have been carrying on your business by means of agents or persons in the L Division. We invite you to give the names of any constables that they have bribed, if it be the case that they have bribed them?—I think we have done our business so close that we will take a little less. At the present time I am paying nothing to the police in Lambeth, and have not done since October, 1903.

7256. You yourself have not done it?—No, nor any of the men in my employment. If they have done so it is not with my knowledge.

7257. We will now pass from the L Division to the G Division. You have told me that you give 48s. weekly to various officers there. Now I must ask you, if you please, to tell me what officers you have been giving 48s. weekly to?—I have not given it to them myself personally, but the men who are in my employment have given it to them. I have to consider those men's future days. I have to consider that they have to get their living in Clerkenwell in future days, but to prove my statement that I am doing such a thing, at the last, I will mention the officers' names to prove that I am speaking the truth—only I have got seven men working for me, they have families to keep, and I do not think I should be doing right unless I let them know in the first instance that I am doing it.

7258. (Chairman.) We have conferred, and we think that you ought to tell us the names of the officers in the G Division?—I will think over that. If I do not have the justice I am asking for in the L Division, it is very likely that I shall get the same in the G Division, and I am throwing seven men out of employment.

7259. You have made a very definite statement that you yourself have been paying 48s. a week to various officers of the G Division?—Yes.

7260. I am afraid we must ask you to tell us the names of the G Division to whom you have been paying 48s. weekly?—I do not think it would be fair to the men in my employment. I will willingly write them down. I do not think I am doing my men justice to make it public.

7261. Very well. Will you write down the names?—I was not exactly prepared to do that to-day, because that is part of the case I thought I would leave to see how I got on with my first complaint.

7262. You have said you are willing to write down the names. Will you write down the names and the numbers of the constables, and we will consider ourselves how far we will make it public. Will you write down the names and the numbers of the constables?—I have not the book with me. I have dates, but I will furnish you with the names of the officers and the numbers.

7263. Will you write down the names of the constables and hand in to us, and we will consider whether we will ask you to state their names publicly. (Mr. Leslie, the Secretary, furnished the witness with a sheet of notepaper, upon which the witness wrote the names of the officers. The paper was then handed to the Chairman.) For the present I will pass from that. I have taken these names, and at present they will not be made public, but you will understand that we do not give any undertaking in the matter?—If it has got to come out, I do not mind it coming out, but I want you to consider the first case first.

7264. We are not giving any undertaking that the names may not come out in public?—I do not mind, or else I should not have put them down.

7265. If you do not mind, shall I read them out now?—Not until the finish. I do not want them made public at the present time.

7266. We will now pass from the G Division to another division. I think there is another division in which you carry on your business, is there not?—I have done so.

7267. Which is that?—The W Division.

7268. What district is represented by the W Division?—I am not positive whether the W Division extends to Tooting or not. I do not know whether that is W or V. It is the V Division there in the first instance.

7269. How long have you carried on business in that division?—Five or six years.

7270. Did you pay money to constables in that Division?—Yes.

7271. Were you carrying on business in the W Division at the same time as in the L Division? This is all between 1897 and the present time?—Yes.

7272. We had better have the years in which you carried on business in the W Division?—From 1897 to 1902 or 1903.

7273. Did you make payments to police-constables in that division as well?—No, not to police-constables, but to detectives at that time, because we were not afraid of constables then.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Members of the C.I.D.?

7274. (Chairman.) Do you remember their names?—Yes.

7275. Will you write them down, please?—Yes. (The witness wrote down the names of the officers.)

7276. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You have no objection to giving these in public, have you?—Yes, I have an objection to giving them in public at the present time.

7277. (Chairman.) Of the W Division?—Yes, I am against that.

7278. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You would sooner not give those in public at the present time?—No.

7279. (Chairman.) Then will you write them down. (The witness wrote down the names of the officers.) What amounts did you pay there, do you allege?—Something similar.

7280. Do you carry on business also, or have you carried on business also, in the V Division?—I think it is V.

7281. The W Division and the V Division are the same division, are they? The names you have given us are the names of two officers to whom you allege you paid bribes?—Yes. At the present time one is at Scotland Yard and the other is at Bow Street.

7282. I want you, in answering the next question, to deal with quite different years. Take the last four years. That would be part of 1906, 1905, 1904, and 1903. About how much do you say that you have spent upon bribing the police during the four years? Can you give me any idea?—A matter of £200 a year.

7283. Does that include what the agents in your employment have paid?—Bar the G Division, yes. To my knowledge, in the other division my men do not give a shilling.

7284. (Mr. Whitmore.) Does that include drink money?—That I would not think so much of—what I spent at the particular moment.

7285. (Chairman.) You spent about £200 a year?—That is what I call dry money.

Mr. A. F. Platt. 18 Oct. 1906.

(Chairman.) The Commissioners think it desirable that it should be stated publicly that under the Metropolitan Police Commission Act, 1906, giving statutory powers to this Commission, it is provided that a witness shall not be excused from answering questions on the ground that the answer may criminate, or tend to criminate him, and that if the Commission are of opinion that the witness has made a true and full disclosure, he shall be entitled to receive a certificate to that effect, and if a criminal proceeding should thereafter be instituted against him in respect of any matter about which he has been so examined, the court, having cognisance of the case, shall, upon his application, and on proof of the certificate, stay the proceeding.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) May I interpose to ask your direction on this matter. I have a doctor here who examined Clinch at the police station. He has been here for some time, and would be glad to get away if you are not going to hear his evidence to-day, or to have an intimation of when he is likely to be called.

(Chairman.) We will deal with your application presently.

ALFRED FRANCIS PLATT recalled.

7286. (Chairman.) You have heard my statement?—Yes. I wish to state this to you gentlemen. My experience of communications with the police has been so detrimental to myself that before you publish those names I should like you to have officers in my company and be with me to catch the officers in the act of doing what I have come here to say.

7287. You are willing to make a full disclosure?—I will at the finish.

7288. I understand you are willing to make a full disclosure of all these transactions with the police that have taken place between you and them?—Yes.

7289. Have you got books at home or any documents you would like to refer to?—I have got a good head. I should not like the names to be mentioned. I am open here to conviction, and I would willingly, after six o'clock this evening, go with any police officers, and they can come and see what happens. That is my experience of them, sir.

7290. You have given the Secretary of the Commission your address. I do not think we want to ask you anything further now, but I understand you are ready and willing to come before us when we require you again?—Yes.

(Chairman.) Do you make any application in this matter, Mr. Bankes?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I did not happen to be here when this gentleman was giving his evidence, but I have heard the substance of it. I understand he has referred to certain officers, and handed their names to the Commission. Of course, I should ask to be furnished with the names of those officers, in order that I may make the necessary inquiries, and ask such questions as I may be advised by your permission after such inquiries have been made. At the present moment, of course, I am not in a position to deal with the question at all.

(Chairman.) You do not seem to have been fully made acquainted with the evidence that Mr. Platt gave. He has mentioned the names of four constables, distinctly giving their names and their numbers. They are in the L Division, that is the Lambeth Division. The names he does not desire to be made public, and which we allowed him to write down, and which he has handed to us, are in other divisions. Do you wish to cross-examine him now on those four cases?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) No, it is quite impossible. I cannot do it now because with regard to the four names that he has given I must make inquiries. I believe with regard to one or two of these cases they appear in the return which you have been furnished with.

(Chairman.) That is so.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Of course, I must have an opportunity of investigating those cases, but when the time comes I shall ask the Commission to supply me or those who instruct me with the other names in order that we may investigate the truth or otherwise of the statements made with regard to those officers.

(Chairman.) My question was with reference to your own procedure. Do you ask leave to cross-examine Platt?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Not at the moment.

(Chairman.) But you do ask leave to cross-examine him?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Certainly.

(Chairman.) Then we will allow you to do that at a future time. That is all that we require from you to-day, Mr. Platt.

(Witness.) When am I likely to be called upon again?

7291. (Chairman.) The secretary tells me you have sent for a book that you have got?—Yes, you may as well have it and have done with it.

7292. How long will it take you to get the book and bring it here?—Three-quarters of an hour to an hour. It is possible I may be detained on some other business.

7293. Then you will bring it here by 4 o'clock?—Yes, sir.

(Chairman.) Then do that, please. Now, Mr. Bankes, there is a doctor you wish to call.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) If you please, sir.

DR. RICHARD LAWRENCE CAUNTER, sworn.

7293*. (Chairman.) What are your qualifications?—M.D., Licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians, Edinburgh, and Licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons, Edinburgh.

7294. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Are you Divisional Surgeon of the G Division, at King's Cross Road Station?—Yes.

7295. Were you called to that station in the early morning of the 16th October last to examine a man named James Clinch?—I was.

7296. What time was it?—At 1.40, I think.

7297. What did he complain of?—He complained of having received two blows on the left side of the face on the lower jaw.

7298. Did he point to the place?—He did.

Dr. R. L. Caunter.

7299. Did he complain of any other injury at all?—No. I asked him if he was injured in any other way, and he said "No."

7300. And did you examine the place he pointed to?—I did.

7301. Tell us what you found?—I found nothing whatever. I looked when I examined the inside of the mouth, and on the inside of the mouth opposite the place that he complained of there was a jagged pointed tooth pointing towards the near side of the cheek, and, in my opinion, if there had been any force used to the place he pointed out to me this jagged pointed tooth would have cut the inside of the cheek. There was no cut.

Dr. R. L. Caunter.
18 Oct 1906.

7302. Did you see any blood on his nose or about him at all?—There was no blood at all.

7303. Did you make an entry in the Occurrence Book at the time?—I did.

7304. Is that the entry, and is it in your handwriting (handing book to the witness)?—Yes, that is my entry, and in my handwriting.

7305. Will you read it?—"At 1.40 a.m. I examined James Clinch. This man complains of injury to his left jaw. On examination I cannot find any trace of injury either on the outside of the face or inside the mouth. In my opinion if there had been any severe blow on the spot pointed out to me by this man there would be as a result a cut on the inside of the cheek, as there is a jagged tooth in the upper jaw in this position."

7306. I think you gave evidence on behalf of Clinch, or you were called by him, before the magistrate, Mr. Bros?—I gave evidence before Mr. Bros.

7307. Did he mention any blow on the back of his head at all?—At that time, yes.

7308. At what time?—I believe he did during the magisterial proceedings.

7309. And when you examined him on the morning of the 16th did he mention any such blow?—No.

7310. (Earl Russell.) I think you told us that when you first saw him he complained of having received—did you say two or three blows?—Two.

7312. Both on the side of the face?—So I gathered.

7313. Did you examine the back of his neck at all?—I asked him if there was any other injury, and he said "No." I did not examine the back of his neck.

7314. Did he say that he was in pain?—Simply in the jaw.

7315. He said that he was in pain?—In the jaw.

7316. Did you tell him when he told you that and you looked for these injuries, "I cannot feel your pain, but the marks will show later on"?—I might have said that, but I really do not remember. I did not say "The marks will show later on." I said "If there is an injury the marks will show later on." I might have said that.

7317. That is what I mean. What you meant was that although he might be feeling a pain you could not tell about it until the marks showed?—Quite so.

7318. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) How came you to be sent for?—I am Divisional Surgeon to that particular station.

7319. Did he say anything to you about having been struck, as he thought, by a truncheon?—No.

7320. Was his cheek swollen?—No, not at that time.

7321. Would it swell afterwards if he had been struck?—It might.

7322. It is consistent if he had a blow that there was no swelling when you saw him, but that it should be noticed next day?—Quite possible.

7323. (Chairman.) Did you make this entry on the same morning?—Yes.

7324. At once?—At once; we always do.

7325. This is the only note that you have got of your examination of this man Clinch?—Yes.

7326. Did he make any statement to you as to why he was being examined or why he wished to be examined?—He told me he had been struck twice by this policeman on the side of the jaw, and he wished me to examine him.

7327. Was that examination made in the charge room?—In the Inspector's room, I think.

Police-constable Walter Gibbard, 215 G, sworn

P.C. W. Gibbard.

7328. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Are you a constable in the Metropolitan Police Force?—Yes.

7329. I think you are attached to the King's Cross Road Police Station?—I was. I am now at Old Street Police Station.

7330. At this time you were at King's Cross Road Police Station?—Yes.

7331. Were you on duty on this evening of the 16th October?—Yes.

7332. What day of the week was that?—It was the Sunday, I believe.

7333. Is this John's Mews within your beat?—Yes.

7334. Have you had occasion to go down that mews before after people?—Yes.

7335. Have you had occasion to turn people out of the mews before?—Yes.

7336. On this evening did you notice anybody going into the mews?—Yes.

7337. Whereabouts were you at the time you first noticed anybody going in?—I was about 30 yards along the Rosebery Avenue.

7338. Who was the first person you noticed going in?—I saw the woman going down the mews.

7339. Did you notice anyone going in after the woman had gone in?—Yes.

7340. Who was that?—The man Clinch.

7341. What interval elapsed between the time the woman went in and the man going in?—About a minute, I should think.

7342. What did you do?—I went down the mews.

7343. Is it the fact that there is an archway over the entrance to the mews?—Yes.

7344. What about is the width of the mews when you get inside?—I should think about four or five yards.

7345. You understand a plan, do you not?—Yes.

7346. Just look at that plan (handing plan to witness). Do you see the footway?—Yes.

7347. You see the mews?—Yes.

7348. Does that accurately give the way in which the mews runs? It runs at right angles to the street for a certain distance, and then turns round the corner, and goes parallel to the street?—Yes, that is quite right.

7349. The dimensions are figured on that plan, and, if necessary, I can prove them. I think the width of the entrance is marked there nine feet two. What is there on each side of the mews? Are there houses or stables on both sides?—A dead wall.

7350. A dead wall on which side?—On both sides; and there are vans on one side, and just room to get past on the other side.

7351. There are dead walls on either side, are there?—Yes.

7352. Then where are the stables?—All the way round the mews.

7353. For instance, when you get in from the roadway into the mews, is there a dead wall on each side of you?—Yes.

7354. For what distance down?—For about 10 yards.

7355. Then do you get to the stables?—Yes, they commence there about another 15 yards.

7357. Is it the practice of people to range their vans up against the dead wall on the left-hand side as you go in?—On the left-hand side.

7358. That leaves a small passage on the right as you go in?—Yes.

7359. On this night in question were there vans ranged in that way right up the entrance?—Yes, right up the entrance.

7360. Was there any light in the mews that night?—No.

7361. What kind of a night was it? Was it a light night or a dark night? Was there any moon that you remember?—I forget.

7362. Was it possible when you got into the mews to see anything? Was there light enough to see things in the mews when you got in?—You could not see anything unless you had a light.

7363. Can you tell the Commissioners what happened after you got into the mews?—I went into the mews, and I met the man Clinch coming out of the mews about 10 yards down. I asked him his business in the mews, and he said, "I have come down to make water and to have a look round." I asked him if he had any property in the mews, and he said, "No." Then I said, "You had better get home." He said, "When I please." He said, "I can play the game of Tommy Atkins as well as you can," and then I pushed him, and his hat came off. He went out at the end of the mews.

7364. When you say you pushed him, and his hat came off, was that at the point you met him 10 yards down the mews?—No; about 5 yards from the point.

7365. He had got a little way in the direction of the entrance when you first pushed him?—Yes.

7366. Then you say you went out of the mews, and what did you do?—I went back down in the mews.

7367. Did you push him once or more than once?—I only pushed him once.

7368. Was that at a point where you could be seen by those Italians?—No; it was inside the mews.

7369. How far down?—About five yards in the mews.

7370. After he had left the mews—you say you pushed him and he left the mews—what did you do?—I went back down in the mews, and I saw a woman about three parts of the way down the mews, hiding behind a van. I asked her what she was doing there. She said, "I have come in the corner to make water." I said, "You had better get out and get home," and she went. I watched her out of the mews, and I went back and examined the padlocks on the doors, and then I went out.

7371. Had you got your lantern with you?—Yes.

7372. Was it alight?—Yes.

7373. And were you using that to see what was in the mews?—Yes.

7374. Did you discover the woman by means of your lantern?—Yes.

7375. Could you have seen her without your lantern?—I could not have seen her without the lantern.

7376. Had you got your lantern when you met Clinch?—Yes.

7377. Was it alight then?—Yes.

7378. Where was it?—On my belt.

7379. You were wearing it on your belt?—Yes.

7380. After you had examined the padlocks, you came out of the mews?—Yes.

7381. Who did you find outside when you got there?—I saw the woman and the sergeant about 20 yards away from the corner of the mews.

7382. Tell us what took place then?—The sergeant said, "This man has complained of your assaulting him, striking him on the head." I said, "It is a lie, sergeant; I have not," but he said, "He says so, and you will have to come to the police station," and we went there.

7383. It is said that when you got into the station you looked into some room where constables wait?—No; we went straight in to the Inspector's desk.

7384. Who was there in the station that night beside the Inspector on duty—what officers?—There was a man on reserve; I forget now who was on reserve in the other room.

7385. Anyone else?—No, I did not see anyone.

7386. The Inspector will tell us about that. You went straight up to the Inspector's desk?—Yes.

7387. Did Clinch go too?—Yes.

7388. And the woman?—Yes.

7389. And the two Italians?—Yes, all went to the front.

7390. And the sergeant?—Yes.

7391. What did the inspector say?—The sergeant told the Inspector what Clinch had said, and then the Inspector asked for reports.

7392. Did you prepare your report?—Yes.

7393. Where did you prepare it?—In the charge-room.

7394. Did you go into the room in which the sergeant was and another man to prepare it, or did you do it there and then in the charge-room?—I went in the charge-room. The sergeant was at one end of the table and I was at the other.

7395. Is that the same room where Clinch prepared his?—Clinch prepared his on the desk in the Inspector's office.

7396. Clinch prepared his on the desk in the Inspector's office?—Yes.

7397. And you went in the charge room to do it?—Yes.

7398. So you did it in a different room to what Clinch did it?—Yes.

7399. Who was in the room in which you did it?—The sergeant was at one end of the table and the policeman on reserve.

7400. Those were the only people present when you were making your report?—Yes.

7401. After you had made your report, did you bring it into the Inspector's room?—Yes.

7402. Then were all the reports read?—Were they read at the same time or read at different times?—No, they were not read.

7403. Was your report read?—No.

7404. Did you hear the woman's report read out?—The Inspector read the woman's report.

7405. You heard him do that?—Yes.

7406. Was that after you had made your report or before?—Before.

7407. Did you hear what the woman said in her report?—Yes.

7408. It is suggested that in your presence the woman had made two reports?—No.

7409. And that one report was handed by the Inspector to Clinch for him to read. Is that so?—No.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I did not understand that it was suggested two reports had been made. I understood Clinch to say that the report that was made was not the one that was produced.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Then there must have been two.

(Earl Russell.) There was not a word said about "In your presence."

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It was only a correction I was making to what you were saying was the evidence.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I may have misunderstood that. (To the witness.) Have you seen or heard in this Court the report that the woman is said to have made? Just look at that. (Handing document to witness.)

(Chairman.) Clinch distinctly said that though a report was read, the paper he had in his hand did not contain the same report that he heard read.

(Witness.) This is the report the Inspector read to Clinch.

7410. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) What was the next thing that happened after you had made your report and taken it to the Inspector? What happened to you, or what did you do?—I went on my beat again afterwards.

7411. Before you went on your beat again were you left in the room with Clinch and the woman, the Inspector having gone out?—By the side of the Inspector's desk.

7412. Did you speak to Clinch then?—Yes.

7413. What did you say to him?—I said to Clinch: "You are a beauty making this false charge against me and telling a lot of lies."

7414. What did Clinch say to that?—"I do not want to speak to you, I will speak to the Inspector." That was all that was said.

7415. And after the Inspector came in, I think, he did complain that you had been speaking to him?—Yes.

7416. What did the Inspector say to you?—He said: "Oh, that is enough," or something like that. "Do not speak to him."

7417. Now, I must just go back. Clinch says that

P.C. W. Gibbard.

18 Oct. 1906.

the woman was in the mews between the first and second carts?—There were about eight vans, perhaps three in one length and four or five in the other.

7418. So that where you found the woman was about eight vans down? Is that it?—Yes, nearly down to the end.

7419. Is there any foundation for the suggestion that you were behaving improperly with that woman in any part of the mews?—No such thing.

(Chairman.) According to the plan you have handed up there is only one line of vans.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes, but he says about eight vans down.

(Chairman.) There are not eight here.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) There is only room for four according to this. I do not quite understand what he meant by it.

(Witness.) The mews goes round.

7420. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Do you mean there were vans along this way (pointing on the plan)?—Both ways up to here and along here.

7421. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) She was round the corner, was she?—Yes.

7422. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Where was the woman—in this part or in that part (pointing on the plan)?—In that part.

7423. Towards the end?—Yes.

7424. Almost at the end of the piece that runs parallel with Rosebery Avenue?—Yes.

7425. And in this part, I understand, there were the eight vans?—About three in this part and about four in that.

7426. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) It is said that you struck the man twice?—No.

7427. Did you strike him at all?—No.

7428. And it is said that when you came out the sergeant told you what the charge was and that you made no reply. Is that true?—I said, "It is a lie, sergeant."

7429. And it is said when the Inspector was out of the room you said to Clinch: "Look here, old chap, next time I see you I will lock you up. What do you want to put a man away for?"—No, sir, I never said any such thing.

7430. (Earl Russell.) You have made altogether more than one statement about this, I suppose? The first statement you made to any superior official at all was when you met this sergeant at the mouth of the mews?—Yes.

7431. That was the first statement you made about this occurrence to any superior official?—Yes.

7432. And you have told us that what you said to him was: "It is a lie, sergeant; I have not done so," or something of that sort—"I have not struck him"?—Yes.

7433. "It is a lie, sergeant; I have not struck him." Is that what you said?—Yes.

7434. Did you say anything besides that to the sergeant at the time?—I think that is all I said to him.

7435. What exactly did the sergeant say to you when you first came out of the mews?—He said, "This man complains of your assaulting him, and we shall have to go to the station."

7436. I understand that you agree that you pushed him out of the mews?—Yes.

7437. Were you here when the Italians were giving evidence?—Yes.

7438. Did you see the Italian who said you pushed Clinch out like that (describing)?—Yes.

7439. Do you agree with that?—Yes.

7440. (Chairman.) You do agree with that?—Yes.

7441. (Earl Russell.) The next statement you made was your report at the police station. Have you made further reports on this occurrence since?—No, not since.

7442. There was a hearing before the Magistrate. You did not make any further report before that?—No.

7443. Has any report been called for since by your superior officers?—Not that I know of.

7444. You know whether you have written one or not?—I have not written one.

7445. You have not written any further report yourself about it?—No.

7446. Then this and the statement to the sergeant and your evidence in the police court are the only reports that you have made?—Yes.

7447. According to your own account, when Clinch was in the mews did he go quietly when he was told to go, or did he not go quietly?—He would not go. He said he would not.

7448. Did he show fight in any way?—He formed up to me as if he was going to strike me, and then I pushed him.

7449. He did not go at once when you told him?—No.

7450. That was your reason for pushing him?—Yes.

7451. Did you state that to the Inspector on duty at the station?—Yes, I believe I did.

7452. You said he sparred up to you?—Yes.

7453. Why did you not say anything about that in the report you wrote at the station?—I did not think it was so important at the time.

7454. You were asked, were you not, for an excuse why you had pushed the man out of the mews—why you had struck him or pushed him? If the man had gone quietly you would not be authorised to push him?—I was not asked.

7455. If you tell a man to go and he goes quietly, it is no part of your business to push as well?—No.

7456. What you say in the report which you wrote at the police station is this: "I told him to get away home, and pushed him out of the mews." Why did you not say when you were writing that report that "because he would not go, or because he squared up to me, or because he answered back, I pushed him out of the mews"?—I did not think of it at the time. I did not think it was so important. I did not think all this trouble was coming of it.

7457. This happened on the 16th October. What was the date of the hearing in the police court?—The 7th November, I believe.

7458. That was 24 days afterwards, rather over three weeks afterwards?—About that.

7459. During that time you had instructed a solicitor or one had been instructed for you?—Yes.

7460. Did the police authorities do that for you?—I did that.

7461. You did that yourself?—Yes.

7462. Of course, you made inquiries about this man who was bringing a charge against you?—No more than what had been said at the station.

7463. But you found out who he was. You found out that he was really a Post Office servant, as he represented himself to be, and all that sort of thing?—Yes, I heard so.

7464. You tried to find out who this man was who was bringing a charge against you, and also, I suppose, what his character was?—Yes.

7465. Did you make those inquiries yourself, or were they made for you by your solicitor?—I made them myself.

7466. Did you find out what he had been doing for a living and how he had been getting on?—Yes.

7467. You found out he had been in the Army?—Yes.

7468. You did not mention he used any expression about "Tommy Atkins" until you came into the police court, did you?—No.

7469. I understood you to say something just now about the way in which he went out of the mews when you first met him. Just see if this is right. This is what you said, I think: "I met Clinch coming out of the mews." Is that right?—Yes.

7470. He was walking towards the mouth of the mews when you met him?—Yes.

7471. I think you told Mr. Bankes it was about 10 yards from the entrance. Is that right?—About that.

7472. I think you said he had walked five yards towards the entrance. He had got within about half the distance of the entrance when you thought it was necessary to push him the rest of the way because he was not going?—Yes.

7473. You met him again about 10 yards down the mews, and you said: "As you have no property here, come out of it"?—Yes.

7474. When he got about five yards you thought he was sparring up to you, and he was not going as quickly as he could, and you pushed him out?—When he said, "I can play the game of Tommy Atkins," and refused to go.

7475. That was about five yards from the entrance?—Yes.

7476. Did he make any attempt to go further down the mews or not?—No.

7477. He did not go back again. From the time you first spoke to him, although he went slowly at one period, or stood still, he continued all the time to go towards the entrance?—He stopped again about five yards.

7478. He did not go backwards at any time?—No.

7479. (Chairman.) He did not go back at all?—No.

7480. (Earl Russell.) After he had got to the top of the mews you pushed him to the top, did you not?—When he refused to go I pushed him.

7481. Did he come back into the mews after that?—I did not see him after until I saw him with the sergeant.

7482. From the time you pushed him you did not see him come back at all?—No.

7483. What does this mean which you said at the police court: "I asked him if he had any property there, and he said no." Is that right?—Yes.

7484. "I said, 'You had better get home.' He went to the top of the mews." What do you mean by "the top of the mews"? Do you mean he got into Rosebery Avenue?—Right at the entrance.

7485. "He came back 10 yards." What does that mean?—I cannot remember him doing that.

7486. (Chairman.) You have just told Lord Russell that after he had got to the top of the mews he did not come back?—Yes.

7487. Lord Russell has read what you said before the Magistrate. There you used the words, "He came back 10 yards." Which is true?—I do not remember it.

7488. You do not remember what?—I do not remember him coming back after he went out.

7489. Do you remember saying so before the Magistrate?—No.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Are the original depositions in court?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I should like to see them.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Certainly (handing).

7490. (Earl Russell.) That is all you can tell me about that?—Yes.

7491. Now just look at the woman in question. What is her name?—Lehmann; I do not know her Christian name.

7492. What is her occupation?—I could not say.

7493. What?—I could not say.

7494. What is her occupation?—I do not know.

7495. Do you seriously tell us that?—Yes.

7496. After all this time, after a year, with all the knowledge of the police, you do not know what her occupation is?—No.

7497. How often have you seen her?—I have seen her about the streets.

7498. What do you think she was doing?—I should think, to see her about, she was looking after men.

7499. You really tell us you do not know now?—I do not know any more.

(Chairman.) He says he thought she was about looking after men.

7500. (Earl Russell.) Yes. Have you ever seen her doing that?—No, I have never seen her with a man.

7501. How long have you known her?—Since the case.

7502. Do you know where she lives?—Yes, I have found out since.

7503. Have you seen her often since?—I have seen her about three times since—two or three times.

7504. About the streets?—Yes.

7505. Although you have only seen her three times you have formed the opinion from those three times that she was looking after men, as you put it?—Yes.

7506. You went down these mews, you tell us, after you have seen Clinch and this woman go down. Is that right?—Yes.

7507. You saw the woman go first?—Yes.

7508. And Clinch one minute after?—Yes.

7509. Then you followed?—Then I followed.

7510. At that time you were standing about thirty yards from the entrance?—Yes.

7511. Did you see these Italians standing there when you went down?—I think I did, about ten yards away from the corner of the mews.

7512. How many?—Two or three men were standing there.

7513. You saw them again a very few minutes afterwards, when you came out and saw the sergeant there?—I saw them with the sergeant.

7514. That was the first time you saw them?—That was the first time I saw them.

7515. Were they in there when you went down?—I cannot say they were not there, but I saw two or three men about 10 yards away from the corner of the mews. I could not say it was them.

7516. Were they standing on the same side of the mews as you were standing, or on the opposite side?—On the opposite side.

7517. Can you tell me whether you saw them there, or whether you did not?—I could not swear to it, because it was 10 yards away. I did not take that notice.

7518. You saw quite clearly a man and woman go down the mouth of the mews 30 yards from where you were standing?—Yes.

7519. Could you see three foreigners standing 40 yards from where you were standing?—No, not 40 yards, but when I got to the corner of the mews these men were standing about 10 yards.

7520. When you saw Clinch go down the mews, did you see the Italians?—Yes, I saw them. I could not swear it was them—I did not take that much notice; I saw some men standing there.

7521. You had a reason to believe they were not the same men you found there when you came up from the mews afterwards?—I could not say at all.

7522. Were they standing in the same place?—No.

7523. Nearer to the mouth of the mews?—They had followed the sergeant up right away from the mews.

7524. You saw these people, or some people, standing there at the same time as you saw Clinch and the woman go down the mews. Is that right?—Yes.

7525. Of course, you were in sight of them, too?—Yes, I was in sight of them.

7526. And in uniform?—In uniform.

7527. Properly equipped for night duty?—Yes.

7528. In order to go down the mews you had to walk 30 yards along Rosebery Avenue towards these three people, had you not?—Yes.

7529. Could you have done that without their seeing you?—Perhaps they could see me. I did not take that particular notice. I went straight into the mews.

7530. How many other people were there in the street?—I did not see anyone. There might have been people passing on the opposite side; I did not take that much notice.

7531. You suggest it is possible you could have walked 30 yards from the mouth of the mews and turned down the mews without any of those people seeing you?—Yes.

7532. What did you do when Clinch told you he had come to make water? Did you believe that explanation?—No, I did not.

7533. What did you assume his purpose to be?—I thought he was after the woman.

7534. From which side did the woman approach the mews to go down them?—From the same side that I was.

7535. On the opposite side to where the Italians were standing?—Yes.

P. C. W. Gibbard.

18 Oct. 1906.

7536. Did she pass you before she went down?—I did not notice her pass me.

7537. What were you doing exactly in the street—walking along, patrolling it, or standing still?—I was walking along.

7538. Getting nearer to the entrance to the mews?—Yes.

7539. 30 yards before you reached the mews you saw this woman going down the mews?—Yes.

7540. She had approached the mews from the same side as you were going and on the same pavement?—Yes.

7541. Did she pass you before she reached the mews?—I did not notice.

7542. You did not notice whether she passed you before she turned down?—I did not notice her as she passed. I saw her back turn into the mews.

7543. Where was Clinch coming from?—I believe he came the other way—past where the Italians were.

7544. (Chairman.) She came one way, not passing where the Italians were?—No, not passing the Italians.

7545. He came the other way?—Yes.

7546. Then he passed the Italians?—Yes.

7547. (Earl Russell.) You say he approached from the other end of the road?—I do not know whether he approached from the opposite side or whether he passed the Italians. He came from that way.

7548. He did not pass you or come along your pavement?—No.

7549. Do you only think that, or are you sure of it?—I am not sure of it, whether he crossed the road or passed the Italians, but I saw him go down.

7550. At what sort of pace was he walking?—Ordinary pace.

7551. The ordinary pace of a man going to his work, not slouching?—I could not see; he walked into the mews. I was a distance away.

7552. You saw him a minute or two before he actually disappeared into the mews, did you not?—Yes, at a distance.

7553. Was he loitering, or slouching along, or walking in the ordinary way?—He walked straight in.

7554. In the ordinary way?—Yes.

7555. At what sort of pace were you walking?—Ordinary duty.

7556. Ordinary slow patrol?—Yes.

7557. Did Clinch stop on his way to the mews, I mean just before he got there? How long before he entered the mews did you see Clinch altogether?—I did not see him before he turned in.

7558. Not more than five yards from the mouth of the mews?—Not more than that.

7559. You did not see him speaking or standing anywhere?—No.

7560. Where do you suppose Clinch was when the woman went in one minute beforehand?—I could not say.

7561. You appreciate that he could not have gone in after the woman unless he knew that the woman had gone in?—I guessed he knew the woman had gone in.

7562. You appreciate that he could not have gone in after the woman unless he knew that the woman had gone in, could he?—He must have seen her go in.

7563. Where do you think he was when you saw her go in?—I cannot say at all.

7564. Because Clinch came from the other side, and the woman passed you to go in?—I did not say he came from the other side.

7565. No; but you said you thought he did.

7566. (Chairman.) He came the other way, because I asked the question after Lord Russell asked you, and I took down your answer, "She came one way. He" (that is Clinch) "came the other way"?—Yes, that is so.

7567. (Earl Russell.) Did you recognise the woman when she passed you?—I never took any notice of her.

7568. (Chairman.) That is not an answer to the question?—I did not take that much notice.

7569. Did you recognise her or not?—No.

7570. (Earl Russell.) You met Clinch only 10 yards, according to your story, from the entrance to the mews and coming out?—First of all.

7571. Was he standing still at the time or was he walking towards the entrance?—He was coming up towards the entrance.

7572. At an ordinary pace?—Yes.

7573. His answer to your question was that he had turned in there in order to make water. Is that so?—Yes, and to have a look round.

7574. Did you ascertain whether he had done so or not?—No.

7575. If he had not it would not be reasonable for him to be walking out 10 yards from the entrance, would it?—I did not take that much notice whether he had done.

7576. What time did you go on duty this night?—10 o'clock.

7577. You would have remained on duty till when?—Till 6 o'clock in the morning.

7578. What time was it when you left the police station after the charge and resumed your duty?—I should think it was about 1 or 2 o'clock.

7579. Would there be any official note of that anywhere, or not?—I could not say.

7580. Are you a married man?—No.

7581. You have seen the plan of these mews, and you heard, I think, what Clinch said about you?—Yes.

7582. There is sufficient space between the first and second van, is there not, for a man and a woman to go in?—They are all close up behind one another.

7583. Is there sufficient space between the first and second van?—No. Sometimes they leave enough room, but now and then vans are close up, so that no one can get behind them.

7584. If a woman was standing against the wall, and a man was standing in front of her, you could not see the woman until the man turned away, could you?—You might do.

7585. Supposing what Clinch says is true, that the woman was standing against the wall, and you were standing before her, and something was going on which should not, it is a fact, is it not, that as you turned away her clothes would fall away as he described it?—Yes.

7586. It would take you a moment, supposing you were there, to get to the entrance of the mews from the van and to reach this man who came down the mews unexpectedly?—It would take a moment from where I started.

7587. You will agree with me that if a police-constable when on duty was really doing what Clinch says you were, it would be a very considerable shock to him to have somebody coming into the mews and finding it out?—Yes.

7588. You say, after you had turned Clinch out you returned down the mews again to the woman?—Yes.

7589. And you found her how far along?—About three-parts of the way, along past the corner from the entrance. The mews goes round.

7590. Was she up to the right angle of the corner or past it?—Close to the farther end of the mews.

7591. When you saw Clinch did you see her at the same time?—No.

7592. You went back to her after turning Clinch out?—Yes.

7593. She made the same excuse as Clinch did?—Yes.

7594. You saw her off the premises, too?—I saw her off the premises.

7595. How near to the mouth of the mews did you accompany her?—Only to the first corner to see her out.

7596. Where they turn round at the right angle portion?—Yes.

7597. You did not think it necessary to come right up to the entrance with her?—No, I saw her go right out.

7598. You simply told her to get out, I suppose?—Yes.

7599. Did you say anything to frighten her?—I said, "You have no right down here," or something of that.

7600. You did not threaten to lock her up?—No.

7601. Nothing that would have made her terrified?—No.

7602. Nothing that would make her run?—No.

7603. When you did come out you found a sergeant of police standing there, this woman, Clinch, and these three foreigners. Is that right?—I believe the foreigners came up after I got there.

7604. Quite a little crowd waiting for you?—Yes.

7605. The first person who spoke to you was the sergeant, was it not?—Yes.

7606. What was it exactly he said to you?—"This man complains of your assaulting him," I believe he said.

7607. Did he say anything at all about the woman at that time?—No.

7608. Nothing about your being there with the woman?—I believe he said something about the woman being there; I am not quite sure.

7609. I do not want to hurry you. If you cannot remember it, say so?—I cannot remember.

7610. You were very much surprised at finding this little crowd waiting for you?—Yes.

7611. Are you quite sure that you made any answer at all?—I think I said, "It is a lie, sergeant," when he said, "This man complains of your assaulting him."

7612. Clinch said you made no answer, and the Italians say you made no answer?—I did.

7613. You are quite sure you did?—Yes.

7614. What was your exact answer? You said you had not assaulted him or had not struck him?—I said, "I did not."

7615. Then you went on to the station, and you made this written statement. I understand that you agree more or less with Clinch as to what happened at the station—that is to say, that you went into a different room from the one he went into?—Yes.

7616. Your statement was written out in one room while Clinch and the rest of them were in another room. Is that right?—Yes.

7617. Do I understand that before you wrote out your statement Clinch and the woman had written theirs out?—Yes.

7618. And they had been read over to you?—Yes.

7619. That was so that you might know what you had to answer?—Yes.

7620. What Clinch said in his statement, which was read over to you, was this: "Whilst there I observed the policeman 215 G with this woman in the corner against a cart, the woman at the time having her clothes in an improper manner. She at once dropped her clothes, when the said policeman came up to me and struck me a severe blow." You heard that read over to you before you wrote your own statement?—No, I cannot remember; I do not think that was read over before I made mine.

7621. I understood you twice to say it was. You told Mr. Bankes, your own Counsel, so when he asked you, and you have told me so. Which do you mean?—I cannot remember; it is so long ago.

7622. And it is a matter of so little importance——

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) He said he heard the woman's statement read over, but I do not think he said he heard the other read over.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) It would be.

7623. (Earl Russell.) I understood him first to say, in answer to Mr. Bankes, that they were not read over. Then after that I understood him to correct that, and to say the reports were read over to him before he made his. I will take it either way. Which was it? Can you tell us at all?—I am not quite sure. I think the Inspector sent us in to make out our reports while Clinch made his out.

7624. You quite understood, do you not, that this is a very serious charge, and I want you to do your best to remember accurately what happened, if you can. It must have made an impression on you?—I do not believe it was read.

7625. Neither of them?—The woman's, I believe, was read.

7626. (Chairman.) You only believe it. You have already told us that it was read, and that the report that was read was the one which you had in your hand?—That was the woman's.

6727. Now you say you only believe it——

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) It is as to the time at which it was read, and not the fact that it was read.

(Chairman.) Perhaps so.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) He did say, Lord Russell, in answer to your question before, and not to Mr. Bankes, "Before I wrote out my statement Clinch's and the woman's statements were read to me."

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) My note of what he said in chief is this, "Sergeant told Inspector what Clinch had said, and Inspector asked for reports. I prepared mine in charge room; the Inspector read the woman's report before I made my report."

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That is what I understood.

7628. (Earl Russell.) I do not wish to press him in the least unfairly. I only want to get what his recollection is, as far as he can help us. Can you tell us whether any report, and, if so, which report, was read before you made your report?—The woman's report was read.

7629. You are sure of that now?—Yes.

7630. Clinch's report was not read?—No.

7631. Clinch, I suppose, had made verbal statements beforehand?—Yes.

7632. Did you hear him say to the sergeant at the mouth of the mews, when you came out, about your having been with a woman?—No.

7633. You are quite sure?—Yes.

7634. You told me just now you were not quite sure whether the sergeant asked you anything about a woman?—You said at the corner of the mews. This was away from the corner of the mews.

7635. I mean after you came out of the mews and before you reached the police station, did the sergeant say anything to you about a woman—at the mouth of the mews?—No.

7636. Are you quite sure now?—Yes.

7637. I think you said it was not true that when you reached the police station you turned aside into a different room?—No.

7638. You kept close to Clinch?—To the Inspector's desk.

7639. You, Clinch, the woman, the sergeant, the Inspector, and the foreigners?—Yes.

7640. You were all together from the time you came into the station?—Yes.

7641. Did you hear Clinch make any verbal statement to the Inspector as to what it was all about?—Yes.

7642. Did you not hear him say then something about a woman?—Yes, he did then.

7643. What did he say about you and a woman?—I believe he said that I was down there with this woman.

7644. Conducting yourself improperly?—I cannot say whether he said that.

7645. You quite understood what he meant, did you not?—Yes.

7646. Did you hear the sergeant make a report to the Inspector of what had happened before they reached the police station?—He told the Inspector when we were standing there together what Clinch had said to me.

7647. And he told him that Clinch said he had been assaulted, I suppose?—Yes.

7648. And he told him, I suppose, that Clinch said you had been there with a woman?—Yes, I believe he did.

7649. It was after this conversation that you went to write out your report?—Yes.

7650. You do not say anything in your report denying the charge about the woman except that you saw a man and a woman go down there. You do not say anything specially about it. You agree Clinch was also accurate in saying that you were left alone with him and the woman while the Inspector went away?—Yes.

P.C. W. Gibbard.

7651. You admit you turned to Clinch and said, "You are a beauty to make false charges." Is that right?—Yes.

7652. You did not say, "You are a bloke to try and put a man away," or anything of that kind?—No, not at all.

7653. When the Inspector came back Clinch did refuse to have any discussion with you, did he not?—Yes.

7654. And when the Inspector came back he told him what you had said?—Yes.

7655. Is it right to say that the Inspector said, "You be quiet, Gibbard; the case is quite bad enough"?—He never said any such thing.

7656. Nothing the least like it?—He said, "That is enough; do not talk to him."

7657. You know this particular woman has been about in that particular district for a year past since this happened?—I have heard so.

7658. Has she ever been run in?—Not that I know of.

7659. In addition to hearing the report of the woman read over to you, did you hold it in your hand in the police station?—No.

7660. Did you hear anything in it with regard to her saying that she went there to make water, and asked the policeman to stand over her or to cover her?—No.

7661. Nothing of the kind?—No.

7662. Are you perfectly certain she did not say anything of that sort?—Never said any such thing.

7663. Neither verbally nor in her report?—No.

7664. You are satisfied now, I suppose, that Clinch and the woman did not go together for any immoral purpose between themselves?—I do not think they did.

7665. You believe both their stories now as they put them?—Yes.

7666. You think they both went in for the same purpose?—Yes.

7667. How long have you been in the force?—Just over 10 years.

7668. What is your age?—Thirty-one.

7669. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Before the night that this happened did you know this woman by sight?—I had seen her.

7670. Where had you seen her?—I had seen her in the same road, Rosebery Avenue; she had passed me by.

7671. Just a word about your report. You have heard that Clinch suggested you had been in the mews with a woman. Would it be any part of your duty in your report to deny anything that he said, or merely to state what you had seen yourself?—What I had seen myself.

7672. You did state in your report what you had seen yourself?—Yes.

7673. (Chairman.) You had been out since about 10 o'clock, I gather, on this Sunday evening?—Yes.

7674. Where did you commence your patrol or beat?—It takes about 20 minutes to work my beat.

7675. Had you been through Rosebery Avenue at all that evening before?—Yes, two or three times.

7676. Had you been down the mews before?—Yes, the first time round my beat.

7677. It is a common practice of yours to go down the mews?—Yes.

7678. How many times do you say you had been in Rosebery Avenue?—About three times round.

7679. This was the fourth time you were coming to it?—Yes.

7680. In what direction were you coming towards the mews?—To the right.

7681. You were walking on the footway, I presume?—Yes.

7682. When you came to the mews, the entrance to the mews was on your right hand?—Yes.

7683. You were walking in a westerly direction, were you not?—Yes.

7684. That is to say, walking from the east?—Yes.

7685. When you got to the mews the Italians would be, as I gather, about 30 yards from you beyond that?—No, about 10 yards from the entrance to the mews.

7686. On the other side of the mews?—On the other side of the mews.

7687. Did the woman pass you before going into the mews?—I believe she passed me, but I did not take much notice of her.

7688. The man was coming in the other direction you have told us?—Yes.

7689. Did the man speak to the woman?—I could not say.

7690. How do you mean you could not say?—He was coming out of the mews when I met him, and the woman was further round.

7691. He was coming out of the mews when you met him. What do you mean by that?—When I met him in the mews.

7692. I have not got to the mews at all yet in my question. I asked you in which direction you were going, and you told me you were walking in a westerly direction, so that the entrance to the mews would be on your right hand?—Yes.

7693. You had seen, you have told us, the woman go into the mews?—Yes.

7694. How far away were you from the mews when you saw her go into the mews?—About 30 yards.

7695. Did she pass you?—Yes.

7696. Did you speak to her?—No.

7697. Nor she to you?—No.

7698. Then she turned down the mews?—Yes.

7699. The man was coming in the opposite direction?—Yes.

7700. How near to the mews had you got when he turned in?—I was about 20 yards off the mews when the man went down.

7701. Then there is no doubt that some interval of time took place between the woman going in and the man going in?—Yes.

7702. I find this in your report: "I was on duty in Rosebery Avenue when I saw a man and a woman go down John's Mews." You put that in your report, did you not?—Yes.

7703. Do you say that is a true statement?—Yes.

7704. You saw a man and a woman go down?—Yes.

7705. Do you not think if you read that you would understand that the man and the woman went down together?—No, they did not go down together.

7706. But look at your own report. You were in one room writing your statement, and Clinch was in another. You have told us there was an interval of time between the man going down and the woman going down. Just read that?—Yes, it does read there as though they went down together.

7707. It would read as though they went down together literally?—Yes.

7708. That means at the same time?—Yes.

7709. And that they went down by arrangement between them?—Yes.

7710. How did you come to make a statement of that kind?—I did not think how it read at the time.

7711. It was a grave charge against you. You had been charged before the sergeant with having assaulted Clinch, had you not?—I had been reported to the sergeant.

7712. You agree with me that anyone reading that would think the man and woman had gone by arrangement?—It reads like that, but I did not think it at the time I wrote it.

7713. I gather you met, according to your story, the man coming up the mews?—Yes.

7714. He had not stopped coming up the mews?—He was coming up the mews.

7715 As if he had finished his business?—Yes. He saw my lamp shining on him, and he was coming out.

7716. I want to know what you mean by that. You say he was coming up the mews. You mean your position was this—you had already seen him go into the mews, I understand?—Yes.

7717. When you got to the entrance of the mews you were going to turn in?—Yes.

7718. When you say "I met the man coming up the mews," do you mean with his face towards you?—Towards me.

7719. You, according to your own account, were only some twenty yards away when he went down the mews?—Yes.

7720. Did you walk briskly to the mews? Did you quicken your pace?—Not extra quick.

7721. But you did quicken your pace when you saw them go in?—Yes, I put an extra pace on.

7722. Then it cannot have taken you more than a few seconds from the time you saw the man and the woman go in to when you got to the mews?—No.

7723. About a minute?—Yes.

7724. You can walk twenty yards under a minute when you quicken your pace?—Yes.

7725. You say when you went into the mews you saw the man with his face towards you coming away? Yes

7726. You did not shout out, or anything, did you?—No.

7727. You had not shouted out as you saw him go into the mews, or as you were walking to the mews?—No.

7728. When you got there, having quickened your pace, you went into the mews, and with your lamp exposed, I understand, you saw the man coming away?—Yes.

7729. Then you addressed him, and told him he had better get home?—Yes.

7730. Then he went to the top of the mews, as I understand?—Yes, he went about five yards.

7731. Was he coming towards you then, when he went the five yards?—When I met him he went about five yards before he stopped.

7732. What do you mean by meeting him? You saw him coming towards you when you got to the entrance to the mews. What do you mean by "when I met him"?—I got about ten yards down the mews before I met him.

7733. So that although you were walking towards him with quickened pace you got ten yards into the mews before you met him?—Yes.

7734. That is what you wish us to understand?—Yes.

7735. Then that conversation took place, and I understand you to say he went up to the top of the mews then?—Nearly to the top.

7736. And then came back?—Yes.

7737. Did you say anything to him when he came back before he spoke?—When he came back he said: "I can play the game of Tommy Atkins as well as you," about five yards in the mews, and then I pushed him.

7738. He had gone, as I understand it, without any pushing at all? According to your story he had gone nearly to the top of the mews?—Yes, a little way up.

7739.—There had been no pushing or anything of that kind up to that time?—No, nothing at all.

7740.—He walked back down towards you in the mews?—Yes.

7741. And without your saying anything he said, "I can play the game of Tommy Atkins as well as you"? Is that what he said?—That is what he said.

7742. Did you understand what he meant?—I thought he meant striking me by "the game of Tommy Atkins."

7743. Striking you?—Yes.

7744. There had been no striking on either side, as I understand?—No. He formed up to me. I thought he meant striking me. That is when I pushed him.

7745. Had you ever heard the phrase of "Tommy Atkins" before?—Yes, I have heard it.

7746. Where?—In different parts where I have been.

7747. What does it mean?—I have always thought it meant a blow.

7748. You have always thought it meant a blow? Have you thought it meant anything else? (No answer.) Why did you go further into the mews after you had pushed him out, as you have said?—I knew the woman was there, and I went down, and I asked her her business there, and she said, "I have come in the corner to make water."

7749. But for your knowing the woman was there you would have gone back, would you?—I should have gone back to see that the property was safe, and the padlocks all right.

7750. Did you say before the magistrate, "I went back down the mews to examine locks"?—Yes.

7751. Why did you not also say you went down to see if the woman was there?—I said after the woman had gone I went down to examine the locks.

7752. Did you not say before the magistrate, "I went back down the mews to examine locks. I saw the woman by the light of my lamp hiding behind one of the vans at the far end of the mews"? For what purpose did you go down the mews after the interview or altercation, or call it what you like, with Clinch?—I went down to examine the property and the padlocks.

7753. Not to find the woman?—And to find the woman as well.

7754. You went down for both purposes?—Yes.

7755. Did you tell the Magistrate that you denied to the sergeant outside the mews that you had assaulted Clinch?—I believe I did.

7756. I understand Clinch, in the presence of the three Italians, the woman, and yourself, told the sergeant that you had assaulted him?—Yes.

7757. I understand you to-day to say you denied it, and you said: "It is a lie"?—I did.

7758. Did you say that before the Magistrate?—No, I do not think I did at the court.

7759. How came you to omit saying it?—I do not believe I was asked whether I said it.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I think you will find what he says in the last line or two of the examination-in-chief: "I told the police-sergeant I had pushed the man out of the mews."

7760. (Chairman.) That is not saying: "It is a lie." I am asking about the exact words. You did not tell the Magistrate that you had said: "It is a lie"?—No.

7761. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) When you first went down the mews did you suspect the man and the woman had gone there by arrangement?—Yes, I thought so.

7762. You thought they had made some assignment, and had gone down there for some improper purpose?—Yes.

7763. I mean that is what you thought, and you went down to see?—Yes.

7764. Then you met the man coming out, as you have told us. He had been there something like a minute, had he not?—Yes.

7765. Why did you think he was coming out?—Because he had his face towards me, and I could see it. The lamp shone for a distance.

7766. Your lamp was shining on him as he was coming out of the mews?—Yes.

7767. You thought he had gone in there by some arrangement with the woman. He seems to have been coming out almost immediately after he went in?—Yes. Nearly a minute had elapsed.

7768. Did you still think when he was coming out that he had been there by appointment with the woman?—Yes.

7769. I cannot quite understand it. When you saw him coming out he had not been there long enough to carry out what he had arranged to do?—No. He must have heard or seen me coming, and then walked up the mews, coming away.

7770. I want you just to think a minute before you give an answer, and to tell us what happened. You saw the man coming towards you as you went down the mews?—Yes.

7771. As you were going into the mews he was coming out?—Yes, he had his face towards me.

7772. As I understand, when he had gone about another five yards towards the street you pushed him?—Yes. He refused to go.

7773. What I want to know is this. Did he or not ever come back into the mews?—He went to the corner and came back about five yards.

P.C. W. Gibbard.

18 Oct. 1906.

7774. I do not quite understand that in view of what you have said. Do you mean that he went to the archway?—Yes.

7775. Then when he got to the archway he turned back?—About five yards.

7776. And came into the mews again?—Yes.

7777. I thought after he had gone five yards you pushed him out of the mews?—I pushed him after he came back about five yards in when he formed up to me.

7778. When you told him to go out of the mews he seems to have gone?—He went with a lot of chatter.

7779. Then he had gone to the end; he did go out of the mews to the archway?—Yes.

7780. And then came back five yards?—Yes.

7781. Then were you making a mistake when you told Lord Russell that he went five yards, and that after five yards you pushed him out of the mews, and that he never came back? That is what you have told us to-day. Lord Russell read to you what you had said at the police court, that he came back, and you said you could not understand how you had ever said such a thing; you could not explain it?—No.

7782. The two statements cannot be correct. There is a mistake about one or the other of them. Which of them is it that is correct?—He went to the top and then he came back about five yards.

7783. After he got to the top he came back again, and then sparred up to you?—Yes. Then he said: "I can play the game of Tommy Atkins."

7784. Then it was you pushed him out?—Yes.

7785. I want to understand something about the practice as regards these sheets. There is no number apparently?—No.

7786. You know the practice, I suppose, with regard to them?—Yes.

7787. What is that number that you find at the end there on the left?—I could not tell you what it means.

7788. It is probably a printer's number——

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) It is the printer's number.

(Mr Rufus Isaacs.) There is nothing else to identify it.

7789. No. 6 is presumably a form, is it?—It is a form number.

7790. (Mr. Dickinson.) You have seen this plan of the mews?—Yes.

7791. Here are the mews, and here is Rosebery Avenue. In which direction were you coming along?—I was coming that way.

7792. You said just now to the chairman that when you came to the mews the mews would be on your right?—Yes.

7793. Then you were coming along that way?—Yes, I was coming along that way.

(Chairman.) In a westerly direction.

7794. (Mr. Dickinson.) On which side is the post office at Clerkenwell?—That way.

7795. In this direction?—Yes.

7796. You saw the woman coming in that direction?—Yes.

7797. How can you say where the man came from when he went in?—I cannot say whether he came across the road, but from that way.

7798. Where were the Italians, the two or three men that you saw standing?—About ten yards away from that side of the mews.

7799. Are these steps into dwellings?—To shops, I think.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I think those are intended to represent the houses.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) That is No. 81, and it is two doors further along.

7800. (Mr. Dickinson.) I see on the plan there is an area marked, so that, I suppose, there are railings all along here?—Yes.

7801. Where would the Italian be when he was unlocking the door?—He was about there—about ten yards further along.

7802. About ten yards along here?—Yes.

7803. Are the doors of the houses on that side of the area?—Yes.

7804. Are there passages to them?—Steps.

7805. Where are the lamps here?—The lamps would be on the kerb. I believe there is a lamp outside on the kerb.

7806. Is that a lamp marked there?—Yes.

7807. And that is a lamp?—Yes.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) I think it is a tree; I think the lamp is opposite the Italian's house.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That is No. 77.

7808. (Mr. Dickinson.) This is No. 81?—There is a lamp opposite there. What kind of lamps are they?—Street lamps.

7809. Are they electric light?—No, not electric. They are the short lights—the old-fashioned lights.

7810. What sort of light was it that enabled you to see a man and woman going into the mews?—The light from the kerb, the street lamp that shines on the corner of the mews.

7811. How far can you see along this street there?—You can see all the way. I should think you could see nearly a hundred yards.

7812. How far had you been coming along that street?—I was about thirty yards from the entrance.

7813. But before that how long had you been walking along that street?—I go along and right round.

7814. What light enabled you to see the three men?—I could see them right enough from where I started.

7815. There was sufficient light for that?—Yes.

7816. Therefore this place is well lighted?—The entrance, but not the inside.

7817. Were there other people going along that street?—I did not see other people.

7818. Then the street was empty?—I saw two or three men some distance away.

7819. But with the exception of the men, women, and the foreigners, the street was empty?—Yes.

FREYA LEHMANN, sworn.

Freya Lehmann.

7820. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Where are you living now?—31, Baker Street, Lloyd Square.

7821. Do you remember on this evening in question going into these mews?—Yes, I do.

7822. Did you go into the mews alone?—Yes, I go by myself.

7823. Did you hear anybody coming down the mews after you?—I heard some footsteps.

7824. Into what part of the mews did you go?—To the top of the mews.

7825. Do you mean the furthest part from the street or the nearest part to the street?—No; to the end of the mews, I mean.

7826. Do you mean the furthest part from the street?—Yes.

7827. Did you notice a number of vans or carts as you went down?—Yes, I passed some carts.

7828. When you were down the mews did you hear anybody talking?—Yes, I heard some talking.

7829. Could you say whether it was men's voices or women's voices?—Gentlemen's voices.

7830. Did you hear what anybody said?—No, I could not hear that.

7831. Did you remain where you were after you heard the voices?—I stopped where I was.

7832. What was the next thing that happened?—A policeman comes up to me.

7833. What did he say?—He said to me: "What are you doing here?"

7834. What did you say?—I said: "I went in the corner." I had been in the corner.

7835. What did he say to you then?—He did not say anything more. He said: "Get outside."

7836. Had he got a lamp with him?—Yes.

7837. Did he turn the lamp up on you before he spoke?—Yes, he did.

7838. After he spoke did you go out of the mews?—Yes, I went quick out.

7839. Why did you go quick?—I thought he would catch me, perhaps.

7840. When you got outside where did you go?—I went down the Avenue on the left-hand side.

7841. Did you notice anybody standing at the entrance when you went out?—I saw somebody standing outside. I did not notice, because I was running; I was in a hurry.

7842. Did you hear anybody call after you?—Yes.

7843. What did you do then?—I turned back—I looked back.

7844. Then you found it was a sergeant?—Yes.

7845. I think you afterwards went with the sergeant, the policeman, the Italians, and the complainant—you all went together—to the police station?—Yes.

7846. When you went to the police station did you make a statement?—Yes, I did.

7847. Did you write it down yourself?—Yes.

7848. Did you write one or more than one?—Only one.

7849. Is that the statement you wrote (handing)?—Yes, that is it.

7850. Did you ever make any other statement except that?—No, only this one. This is in my handwriting.

7851. Have you ever said that you went into the mews to make water, and that you asked the policeman to stand and cover you?—No; I should not ask a policeman to do that.

7852. It is said that you and the policeman were misconducting yourselves close to the entrance of the mews on the left. Is that true?—No, it is not. Of course the policeman could not reach me. He was standing there; I was standing here. It is impossible.

7853. Were you ever behind a van close to the entrance to the mews?—I was standing like that (illustrating).

7854. I am asking you about your position in the mews. Suppose this is the mews, here is the archway going in; there is a van here, another van here, and another van here, and then you go round the corner some little way?—Yes.

7855. Mr. Clinch says that you were standing here quite close to the entrance to the mews. Is that true or not?—I was standing quite free, like that (illustrating). I was not against something.

7856. How far down the mews were you?—To the top of the mews I went.

7857. You mean furthest from the street?—Yes.

7858. (Earl Russell.) Are you a German?—Yes.

7859. Do you earn your living by prostitution?—No.

7860. How do you earn it?—I get some money from my people at home. I got this year £18 from home. They always send me some money from Germany.

7861. How much—£18, do you say?—£18.

7862. In ten months of this year?—Yes.

7863. That is nearly £2 a month, or rather less. Is that what you live on?—Yes.

7864. You do not spend more than £2 a month?—No, because I have got very cheap lodging.

7865. Where did you say your lodging was?—31, Baker Street, Lloyd's Square.

7866. Whereabouts is that?—Islington way—King's Cross way.

7867. How much rent do you pay?—3s.

7868. How many rooms have you?—I have got one small room.

7869. How long have you lived there?—Nearly nine months now.

7870. Where did you live before that?—In Swinton Street, No. 23.

7871. In the same name?—Yes.

7872. How much rent did you pay there?—6s. 6d.

7873. Where is Swinton Street?—The other side of King's Cross Police Station.

7874. Near King's Cross Police Station?—Yes.

7875. How long did you live there?—I could not tell you—some months. I could not tell, really.

7876. Six months?—About six months, I think.

7877. And before that?—I was in a situation in Percy Circus, No. 8.

7878. What as?—With an actress.

7879. What were you taken on as? What was your occupation?—Housemaid.

7880. Is your employer still at the same address?—Oh, yes—no, no. I live in Baker Street, No. 31.

7881. You do; but you told me you were housemaid to an actress?—Yes.

7882. Is she still at the same address?—No, she left me; she did not pay me, and I left my box in Swinton Street. I have not any servant's clothes at all.

7883. Your box is still behind at Swinton Street?—Yes.

7884. That was not the place you had with the actress, but the other place?—No, with the actress.

7885. I thought you told me the actress was at No. 8, Percy Circus?—Yes.

7886. That is not the same as Swinton Street?—When I left the actress the husband of the actress got me the room in Swinton Street.

7887. Why did he do that?—I do not know—because the place was too heavy for me, and the lady told me I had better get a room and go to my home, because I did not understand the English people much, they told me.

7888. Is this actress who employed you still at the same address. Is she still at No. 8, Percy Circus?—No, she moved without paying the rent, and they do not know where she has gone to. It may be the landlady is there.

7889. She went away without paying her rent?—Yes.

7890. Did you have any reference or character when you came to her as a housemaid?—Yes.

7891. Who from?—From Tamworth.

7892. (Chairman.) Is that the name of a person, or the name of a place?—It is the name of a place—Tamworth.

7893. (Earl Russell.) Have you got those references with you?—No, I have not got them here because they are still in Swinton Street.

7894. With your box of housemaid's clothes?—Yes.

7895. Are you paying anything for the box being there?—No, because I could not do that.

7896. Was it kept by your landlady?—Yes.

7897. How long is it since you came over from Germany?—Nearly two and a half years now.

7898. Where did you go first when you came over to this situation at Tamworth?—On to Brighton.

7899. You came with references from Germany then?—Yes, I came from an office in Germany to that place.

7900. What was your situation in Brighton?—Housemaid.

7901. Who with?—I was a private housemaid in a private house.

7902. Give me the address?—I could not give you the address. I only remember the Avenue, Hove, Brighton. There was a boot shop on the corner

7903. You could find the address, I suppose, if you looked it up?—No, I could not. The lady died.

7904. When you were with this actress, and you got no wages, you had to leave because you could not get your wages?—She did not pay me.

7905. What have you earned money at since?—I have had it from home. I sent a letter home saying that I wanted money.

Freya Lehmann.

18 Oct. 1906.

7906. You told me you had £18 in ten months, but I want to know if you have earned any other money by doing any work?—No.

7907. What do you do all day?—I do some housework for my landlord where I am now, and he gives me 2s. a week for it.

7908. What do you do all night?—I sleep.

7909. You know Mr. Clinch by sight now, do you not?—Yes.

7910. Is it not true that he has seen you constantly at this coffee stall in the street?—It is a year ago, sir. I have not been at the coffee stall for five months, because I think the people suit me. I am a little bit better than the people there. I have been last year very often at that stall I know.

(Chairman.) Are we not getting a little far away from the point in question, and from the real character of the transaction?

7911. (Earl Russell.) Perhaps we are, sir. Perhaps it is not necessary to establish the character of the witness further. (To the Witness.) On this night, if you will come back to the night when this happened, you turned into St. John's Mews?—Yes.

7912. For the reason you have told us?—Yes.

7913. Of course, when you went in you saw nobody. You would not have gone in if you had seen anybody?—No, I went by myself.

7914. You were very much surprised to see a policeman in the mews?—No, I was not surprised.

7915. Did he meet you face to face?—Yes, at the top. He said to me what was I doing.

7916. Round the corner?—No, not round the corner. I was in the corner and he was standing there.

7917. Would you understand the plan if you looked at it. Do you understand the plan of the streets?—Oh, yes.

7918. (Chairman.) It is quite clear what she means and what she says. Do you understand this plan. (Handing plan to Witness.) You see Rosebery Avenue, and you see the mews marked. Do you see the vans marked?—I do not understand much about that.

7919. (Earl Russell.) Do not trouble about the plan. I think I can make you understand. You know when you first go into the mews under the archway you go straight down for some time, do you not?—Yes.

7920. There are walls of stables on your right hand?—Yes.

7921. And vans on your left hand?—Yes.

7922. And after you have gone down a little way you come to a corner to your left, like that?—Yes.

7923. Do you remember that?—Yes.

7924. What I was asking you was whether you were round that corner or not when you met the policeman?—No, I went in the corner.

7925. You had not reached the corner?—I went in the corner when the policeman went up there.

7926. Which way did you see the policeman coming when you first saw him. Had you finished. Were you coming out again. Did you meet him face to face when you met him?—Yes, I met him face to face.

7927. Were you walking when you met him?—No, I was standing.

7928. Standing quite still?—Yes.

7929. Were you making water at that time, or had you finished. (The Witness burst into tears.)

(Chairman.) I should have thought these questions were quite unnecessary.

(Earl Russell.) I am trying to understand. I did not understand her to have said anything like this in examination-in-chief, or I would not have pursued it.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) She used an expression that conveyed what she meant, by saying she went in the corner.

7930. (Earl Russell.) It did not convey it to me. I thought she meant she was standing there afterwards. (To the Witness.) Anyhow, you saw the policeman, and he spoke to you first?—Yes.

7931. Were you very much surprised to see him?—No, I was not.

7932. You did not know he was in there when you went in?—No.

7933. Had you seen any other man before you saw the policeman?—No, I saw nobody.

7934. No other man at all?—No.

7935. At the time were you actually where the mews turned round to the left. Were you just where that lefthand corner is in the mews?—I was in that corner.

7936. You came in there from the street like that (describing), and you turned round the corner to the left, and when you saw the policeman you were just at the corner in the mews?—Yes.

7937. When you saw the policeman had he got a lamp in his hand?—Yes.

7938. Burning?—Yes, he turned it on me.

7939. Which way was he coming when he came in from the street? Was he coming in from the street or was he coming from this part round the corner?—He went in the mews from the street.

7940. He was coming in from the street?—Yes.

7941. All you saw of Clinch was you heard some voices?—When the policeman left me I heard some voices.

7942. After the policeman left you?—Yes. I heard them before, when I was by myself, but I could not see who it was. I heard some gentlemen talking.

7943. I understood you to say at first that you went to the furthest part of the mews from the street beyond the corner right down to the far part. I do not know whether you quite understand. Perhaps you do not know the mews well. Have you been there before?—No, never.

7944. Have you been there since?—No, never.

7945. Did you leave the corner and go as far as you could, or did you stop at the place where it turns round to the left?—I went to the top of the mews in the corner.

7946. Then when the policeman told you to go out you went out very quickly?—Yes; I was running out.

7947. Were you frightened?—Yes.

7948. You thought he might run you in?—Yes.

7949. When you got out of the mews what did you find there?—I saw the Italian gentlemen. I passed them, and then I heard someone calling.

7950. Did you see another policeman when you got out of the mews?—No, I did not notice him.

7951. But you did run when you got out?—Yes.

7952. Then, when you ran a little way, you heard someone calling?—Yes.

7953. And somebody ran after you?—Yes. He said to me, "Would you mind coming to the police station with us?" I said, "No, I do not mind."

7954. Were you close to a van where you were when the policeman saw you?—Yes.

7955. There was a van close to you?—Yes.

(Earl Russell.) I do not want to ask the question if it is not necessary, but it will be obvious to the Commission that if at the moment the policeman was talking to her some other man had seen her and the policeman the clothes would have been disarranged.

(Chairman.) I should have thought it was obvious. However, we do not like to stop you, Lord Russell.

7956. (Earl Russell.) No, I do not want to put it if it is clear. Now, you went to the police station, all of you?—Yes.

7957. You wrote out a statement there?—Yes.

7958. You say it is not true that you ever said anything about the policeman standing near you?—No. He was not near me.

7959. You never said anything about having asked him to?—No.

7960. But he was, in fact, rather near you?—No, he was not.

7961. When he turned his light on you he was rather near?—No, he was standing there.

7962. Within a yard or two?—Yes.

(Chairman.) I do not understand that that observation about covering her was made in the mews after the altercation with Clinch. That has never been suggested.

Freya Lehmann.

18 Oct. 1906.

(Earl Russell.) No; I had got her to the police station, and was asking her about writing her report. I was putting it in the police station.

7963. (Chairman.) Did you have any conversation with the policeman before he turned his lamp upon you in the mews?—I never had any conversation with the policeman at all.

7964. (Earl Russell.) But while you were down the mews no other man came up to you and passed you except the policeman?—No, I did not see anybody.

7965. So, if Clinch saw you, it could only have been when you tried to run. You did not see him come up and pass you when you tried to run?—I saw Clinch only when we went to the police station. I had not seen him before that night at all. I knew him by sight outside the Post Office. That is all.

7966. Did you write your own statement yourself at the police station?—Yes.

7967. With your own hand?—Yes, I did.

7968. How long did you stop at the police station altogether? Do you know?—I could not tell.

7969. Do you remember Police-constable Gibbard going on duty again?—No, I do not remember that. I went out to go home.

7970. Do you remember Clinch leaving to go to the Post Office?—No, I do not. I went out by myself.

7971. I did not say you did not. I only asked you whether you remember Clinch going away?—No.

7972. Did you never make more than one statement in writing at the police station at all?—No, only one statement.

7973. You are quite sure?—Quite sure.

7974. Clinch is mistaken when he says he saw another?—I only made one.

7975. Do you remember being left alone with Clinch and Gibbard for a moment by the Inspector?—No, I do not remember that.

7976. You do not remember Gibbard talking to Clinch, and Clinch answering him?—I do not remember anything about it. I could not tell you.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) I have no question to ask.

(Chairman.) We thank you for your attendance. That is all, as far as we are concerned.

Sergeant Walter Lane, sworn.

Sergeant W. Lane.

7977. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Are you Police-sergeant 18 of the G Division of the Metropolitan Police, and were you on night duty in the early morning of the 16th October?—Yes.

7978. Does your duty take in the witness Gibbard's beat?—Yes.

7979. It would be your duty to go round and see that he was on his beat?—Yes.

7980. Would it be part of his beat to examine the mews?—Yes.

7981. And see that everything was secure there?—Yes.

7982. On that morning were you spoken to by Clinch?—Yes.

7983. Were the Italians close by Clinch when he spoke to you?—Not when he spoke to me.

7984. Did the Italians speak to you also?—Clinch spoke to me in Rosebery Avenue, at the corner of Yardley Street, and I went back with him to the Italians.

7985. Did you speak to them or they to you?—I spoke to them.

7986. While you were speaking to them did you see anyone coming out of the mews?—I saw the previous witness coming in.

7987. The witness Freya Lehmann?—Yes.

7988. What pace did she come out?—She was walking along, and I shouted to her to stop, and then she ran and I ran after her, and stopped her in Rosebery Avenue, at the corner of Tysoe Street.

7989. Did you bring her back?—I brought her back.

7990. Did you see Gibbard?—Yes; Gibbard came out just as I got back with the woman.

7991. Were all you persons—Gibbard and all the others—together?—Yes.

7992. Who spoke to Gibbard first?—I spoke to Gibbard.

7993. What did you say to him?—I said, "This man has complained of your assaulting him by striking him in the face with your fist." Gibbard replied, "It is a lie, sergeant. I have not struck him in the face with my fist." I told him to come back with me to the station with the complainant, and we went to the station.

7994. And going to the station, how did you go in there? Where did you go, and who went in first?—I went with Clinch.

7995. And the others?—And the others followed directly afterwards behind.

7996. Where did you go? Into what room?—Into the Inspector's office by the desk.

7997. In front of Gibbard did you tell the Inspector what Clinch had said?—Yes.

7998. What did you tell the Inspector that Clinch had said?—I told him that this man had complained of Gibbard assaulting him by striking him with his fist in St. John's Mews.

7999. What was done then?—The Inspector gave me a paper to make my report out upon, and also Gibbard, and we then went into the charge-room and made a report out.

8000. You and Gibbard?—Yes.

8001. You made your several reports out there?—Yes.

8002. Where was Clinch in the meantime?—He was in the office.

8003. And the woman?—Yes.

8004. She was in the office?—Yes.

8005. When you had made your report out what did you do with it?—I gave it to the Inspector.

8006. And what did Gibbard do with his?—He gave it to the Inspector. He had finished his before mine. He went back into the office about four or five minutes before I did.

8007. Did you make yours out as quickly as you could?—Yes.

8008. When you got back who was in the office?—The Inspector, Clinch, and the woman.

8009. Did you hear any of the reports read out at all at any time?—I heard Clinch's report read out.

8010. Any others?—No, I did not hear any others.

8011. (Earl Russell.) May I see your report? (The document was handed to the learned counsel.) You have said just now that when you told Gibbard of the charge against him he said, "It is a lie, sergeant. I have not struck him in the face with my fist"?—Yes.

8012. Is that exactly what he said, do you think?—To the best of my belief I think it is.

8013. That is what you asked him, whether he had struck him in the face with his fist? That was the question you asked him?—That is the question I put to him.

8014. You think that is, as near as you can remember, exactly what you said?—Yes.

8015. He did not say in general terms, "I have not assaulted him," or "I have not committed an assault," but he said, "I have not struck him in the face with my fist." Is that right?—"I have not assaulted him by striking him in the face with my fist," or "I have not struck him in the face with my fist."

8016. Something about his fist?—Yes.

8017. In the report you wrote out you do not mention that. You simply say, "It is a lie, sergeant, I have not assaulted him." But you remember quite clearly now there was something about his face and his fist?—Yes.

8018. You have heard what Gibbard said—that he pushed him out of the mews?—Yes.

8019. You did not come on the scene till all these people had gone out of the mews? You saw nobody go in?—No.

Sergeant W. Lane.

18 Oct. 1906.

8020. Clinch had already come out when you saw him?—Yes.

8021. It is true that you were called to the scene by Clinch?—Yes.

8022. What was he shouting out when you met him?—He was very excited. I came out of Yardley Street into Rosebery Avenue, and he called me out there and told me.

8023. He was shouting out for the police, was he not?—Yes.

8024. (Mr. Dickinson.) At the moment when Clinch first spoke to you in the street what did you understand had happened?—I understood that Clinch had been up the mews to make water, and the policeman was up the mews and ordered him out.

8025. That was all?—Yes.

8026. You did not understand anything about a woman at that moment?—No, not at that moment, when Clinch spoke.

8027. (Chairman.) Nor of any blow?—Nor of any blow. Clinch was right away from the woman then. He was over 100 yards.

8028. (Mr. Dickinson.) Did the question of a woman occur to your mind at any moment before you saw her come out?—No, not at all.

Inspector FREDERICK GADD, sworn.

Inspector F. Gadd.

8029. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Are you an Inspector of the G Division, stationed at King's Cross Road Station?—I am.

8030. Were you in charge of the station in the early morning of the 16th October last when Sergeant Lane came in with the complainant James Clinch and others?—I was.

8031. Did the sergeant tell you what the complaint was?—He did.

8032. And who made it?—Yes.

8033. And against whom it was?—Yes.

8034. What did you do upon that?—I asked Clinch to tell me what his complaint was, and he told me verbally. He said the constable had struck him twice on the left side of the face. I said "Show me where he struck you," and he pointed to the seat of the jaw. I said, "I cannot see any mark or even any redness." The constable said, "I did not strike him; I pushed him." I said to Clinch, "Will you put down your complaint in writing, or shall I do so?" He said, "I am rather excited; will you do it?" I said, "Yes," so I wrote the heading of the form and I waited for him to make his complaint. He did not seem to be able to make his complaint, so I said, "This is not very satisfactory. I would much rather you wrote your own statement." He said, "Very well; I will do so." He wrote his statement.

8035. Where did he write his statement?—In the Inspector's office.

8036. Where you were?—Yes. After he had written the statement I read that over to the constable. The woman Lehmann then wrote her statement in the presence of the constable and Clinch, which I read over to Clinch, and the constable was there. The two Italians came to the station. I said, "Did you witness it?" and one said, "No, my friend did," and he spoke to his friend in Italian. He said, "If you will take my friend's statement down I will interpret it for you." I said, "Very well," and he interpreted his friend's statement, and I took that down. That was read over too. May I refer to the Occurrence Book at the station? (After referring.) I called a doctor in to see a man who had been brought to the station shortly after twelve o'clock. The man was excited, and the doctor saw him. I left the Inspector's office for about two minutes to take the charge of disorderly conduct against the man. Upon my return Clinch said, "I wish you would stop this constable speaking to me; I do not want to have anything to say to him." I said to Gibbard, "Be quiet; do not speak to him."

8037. Did Clinch say what the constable had been saying to him?—No; that is to the best of my recollection, but it is a year ago. He said, "I wish you would stop this constable speaking to me; I do not want to have anything to say to him." I said to Gibbard, "Be quiet; do not say anything to him." After the statements had been all taken down Clinch said he felt pain and a clicking in the left jaw. I said, "Very well; I will send for a doctor." The doctor came and saw him, and examined him, and he made his entry in the Occurrence Book, which was read over to Clinch, and I think he left about two o'clock. Before he left I said, "I should like to know whether you propose to leave this matter to be dealt with by the Commissioner, or whether you propose to apply for a summons." He said, "I do not quite know what I shall do, my hours are"—I think he said—"from 12.30 to 7.30, but I said, "I should like to know what you intend to do, and I will call upon you." About half-past three I called at the Inland section at Mount Pleasant, and asked to see him, and he came to me. I asked him if he had made up his mind, and he said, "No, I have not." He said something about that he did not like, or it was not nice for one public servant to go against another one. I said, "I cannot advise you, but I want to know whether you have made up your mind what you propose to do?" He said, "No, I think not," and he said, "I will call at the station and let you know." But he did not do so.

8038. Did you make out your report?—Yes.

8039. When?—That same morning, about 7 o'clock, before I went off duty.

8040. Is that your report? (Handing document to witness.)—That is my report.

8041. At the time you made that did you know what course Clinch was going to adopt?—I did not.

8042. Whether he was going before the Magistrate or whether he was going to complain to the Commissioner?—No, I did not.

8043. Making that out did you attach anything to it?—Yes, I attached the report of the sergeant, the report of the constable, the statement of the woman, and the statement of Clinch, and the statement of the Italian witnesses.

8044. You note that in the last line of your report you state, "Statements of Clinch and witnesses, and reports from Police-sergeant Lane and Police-constable Gibbard are attached"?—That is so.

8045. To whom did you send that or hand that?—They were left for the sub-Divisional Inspector.

8046. And he would hand them to the Superintendent?—Yes.

8047. What would become of them after the Superintendent had seen them?—I presume he would submit them to the Commissioner.

8048. To the central office in New Scotland Yard?—Yes.

8049. That is the ordinary course?—Yes. He would wait to see what action was taken, whether application was made for a summons. I do not know whether it was done in this case.

8050. Yes, there is a Minute upon it as to what he did. In the ordinary case they would go to Scotland Yard?—Yes.

8051. At any rate, it passed out of your hands at what hour on the 16th?—As far as I can recollect, 7 o'clock.

8052. When it passed out of your hands the woman's statement was attached to it?—It was.

8053. Look at the woman's statement. (Document handed to witness.) Is that the statement which was attached to your report when you made it at 7 o'clock in the morning?—It is. I have no doubt about it.

8054. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It was signed by you?—Yes, countersigned by me.

8055. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) So far as you are concerned has it ever been in your possession since?—Never. I have never seen the papers since—none of them.

8057. Did you know what time Gibbard went on duty again?—To the best of my recollection it was about 2 o'clock.

8058. Clinch had already gone?—Yes.

8059. When did the woman go—about the same time as Gibbard?—No, she went earlier. I think the woman left at 1.30. I did not detain her after I took the statement.

8060. Clinch did not go till 1.40?—He did not go till 2 o'clock, I think. The doctor was called at 1.40.

8061. The woman was still there when Clinch left, was she not?—No. I am almost certain the woman left about 1.30, as near as I can say.

8062. You are almost certain?—Almost certain. It is a year ago.

8063. You did read the statement of Clinch over to Gibbard before Gibbard wrote out his report. Is that so?—Yes.

8064. Then he was mistaken when he said you had not done it?—I am almost sure I did. I think I read these statements in the sequence in which they were written. First Clinch, and then the statement of the Italian, and then the woman. That is how they were written, and they were read out as they were written.

8065. You think Gibbard was mistaken when he said he did not have them read over to him before he wrote his?—I think he is mistaken.

8066. It is a fact, is it not, that you offered to call at the Post Office to obtain his decision?—Yes.

8067. Is it not also the fact that Clinch said he would rather you did not?—No, I do not think he did. I do recollect it.

8068. Did he not say he would call at the station himself, and let you know his decision in the morning?—Yes, when I called at the Post Office he did.

8069. Did he not tell you that when you left him?—No, I think he told me that at the Post Office.

8070. Are you quite sure that when you suggested calling at the Post Office Clinch did not say he would rather you did not, and that he would call at the station?—I am not quite sure, but to the best of my recollection when he left the station he had not decided what he would do, and so that I might complete my report of the whole case in the morning I said I would call there, and I asked him his hours, and he said he left there at 7.30.

8071. You went to call on him at the Post Office in order to complete your report?—So that I could see whether he proposed to leave the matter to be dealt with by the Commissioner or whether he would apply for a summons.

8072. You were the Inspector in charge of this station?—Yes.

8073. What time were you off duty?—Six in the morning.

8074. Was it not unusual for you to leave the station at all, when you were in charge of it, and look up a private complainant?—Not at all. I was working with a sergeant, and I did my hours from 10 to 2.15 in the station, and the sergeant relieved me at 2, and I patrolled.

8075. If the complaint had been against an ordinary member of the public and not against a policeman would you still have left the station?—I cannot say that. It depends on the circumstances. I should not call a man out of bed, for instance.

8076. Why did you not mention in your report that you had called on Clinch at the Post Office?—I did not think it necessary. I think I stated in my report (I have not seen it for a year) that he said he would call when he was going to work on the 17th. I think that is so, but I have not read it recently.

8077. You wanted to complete your report by stating whether he would apply for a summons or not?—I merely wanted to know. It was quite immaterial to me, and I merely wanted to know one way or the other. That was my sole object in calling on him.

Inspector F. Gadd.

18 Oct. 1906.

8078. Would it not have been very simple to say in your report, "In order to ascertain the intention of Clinch I called at the Post Office at 3.20, but he told me he had not made up his mind"?—I said he had not made up his mind. I thought that was sufficient.

8079. Let me read you what you did say.

(Chairman.) We hardly follow the point of this part of the cross-examination. Clinch admits that there was an interview at the Post Office. He has given his version of it, and the Inspector has given his version of it.

(Earl Russell.) The suggestion I am making is that it would be a most unusual course, and the fact that it is unusual is emphasised by the fact that it is not reported. That is the object of my cross-examination. Let me read this report, and the Commission will see there is no mention of it there, and no suggestion of the object mentioned by the Inspector.

(The Witness.) I know it is not mentioned.

8080. (Earl Russell.) "He said he would consider what he should do in the matter, and would call at the station when proceeding to work on the 17th instant." That is all you say about that. You do not say he had not decided or decided to take out a summons?—He had not decided.

8081. I agree; he had not decided, but you do not say that you had called specially to ask about it?—I did not think it necessary.

8082. Although that was the object of your call at the Post Office to find out his intention?—Yes, that was quite the object. I had nothing else in my mind.

8083. Did any conversation at all of the kind suggested by Clinch take place?—When, I think everyone had left the station, he was there alone. It is a long time ago, and I do not remember the exact words, and I said, "What do you propose to do?" and he said—I do not think I can recollect the exact words—"I do not know what I shall do." Then I said I might probably call on him, and I did.

8084. I meant the conversation about taking proceedings. Did you make any sort of suggestion to him that it was a pity to take proceedings against the Police?—Not at all. I denied it at the police court.

8085. And the statement is quite untrue?—It is quite untrue that I said it. I made no suggestion of the kind. It was quite immaterial to me what he did.

8086. You agree there was some complaint made by Clinch in your presence that the constable had spoken to him?—Yes.

8087. You do not agree that Clinch told you what the constable had said?—It is a year ago. The question arose at the police court. Clinch said, "I wish you would prevent this constable speaking to me. I do not wish to have anything to say to him." I said to the constable, "Do not speak to him."

8088. And you do not think you said to him that it was a pity to take proceedings?—When I saw that in the newspaper report of the proceedings I knew it was not correct.

8089. Nothing like that?—No.

8090. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) At 2 o'clock you and the sergeant dividing the duty between you, the sergeant took charge of the station, and you went out for a stroll?—Yes.

8091. And in the course of the stroll you called in?—Yes, about half past three.

8092. (Mr. Dickinson.) Have you been in this district long?—About three years and eight months.

8093. Do you know anything of the woman?—I had not seen her before nor since.

Sergeant W. Lane.

18 Oct. 1906.

Sergeant WALTER LANE, recalled.

8094. (Mr. Dickinson.) I asked you a question which perhaps you did not quite understand. I asked you when Clinch came out of the mews whether the question of a woman being in the case occurred to your mind before you saw her come out, and you said "No"?—No. I did not see Clinch come out. Clinch was in Rosebery Avenue when I saw him.

8095. Clinch spoke to you. I want to know when first it occurred to your mind that there was a woman in the case?—When I got back to the mews.

8096. When you saw the woman?—When I saw the woman.

8097. Then what do you mean by this in your report. You say "I was in Rosebery Avenue, near John's Mews, at 12.15 a.m., on the 16th inst., when a man came to me and stated that he had just previously been down the above mews to urinate, and when doing so he saw a policeman at the back of a van with a woman. The policeman came from behind the van and said to him, 'Clear out; you have no business down here,' and at the same time struck him on the face with his fist." Did Clinch say that to you before you saw the woman come out?—Yes.

8098. Then it was a mistake just now when you said you did not know anything about a woman being in the mews until you saw her come out?—That was explained to me when I saw him first. When I got to the mews I saw the woman come out. I did not know she was in the mews.

8099. The first thing Clinch said to you had reference to a woman. You said to me the first thing he said to you was he had been struck by a policeman?—Yes.

8100. I ask you whether in addition to that he drew your attention to the fact that there was a woman in the mews?—Yes, he said that he had seen a woman and a policeman at the back of a van.

Sub-Divisional Inspector WILLIAM BRIGGS, sworn.

Sub-Divisional Inspector W. Briggs.

8101. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) You are a Sub-Divisional Inspector of the G Division, stationed at King's Cross Road Station?—Yes.

8102. After the summons had been issued were the documents sent up to Scotland Yard?—Yes.

8103. Did they come back again?—Yes, they came back again, but I forget the date. It is on the back of the Report, I think.

8104. There is the Scotland Yard Minute. That is dated the 18th. It shows that it was at Scotland Yard on the 18th?—Yes, they came back that same night to the Division.

8105. For the result of the summons to be reported upon?—Yes. I took possession of them from the Superintendent.

8106. They remained in your possession, including all the statements, after that time?—They were locked up in my desk, and no one had access to them at all; none of the officers; they did not see them until I reported the result of the summons on the 7th November.

8107. Before the case was heard, did you get a communication from Scotland Yard with regard to showing something to Mr. Yelverton?—Yes, Mr. Yelverton desired to see the statements of the woman, of the constable, and also the statement of Clinch, and in fact all the papers. I was directed to see him personally, and I saw him at his chambers in the Temple. I told him the Commissioner did not see his way clear, or something to that effect, to produce all the papers to him, as it was the constable's defence at the police court, and he was prosecuting, but he could see the woman's statement.

8108. What about Clinch's statement?—I mean he could see Clinch's statement, and not the woman's. I handed it to him. He took it from me in his chambers. He threw it down. "I do not want that," he said. "I know all about that; I want the other." I said, "That will be the constable's defence, and you are prosecuting." He said, "Half you fellows ought to be hung—out of the Force." That I did not reply to, but I walked out of his office.

8109. You did go down and give a verbal answer to his application to the Commissioner to have inspection of the papers?—Yes.

8110. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It is your ordinary practice, is it not, to give inspection of documents in an ordinary case?—Do you mean after they are returned to the Yard?

8111. Supposing, for example, there are documents which are in possession of the police, is there any difficulty in the legal adviser of the defendant seeing those documents?—I do not know. I think in a case of this kind there would be. There was a distinct charge made against the constable.

8112. I understand that?—At the police court, if you will allow me to go further, Mr. Yelverton stated he had been refused access to the papers. I had the papers at the police court, and he asked Mr. Bros if he would allow him to see these papers before he entered on the prosecution. Mr. Bros said it was the constable's defence. Mr. Ricketts, who defended the constable, said to Mr. Yelverton: "Perhaps you would like to see my brief." Mr. Bros made no order that he should see them, and he did not see them.

8113. (Chairman.) Was it pointed out to the Magistrate that their statements had been prepared by the instructions of the sergeant at the police station, and read out in the presence of each person who made the statements?—Yes.

8114. Then there would be no secret about what statement the young woman had made, or what statement had been made by Gibbard, the police-constable. Was that fact brought to the Magistrate's attention?—Yes, he was quite aware of it. I made him aware of it.

8115. Was any formal application made for discovery and inspection of these documents to Mr. Bros?—Yes, Mr. Yelverton made the application in court.

8116. At the trial, you mean?—Yes, at the hearing of the case, and I was then prepared to hand them over.

8117. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) In cases of difficulty, I suppose you are advised by the legal advisers?—Yes, certainly.

8118. Otherwise, if you do not hand them over, you are guided by the Magistrate, and obey the order of the court?—We obey the order of the court.

8119. I suppose in cases where there is no question you show them?—Yes.

8120. In some cases it might be of the utmost importance that the papers should not be disclosed?—That is so.

8121. (Chairman.) I cannot see how it was important, because the papers were stated to have been read to Clinch?—We were guided by the fact that the constable was defending himself. The Commissioner did not defend the case.

8122. I was only wondering what had taken place?—We wanted to be thoroughly fair. The constable was incurring the expense of defending himself out of his own pocket.

8123. (Mr. Whitmore.) When a charge is made against a constable, and proceedings are instituted against him, has he to pay the expenses of his own defence?—Here there was a specific charge made against the constable, that he was doing something that he should not have done in the performance of his duty—that he was having sexual intercourse, and the result of that sexual intercourse was the charge.

8124. But the charge was false, I understand?—Yes, but the result of that sexual intercourse was the charge.

8125. If a charge of that description is brought against an officer has he to defend himself?—He must defend himself. If this had been a charge of drunkenness and assault brought against a constable in the execution of his duty, and from our inquiries we found that the statement could not be substantiated, then probably the Commissioner would defend the constable.

8126. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Supposing in this case there had been no question of a woman at all, and the policeman had been down in the mews and seen Clinch, and pushed him out or struck him, whichever may be the correct view, and then there had been a charge against the constable for assault, the Commissioner would, in the ordinary course, have allowed him to be defended?—The circumstances then would have been different to what they are now.

8127. That is why I am putting it to you. I thought I was putting to you the ordinary course?—The circumstances would probably have been different to these, and we should be guided by circumstances. What I mean is, if the constable had gone down the mews, and found this woman was loitering about, and in that case the constable had been summoned for assault, then undoubtedly, at least I should say so, the Commissioner would have defended him.

8128. Can you tell me this? In this case, for example, would the constable, after he was acquitted, get any assistance from the Commissioner?—No. I might say, with regard to that, an order for the payment of two guineas costs was made against Clinch, and the constable paid the two guineas, and he had very great difficulty in getting that two guineas from Clinch. He had to go through all the legal process to get it. The result was at last Mr. Bros, the Magistrate, made an order for payment of the costs or so much imprisonment. The constable, I think, did not get his costs for three or four months afterwards. The Commissioner did not reimburse him.

8129. That was all he got—the two guineas costs ordered?—Yes.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) If you will look at page 277 of the White Book, paragraph 336, you will see there are several courses open: "In the event of legal proceedings being instituted against any member of the police arising out of circumstances connected with his duty as a police officer, a full report of the case is to be submitted for the information of the Commissioner, and no step is to be taken officially for the defence until express authority has been received from the Commissioner. The Commissioner, if of opinion that the question of legal aid may be entertained, will submit the case to the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of State will then decide either that the defence shall be taken up officially and conducted at the cost of the Police Fund by a solicitor acting on behalf of the Commissioner; or that no legal aid is to be given; or, as an intermediate course, he may, leaving the constable in the first instance to defend himself, reserve his decision until the case is concluded, and then on a review of all the circumstances decide whether any, and if so what, sum shall be allowed from the Police Fund towards reimbursing the constable the expenses reasonably incurred by him in his defence."

Sub-Divisional Inspector W. Briggs.

18 Oct. 1906.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It is that later part that made me ask the question.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) I am not sure what would be done in that particular case.

(Earl Russell.) There is a question which perhaps the Commissioners would put. I think it is of some little importance as a matter of practice, and I think this witness ought to be able to tell us something about it. In this particular case there is great complaint about the adjournment of this case from the day named in the summons on the application of the defendant without any notice at all to the prosecutor. I do not know whether the Commissioners would elicit how that happened.

(Chairman.) That was the act of the court, and not the act of the constable.

(Earl Russell.) I know, but I thought this witness might tell us something about the practice.

(Chairman.) That has been explained. Mr. Rufus Isaacs reminds me that that was explained by your client himself, who said he went to the Magistrate, and the Magistrate told him he had better go and see the solicitor.

(Earl Russell.) Yes, but by that time the case had been already adjourned. There was no explanation of why an adjournment was obtained ex parte.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) That is all the evidence in this case.

Mr. Alfred Francis Platt, recalled.

Mr. A. F. Platt.

8130. (Chairman.) Have you any books which you would like to hand in?—I have one here.

8131. Will you hand it in, and Mr. Leslie will take care of it until our next sitting?—Yes. (Handing.)

8132. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Without looking through the book, now shall we find in this book any note of those payments to which you have referred?—Yes.

8133. Will you just give me one indication?—There (referring to a page in the book).

8134. (Chairman.) You have not got all your books here?—No.

NINTH DAY.

Monday, 22nd October 1906.

PRESENT:

Sir David Brynmor Jones, K.C., M.P. (Chairman).
Rufus Daniel Isaacs, Esq., K.C., M.P.
Willoughby Hyett Dickinson, Esq., M.P. (Barrister-at-Law).
Charles Algernon Whitmore, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law).
J. W. St. Lawrance Leslie, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law) (Secretary).

(Earl Russell.) May I mention to the Commission a matter in connection with Altfuldisch's case? I have had a copy of a letter sent to me, which I presume has been addressed to the Commission, by a Mr. Breidenbach, who is a manufacturer in Greek Street, and I have also seen a statement by the Rev. J. H. Cardwell, as to the state of Greek Street. I do not know whether the Commission think it at all material to the inquiry with regard to Inspector McKay and the state of that street on that night, but may I say I suggest those witnesses might be called by the Commission?

22 Oct. 1906.

(Chairman.) We have received various communications from residents in Greek Street, and I have directed that they should be acknowledged, and I have promised that they should receive the consideration of the Commission. Do I understand that you are tendering evidence as to the condition of Greek Street on the night on which Altfuldisch was arrested?

22 Oct. 1906.

(Earl Russell.) No, sir. I think that the evidence they wish to give is quite general.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You used the expression "as to the state of Greek Street on that night."

(Earl Russell.) That was my mistake. I was referring merely to the general evidence.

(Chairman.) Are you ready to go on with Dubery's case?

(Earl Russell.) Yes, sir.

ALBERT JOSEPH DUBERY, sworn.

A. J. Dubery.

8135. (Earl Russell.) Your name is Albert Joseph Dubery, and in December, 1902, were you living at 50, Albion Street, King's Cross?—Yes.

8136. You were then employed at a private cab yard in Sandwich Street?—Yes.

8137. You were in charge of that yard?—Yes.

8138. On the 5th December, 1902, in the middle of the night, did anything unusual happen?—Yes. I was in charge of Mr. Line's yard in Sandwich Street on that date.

8139. About what time?—It was about a quarter to 12 when I first met the constable.

8140. Before 12 o'clock, at all events?—Yes. I saw the constable come to the top of the gate where I was standing; he asked me to have a drink out of a bottle, and I said I did not want anything. He said, "Very well," and he put the bottle in his back pocket.

8141. Was anyone with you at this time?—No. I was waiting for a driver to come in—the last man I had to come in.

8142. You were on duty?—Yes. Then he walked away. I saw no more of him until the houses had closed, and then I was in the stable below. The cab was under the gateway in the yard.

8143. What kind of a cab was it?—An empty cab—the one I looked in.

8144. Was it a hansom cab or a four-wheeler?—A hansom cab. I saw someone, as I thought, going by the cab, but it was the constable who got in the cab with a woman.

8145. About what time was that?—That was after the houses were closed.

8146. After half-past 12?—Yes. I did not take any notice. I did not go up to the top of the gate to see who it was till the last man drove up with his cab and horse, and I went to assist him out with his horse.

8147. What was the name of that man?—Albert Jones, the cab driver.

8148. Do you happen to know his badge number?—No, I do not.

8149. He came in with his cab, and you went to help him take his horse out?—Yes. As I passed the cab in the gateway I looked towards the window, and saw the constable with the woman inside. I said, "You had better get out of this." He made no answer to me. I went to the horse. The cab driver brought his tools down from the cab to the stable, and saw the policeman in the cab with the woman.

8150. That is Jones?—Yes.

8151. He was with you then?—He was with me then, because I went to help him out with his horse. When I got to the horse he took his tools down into the stable off his cab, his rugs and whip and other things, and then I saw the woman in the cab with the policeman. I got the horse out of the cab and looked into the cab again, and they were still in there. I went to the stable down below, about 25 yards away from the cab, and they got out. The woman made off, and the police constable came down to the stable door. I said, "Old man, you had better not come down here—your sergeant might see you." He said, "B—— my sergeant, and you too." I said, "You cannot b—— me," and he said, "I will show you something—how they kill men in South Africa." With that he made fight after me, and I ran up the side of the horse away from him.

8152. What did he do exactly?—He put his hands up to fight me, and I went away from him and went up the side of one of the horses. He followed me.

8153. Was this inside the stable or outside?—Inside. He put his helmet and his lamp down outside the stable, and he followed me up by the side of this horse, striking me on the head with his fist, and then he drew his truncheon. I put my arm up to stop him from hitting me again on the face, and he hit me on the arm. Jones was in the stable then.

8154. What did he strike you with first?—With his fist.

8155. In the face, did you say?—Yes, on my cheek bone. The Inspector saw it at the station.

8156. Then he drew his truncheon. Where was Jones at this time?—In the stable.

8157. How close to you and the constable?—I could not say how far off Jones was.

8158. What happened after the constable drew his truncheon?—He struck me on the right arm, and we seized hold of the truncheon and held it.

8159. Did you say anything?—He struck me on the arm, and I holloaed out, "Oh, what are you doing?" Then he drew his truncheon and hit me again across my right arm, and then Jones came to my assistance.

8160. Did you say anything to Jones?—No; he saw the constable striking me, and he came to my aid. We held the truncheon and holloaed for the governor, Mr. Line.

8161. Did anything happen between the constable and Jones when Jones came up?—When Jones came up to help me the constable turned round and struck Jones in the mouth.

8162. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) What with?—I could not say whether it was with his truncheon or his fist, but he made his mouth bleed.

8163. (Earl Russell.) Do you say you both held on to the truncheon?—Yes.

8164. What did you do then?—Called to the governor to come down. The governor threw up the back window and saw us with the constable out in the yard.

8165. Who do you mean by the governor?—Mr. Line.

8166. He was the owner of the cab?—Yes.

8167. When you called for him what did he do?—He came down with only his trousers and a pair of slippers on, and blew his own police whistle.

8168. Then when he blew the whistle what happened?—Two other policemen came up, and the governor said, "Go down there"—I believe he said, "There is a maniac in the yard there killing my men." Then they came down, and the constable said, "I will charge these men with assaulting me in this mews," and we were taken to Hunter Street Police Station.

8169. You and Jones?—Yes.

8170. Who were you taken there by?—By the police.

8171. By the other policemen?—Yes; and by the first man, too. He caught hold of me and Jones.

8172. What was the number of the constable who assaulted you?—I think the number was 216.

8173. And his letter?—I do not know.

8174. What division?—E, Hunter Street.

8175. What did Mr. Line do when you went to the station?—He went with us.

8176. When you got to the station, what happened then?—The constable could not give proper satisfaction to the Inspector, and the Inspector ordered him downstairs, and another constable took him downstairs. When he heard our evidence he let us out.

8177. What happened to you first when you went there? You were taken there in custody?—Yes; me and Jones were put in charge.

8178. (Chairman.) In the dock do you mean?—Yes; we were charged with assaulting him.

8179. (Earl Russell.) Charged by Police Constable 216 E?—Yes.

8180. The Inspector was there to take the charge?—Yes.

8181. What passed between the Inspector and the constable?—He asked the constable several questions, and the constable could not give him satisfaction. He asked what time it was that this took place. In the first place he said a quarter to eleven. Then he said a quarter to twelve or a quarter to one. When he said a quarter to twelve the Inspector said, "You have made a mistake," and then he said, "Then a quarter to one."

8182. Did you notice anything about the state of the constable 216 E?—He was in drink, and the Inspector saw he was in drink.

8183. After that, what did the Inspector do with regard to you and Jones?—He took all the particulars of what we had to say.

8184. I mean as regards the charge against you?—He let us out.

8185. Then you say he took the particulars of what you had to say?—Yes.

8186. And after that?—We came home to the yard again, and the Inspector came with us to see. The constable said we were going to hit him on the head with a pair of hames with no traces on, and we had not such a thing in the place.

8187. (Chairman.) Was that what the constable said?—The constable said we were going to hit him on the head with a pair of hames without any traces on, and we had not such a thing in the place.

8188. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That is what he told the Inspector at the station?—Yes; and the Inspector came back to the yard afterwards with us, and saw there was no such thing there. We showed him that all the hames that were there had been out working in the cabs.

8189. And all the hames had traces on them?—Yes.

8190. (Earl Russell.) The hames are the brass things that go round the collar?—Yes.

8191. Did the Inspector come back with you, or after you?—He came back with me and the governor and Jones to the yard.

8192. And looked at what you had there?—Yes; to see what had taken place, and where the cab stood, and everything.

8193. Did he say anything to Mr. Line or to you about what had happened?—No; he did not say anything to me—not that I can remember.

8194. How did you find yourself the next morning?—I found my arm very bad. I had to go to the Royal Free Hospital and have it dressed, and I was unable to work. Here is the certificate that they gave me on the Saturday morning following (producing certificate).

8195. (Chairman.) How long were you unable to work?—For a week with my right arm.

8196. (Earl Russell.) How many visits did you pay as an out-patient to the Royal Free Hospital?—Two.

8197. The certificate is as follows:—"Royal Free Hospital, Gray's Inn Road, W.C., December 6th, 1902. I hereby certify that Albert Dubery is unable to follow his employment in consequence of an injury to the forearm, and is at present an out-patient at this hospital. Not to be used for begging.—A. S. Woodwark, Medical Officer." How long after this did you resume work?—About a week and two days.

8198. Did you see the police again about this matter?—I wrote a letter asking for a little compensation for my loss of time.

8199. That was later. I do not mean after you resumed work, but on the same day did you see the police again?—No; I believe on the Monday I went to the Hunter Street Police Station and saw the Inspector.

8200. What made you go to the police station?—To ask what they were going to do about it.

8201. Had the Inspector said anything to you about that when he saw you?—He said the policeman was discharged, and I could have his name and address if I wanted it.

8202. You say you heard nothing more about it?—Nothing more.

8203. You wrote a letter asking for compensation?—Yes, asking for a little compensation for my loss of time.

8204. Was that to the Commissioner of Police or to the Home Office?—To the Commissioner, I think. I could not exactly tell you now.

8205. (Chairman.) I do not think it is very material. What was the upshot of it all? Did you take any action individually against the police?—No.

8206. Why not?—Because Jones said he would not take any action against the police because he was a licensed man.

8207. So you left it, in fact, to be dealt with by the police themselves?—Yes.

8208. (Earl Russell.) Did you see a solicitor about it?—Yes; me and Jones.

8209. Then did Mr. Line say anything about going on with it?—No.

8210. Did Line say anything about it being a good thing to go on with or not to go on with it?—No, he did not say either.

8211. Is this a letter you wrote at the time to your solicitor (handing letter to Witness)?—Yes.

(Earl Russell.) May the Secretary read that letter?

(Chairman.) This is a letter from the witness to his own solicitor. It is hardly material. I do not think it is necessary to go into that. I understand the upshot of it was the witness determined he would not bring an action or take criminal proceedings against the constable.

(Earl Russell.) Perhaps you would allow the witness to refresh his memory by reading his own letter through to himself.

(Witness.) I am no scholar.

8212. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Cannot you read it?—No, not all of it.

8213. Did you write it?—I got somebody to write it for me.

8214. (Chairman.) It is quite sufficient that it is before us. There is no mystery about it, Mr. Muir, whatever. You can see it if you like, but we do not want to encumber the notes with it. (To the Witness.) I understand that shows Mr. Line did not care to go on?—Yes.

8215. Then, in consequence of their taking no action, you dropped the matter yourself?—Yes.

8216. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) They did not care to go on because one of them, being a cabman, was licensed, and the other was a cab proprietor?—Yes; Jones thought he might be marred by the police if he went on with the case, on account of his licence.

8217. (Earl Russell.) From that day to this you have done nothing more in consequence of that?—No, nothing more.

(Chairman.) Have you any question to ask, Mr. Muir?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) No question, sir.

8218. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) When Mr. Line blew the whistle I thought you said two or three policemen came into the yard?—Yes.

8219. And then Police Constable 216 E charged you and Jones with assault?—Yes.

8220. You were taken to the station?—Yes, both of us.

8221. What happened to 216 E?—He walked by the side and caught hold of us.

8222. He went with all those who went to the station with you?—Yes.

8223. You made no charge against him then?—No; we ought to have turned round and charged him.

8224. But you did not at that time?—No; we left it to the Inspector.

8225. You told us also that you saw the constable come into the yard and get into the cab?—Yes.

A. J. Dubery.

22 Oct. 1906.

8226. Did that strike you as a very extraordinary thing?—Yes, it did.

8227. Something very much out of the common?—It was, to see a policeman get into one of my cabs, because I very seldom saw one come down the yard at all.

8228. Then I rather gather from what you have said that this constable doing what he did, getting into the cab with a woman, was the first time you had seen it in your yard?—Yes.

Mr. Henry Tinklar Nicholson, sworn.

Mr. H. T. Nicholson.

8229. (Earl Russell.) Are you a solicitor, and do you carry on your practice at 11, Lincoln's Inn Fields?—Yes.

8230. On the 13th September did the last witness and Jones consult you?—Yes, they called together to consult me about taking proceedings against the police. I went into the case with them at considerable length, and took notes of their evidence, but I did not see them again, and then they notified me that they did not wish to proceed, on account, as I understood, of a cab proprietor being concerned in it. They thought it better to drop it.

8231. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) The cab proprietor and driver?—Yes.

8232. (Mr. Dickinson.) When you say take proceedings against the police you do not mean take proceedings against the police as a body?—No, it was against the constable who assaulted them. I do not know that it was decided what form the proceedings should take, but I took the facts down.

Dr. Arthur Stanley Woodwark, sworn.

Dr. A. S. Woodwark.

8233. (Earl Russell.) On the 6th December, 1902, were you one of the medical officers of the Royal Free Hospital in Gray's Inn Road?—I was.

8234. Do you recognise your signature on that certificate that you gave to Dubery?—Yes, that is my signature.

8235. You recognise the first witness, Dubery?—Yes, I recall his face.

8236. Are you able to say anything more at this date about the injury?—No, I am afraid it is nearly four years ago, and I cannot recall more precisely what the injuries were. Possibly if I were to see the arm it might bring it to my mind, but at present I have no recollection.

8237. Are you able to say anything from the certificate as to the severity of them?—By my giving him a certificate it was almost certainly of such a nature that he was unable to follow the work which he told me he had to do.

8238. The words "Not to be used for begging" are formal words on the certificate which do not mean anything?—It is the practice to put those words on all certificates so as to be quite sure they are only used for legitimate purposes.

Mr. Edwin Henry Line, sworn.

Mr. E. H. Line.

8239. (Earl Russell.) In December, 1902, were you a cab proprietor, with mews in Sandwich Street?—Yes.

8240. Was the witness Dubery in your employment?—Yes.

8241. What were his duties?—He was night cab-washer.

8242. Would it be his duty to look in the yard when cabs come in?—Yes, to take the cabs in and wash them.

8243. On the night of the 5th December, after you had gone to bed, did you hear anything?—Yes.

8244. About what time was it, do you know?—I should say about half-past 11—something like that. I am not certain about the time. I heard a noise in the yard, and Jones holloaed out, "Governor, governor, governor." I looked out of a back window, and I could see there was a man in uniform there. He said, "Come quick," so I put my trousers on and coat and rushed down as quick as I could, and, as far as I saw, it was a policeman, and Jones and this man had got hold of the policeman in the yard.

8245. What exactly did you see when you came on the scene?—They were holding the policeman—holding his arm and his staff. I had a policeman's whistle in my pocket, so I blew the whistle. Three or four policemen came up, and the first policeman said he wanted to charge all three of us with assaulting him. I said, "Oh, no. I blew the whistle for the police; this is my whistle, and if anybody is to be charged it is you." With that they took Jones and this man to the police station, and asked me to follow on to the station. They took them in custody, and I followed.

8246. You went to the charge room at the police station?—Yes.

8247. What took place there?—The constable commenced to make a statement. In the first place he made a mistake in about four hours as to the time. I said to the Inspector, "You hear what he is saying—put that down. He does not know the time. The man is mad drunk."

8248. Did you notice anything yourself about his condition?—Only that he was worse for drinking. He seemed very much excited.

8249. What did the Inspector do about taking the charge?—He did not take the charge. He allowed them to come away. He said the man tried to strike him with a pair of hames without traces on.

8250. Who said that?—The constable. I said, "We have not got such a thing. All our hames have got traces on." The Inspector said, "We will come down and see." He came straight back with us and looked round the establishment, and we do not use such a thing.

8251. The Inspector came back with you and looked for himself?—Yes.

8252. Did the Inspector do anything with regard to Constable 216 E at the station?—No, I think not. He only simply took him away.

8253. Did any of the police see you again about it?—I think he came down again and talked about it, and I said, "Well, I do not think my man is going to take any action in it; we have never had any bother with the police before, and we do not want to take any action or have any bother or be ill friends with them in any way, so I shall persuade my man to go to work as soon as he can. We do not want to be bothered or to be enemies of the police in any way." I simply persuaded the man to let it drop and go to work as soon as he could.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) I have no question.

8254. (Mr. Dickinson.) You say the police came down and saw you, and you said you did not want any bother. Who was it who came down and saw you?—I could not recollect exactly. It is four years ago. I rather thought it was the Inspector, but I could not be certain.

8255. Was that after the constable had been charged?—No, I think it was the next morning someone came down. I could not be certain.

8256. But I understood Dubery to say that when he was considering as to whether he should bring an action against this individual constable who had been discharged, you and Jones rather dissuaded him from it?—Yes.

8257. I want to know what was in your mind. The man was discharged, and all the question was whether an action should be brought against him individually for damages, and yet you thought it was not wise?—I thought perhaps we had better let the matter drop and let the man go to work. He was not very seriously injured, and I said, "The best thing you can do is to let the matter drop."

8258. That was one of the reasons?—Yes.

8259. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Had anything of this kind ever happened before?—No.

8260. How long have you been there?—I have been there, I suppose, for 15 years.

8261. Or since?—I have left there three years now.

8262. Up to this time was this the first bother you had had, or the first trouble with a policeman?—Yes, I had been summoned for leaving cabs out in the street.

8263. I do not mean things of that character. So far as I follow from what you have told me, in your experience during the fifteen years there you had not had to complain of a policeman behaving badly?—Certainly not.

8264. Or of his being under the influence of drink, or bringing women into the yard, or anything of that kind?—No.

8265. (Earl Russell.) Is Albert Jones in court?—No, he is dead.

(Earl Russell.) That is the whole of the evidence I have to call in the case of Dubery.

(Chairman.) Do you wish to call any witnesses, Mr. Muir?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) You have before you the reports of all the officers. If the Court desire to hear the evidence of the officers, we will send for them. I expected them here, but they are not here at the moment.

(Chairman.) The reports which we have got are the reports of Inspector Austin, Police Sergeant Seymour, Police Constable McKay, Police Constable Johnston, Police Constable Miller, and Police Constable Murray.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Murray is the man who is implicated.

(Chairman.) And the report of the Sub-Divisional Inspector. Are these reports made to the Chief Commissioner by these officers?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Yes; those reports all went before the Chief Commissioner or the Assistant Commissioner, and he dealt with them. First of all there is the report of the Superintendent, on page 8. He heard the matter, and dealt with it as a charge, but he cannot deal with it finally himself. He sent it up with his observations to Scotland Yard, and then the officer was called up before the Acting Commissioner (Major Wodehouse), and you will see on the 8th December, on page 9, what took place there. The written reports which precede that are all taken as already read unless the constable desires to ask questions, and then this form is gone through with the constable:—"(Q.) Have the reports in the case been read to you? (A.) Yes. (Q.) Have you any questions to ask of either of the witnesses present? (A.) No. (Q.) Have you anything to say in your defence? (A.) I am sorry. I admit being drunk, but I did not assault anyone." Then it is referred to the Assistant Chief Commissioner of the Administrative Department—that is, Major Wodehouse—and then there is a statement that the constable joined the Force seven weeks ago, that he is a single man, and that he has served in the 7th Hussars. Then the next thing that takes place is reported on page 10, when it comes before Major Wodehouse:—"Have the reports in the case been read to you? (A.) Yes. (Q.) Have you any question to ask of any of the witnesses present? (A.) No. (Q.) Have you anything to say in your defence? (A.) Nothing, sir, only that I am very sorry. I had not been drunk till this thing happened." Then there is a question put by Major Wodehouse to the Superintendent:—"What have you to say about him? (A.) I think there is no doubt that the cause of this was the taking of the woman into the yard, and the cab-washer resented it. He admits that he drew his truncheon, and there is no doubt, from the inquiries made by the Sub-Divisional Inspector, that he struck one of the men on the arm with his truncheon. He has only been with me a few weeks. He is an intelligent man." Then Major Wodehouse said to the constable: "I have read the reports in the case, and it appears to me to be perfectly clear that you took this woman into the yard, and the employees there objected to it. You assaulted them, and drew your truncheon. Then you wanted to charge them. Worse conduct than that a police officer can hardly be guilty of. You have had every consideration shown you. You were accepted as a special case, and this is the return you make for it. You are quite useless for the police, but in consequence of your being a very young man I will permit you to resign." I am told, sir, by the Chief Commissioner himself that the practice is, if it is possible, to allow a man to resign rather than dismiss him, because, if dismissed, it practically prevents him getting employment elsewhere, whereas if he is permitted to resign it gives him a chance of getting some other form of employment. Then it appears the Police Orders set out why he is dismissed.

(Chairman.) Upon these documents we think it is unnecessary to trouble you to call any of these officers.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) I thought possibly the Commissioners would like to see the character with which the man entered the Force. I have sent for that, and I believe it is on its way here.

(Chairman.) We will take that. It seems quite a proper thing to put in.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) I have here the original file. Shall I put Superintendent Froest into the box to explain it?

(Chairman.) We have not heard in detail the course that these inquiries take.

(Earl Russell.) I do not want to ask any questions or to challenge anything in those reports. The only comment we make on the matter is the man being allowed to resign instead of being dismissed.

(Chairman.) We would like to know what takes place when this kind of complaint is made.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Superintendent Cole is not here for the moment. He was the Superintendent who made the inquiry.

(Chairman.) The documents seem to me to show the course of procedure.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) They do. Within a few days this man was dismissed or allowed to resign, which amounts to the same thing.

(Chairman.) Will you kindly look at the documents I have got, and see if they are copies of all that is in the original dossier that you handed up?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Yes, everything that I read and referred to. It seems to be copied from my own copy.

(Chairman.) There is no other material document, except the character?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) No.

(Chairman.) We had better take the character, because it may be useful as an illustration. That will enable us to see exactly the whole course of this officer's connection with the police.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Yes, I think it will.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Is the Inspector in court who took the charge?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) He ought to have been here, but is not here yet.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I should like to ask Mr. Dubery a question.

ALBERT JOSEPH DUBERY, recalled.

A. J. Dubery.
22 Oct. 1906.

8266. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You told us that you saw this police constable come in with the woman?—Yes.

8267. He went straight to the cab?—Yes, he got in the cab.

8268. Without asking anybody's permission?—Yes.

8269. Was anybody else in the yard but yourself?—No, not at the time.

8270. Did he see you when he went in the cab?—He might have done down the bottom stable. I was in the stable.

8271. But you saw him?—Yes.

8272. Then he got in the cab with the woman?—Yes.

8273. Why did you not object?—I did not notice him until I passed to get the horse out of the cab which had pulled up outside. I did not know it was the police constable getting into the cab.

8274. If it was not the police constable, then it would be all the more reason to object?—I thought it was someone going by the top of the gate.

8275. Did you see a man get in the cab with the woman?—I did not see him get in—not exactly; not when I was in the stable. I had to pass the cab to go and take the man's horse out, and I looked into the side window.

8276. When Jones came in?—Yes. I looked in the side window, and saw the constable in uniform and a woman, and I said to him as I passed by the cab, "You had better get out of this, old man."

8277. That was rather a friendly way of addressing him if he was inside the cab with this woman without anybody's permission?—I did not want to browbeat a policeman, because I know they can do as they like with us. If I had said, "You had better get out," and I had used violence to him, there would sure to be trouble.

8278. You saw him in there with the woman, and did not say anything to him because he was a policeman?—I only said, "You had better get out of it, old man."

8279. If it had been somebody else he would have got out rather sharply?—Yes, I should have got in and pulled him out.

8280. (Mr. Dickinson.) Did the policeman know you were in the yard?—Yes, he must have done. He saw me before this took place, at the top of the yard.

8281. Was he with the woman then?—No. He asked me to have a drink out of a bottle which he had in his pocket, and I said I did not want to have any drink.

8282. I suppose he was very drunk?—Yes, he was drunk when he went to the station.

8283. How long were he and the woman in the cab together?—I could not say how long. It must have been about a quarter of an hour or 20 minutes, or something like that, I suppose.

8284. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Were you under anybody else's control in the yard beside Mr. Line?—No. I was in charge of Mr. Line's yard to take the men in and take the money, and put all his horses away and get the cabs ready for the morning.

Superintendent THOMAS COLE, sworn.

Superintendent T. Cole.

8285. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Are you Superintendent of the Metropolitan Police?—Yes.

8286. In December, 1902, were you stationed at Hunter Street Station?—I was attached to Bow Street, but Hunter Street Station is under my control.

8287. That is the E Division?—Yes.

8288. Did the complaint of Albert Joseph Dubery and the cabman Jones, against the Constable Murray, come before you to be dealt with?—Yes.

8289. When a complaint is made against a constable and is entertained by the Superintendent, is the first step to put the constable upon the defaulter's sheet?—Yes.

8290. For the morning on which it is dealt with?—Yes.

8291. In the meantime, is the constable suspended?—Yes, in this case he was.

8292. The complaints against constables are either given in writing or verbally?—They are always in writing.

8293. Does the constable have a copy of them to read or are they read to him?—They are read to him.

8294. Are the witnesses present to be questioned, if necessary?—Yes. He has the opportunity then of putting any questions he wants to them.

8295. You put this question to the defaulter always: "Do you wish to ask any questions"?—Yes.

8296. If he asks questions, a note is made of the question?—I take the question and answer down in writing.

8297. When the inquiry is completed do you report upon it?—Yes.

8298. And make your observations, as they are called?—Yes.

8299. We have before us your observations of the 8th December, 1902, with regard to this particular case?—Yes.

8300. Having reduced your observations to writing and signed them, what do you do with the proceedings?—The matter is then sent before the Chief Constable.

8301. All that was before you, plus your observations, goes to the Chief Constable at Scotland Yard?—At Scotland Yard or Bow Street, wherever he arranges to see the defaulter.

8302. Where would it be in this case?—Bow Street.

8303. And from the Chief Constable would it go to Scotland Yard?—Yes.

8304. Do you know the course of procedure at Scotland Yard then?—Yes, the same course is gone through there, with the exception that the witnesses are not always present there. They can attend, if they wish.

9305. Is the constable asked before the proceedings take place at Scotland Yard whether he desires the attendance of any of the witnesses?—Yes, and if he wishes them, he would be requested to attend.

8306. And he would again have an opportunity before the Commissioner of putting any questions he liked?—Yes.

8307. And then the Commissioner deals with the case?—Yes.

9308. And his observations are taken down in shorthand, are they not?—Yes.

9309. And attached to the other papers?—Yes.

8310. Do you know the course of procedure when a constable applies to join the Force?—Yes, he has to apply in writing, and then a form is sent to him upon which he has to get the signature of persons who have known him for some time.

8311. Was the minimum height in 1902 5 ft. 9 in.?—Yes.

8312. And if a man is half an inch or so below the minimum height may he be admitted as a special case?—They had been.

8313. In this case the man appears to be 5 ft. 8½ in.?—Yes.

8314. So that in the ordinary course he would be ineligible?—Yes; he was half an inch below the standard.

8315. Look at that document. (Handing document to witness.) Do you see a memorandum there initialled by Sir Edward Bradford, saying that if the man is otherwise satisfactory, he would be glad if he was dealt with as a special case, because he is strongly recommended by Colonel Ridley?—Yes.

8316. And if you turn to the beginning you will find Colonel Ridley's recommendation of the man attached?—Yes.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Was he the Colonel of his regiment?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) I assume so. I have not had time to read the document myself.

(The Witness.) He had been in the Army over nine years.

8317. Will you read it?—This is a letter from Sir Edward Bradford to Mr. Hopkins:—"20th September, 1902.—Dear Mr. Hopkins,—The bearer of this is a candidate, John Murray, whose application I sent to you a few days ago. He attends for the examination, and if he is satisfactory, I should like him put in the class at once. He has his papers with him."

8318. Sir Edward Bradford mentions in that letter that he is strongly recommended by Colonel Ridley?—No, he does not say so. It is in a memorandum on the papers here. He says: "I have seen this man, who is specially and strongly recommended by Colonel H. N. Ridley. If the inquiries are satisfactory, I should wish to make a special case." Superintendent T. Cole. 22 Oct. 1906.

(Chairman.) I think you said that the constable was allowed to resign because he was a very young man.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) That is what Major Wodehouse said to him—"On account of your youth."

8319. (Chairman.) But he had been nine years in the Army?—He had been only seven weeks in the Police Service.

8320. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That does not make him young?—It was on account of the short service.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) His age would be on the application form.

8321. (Chairman.) He must have meant he was such a young constable?—He was twenty-six years of age.

8322. Being nine years in the Army he would have considerable experience?—He came to the Police with a good character from the Army, and that is taken into consideration.

8323. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I suppose what was taken into consideration was that it would not have happened if he had not got drunk?—That is it.

8324. He got drunk and then got into this mischief, and it all followed from the first cause, which was the drink?—That was the cause of it.

(Chairman.) I do not think we need trouble you to call the Inspector or anybody else with regard to this case.

Mr. Alfred Francis Platt, recalled.

8325. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) I desire to preface the questions I put to this witness by this statement, that the solicitor instructing me informs me that a great mass of material has been placed in his hands which ought to be available for the purpose of cross-examination which I have not yet seen. Mr. A. F. Platt.

8326. You carry on the business of a bookmaker?—Until quite recently.

8327. As I understand you, from 1886, was it?—That was when I first started bookmaking.

8328. Down to quite recently you have been in the habit of bribing members of the police force?—Yes.

8329. Continuously over that time?—Not continuously over that time, but from the first time I gave money till quite recently.

8330. What was your object in bribing the police?—In the first instance, my object in bribing the police was to allow me to do my business in the street.

8331. I suppose you did that because, according to your view, you would have been arrested and stopped from carrying on your business?—Quite possibly, or these men would be able to stand at the ends of the streets that I was betting in, and would stop people who would bet with me from coming to me.

8332. In order, in other words, that you should not be molested in the business of a street bookmaker?—Yes.

8333. And it was worth your while, according to you, to bribe them for that purpose?—Yes.

8334. Down to what date have you continued, approximately?—This year. The last moneys that could originate from me and a partner with me would probably be the last known money—July.

8335. Of this year?—Yes.

8336. And all that money was paid for the same purpose—to be allowed, either individually or through an agent, to carry on your business of a bookmaker in the streets unmolested?—Yes, but since 1903 for the express purpose of never being summoned. I did not mind being arrested, but not to be summoned.

8337. I include in the word "unmolested" what you yourself have described as the stopping of customers coming to you—the summoning or the arresting?—Yes, but not exactly arresting. I did not mind being arrested, because there is no doubt if these men do not have a certain number of charges during the time that they occupy their duties I daresay they have to answer.

8338. If I understand your meaning, it is this, that by collusion with you you allowed yourself to be arrested from time to time?—Yes.

8339. In order to cloak the nature of the transactions between you?—Yes.

8340. You have mentioned some books, and I think you handed in one book to the Commissioners as containing entries relating to such transactions?—Yes.

8341. Do those entries contain names or dates, or both?—They are some books that I have handed in to the secretary providing that the men who held those books for those days, which was a matter of four or five hours a day, in making out a list of their daily expenses, and in accounting to me for moneys, have put in some way or the other, say, "Copper, four bob."

8342. What I want to get at is this: Do your books enable you to give a date upon which money was paid to the police?—I was not prepared to go into that just at the present moment, as I have not had time to see if they are dated. I think some would be dated and some undated.

8343. I have not had time either, but let us go as far as we can. Do your books contain the dates of those payments?—I cannot say that they do.

8344. Do they contain the names of the persons to whom the payments were made?—Yes, in a way that I can fully explain.

8345. I should like a full explanation of the entries which show the names of the person to whom the moneys were paid. I suppose you mean policemen?—I do not say all the names of them, but some of them.

8346. What is the full explanation of that that you are anxious to give us?—Having the book, my first motive was to put everything down in case I had the same proceedings being done to me in the G Division as I had done to me in the L Division.

8347. To what dates do your books go back?—About the 30th July.

8348. Of which year?—This year.

8349. Do you mean that you have no book earlier than July of this year?—No, not for them purposes.

8350. What do you mean by "for them purposes"?—I have not got a list of all the persons I gave money to from the time I first started.

8351. Do I understand that in July of this year you

Mr. A. F. Platt.

22 Oct. 1906.

began to keep books for what you call "them purposes"?—No.

8352. Your books contain entries "for them purposes" since July of this year?—Yes.

8353. At that date had you heard of this Royal Commission being appointed?—I cannot say I had.

8354. Why did you select July of this year to keep a book "for them purposes"?—At the end of March or the beginning of April, I, in partnership with another, took over these men that I had in Clerkenwell. I took over their business because of their financial position, and it was for them to give me an acount of the moneys that passed through their hands, if I was not there at a particular time to see the moneys handed to them officers. It is put down in one instance.

8355. If I understand the system, it is similar to one I have heard of before where when a man charges a cab fare he is obliged to put down the number of the cab in which he has ridden. Is that it?—I could not answer that.

8356. What other purposes had you in view then?—I have always felt that I should like certain things to come out.

8357. Before whom?—Before the Commissioners.

8358. Then was I not right in my suggestion that this book was started for the purpose of this Commission?—No, I cannot say that.

8359. Did you keep any such record before this Commission had been suggested, or was it in existence?—No.

8360. Am I right or am I wrong in saying that the books you have handed to the Secretary of the Commission contain no dates of the payments you allege you have made to the police officers?—I cannot be positive of that.

8361. Perhaps the Secretary will let you look at them, becase I think this of the supremest importance?—Before he goes into them books——, 8362. You can answer that question. It is a simple question of a general nature?—May I look at the books?

(Chairman.) Yes. (The books were handed to the Witness by the Secretary.)

8363. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) One will do?—There is no date to this.

8364. Can you find any date in any of the entries?—I should say this particular one here would be relating to the month of May.

8365. What I want to know is not a month, but an actual date in a month, and the year?—No.

8366. You have no such record?—No.

8367. That is as to dates. Now as to names. Have you any record showing the name—either the real name, or by some sign—of any police officer to whom you or your agents have paid moneys before July, 1906?—I never previously kept a record of the money relating to the police till this year.

8368. Just listen to the question, and consider it before you answer it. Is it a fact that you have no names recorded in your books of police officers to whom you have paid moneys before July, 1906?—No.

8369. No dates and no names. Have you got the amounts recorded?—In what instances that I have here, yes.

8370. Amounts without any identification by name or date? What description have you got attached to those amounts which enables you to say that they relate to amounts paid to police officers?—In some instances, when I have not seen the money actually passed by my agent, my agent would write down in his way the moneys that he expended, and on going through these books yesterday I find that in my agent's hand-writing there is a specified sum of money that he accounts for to me when he is giving it to me.

8371. Will you read one of these entries, so that I may see the form in which it is put?

8372. (Chairman.) Are these all the books that you have?—All the books that I have.

8373. All the books that you have kept?—Yes.

8374. Is there no book in your wife's possession to which reference has been made in the statement you have made?—It has been destroyed. That is why I have got to refer to these books. I had a detailed account already written out in these books of the actual numbers of the men, and I could have accounted where I met them—the numbers and the names of some of them, but in most cases the numbers. I had only three names in the book. I am sorry to say that my wife, who has a brother almost finishing his time in the police, in a fit of passion, thinking that I should in some way do him harm, burnt that book.

8375. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) When?—Thursday.

8376. After you had given your evidence?—Yes.

8377. (Chairman.) What book do you say was destroyed?—This was the original book that I personally filled in myself, and which I was greatly relying on.

8378. When was this destroyed book made?—It would start from somewhere about the end of March or the beginning of April up to July.

8379. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Do you mean to say you began to make the entries in this book in March or April of this year?—Yes.

8380. Did it contain entries of what had taken place from the month of March or April of this year?—That is all.

8381. You had nothing which would help you to make such a list before that date?—I did not find it necessary. I never thought of having to do what I am doing.

8382. (Mr. Whitmore.) Why did you not bring that book with you on Thursday?—I did not think it would be required on Thursday.

8383. Why did you not think it would be required on Thursday?—I thought my statement would be sufficient to take up the time.

8384. You could have brought it?—I never thought of bringing that at the time, and as you particularly noticed I did not want to bring in anything of the G Division until I had settled with the L, and I thought that would have been convincing proof that these men had had the money I paid.

8385. (Mr Rufus Isaacs.) Was that book in existence on Thursday when you went home from this Commission?—No.

8386. Not in the middle of the day?—No.

8387. Because, if I recollect, you went home from here for the purpose of bringing us that book?—Yes.

8388. Was that the book you intended to bring?—That was the book.

8389. That was the book that you asked to go home to fetch when the Commissioners said they desired it?—Yes.

8390. Then you came back and brought us another book?—I brought a book. I happened to find it looking through quick. In that book there was a sheet of paper that I had put in at some future date where I had mentioned the name of an officer who had had his money that day. I did not have sufficient time to get everything.

8391. (Chairman.) That book produced ought to be kept separately. There were papers in it?—That day you can see what I put down.

8392. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I understand you went home for the purpose of bringing the other book that would show it, but as you could not bring it you brought this, which you say does show it?—To be consistent I brought it.

(Chairman.) Keep that book separately from the other books, please.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Of course, as the destroyed book is one entirely new to me, I should like to ask a few questions upon it, if you will allow me to interrupt what I was asking.

(Chairman.) Yes.

8393. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) You began to keep that book, you say, in March or April?—At the end of March, or just the beginning of April.

8394. You told the learned Commissioner, Mr. Rufus Isaacs, that you had never done so before?—No.

8395. Never kept such a record before?—No.

8396. You gave as your reason: "I never thought I would have to do what I am doing"?—Yes.

8397. That is giving evidence before a Commission like this?—Yes.

8398. So that in March, when you began to keep that book, as I follow you, you thought you would have to use it for the purpose of giving evidence?—Yes.

8399. Evidence before whom?—The Commissioner.

8400. This Commission?—No.

8401. The Commissioner of Police?—Yes.

8402. So that, as I understand you, you kept that book for the purpose of having a hold over the constables named in it. Is that it?—Yes; the names and numbers.

8403. And during the entire time that you were keeping it you either directly, or through your agents, were bribing the persons named in that book?—Yes.

8404. What had you in your mind at the time you started keeping this book as an occasion which would require you to use it?—I thought it was possible, knowing how I had been served in several instances by the methods of the police, that it would have been something to have put in front of whoever listened to my case.

8405. But what occasion would arise, in your opinion, upon which you would use this book against the police officers named in it?—I thought that if by any unfair methods the police secured any convictions against me, or any men that were working for me, it was something that I felt I should like to be able to recall.

8406. By "unfair methods" do you mean securing a conviction which you and the police had not arranged between you?—Yes.

8407. Your idea was that you would have some document, or something that looked like a document, corroborating your statement that you were paying money to the police?—Yes.

8408. In the event of those members of the force giving evidence against you?—No, not upon the occasions of their giving evidence against me, but if they were trying to catch me unfairly.

8409. Except at any time that you wanted to be caught. Is that it?—Yes, or the general methods that they would employ.

8410. That was your object in keeping this book?—Yes.

8411. Where did you keep it?—I kept it in an ordinary cheffonier drawer.

8412. Where—at home?—Yes.

8413. When did you make your entries?—During the time that I was betting in Clerkenwell.

8414. March to July inclusive?—Yes.

8415. Did you make them at home?—Yes.

8416. Did your wife see you making the entries?—No. She was not aware I was doing it.

8417. When did yor wife become acquainted with the existence of this book?—I could not say.

8418. When did you first know that your wife knew that you had such a book?—I cannot say.

8419. How do you know that she knew you had such a book at all?—It is quite possible that when one or two persons have called at my place of residence she might have heard me say, "I have got a book with the names and numbers in."

8420. What sort of a book was it?—Something similar to these I should think.

8421. Was it kept in the same drawer as those?—No; it was not kept in the same drawer as these.

8422. Where were those kept?—They have been thrown away in a drawer in a room that I do not suppose I have entered the last five or six years only at the times I have gone in the room to take my coat off, and have thrown the books in the drawer which would be open.

8423. And those books were in a different place altogether?—You see these books that I found in this drawer (producing). It is possible having the men out as I did, I might have three or four books on me, and when I found the books on the last day I discontinued betting I went home and threw them in the drawer.

8424. I am asking about the book which was destroyed, as you say, by your wife. That was kept in a different place altogether from those?—Yes.

8425. What else was kept in the place where the book that was destroyed was kept?—Sheets of notepaper, envelopes, and that—nothing of any consequence.

8426. Is that a place where your wife was in the habit of going for the purpose of getting notepaper and envelopes?—Quite possible.

8427. Not under lock at all?—No.

8428. Did any other persons use that room?—I cannot say whether it was locked or not. It is possible it might be locked.

8429. Who would have the key?—My wife.

8430. Who else used that room?—My wife and the family.

8431. Anybody else?—No, only when I asked them in.

8432. Guests and visitors?—And persons who visited me.

8433. When did you discover that this book was destroyed?—After I went home.

8434. Last Thursday?—Yes.

8435. How did you discover that?—By going to the drawer to get it to bring it here.

8436. You missed it?—Yes.

8437. Of whom did you inquire about it?—At the time when I got home there was no one there.

8438. What did you do when you missed it You were sent home for the purpose of getting it. What did you do?—I came back here with the one little book that I just picked up—I found it was with these—and I found these other books.

8439. Why did not you bring the others?—I did not think I should be taken.

8440. But why did you bring one and not the lot?—It was the first one I went to, and promiscuously, in the way of looking through it, I said, "Halloo, I have a little detailed account," and I did not know what had become of the book. I was in hopes of bringing that book up.

8441. You told the Commissioners you had the book at home which had the details that you required?—Yes.

8442. You went away and you came back and you produced that book?

(Chairman.) The little black book.

8443. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) That book?—Yes.

8444. Did you tell the Commissioners then that that was not the book you were wanting at all?—No, I did not. I did not have that opportunity. The court was just rising when I brought the book back.

(Chairman.) I may tell you at once, Mr. Muir, we understood he had not brought the book he intended to bring back. He is quite right.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) I am much obliged to you.

(Chairman.) But he left this little black book with the Secretary.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) And he pointed out an item to me which he said corroborated what he was saying.

(Chairman.) Does that finish what you intend to ask for the moment about the loss of this book?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) There are one or two other questions I should like to ask about it.

(Chairman.) Very well.

8445. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) When did you first discover that the book had been destroyed?—Virtually yesterday, I suppose, really.

8446. From whom?—From the wife. I told her the position I was putting myself in, and if she did not produce that book, what she was trying to do for me.

8447. Why should she produce it. Why did you ask her to produce it?—Because we had had some words.

8448. When?—It lasted over a little time.

8449. When did it begin?—I could not say.

8450. About this book?—This commenced, I should say, soon after I went home from here—as soon as I got into her company.

8451. When was that?—On Thursday.

Mr. A. F. Platt.

22 Oct. 1906

8452. What time on Thursday?—About half-past six or seven, I should think. I would not be positive as to the time.

8453. What did you say to your wife about it?—I told her what I wanted. I asked her if she knew what had become of it.

8454. What did she say?—She gave me no answer. I must tell you I really believe—I do not know— that she attended at Lambeth Police Court that afternoon.

8455. Your wife told you she did not know what had become of it?—She refused to answer me.

8456. She would not answer you at all?—She would not answer.

8457. When did you get an answer?—I might say I have got answers of various sorts, but not the one that I wanted.

8458. When did you get any sort of answer first of all about this book?—The time I went home.

8459. What was the answer you got then?—That I could puzzle my head to look for it, or some words to that effect.

8460. What time of day was that?—About seven in the evening.

8461. When did you get any definite answer from your wife as to whether she knew anything at all about it?—I cannot say that she has ever answered that question—whenever she knew anything about it.

8462. Do you know what has become of it?—Yes.

8463. You do?—Yes.

8464. From whom did you get that information?—From my wife.

8465. What did she say about that?—She said she burnt it.

8466. When did she say that?—That transpired since I was in front of the Secretary this morning.

8467. To-day?—Yes.

8468. So that you came this morning and saw the Secretary?—Yes.

8469. And you told him you had not got the book?—I told him I had not got the one I was in hopes of being able to produce.

8470. What explanation did you give to the Secretary for the absence of this book this morning?—I told him what I thought—that the wife had destroyed it.

8471. You told him you thought so?—Yes.

8472. But you had no information at that time at all?—No, I cannot say I had the information then that I have now. I could not say positively I knew it was burnt until such time as now.

8473. After telling the Secretary this morning that your wife had destroyed it, you went home and saw your wife?—Yes.

8474. You have been trying since Thursday, I understand, till this morning to get an answer from your wife as to what had become of it?—Yes; more or less.

8475. And failed?—Yes.

8476. And you got that answer just before noon, did you?—Yes.

8477. What time in the forenoon?—About ten past twelve.

8478. How did you manage to get the answer at noon that you could not get since last Thursday?—In telling her as I told her before—I told her I would make her come here—and then she answered.

8479. What was the answer?—She said she had burnt it.

8480. She said she had burnt it?—Yes.

8481. She said so at ten past noon to-day. Was that the first time she ever acknowledged destroying it at all?—Yes, in that way.

8482. In what other way did she acknowledge it, if any?—She told me I could look for it, and puzzle my head. She made me think she had destroyed it, but she would not say she had, positively.

8483. Having a difficulty in getting that answer from her to-day, how did you overcome the difficulty?—It might have been in some manner that I might have used violence.

8484. You might have done, but did you?—No, I did not.

8485. How did you manage to get the answer to-day that you had failed to get from Thursday till Monday morning?—In telling her that I had come specially to bring her here to tell them what she had done with that book. Really we have not had the conversations over the book since Thursday that there might have been; and knowing that I had a great idea that she had destroyed this book, I went to look at these books to see whether there was anything in these books that would maintain that I have given these officers in the G Division money.

8485.* When did you bring those books?—This morning.

8486. (Chairman.) Have you brought your wife here?—Yes.

8487. Is she in court now?—Yes.

8488. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) She is here?—Yes.

8489. (Chairman.) I think it would be desirable to hear what Mrs. Platt has to say about it at once. You have finished your cross-examination about this lost or destroyed book?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Yes.

Mrs. Kate Platt, sworn.

Mrs. K. Platt.

8490. (Chairman.) Do you remember your husband coming back from here on Thursday last?—I have not a great memory, because we had had some words.

8491. Did you see him on Thursday last at all?—Yes, I must have seen him on Thursday.

8492. At what time?—I could not tell you.

8493. Were you in the house in the middle of the day?—I could not tell you exactly when I went up to the police court.

8494. What police court?—Lambeth. I think it was Thursday last. Last Wednesday morning, I think it was. You can get the account, no doubt, of what I said before the Magistrate.

8495. What did you appear before the Magistrate for?—We had a quarrel, and different things came out. I knew what he was doing of, and I was afraid of getting into trouble, and I wanted protection for myself and children.

8496. You knew "what he was doing of"?—Yes.

8497. You knew he was coming before us?—Yes, and I destroyed the book in some way because my brother is in the Police, and he has fifteen children.

8498. On Wednesday you knew your husband was coming to give evidence before us?—I did not know—not in a direct way.

8499. Not from him?—No.

8500. But you suspected he was coming?—Yes.

8501. On Wednesday morning?—I think it was Wednesday, because I had something else to trouble me. Dates I cannot tell you, but it can be proved if you make inquiries.

8502. What did you go to the police court for?—For protection.

8503. Did you address the Magistrate at all?—Yes.

8504. Who is the Magistrate?—That I could not tell you.

8505. At any rate, it was a Magistrate sitting in open court, you mean?—Yes.

8506. And you made an application to him?—I said I wanted a protection order.

8507. Did you give any reason?—Yes.

8508. What did you say?—I said my husband was breaking something that he had no business to do.

8509. Your husband was breaking something that he had no business to do?—Yes—the dinner service.

8510. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) He was breaking the dinner service?—Yes.

8511. (Chairman.) Did you refer then to something that had taken place at home about breaking the dinner service?—Yes, I told the Magistrate.

8512. When did you say he broke the dinner service?—On the application to the Magistrate.

8513. Was your application for a protection order founded on the fact that your husband had ill-used you in any way?—Yes.

8514. Do you mean personal violence?—Yes, but not the last time.

8515. I am talking about the last time?—No.

8516. What was the ground of your application to the Magistrate on Wednesday last?—I wanted protection for myself and children.

8517. Did the Magistrate ask you why?—He did ask me why.

8518. What did you say?—What could I say?

8519. I do not know?—I told him he was breaking up the home, and all he said was a man could do what he liked in his own home, and he would send a policeman to make inquiries.

8520. That was on Wednesday, I understand?—I could not tell you day and date, but one of the police will tell you better than me, because I am not used to it, and I never thought I should be here.

8521. On Thursday morning do you remember your husband leaving your house to come here?—No, I do not; I was out.

8522. When did you get back on the Thursday?—Thursday morning.

8523. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Think for a moment?—I cannot think.

8524. Never mind about the day of the week, but did you go to the Lambeth Police Court on the same day that your husband came here and gave evidence?—No, that was on the Wednesday.

8525. You went the day before he gave evidence?—Yes, I am almost sure of that.

8526. The next day he came here to give his evidence?—Yes.

(Chairman.) Do you remember his coming back after giving evidence here?—No, I might have been out in a fit of temper.

8527. Did you see him at all on Thursday evening, the day after you had been to the police court?—I have seen him every day.

8528. Did you have any conversation with him?—No.

8529. He might have asked for something. He might have asked for the book?—No. In temper, you would be too wicked. Everybody has their domestic troubles.

8530. Did he ask you for the book?—I have had no conversation. He did ask me concerning a book which, as he spoke the truth, would get my brother in trouble—which had nothing to do with the case.

8531. Where was the book?—In the cheffonier.

8532. In the drawer?—Yes.

8533. In the cheffonier drawer?—Yes.

8534. Did you take the book away?—I did.

8535. On what day did you take it away?—I think that was on the Friday.

8536. That was last Friday?—Yes, I think it was last Friday; I would not be sure; it may have been on Thursday.

8537. What became of the book?—I burnt it in the kitchen.

8538. When?—On the Thursday, as far as I can think it out.

8539. Why did you do that? Tell us fully why you did that?—I have told you.

8540. Just repeat it?—I have a brother in the Force, and he has three years to go his time.

8541. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Before he gets his pension?—Yes, and he has a great family; he has fifteen children, and I thought in some way what my husband is doing against the police might draw him into it. But there was nothing in the book; in fact, I never opened it. I just turned the leaves back, and I saw numbers and names. I never looked at any more. I put it on the fire. What the names were I could not tell you, nor the numbers either, it is no use saying I could.

8542. (Chairman.) You thought it might possibly affect your brother's chance of getting a pension?—Yes, because they know my husband has a brother-in-law in the Force.

8543. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) When did you tell your husband that you had burnt this book, if you ever told him?—I told him not directly, but indirectly. I told him he could do what he liked and find it, but he did not know really that I had burnt it.

8544. You have heard him give his evidence in the witness box?—Yes.

8545. Is that correct as to the conversation?—That is the truth.

8546. In what way could this possibly affect your brother who is in the Force?—That I do not know. He is only a police constable. He has his superiors above him.

8547. But how could this possibly affect him?—In one way, that his wife is in the habit of frequenting my place.

8548. I do not follow what is in your mind. How would the fact that your brother's wife is in the habit of coming to your place affect your brother in the police?—I do not know. They have done such wicked things to my husband that I do not know what they might do. They might take his pension away.

8549. How could destroying your husband's book affect your brother, because that is the reason you have given, and not that something would happen to your husband?—I did it in a fit of temper.

8550. How would it affect your brother?—I do not know.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I do not know whether you caught her words, but she said: "My brother is only a police-constable; he has superior officers above him."

8551. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) How would the existence of this book affect your brother?—In no way, but when he came up three years ago on the Deed case—he was called up, I believe—of course, as he has a brother-in-law they want to know something about what his brother-in-law is doing, which he did not. He did not know I was doing what I was. That is my own brother.

8552. Still I am not able to tell what is in your mind with regard to your fear as to your brother. How could the continued existence of this book affect your brother in any way?—In no way whatever, but I thought it would in my temper.

8553. Did you not think it would affect your husband?—I did not trouble about that. I burnt it in a temper.

8554. (Chairman.) As I understand it, although you did not expect that the book contained any entries about your brother, you were afraid that the police authorities might, in case other policemen were attacked by your husband, do something that might deprive your brother of his pension?—Certainly.

8555. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) He would be made responsible for what your husband was doing?—Certainly, it would affect him in some way.

8556. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Have you ever seen your husband make entries in the book?—No.

8557. How did you know it was there?—I suppose, going about your own home, you must know a little?

8558. You mean you had seen it there?—Certainly.

8559. How long had you seen it there?—That I could not tell you.

8560. Why did you select this particular day, Thursday, as the day on which to destroy this book?—Because I was in a temper against him, or I should not have gone to the Magistrate about him, and of course I could not do nothing bad enough against him.

8561. You were in a worse temper the day before?—Yes.

Mrs K. Platt.

2 Oct. 1906.

8562. I suppose the day before that you had been in a temper too?—Yes, for a fortnight.

8563. Why was it on Thursday, after you came to this court, that you destroyed this book?—That I could not tell you. I might as well have taken the lot as have taken that one.

8564. (Chairman.) Did you know that your husband was coming to see Mr. Leslie, the Secretary of this Commission?—No, I knew he was coming to do something, but what it was I did not know.

8565. Had you heard anything of this Commission?—I am not quite so silly—you must hear something.

8566. Did you hear rumours that your husband was taking some action against the police or was quarrelling with the police, or anything of the kind?—Yes.

8567. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Do you know why he was keeping this book?—No, I do not.

8568. But you knew that he was keeping it?—Yes. His partner saw it. He kept it on in case the police should come up against him, as far as I know.

8569. You knew that was the book in which he made these entries?—Yes, from the last time of his accident.

8570. That was some time in 1903, was it not?—The book that I destroyed?

8571. Yes?—Yes. What date it was I could not tell you.

8572. You knew he was keeping a book and making these entries, but you did not know from what date he started it?—No, and I do not know more than you sitting there what was in it.

8573. Except that you do remember there were numbers of police constables?—Yes.

8574. And any names?—I think only one. I did it in a fit of temper. I am sorry enough now, but that does not bring the book up.

8575. Did you see nothing but numbers?—Numbers, and then saw other things—betting and that, but to explain it to you I could not.

8576. I only want you to tell us what you saw when you opened the book. Had you ever seen it before?—Yes, I have seen it before, in a way of speaking.

8577. Had you seen your husband making entries?—I am not supposed to see him. He might go into another room. I have other matters to see to.

8578. Did you think there were entries in the book which affected the police?—Yes, I did.

8579. Which, if disclosed, would, in your opinion, prove something against the police?—Yes.

8580. And you knew that your husband was going to give evidence and intended to give evidence?—I heard so.

8581. I still do not follow why it was that you went to the Lambeth Police Court. Was it to get a protection order against your husband or against other people?—Against my husband.

8582. Were you anxious then that he should not give evidence about this?—I did not want him to.

8583. You thought he would get into trouble about it?—I did.

8584. And you did not want him to mix himself up in it?—I did not.

8585. You have your family to attend to?—Yes.

8586. And you have a brother in the Force. Then you quarrelled about this matter?—Yes.

8587. And in the course of the quarrel, I suppose, the dinner service was broken?—Yes.

8588. Then it was that you applied to the Magistrate at Lambeth Police Court for protection?—Yes.

8589. Did anybody advise you to do that?—No, it was done in a fit of temper. Nobody advised me to go.

8590. When did your husband break the dinner service. Was it before the Wednesday?—On the Tuesday, I think.

8591. So you went on Wednesday morning for an order?—Yes.

8592. (Mr. Dickinson.) You destroyed this book after you had quarrelled with your husband?—No. He came and asked me for the book. I told him to find it.

8593. That was on the evening of Thursday?—Yes, I think it was.

8594. Had you at that time burnt it?—Yes, I had burnt it on the Wednesday.

8595. You burnt it before Thursday?—Yes. If you give me time to think perhaps I shall think it out. You see I have other business matters.

8596. (Chairman.) Do you carry on any business yourself?—No.

8597. (Mr. Dickinson.) Did your brother or anybody speak to you about that book?—No, in fact my husband has not seen my brother twenty times in twenty years during the time we have been married.

8598. It was entirely your own idea?—Yes.

8599. Did your husband tell you the book would be useful in the case?—No. I merely thought I was doing my brother a turn. In fact, my brother does not like him.

8600. You thought the book was something which might be useful to your husband?—I did it in a mad temper.

8601. Did you know about the existence of the other books that your husband has given to us?—Yes, they have been upstairs in the servant's bedroom in the drawer.

8602. You knew what they were?—Yes.

8603. Did you have any conversation with your husband as to giving up those books?—I had nothing to do with it as regards that. A man can do as he likes, can't he? I have found that out.

8604. But I do not quite understand your being so anxious with regard to the book that you burnt?—That was nearest to hand, for one thing I had to go upstairs for those. Perhaps my temper would have cooled down by that time.

8605. You did not do anything to prevent your husband giving up the others?—No. What is the good?

8606. Did you think they would have anything in them that would help his case?—I knew he had the books, but I did not know what was in them; I knew they were as regards betting.

8607. You did nothing to prevent your husband from giving up those books at all?—No, certainly not. I wish I hadn't the other one.

8608. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You wish you had not destroyed the book?—I do.

8609. (Chairman.) You knew, I suppose, all about the quarrel, as I may call it, of 1903, between Deed and your husband?—Certainly. The man came to my door.

8610. You knew what your husband had done in the matter?—Certainly, I knew all about that.

8611. And that he had given up business on his own account in consequence of that?—Yes, at various times.

8612. Did you have conversations with him about taking any action against the police. Did he tell you about the letters he was writing to Scotland Yard. He told us he wrote a great many letters to Scotland Yard?—Yes, but how often I could not say, because he might go in a room and shut the door. I have other business to do.

8613. Did you hear of his intention to come and give evidence before us at any time in the course of this summer—August or September?—I cannot say directly I did.

8614. You said you heard things, and that rumours had come to you?—Yes.

8615. Were they rumours about your husband taking some action about the police?—Yes, one day my husband was watched about, and for months and months before.

8616. You noticed that yourself?—I know it. I cannot prove it.

8617. What makes you think he has been watched for months?—Because he knows the men who have been watching him, and when he was watched about for three and a half hours one day he came indoors and said, "Look up the street; that man has been following me for three and a half hours."

8618. Did you see the man there?—I did.

8619. Mr. Platt told us about that. You saw the man, did you?—Yes.

8620. Your husband pointed him out when he got home?—He was standing on the green, facing my house. As to recognising him I could not.

8621. Recently, or in August or September, has anybody been watching your husband?—That I could not say.

8622. Was that the only occasion you know of?—That was the only case which has been pointed out to me directly. Mrs. K. Platt. 22 Oct. 1906.

8623. I understand you say you did know from what neighbours have told you, and somebody else, that your husband was going to do something against the police?—I thought so, because of the letters he was writing.

Mr. Alfred Francis Platt, recalled.

8624. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) This destroyed book related only to the period of March or April of this year?—From March up to July. Mr. A. F. Platt.

8625. I am asking you about the books before that. I understand you to say they contain no names and no dates of payments to individual constables?—No.

8626. In 1903 you have told us you were busily engaged in betting?—Yes.

8627. By permission of bribed police constables?—Yes.

8628. Those were uniformed officers and plain-clothed officers?—Yes.

8629. As I understand you, when that change in the procedure was made it created a difficulty for you. Previous to that you had been in the habit of bribing the C.I.D. men?—Yes.

8630. When the C.I.D. men were taken off that duty and uniformed men put on did you have any difficulty in bribing them?—No.

8631. None at all?—None at all.

8632. You found it just as easy to bribe four uniformed officers as you had previously found it to bribe the C.I.D. men?—Yes.

8633. The four men that you have mentioned by name. Deed was one of them?—Yes.

8634. I thoroughly understand the nature of your complaint against him. He attempted to obtain money from you by false pretences?—Yes.

8635. That is your complaint against him?—Yes.

8636. With regard to Powell, have you been bribing Powell?—From the first time I saw him. The first day I saw him he had money—the first day I appeared in the first conviction in 1903.

8637. Do you mean you were convicted upon his evidence before you had bribed him?—Yes

8638. Not after you had bribed him?—No.

8639. The date of that conviction was the 29th May, 1903?—I think that was the first one. That was not with Deed. That was a conviction obtained by Soer and Powell.

8640. Powell was the man who arrested you, apparently, and Soer was a witness against you besides Powell, was he?—Yes.

8641. I am dealing with Powell for the moment. You did not bribe him before that date at all?—No.

8642. Did you bribe him after that date?—Yes.

8643. Regularly?—I will not say regularly, but what time that I met him.

8644. Off and on?—I gave him the amount as I should come up to him. I do not say that I saw him on any fixed time of the week. It is quite possible for me not to see these men. They were not always out doing that duty.

8645. Do I understand you to say you paid him a weekly salary?—Yes.

8646. Suppose you did not see Powell for three weeks, would he call for three weeks' salary?—Not exactly.

8647. Then he would not be paid unless you saw him?—The explanation of that is these men were not always out on my particular ground. One of these officers (Soar) was out continuously on this duty.

8648. Do not pass away from Powell, because that only confuses us. We are dealing with Powell. Do you mean you paid him 10s. a week when you saw him on that duty?—10s. or £1.

8649. But why "Or £1"?—Sometimes I made it a little more, and sometimes it was less.

8650. Sometimes it was 10s., then?—I think I paid one 10s.

8651. Who was that to—Powell?—Yes.

8652. You paid him once 10s.?—Yes.

8653. But all the other weeks that you paid him you paid him £1?—Yes.

8654. You are quite clear about that?—Yes.

8655. How soon after this conviction did you begin to bribe Powell?—I started from then—five minutes after the first conviction.

8656. Just outside the court?—Yes.

8657. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Before you pass from that I should like to understand this. It is not clear to me yet what the witness says about that. Was Powell paid so much a week? Suppose you did not see him for three weeks, when you did see him what did you give him then?—I perhaps would not give him fully for the three weeks of £1 each.

8658. I do not understand what you mean. You would not give him "Fully for the three weeks," but you would give him for the three weeks?—It might be 50s.

8659. You mean you would be paying him then for the three weeks, although you had not seen him during those three weeks?—Yes.

8660. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) He was paid £1 a week whether you saw him or not?—Yes.

8661. (Chairman.) £1 a week?—The various sums of money allotted would work out to that.

8662. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) To each of them?—Yes.

8663. As I understand you, as far as Powell was concerned, his was always £1 a week, except when you gave him 10s.?—Yes.

8664. Down to what date did you continue to see Powell and pay him regularly at the rate of £1 a week. We will not trouble about the 10s. a week?—Up to about October.

8665. Of 1903?—Yes. I should think that was the last payment I made about that time.

8666. Just look at your books and see if you have anything at all to confirm your statement in your book?—I have not.

8667. (Chairman.) This was all before 1903?—This is in 1903.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Beginning at the 29th May.

(Chairman.) I ought to have said before the Deed incident of 1903.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) There was not a conviction under Powell's evidence until May, 1903.

8668. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) The period I am dealing with is 1903, when Powell arrested him. Then he goes on to October, 1903. Have you got anything at all in your book which corroborates your statement that during that time you were paying Powell any money?—No.

8669. (Chairman.) Have you kept your books for 1903?—I have never kept any books—only paying-out books.

8670. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Did you see Powell regularly between those dates?—I might say so.

Mr. A. F. Platt.

22 Oct. 1906.

8671. You might say anything, but I want to know whether it is a fact that you saw him?—I saw him between the period I state.

8672. What duty was he on during that period?—I should think in most instances he was on uniform duty only on days when he was fetched out by Soer.

8673. So that during the whole of that period he was not doing any betting-watching duty at all. Is that what you say?—I could not say in every instance.

8674. Did you see Powell between May and October upon any occasion doing betting watching?—That I cannot say. I cannot say that he was.

8675. Why did you pay him £1 a week if he was not having anything to do with watching you betting?—Because I did not know any week that he might not come out again and do the same thing.

8676. So that, so far as you knew, he might never appear on the streets watching betting again, but you continued from May till October regularly paying him his £1 a week?—More or less, yes.

8677. Although he might never, up to this day, have been put on that duty at all?—Quite right.

8678. Do you know, as a fact, that he never was on betting duty between May and October, 1903?—How is it then he gave evidence against me at the police court, and got me fined?

8679. In May. Do you know as a fact that he never was on betting duty between May and October, 1903?—I cannot say that. My first conviction in Lambeth was the first conviction that ever I had.

8680. That is not an answer to my question in the least. The 29th May, 1903, is the date of your conviction. Do you know as a fact that Powell never did any betting duty at all between the months of May and October, 1903?—I cannot answer that. I cannot say whether he did or not. I know he never came out to have me any more.

8681. And you ask the Commission to believe that you were paying that man £1 a week all that time, although he was not doing betting duty at all?—Yes.

8682. How many people did you pay £1 a week to who were not doing betting duty?—No others.

8683. Then you knew this man was not doing betting duty, did you?—I knew he was not out as often as the other officers.

8684. I have told you I quite understand your complaint against Deed. What was your complaint against Powell?—I had to bring his name in with the others to prove that these other officers never convicted me only at certain times, to prove what I was doing.

8685. What is your complaint as against Powell individually, apart from Deed?—My complaint was that he had been receiving these monies.

8686. But you wanted him to receive the monies?—Yes.

8687. You could not carry on your business according to you, unless he did. What was your complaint against him?—It was that I could not continue my business.

8688. What was your complaint against Powell. Why should you bear him any ill will, and desire to have him dismissed from the Force?—I had stated, as I understand, in my complaint, that these officers came out to do duty.

8689. Which complaint are you speaking of now?—When I wrote to the Commissioner.

8690. About Deed, do you mean?—Yes, or at the time of my complaint of Deed at the station, I made some assertions then to them that they should do such a trick to me after I was paying them as I was.

8691. Let us eliminate Deed. Deed was dismissed, and you knew it?—Yes.

8692. After Deed was dismissed did you continue (you have told us you did) to lodge complaints against the remaining three officers, including Powell?—Yes.

8693. What was your complaint against Powell then? That he had received these monies off me.

8694. Why should you complain of that?—For the simple reason that they had stopped me from betting where I was.

8695. Powell was one of the officers who might come out any day and stop you?—Yes.

8696. That was your reason of complaining?—Yes, that was my reason.

8697. I do not know whether you see that if your unsupported word was accepted against a police officer every police officer who did his duty with regard to betting would be dismissed from the Force?—I was relying on one thing, which I hope to be able to prove here. If I could show why I was giving them these monies I think it would be sufficient proof that they were receiving those monies.

8698. Why did you want to have the men who took the money dismissed from the Force?—They would stop me from betting.

8699. They would not if they took the money?—They would under the circumstances.

8700. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Under what circumstances?—The circumstances arise in this way. One day I failed to make an appointment with Soer. I was sent for to go home—my daughter was there—and because I failed to meet him that day I placed another man who was working other business there for the time being. Deed told Soer I would come to him. I had the man placed there for the purpose of receiving slips. In my absence—I was not there—Soar took him some distance away from where he first observed him, and then afterwards he came back and took me.

8701. To where?—To the charge room. That day he never saw me take a paper.

8702. (Chairman.) What day was that?—I think this was in September.

8703. This was some time after the 29th May conviction?—Yes.

8704. What happened then. Were you convicted again?—Yes, I pleaded guilty.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) That date was the 28th August. Of course this is away from the precise man I am dealing with.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Yes, only I wished him to explain what he meant by "under the circumstances."

8705. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Did you want Powell dismissed from the Force?—Yes.

8706. In complaining against Powell you wanted him dismissed from the Force?—Yes.

8707. Powell only convicted you once?—That is all.

8708. In May, 1903?—Yes.

8709. According to your story he had received your bribes regularly after that date, had he not?—Yes.

8710. And he never convicted you again?—No.

8711. Is that right?—That is right.

8712. Why should you want Powell dismissed from the Force. He was your very man?—I discontinued betting. The police had stopped me from using certain premises. I thought they had no right to have me warned off those premises.

8713. (Chairman.) As I understand it, after the Deed incident you gave up carrying on your bookmaking business in the streets in the Lambeth division?—Yes, in the way I had been doing.

8714. You were dissatisfied with the treatment you had received from the police?—Yes.

8715. Thereupon, notwithstanding the fact that Deed was dismissed, you wrote to Scotland Yard to tell the Commissioner that Soer and Powell had been receiving bribes from you,—Yes, much to that effect.

8716. The reason was that you thought you had been treated unfairly by Deed, Soer and Powell and another constable?—Yes.

8717. You were in fact compelled to give up your business?—Yes.

8718. Thereupon you wrote to tell the Commissioner what the relations were according to you that existed between you and the police?—Yes.

8719. In what way had Powell treated you unfairly?—In taking me and a friend that day, knowing that I had been warned off the premises.

8720. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) In what way had Powell treated you unfairly?—In no way at all.

8721. Why did you want Powell dismissed from the Force?—For the simple reason that I had to let them know that he was receiving these monies in company with these others.

8722. Why?—Not to arrest me.

8723. Powell had done, according to you, exactly what he was paid for?—That is right.

8724. Why did you want Powell dismissed from the Force?—Because I wanted to have these men out that had received these monies from me.

8725. Why should you want to have the men out who had received money from you?—Because the police authorities had complained of me and stopped me from not being able to go where I wanted in the times of the day that I wanted. Therefore I thought I should like to get some of these men punished.

8726. And Powell was one of the men who, according to you, stopped you from betting?—I cannot say. His superiors, I put it down to.

8727. Why did you want to dismiss him, Powell?—Because I had complained of each one of these men who had received these monies.

8728. So far as Powell is concerned on the only occasion on which he came in contact with you betting at all he took you into custody?—That is right.

8729. He was the man against whom you complained and you desired to have him dismissed from the Force?—I have to include him in that way.

8730. Now, with regard to Soer. When did you first begin to bribe Soer?—The same date.

8731. That is, the 29th May?—Yes.

8732. Up to that time you had not bribed Soer?—No.

8733. Was he paid a weekly wage?—Yes.

8734. How much?—About £1 a week.

8735. Was it about, you know?—Sometimes it was a little more, but it averaged out at that.

8736. You are the person who knows about this if anybody does. What was it you paid Soer?—Sometimes it was £1, sometimes it was 10s.

8737. How often £1 and how often 10s.?—Every week.

8738. Was it oftener £1 or oftener 10s.?—Oftener £1. It was £1.

8739. You only paid Powell 10s. on one occasion. Did you pay Soer equally highly?—Yes.

8740. Were there very few occasions on which it was 10s.?—Yes, very, very few.

8741. Nearly always £1?—Yes.

8742. So that practically you may say it was £1 a week?—Yes.

8743. That is what you say now?—Yes.

8744. You would not think of saying you had paid him 10s. a week?—No.

8745. £1 is what you say?—Yes.

8746. Down to what period did you pay him £1 a week?—Down to almost the last hour of betting—October.

8747. Of 1903?—Yes.

8748. Did you see Soer frequently on betting business?—Yes.

8749. Daily?—I cannot say daily—frequently.

8750. Almost daily?—Frequently.

8751. Almost daily?—I cannot say that.

8752. Every week?—More or less.

8753. Can you fix any date at all with regard to Soer?—No, I cannot say I can fix any dates.

8754. There is no week in all the months between May and October that you will pledge your oath to that you saw Soer looking after you betting?—Only on the days I would be positive to—them days.

8755. That they arrested you?—Yes.

8756. But with regard to any other week during the whole of those months will you pledge your oath that you saw Soer in plain clothes there looking after betting?

(Chairman.) I understand his statement is that he paid Soar not to look after him.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) But he saw him. He could not have paid him unless he did.

8757. Will you pledge your oath to any single week in all those months?—The week that I was arrested in company with another man. I cannot pledge myself.

8758. When a man arrests you you are safe in that statement?—It was the morning before I had been in his company.

8759. A man of your intelligence knows that we have that man's duties recorded?—Yes.

8760. So that if you can fix any date we can say whether you were betting or not. Now will you fix a date?—Perhaps he was not always after me the same week.

8761. Now will you fix a date?—I will fix the day previous to my September conviction—I previously made arrangements as to what time I was to go.

8762. You were convicted on the 28th August?

(Chairman.) Do I understand you to say you were paying this money when Soer was in uniform and on his beat?—No.

8763. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) It is the exact contrary. His suggestion is that he paid him when he was in plain clothes, and on the duty of watching betting.

8764. I want you to fix any date. Can you fix any date?—I fix the day previous to my being convicted.

8765. The day before?—Yes.

8766. At what time the day before do you say you saw Soar?

8767-8. (Chairman.) During these months, from May to October, had a change been made from the C.I.D. method of watching betting to the uniformed men's method?—I think it had been made previously to that.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) It had been made previously, I understand the witness to say, but I have not before me the exact date when the change was made to the uniformed men; but those are uniformed men.

(Chairman.) Then from May to October, 1903, the officers engaged in watching betting in Lambeth were uniformed men.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) That is so?—Not in the way, perhaps, that this gentleman puts it. We term uniformed men those who by order of their superiors are sent out on plain clothes duty on certain days to arrest us; in ordinary course they are uniformed men.

8769. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Uniformed men not in uniform?—Yes.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) That is so.

8770. (Chairman.) I understand your evidence is this, that when Soer, for instance, was sent out into a district to watch betting, what you paid him for was not to be in the street at the very moment when you were carrying on your operations?—That is right.

8771. So that you would not see him at all?—Yes.

8772. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) I never heard that suggestion made before. I understand he accepts it?—Perhaps I cannot make you fully understand what I mean on this point. The day before he came to arrest me he would simply pass by the top of the street previously to my going down. I would simply go along and say "All right, I will meet you at half-past two, or a quarter to three," or whatever time it was.

8773. (Chairman.) And then you would be arrested?—Yes.

8774. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Would you say this to him?—Yes.

8775. Did you arrange the conviction?—Yes.

8776. You fixed a time. Is that so?—It is the usual thing with us men. We have gone in every three, four, or five weeks.

8777. I understood you to say that you were acting in collusion with the police, and that it was in consequence of that that you were arrested. Who suggested the conviction? According to what you were telling me just now (that was the novelty to me), it was you who said when and where you were to be arrested?—On the day that he would show himself he would say "To-day." I said "Very well, at half-past two or a quarter to three."

8778. Do you mean that he intimated to you that you were to be arrested?—Yes.

8779. Then you said at what time?—Yes.

8780. And then he came along and you were arrested at that time?—Yes.

Mr. A. F. Platt.

22 Oct. 1906.

8781. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) The point I was on was this. You pledge yourself that you saw Soer on the 27th August, the day before the date of what you call your September conviction?—Yes.

8782. You were arrested on the 28th August?—Yes.

8783. You say you saw him the day before?—Yes.

8784. In plain clothes?—Yes.

8785. Where did you see him?—He passed the top of the street where I was betting.

8786. Which street?—I could not tell the name of the street.

8787. Something is due to those officers who up to the present have got unblemished characters in the way of providing them with particulars of the accusations made against them, and providing them with the means of defending themselves against such particulars. What street do you say?—A street leading out of, I think it is, Aubin Street. I think that was the street, but I am not positive of that.

8788. (Chairman.) Could you point it out on a map if we gave you a map of London?—Yes.

8789. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Were you in that street at the time you saw Soer?—Yes.

8790. You pledge yourself to that?—Yes.

8791. Betting?—Yes.

8792. Did you speak to him?—Yes, I left the street that I was doing my business in and followed him a little further along what I believe they term the approach, but I would not be positive, and he said: "You will have to go down to-day; be up here at half-past two," to meet him at the Lying-in Hospital in Stamford Street.

8793. He said, "You had better go down to-day"?—That was the meaning of it.

8794. "You had better go down to-day." Is that what he said?—Yes.

8795. Meaning you had to be convicted?—Yes.

8796. He said that?—Yes.

8797. Was anyone with him at that time?—I do not think there was at that time—not to say actually in his company—perhaps a few yards away from him.

8798. What time of day was that?—The time I go for what we term doing our business.

8799. What time is that?—Between the hours of 12 and 3.

8800. Did you go down that day. Were you convicted that day?—No, I did not go down that day.

8801. How was that. You had arranged it all quite nicely?—Because I had been sent for, having a daughter ill.

8802. At what hour was it that this conversation took place between you and Soer?—I could not fix the exact hour, but I should say between the hours of 12 and 3.

8803. It must have been considerably before three?—Yes.

8804. Was it before two?—I should think so.

8805. Will you tell us the hour when you agreed to go into custody?—I could not say to the positive hour, but during them hours—12 to three. I had seen him, we will say, between 12 and two, or one, or something like that.

8806. Do you see the disadvantage at which you place Police-constable Soer? You say you had this guilty conversation with him at a particular place, and you do not name the hour. He might be able to show where he was?—Yes.

8807. Cannot you fix it a little more closely?—I cannot positively fix the exact hour of the day.

8808. Have you an atom of corroboration of any sort that you had that conversation with Soer?—Have I any actual corroboration?

8809. Have you any shadow of corroboration of any sort?—Yes.

8810. What is it?—The Occurrence Book will prove that I was never in the police station only at the times I say.

8811. At what times?—That is the time I had arranged to go down with him.

8812. What time?—About three or quarter to three.

8813. How does that prove that you had arranged it, because you were arrested about a quarter to three?—The other methods I have to try and show——.

8814. Let us deal with this one. How does the fact that you were arrested about quarter to three show that you had arranged to be arrested?—It shows this. To prove I must have had this conversation with this officer, why was I never summoned?

8815. Why were you never summoned?—Yes, when he must have had numerous cases, in the neighbourhood, of bookmakers that he summoned.

8816. That is not answering my question which I put to you. You said it was corroboration because you were arrested at quarter to three. Why should your arrest at quarter to three be a corroboration of your statement that it was arranged with the constable?—I had not been taken into the station on the two occasions I was, only at the hours I have made appointments with him for.

8817. Why should that show that it was arranged with the constable?—The fact of my never being summoned must show there must have been some collusion between us.

8818. Do not go from the point. Why should an arrest at a quarter to three show that there was an arrangement with the constable?—Because the book would show that other men that did not do this thing that I was doing were taken earlier in the day.

(Chairman.) He says Soer saw him carrying on his business at 12 o'clock, and he was not arrested until quarter to three, and he says "That is corroboration that Soer and I were in collusion."

8819. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) He does allege that earlier in the day others who were doing the same thing were summoned?—Were taken or had summonses served upon them.

8820. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) We shall have to search the records of the Lambeth Police Court. Let me suggest to you another reason why you should be arrested at a quarter to three. Is it not extremely valuable evidence corrobating a police-constable that you had been betting that a number of betting slips should be found on your person?—Not always.

8821. Is it not valuable from the point of view of the policeman who wants to show that you have been betting?—Yes.

8822. Therefore the nearer the close of racing hours he arrests you the more slips you will have in your possession?—Yes.

8823. Is not that enough to account for your being arrested at quarter to three?—No.

8824. Do you say you were arrested at a quarter to three on every day?—On two occasions.

8825. You have only been arrested four times?—Yes.

8826. Do you say you were arrested at a quarter to three on every occasion?—No.

8827. Then what of the value of your quarter to three?—The first time I stated I was bribing him was the first time I had been convicted. That was the first time I got into collision with him. I think I went into the station about half-past one.

8828. It was about 1.45?—I think I went into the station about 1.30.

(Chairman.) On that occasion you had never given any money to Soar?

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) The 29th of May, was it not?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Yes.

8829. There were only four arrests altogether?—And no summonses.

8830. We will see about the value of your quarter to three arrangement. The next time at a quarter to three was the 1st of August, when you were arrested by Soer. Is that right?—If you say so, yes. I have not got the dates.

8831. The 1st of August, arrested by Soer and taken to the police station at a quarter to three. You arrived at the police station at a quarter to three. How far is the police station from your pitch?—A matter of five or six minutes' walk.

8832. You had been paying throughout the months of June and July, do I understand you to say?—Yes.

8833. No arrests at all?—No.

8834. You were arrested on the 1st August. You had two months' run then?—Is that what it says?

8835. It says the 1st of August.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) No arrests and no summonses.

8836. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) You had two months' clear run. Then you were arrested again on the 28th. That was your September conviction?—Yes.

8837. When do you say you were arrested then?—After he had previously taken the friend that I had there taking my papers.

8838. At what hour by the clock do you say you were arrested on the 28th August?—Is that my third conviction—the 28th August?

8839. Yes?—About the same time.

8840. You say you arranged it for a quarter to three?—Yes, that would be about the time, I think.

8841. You say you arranged it for a quarter to three?—Yes, as near as possible at that time.

8842. At half-past two you were at the police station, six minutes' walk from your pitch?—Yes.

8843. There was a quarter of an hour's good betting lost to you that day?—Yes.

8844. The fourth arrest was on the 13th October, 2.45—a quarter to three. So that what you found your argument upon is two arrests at a quarter to three—that is to say, reaching the police station at a quarter to three—and one of them reaching the police station at half-past two?—Yes.

8845. You say you arranged that?—Yes.

8846. Arranged the hour?—Yes. Very likely it was possible for Soer to have gone somewhere else, and I went down a trifle earlier that day under those conditions.

8847. To oblige Soer?—That is right.

8848. You have spoken about absence of summonses against you, proving that these arrests were collusive?—Yes.

8849. Do you remember telling the Commission when you first gave your evidence that you generally had a man at the end of the street watching the people who were coming along?—Yes.

8850. And that you generally got word when they came along?—Yes.

8851. And that you knew people were doing the watching?—Yes.

8852. And your scouts knew them too?—Yes.

8853. Would it not be rather difficult for a policeman to catch you betting on your pitch?—Yes, under the circumstances, but not under every circumstance.

8854. And if he did see you betting there might be an absence of corroboration?—No, I do not look at it in that way.

8855. He could only see you for a moment or two?—That is right.

8856. Because your scouts would give you instant warning?—Not with such as him.

8857. I am talking of an honest police constable who would not take a bribe?—You are asking a question as to this particular pitch at Waterloo. I did not need to have lookers out—not after this man. On these pitches in Clerkenwell——

8858. I am assuming, and you will pardon the assumption, that the constables are doing their duty honestly. I want to see the value of your argument about a summons. He would only see you momentarily. He could not watch you for any length of time?—Yes, he could.

8859. An honest constable?—Yes.

8860. With your scouts about?—I did not have scouts at Waterloo.

8861. You told us that you could have them?—The scouts I employ are at Clerkenwell.

8862. You told us you could have them?—At the place I betted they could not get within a matter of thirty or forty yards, and whenever they could get near me I could go and shut a door. That is why I was never caught for betting purposes previous to May. So that brought out Powell, who had never done a lot of his duty, and I really did not know him till he got to me. Soer had failed to catch me previously to that; he must have gone back to the station himself and fetched Powell out, knowing he was not so well known as he was, for Powell to be able to get closer to me, which he succeeded in doing.

8863. Do I understand now at this pitch in Lambeth you could pop out of sight directly a policeman came into view?—Yes.

8864. So that he could not watch you for any length of time at all?—Not without my knowledge.

8865-6. Therefore there would be an absence of corroboration assuming you were doing your best to escape conviction, and they were doing their best to catch you. It was no use summoning you in those circumstances?—The methods that they pursue in summoning people, if they are wicked enough, is one of the reasons I was giving this money, but not to make them wicked. If they are wicked enough, I understand that these men can get hold of a man and send a paper to you, and if that paper is found on you they know the name. That is the method they pursue in granting summonses.

8867. On a summons you are not searched at all?—No. I have never been summoned. I cannot say.

8868. The summons is delayed for days after the bets mentioned in the summons?—I believe so.

8869. And if a bookmaker is particularly clever, and has good scouts, the only way of catching him is by arrest, with the corroboration of the slips upon him?—When people give them trouble, not being able to catch them (I made no trouble to be caught), the method they pursue then is to summon them.

8870. They have no evidence against the man?—The way they obtain evidence is in getting hold of the man that they know he is betting with. They know the horses that that man has written down and the name of the paper, and therefore they can summon you.

8871. Slips will not be found on you when you are summoned, because you are never searched at all?—Not that I know of.

8872. There is no summons there where conviction is filled in?—Where a man, before he is summoned, has been previously convicted for that offence, when the Magistrate is deciding that case—it is the usual method—he naturally asks if there has ever been a conviction against the man, and of course that is conclusive that he is still doing the business.

8873. A conviction without evidence—is that your suggestion?—Not in that shape. If it is proved that I am a bookmaker and I have been fined on previous occasions, that is a great thing that the Magistrate takes into consideration in fining a man on these summonses. It helps the evidence of the officers. They say "This man was convicted" so-and-so, and they swear they were in the same street.

8874. You know something about this business. What percentage of the men who are taken up for street bookmaking plead guilty, pay their fines, and go their way within two seconds of their stepping into the dock—is it 99 and some fraction per cent.?—I would not say that. There are several of them who have done so, but since the summonses were served there are more men convicted than were convicted the other way.

8875. Do not they plead guilty and pay their £5?—When they are caught.

8876. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Are you suggesting they are convicted when they have not committed the offence?—I do not say that, but they are in that street on a particular day and time and these officers know it, but they cannot get near those men to see actually what they are doing. They might see a man go down that entry or come into the street where you are doing your business, and they might get on to the tops of houses, and I believe it is the fact that some of these policemen in doing their duty go through private persons' houses.

8877. If what you are saying is correct in answering Mr. Muir it is more easy for a policeman if he wishes to get a conviction on a summons to do it?—Yes.

8878-9. (Chairman.) Is this place, Aubin Street, or whatever the street is to which you refer in Lambeth. When you were on your pitch there, did you habitually employ scouts?—No.

8880. Why not?—It was not needful.

8881. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) That statement that you did not employ scouts rests entirely on your word?—

Mr. A. F. Platt.

22 Oct. 1906.

When you use the term "scouts" I did not have any men under a weekly sum of money working for me.

8882. What do you mean by "scouts"?—A tout that I employ to see these men, who are well known.

8883. To watch them?—Yes.

8884. I call them scouts?—That is right, sir.

8885. Did you employ people who were not paid a weekly wage to do that?—No.

8886. Who did you employ?—I employed really nobody.

8887. That assertion of yours that you employed nobody to scout for you rests absolutely on your word?—Yes.

8888. With regard to Soer, you have mentioned the fact that there was no summons as you suggest corroborates your statement that those arrests were arranged. Is there any sort of corroboration outside of those two arguments that Soer ever received a farthing from you for any purpose at all?—The proof would be in bringing up the men that he did summons and get convictions against in a greater proportion to what I had.

8889. Might it not be that your scouts were cleverer or that you were cleverer?—I tell you I had no scouts.

8890. I want to know what beside your bare word that Soer ever received a farthing from you have you got to lay before this Commission?—These books will prove the convictions against me in such a few cases as compared with the other men who were betting in the district who did not pay.

8891. You have given several reasons why that should be so, one of them is that you could always get warning if you wanted it, and the other is that you always popped in at a door?—I was speaking in general terms that as a body we men did employ scouts. These men know who go out to do this police duty; then when they are seen coming down the street the man has got a tout, and that man disappears, and all the time that officer is in the vicinity in the generality of cases the man does not leave whatever premises he enters. There is no doubt these men have had to stop out till half-past three and four, and then not bring a man in, for the simple reason that these men have discontinued their business during the time they have known the officers were in their vicinity.

8892. Have you any corroboration of any kind of your statement that you paid any money to Soer for any purpose whatever?—I think the fact that I have never been summoned is sufficient corroboration.

8893. I do not want to go over the old ground, but is there any other ground that you can suggest that would afford corroboration of your statement?—No.

8894. Gunn was another man of whom you complained—No. 209. Did you bribe Gunn?—Yes.

8895. When did you begin to bribe Gunn?—From the first time he arrested me.

8896. When did Gunn arrest you?—You have got the date there.

8897. The only two constables who are down as having arrested you are Powell and Soer?—And Deed and Gunn.

8898. What time was it that Gunn arrested you or gave evidence against you?—I think it was the second time. I would not be positive about that, but I think it was.

8899. On the second conviction and the third conviction Gunn was a witness against you on both of these occasions. When did you begin to bribe Gunn?—From the first time that he put his hands upon me.

8900. That was from the 1st August?—Yes.

8901. That is when Soar arrested you?—He accompanied Gunn, I believe. The first time I was arrested by Soer and Powell.

8902. Do not let us go back on that, we are talking about Gunn. Gunn arrested you for the first time on the 1st August?—Yes.

8903. You say you began to bribe him from that date?—That is right.

8904. Where did you give him the first bribe?—After we came out of the police court.

8905. Not before you went in, but after you came out?—Yes.

8906. How much was it that time?—The average of the others.

8907. £1?—Yes.

8908. Did you pay him £1 a week?—Yes.

8909. Regularly?—In the manner that I have described in which I made payments to others.

8910. Did you continue that down to October, like you did the others?—Yes.

8911. Did you see him weekly?—No, I cannot say I saw him every week.

8912. Almost weekly?—Put it that way.

8913. In plain clothes?—Not always.

8914. When you bribed him was he in plain clothes?—I should say so. He was never in uniform whenever gave him any money.

8915. He was always in plain clothes when you bribed him?—Yes.

8916. And you bribed him practically every week?—It amounts to that.

8917. Did you see him on duty in plain clothes during that period?—I cannot say.

8918. You will not fix any date?—No.

8919. Have you got any sort of corroboration other than the kind you have mentioned with regard to Soer, that you ever paid Gunn any money?—Not that know of.

8920. So it is your word against his?—Virtually, yes. There are only these facts leading up to it, that these men had other bookmakers summoned who did not pay the money.

8921. That you have mentioned already with regard to Soar. I do not want you to repeat that, but have you any any other ground on which you ask that you should be believed rather than he?—No—not unless others are coming forward.

8922. None that you know of?—No.

8923. With regard to Soer and Gunn, have you any different sort of complaint to make against them to what you have made against Powell, or is it the same sort of complaint?—The same sort of complaint.

8924. So that all those three men who took your bribes, and did give you value for your money, you wanted dismissed from the Force?—Yes.

8925. Have you given up betting?—Yes.

8926. Absolutely?—Yes.

8927. Since July?—Yes.

8928. When was the date that you gave up betting?—I gave it up since July.

8929. You have not done any betting since July?—No.

8930. Either directly or through any agents?—That is so.

8931. You are quite clear about that?—Yes.

8932. What have you been doing since then?—Walking about.

8933. I mean what have you been doing for a living since July?—There was no need to do anything. In the case of a man who has been betting all the years that I have, or covering the number of years that I say, I really have not got the character to get anything else, even if I wanted to obtain employment.

8934. I do not say you should get employment, but do you mean you were living on your means?—Yes, virtually that.

8935. With your betting all those years you have achieved an independence?—No.

8936. What do you mean?—I mean that it is not all bookmakers who are able to retire over betting. I suppose we know there are bookmakers who cannot always pay their liabilities.

8937. I am afraid I have not made my meaning plain to you. You have not been doing any betting since July?—No.

8938. What have you been doing for a living since July? How have you been keeping yourself and your family?—I have been living on the proceeds of earnings that are derived at the door of my residence.

8939. What sort of earnings are they?—It is business that I do not interfere with, only in the case of going and asking people.

8940. What sort of business is it?—A tally sort of business—a money-lending business.

8941. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Is that the business that your wife said she carried on?—Yes. There are 300 or 400 people at times.

8942. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Whose business is this money-lending business?—It is really hers. I have virtually given it over to her.

8943. When did you give the money-lending business over to your wife?—Almost from the first year we started.

8944. When did you first start the money-lending business with your wife?—She was practically doing it unbeknown to me, because going out of a morning I never came in till late in the evening, except under very exceptional circumstances. I did not know she was doing it.

8945. Who started this business?—I had given her moneys, and in the neighbourhood that we lived people knowing that she had a few pounds would come to her and ask her for the money.

8946. I want a plain answer to that question: who started the money-lending business, you or your wife?—I really started it.

8947. You started it?—Yes.

8948. How long did you carry it on before you handed it over to your wife?—About twelve months. When I say I virtually carried it on, I virtually did the bookkeeping for my wife.

8949. The money-lending bookkeeping?—Yes. I kept those books up to a certain date, and as I found she was not exactly conducting the business in the way that I wanted it carried on, and, of course, my being out betting, or, as I eventually turned to, cabbing and betting, I had to leave her to run the business, so when I found she had got into a bad state, and would not go on my plan—because ever since I can remember myself I have been connected with money-lending terms, and I know the different ways that people will try and get money—as she would not carry it on my way with the money that I had given her, I said, "It is done with—do it your own way."

8950. When did that happen, that you turned the business, which you had conducted for twelve or eighteen months yourself, over to your wife. When did you do that?—About five or six years ago. That is really one of the points that we are at loggerheads over.

8951. But as I understand you your wife since July has been keeping you out of this money-lending business?—Yes; longer than that I may say. Whatever sums of money I have wanted, perhaps, I have turned round to ask her, and I have been unfortunate enough to make great losses, and that is why there is a bad feeling between us. I have had this money for betting purposes that she has been able to get in other ways.

8952. You have been without money or the means of earning money at all since July of this year?—Virtually since the time my cab licence was stopped, and then I had to solely rely on the bookmaking.

8953. Your cab licence was stopped after you had been four times convicted of betting in the street?—Yes.

8954. By your own arrangement and on your own plea of guilty?—Yes.

8955. Do you suggest that was not time to stop it?—I do not know.

8956. But that was the period at which your cab licence was stopped?—If they are going to tell me that was the reason my cab licence was stopped, why was I a fit and proper person to have my cab licence granted when I had been fined for betting?

8957. What name were you convicted under?—The name of Smith.

8958. In what name did you hold your cab licence?—In the name of Platt.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You ask him in what name he was convicted. Are you referring to the four convictions?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Yes, all of them.

(The Witness.) When I was fined at Bow Street I was fined in the name of Platt.

8959. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) How many times have you been convicted for betting?—Five or six times, I should think.

8960. We know of four. You have mentioned another one at Bow Street, that is five. Any more?—I do not think so. I am not positive as to that, because it is a long time to think back.

8961. You have an excellent memory?—For these particular things, but when I go back to that number of years I do not know whether I was convicted four or five times at Bow Street. I know I have been convicted at Bow Street for betting and for assault.

8962. How often have you been convicted for betting?—I think five times.

8963. Would you swear you have not been convicted oftener for betting?—It may be one or two more occasions, but I do not think so. I do not think it was more than five times.

8964. You would not swear it was not seven times?—I cannot positively swear it was not.

8965. Or more than seven?—No, I would not. I do not think it has been the number of times I have stated.

8966. You have mentioned a conviction for an assault. Is that the only conviction for assault?—Yes, I think so.

8967. You are quite clear about that?—Yes.

8968. Have you any other convictions besides those?—I had one for a cab offence when I was driving a cab.

8969. I am not asking you for cab offences, but any other convictions, betting or assault, or anything of that kind, or any other sort except cab offences?—None that I know of.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I am not sure that I follow this. There are the four you told us of, the one for assault, and what else?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) One at Bow Street for betting, but he will not swear that it may not have been one or two more besides those five for betting, and he has sworn that besides those he has had no other convictions except for cab offences.

8970. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Was the conviction at Bow Street for betting before the 29th May, 1903?—Yes.

8971. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Can you tell me when your first conviction for betting was?—Speaking from memory (and I am in hopes that they keep all these records) I think it was 1897.

8972. That is the one at Bow Street?—Yes, I think that is the year.

8973. What name were you convicted in that time?—In the name of Platt.

8974. What Christian name?—Alfred Platt.

8975. Any other Christian name did you give at that time?—I do not know whether I gave the name of Alfred Francis Platt. I may have said Alfred Platt, or I may have said Alfred Francis Platt.

8976. You think it was Platt at that time?—It was. I have a cutting out of a newspaper. As that was the first time that I had been fined, and it was reported, I think I took it out of the paper in this way, in trying to defeat the police there who had succeeded in apprehending me I secreted the papers in the legs of my trousers.

8977. Which papers?—The papers as you say help the police to obtain a conviction—our slips.

8978. What address did you give at Bow Street?—I could not say. It is not needful—I found it was always not needful—to give your correct name and address, and at the same time I never wished, in case of any inquiry, for my wife to be upset.

8979. May I take it you gave a false address at Bow Street?—It is possible.

8980. So that there would be some difficulty in

Mr. A. F. Platt.

22 Oct. 1906.

identifying Platt the bookie, if I may use the expression, with Platt the cab driver, if you gave a false address?—I had no cab during this time.

8981. (Chairman.) When was the licence refused?—In February, 1904.

8982. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) When did you first have it?—I think I had it five or six years. I really was not holding a cab licence at the time I was convicted at Bow Street.

8983. (Chairman.) That was 1897?—I think it was 1897.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) You remember, sir, how I came to ask about that?

(Chairman.) Yes.

8984. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) A false name at Lambeth and a false address too, was it not?—Yes. It was in the immediate vicinity of where I was living.

8985. But a false address?—Not what you would term a false address.

8986. An address which was not your address?—It is a place that I was not sleeping in.

8987. An address that was not your address?—An address I did not reside in, but it was an address where I would occasionally call.

8988. Where Alfred Smith would be entirely unknown?—Yes.

(Mr. Dickinson.) I understand that was the conviction at Lambeth.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) There were four convictions all in the name of Smith, and all with an address not his own address.

(Mr. Dickinson.) What address was it?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) 27, Oakley Street, Lambeth.

(Mr. Dickinson.) The same in all four?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Yes, sir.

(Witness.) The reason why it was not necessary to give a correct address was that it is never verified, but if when I was charged with betting it had been verified, which it was not, of course, I should have had to have given my correct name and address, but I used the name of Smith for the purpose of concealment.

8989. (Chairman.) What address did you give?—I cannot say what address I gave.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) I can give it—27, Oakley Street, Lambeth.

8990. (Chairman.) Is there a 27, Oakley Street, Lambeth?—As far as I know.

8991. You have never been there?—No. I gave perhaps the first street that came in my mind.

8992. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Do you mean that, Platt?—I mean that why I gave the address I did give was that I knew there was no verification.

8993. The Chairman's question is a specific one. Is there such an address as 27, Oakley Street?—I could not tell you the number. I could not tell you what they end at.

8994. Does not your own mother live at 27, Oakley Street?—No.

8995. What?—No.

8996. Where does your mother live?—My mother lives in Tanswell Street.

8997. Do you know anybody who lives at 27, Oakley Street?—I cannot say that I do.

8998. Do you know anybody who ever lived at 27, Oakley Street?—I cannot say that I do.

8999. Did your mother ever live there?—Not to my knowledge.

9000-1. So that this is a purely imaginary address. Is that what you wish the Commission to believe?—Yes.

9002. Purely imaginery?—Yes.

9003. I understand you to say that you have no complaint against those officers other than Deed except that they took your money?—That is right.

9004. And did what you asked them to do for your money?—Yes.

9005. Every one of them?—That is right, only you know Deed saw done to me those two convictions which I thought was wrong for him to do when he had been receiving this money from me.

9006. Which two convictions?—They apprehended two of us the one day—the last time I was convicted; and there was another fine I paid that day for a man who I was going to have to take the betting slips for me while I went away with Deed, as I had heard in some way which I cannot tell now at all, but I had heard, that Deed had made the remark that he was going to be wicked—he would do it on me to-morrow, so I naturally knew I should go down earlier to suit him than I had done previously.

9007. What is your complaint against Soer with regard to this conviction. Which conviction is it you complain of?—I think it was the last time, when I was fined with Mansell.

9008. (Chairman.) You did not quite finish the story, but in answer to Mr. Muir you said you did not keep one appointment because you heard your daughter was ill and a friend went for you?—No, because I had failed to keep the appointment that day that was the reason why he took the man into custody the next day who was taking the betting slips for me, and this young man knew nothing about it. He did not know him.

9009. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) What is that young man's name?—Mansell.

9010. (Chairman.) Soer took a friend of yours into custody?—Yes, and then came back, and as I had not gone down the day previously he took me into custody.

9011. So there were two convictions when you had only arranged, according to your view, for one?—That is right—the day previously.

9012. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Did you ever complain of that to the Commissioner of Police?—I won't be positive whether that was so. The nature of my complaint is that I did not consider those men fit and proper persons to do the duty that I had really complained about.

9013. You did not think policemen who would receive bribes were proper men to watch bookmakers?—That is right.

9014. That was your sole complaint?—Yes.

9015. With regard to the second occasion, have you any other complaint to make against Soer. You have mentioned the one of the 28th August? He arrested you, and, as the Chairman pointed out to you, he had exceeded his authority by making two arrests instead of one, whereas he was only your agent to make one arrest?—Not as my agent, but it was the arrangement that we made in a verbal way.

9016. It was a breach of contract?—No, not a breach of contract. There was no written agreement drawn up.

9017. I understand your complaint about the 28th August. What is your complaint about the 13th October against Soer?—I do not make any complaint about him arresting me in the way that he did. My complaint is that I did not consider they were fit and proper men to go out and do that duty.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) The two convictions refer to the conviction of the two, obviously. That is what he meant.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Quite so. It would be convenient to break off in my cross-examination at this point, sir, if you would allow it.

9018. (Chairman.) That is a very fair suggestion. (To the Witness.) We cannot go on with your cross-examination at 11 o'clock to-morrow, because witnesses in other cases have been summoned, but I will ask you to attend here to-morrow at 2 o'clock. I presume it will not be inconvenient to you to come again?—No, sir.

TENTH DAY.

Tuesday, 23rd October 1906.

PRESENT:

Sir DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, K.C., M.P. (Chairman.)
RUFUS DANIEL ISAACS, Esq., K.C., M.P.
WILLOUGHBY HYETT DICKINSON, Esq., M.P. (Barrister at-Law.)
CHARLES ALGERNON WHITMORE, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law.)
J. W. ST. LAWRANCE LESLIE, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law), (Secretary.)

Mrs. LOUISE BRAHAM, sworn.

Mrs. Louise Braham.
23 Oct. 1906.

9019. (Earl Russell.) Are you the wife of Philip Braham, who is managing clerk to a firm of shipowners?—Yes.

9020. And you live at 7, Culverton Road, Balham?—Yes.

9021. On the 6th June, 1903, had you been out anywhere in the evening?—I had been visiting some friends in South Lambeth Road.

9022. And about what time did you leave them?—As near 12 as possible.

9023. By what method were you going home?—I was going to catch the tramcar at Stockwell, and I was hurrying to catch it.

9024. You were walking along the tramline?—Oh, yes, on the right-hand side.

9025. And on your way there what happened?—A policeman came out of a large gateway and took hold of me. I asked him how he dared do that, and he said, "I will show you what I dare do."

9026. In what way did he take hold of you?—He took hold of my arm in a most offensive manner.

9027. You said, "How dare you do that"?—Yes, and he said, "I will show you what I dare do."

9028. What happened then?—Then he took me up some back streets, I could not say what they were, but any how, before he reached the police station he called another police-constable from the other side of the road.

9029. He arrested you then?—He arrested me in South Lambeth Road, outside this large gateway. I cannot tell you whether it is a church or a chapel, but it is a large gateway. Going from Stockwell it is on the left-hand side.

9030. Was there any more conversation between you at the time?—No, only I asked him going to the station to let my arm go. That was the only remark I made the whole way.

9031. How was he holding your arm?—I prefer telling you in private and not in public. When I say it was in an offensive manner that is sufficiently plain.

9032. (Chairman.) In an indecent manner?—Well, in an indecent manner. He was holding my arm so. (Describing.).

9033. (Earl Russell.) And on the way you met a second police-constable?—Yes, who he called from the other side of the road.

9034. What happened then. Did anything pass between the two?—No, only I asked the other one to leave my arm go. This man was simply holding it, and he was all right.

9035. The second one also took hold of your arm?—Yes, that was the natural thing to do, as the other one asked him to.

9036. Were you struggling at all?—Certainly not, I was too frightened. Why should I struggle? I was simply walking quietly round.

9037. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Will you tell us what he said to the other constable?—He called him—I think that was all, and asked him to help him. I do not know really the words. I was too upset at the time. He simply called him from the other side of the road, and they both walked to the station. They were quite near the place.

9038. (Earl Russell.) Did the other one take hold of your arm?—Yes.

9039. You made no complaint of the way he did it?—Oh, no.

9040. Then when you reached the police station, what happened there?—When I reached the police station there was a man in charge who had a book. Nothing was said before me, but he called the one who was nearest the desk—I could not tell you what he was—to go into another room with him. They said nothing at all before me.

9041. You mean the Inspector with the book—the man who you found at the police station—called out to the constable who had arrested you?—No, the constable called him out of the room to go into the room across there, without saying anything before me.

9042. Do you know now that the constable who arrested you was Police-constable Atkinson, 800 W?—Yes.

9043. (Chairman.) Did the Inspector go out of the room with the constable?—Yes.

9044. (Earl Russell.) Police-constable Atkinson, you say, called the Inspector out of the room?—Yes.

9045. Did he go?—Yes.

9046. How long were they out?—They were out some few minutes.

9047. Where were you meanwhile?—I do not know what you call it—I call it a cage. I do not know what it was.

9048. In the dock?—A place something like this witness-box. I do not know what it was.

9049. When they came back, what happened?—I simply told them that my husband was waiting for me at Balham Station, and asked them to communicate with him.

9050. Was anything said to you why you were there?—No, I do not think the Inspector quite understood why I was there—at least, I am sure he did not.

9051. At any rate, you did not hear any charge read over to you or stated?—No.

9052. Were you asked to say anything to the police, or give any explanation?—No.

9053. But you did say what you were doing?—Of course.

9054. What did you tell the Inspector?—Where I had been.

9055. But what did you tell the Inspector?—I told the Inspector I had been to see some friends in South Lambeth Road, and was hurrying to get my car, which would take me to the Balham Station, where my husband was waiting for me.

Mrs. Louise Braham.

23 Oct. 1906.

9056. Was Police-constable Atkinson there when you said that?—That I could not answer.

9057. You are not sure whether he was in the charge room or not?—No.

9058. Did the Inspector take any note of what you said?—No.

9059. You did not see him take any note?—No.

9060. The police station you went to was Larkhall Lane?—Yes.

9061. Did you ask to see somebody besides the constables?—I asked to see a doctor.

9062. Did you give your name and address, as well as your husband's name and address?—Yes, certainly.

9063. You were taken away from the charge room, and where were you put after that?—I was sitting in the charge room.

9064. You went into the charge room?—Yes, I had a chair.

9065. The same place where you had been put into the dock?—The same room.

9066. And you did not leave that room, did you?—Yes.

9067. Where were you taken to when you left that room?—A room where supper was laid for the constables.

9068. And someone else came to you there?—Yes, a woman, and stayed with me for a little while.

9069. And you were left in charge of the woman?—Yes, only for a little while. I was fully two hours in the room waiting for my husband, from about 1 to 3.

9070. You were only a short time in this room in charge of the woman?—Yes, only a very little while.

9071. After that what happened to you?—I was taken into the room I first went into.

9072. Back into the charge room?—Yes, and there I had a seat until my husband came.

9073. You say that was altogether to the time your husband arrived about two hours from the time you first got into the police station?—I think it was nearer three than two.

9074. Then when your husband came you were allowed to go away on bail?—To go with him. Nothing at all was said to me the whole time.

9075. The next morning you surrendered at Westminster Police Court?—Yes, at 11 o'clock.

9076. Mr. Sheil was the Magistrate?—Yes.

9077. What time was your case called on?—That I could hardly remember, but I think it was somewhere near 12.

9078. Did Police-constable Atkinson give evidence against you?—Yes.

9079. What did he say, can you remember?—Distinctly. He said he was in the South Lambeth Road; he asked me to go on, and I refused to do so; he crossed the road and again asked me, and then he arrested me. From the time he touched my arm it was only a second when he arrested me; it was all in the same time.

9080. Did you understand then what the charge was against you?—No. That was all he said.

9081. That was all he said about your conduct?—Yes.

9082. The Magistrate asked you what you had to say?—Yes.

9083. What did you say then?—I told him exactly everything that had happened.

9084. Was your husband in court, too?—My husband was in court, too.

9085. He gave evidence also?—Yes—after it was all over.

9086. I do not quite know what you mean. He gave evidence in the morning, when your case was called on?—Yes, but of course I was called first, I meant.

9087. Did the Magistrate ask you any questions about your statement after you had made it?—No.

9088. Did he ask you if you made complaint of anyone?—Yes.

9089. What did he say about that?—He simply said it would be inquired into, only the Inspector did not come up in the afternoon. He had gone for his holidays.

9090. Did the Magistrate ask you if you said anything about it before?—I said I complained. I thought complaining was saying exactly what had happened. I understood that that was complaining.

9091. (Chairman.) Did the Magistrate dismiss the case, or what did he say when he finished with your case?—"Dismissed. Not a word against her." That was in the afternoon.

(Earl Russell.) There was an adjournment.

9091*. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) For the Inspector's attendance, who had gone away for his holidays?—Yes.

9092. (Earl Russell.) The Inspector was not there in the morning?—I am not certain whether he was there in the morning. No, he was not there in the morning.

9093. You did not see him in court?—No.

9094. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I thought you said that the Inspector was not there, he had gone away on his holidays, and it was adjourned?—That was in the afternoon when the reason was given.

9095. He was not present in the afternoon—is that it?—Yes; in the meantime he had gone for his holidays.

9096. (Mr. Dickinson.) He was not there in the morning?—No; he was to be called, I believe, in the morning.

9097. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) He was to be called in the morning, and as he was not there it was adjourned to the afternoon?—Yes.

9098. In the afternoon when he ought to have appeared he did not appear because he had gone for his holidays?—Yes.

9099. So he did not appear in the case at all. Is that right?—Yes.

9100. (Chairman.) In the afternoon what did the magistrate say?—I simply went into the witness-box and he simply looked at me, and said "Dismissed—not a word against her." That was all that he said.

9101. (Earl Russell.) That was at three o'clock in the afternoon?—That was at three o'clock in the afternoon.

9102. You did not hear anybody else called?—No, there was nobody else. The court was clear.

9103. And no further evidence was given?—No.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Does that mean that nothing took place from the time of the adjournment?

9104. (Earl Russell.) That is what I understand, that the witness surrendered to her bail, and the Magistrate immediately said "The case is dismissed. There is nothing against you."

(To the Witness.) The Magistrate said nothing more than that?—Nothing more to me.

9105. Then after that your husband made a complaint?—Yes.

9106. Did you attend at the police station?—At the Brixton Police Station.

9107. Do you remember when that was?—I do not remember the date, but I think it was as near as possible a fortnight after it happened.

9108. Did anyone from the police come to see you after the case was dismissed?—Yes.

9109. Who was that?—An Inspector on horseback.

9110. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) That was after your husband had written to the Commissioner?—Yes.

9111. (Earl Russell.) Can you say how long?—Quite a fortnight.

9112. Was it before or after the inquiry at Brixton Police Station?—Before that, because it was on the morning that he came to me to ask me to go to Brixton Police Station in the evening.

9113. It was the same day?—Yes.

9114. What did the Inspector say?—What could he do for me, and I said the only thing I wanted was a public apology. He said that I should never get, and I said that was the only thing I wanted—my character cleared.

9115. On the afternoon of that same day you attended the Brixton Police Station?—Yes, at six in the evening.

9116. With your husband?—Yes.

9117. Was Atkinson, the police-constable who arrested you, there?—Yes.

9118. Was the second constable there?—Yes.

9119. Was the Inspector there who took the charge?—Yes.

9120. And was everything you had to say taken down?—Yes.

9121. And what your husband said, too?—Yes.

9122. Did you hear the statements made by Police-constable Atkinson?—Yes.

9123. And by the second police-constable, and the Inspector?—Yes, but they had nothing to say; it was only the one.

9124. Did you hear any statement made by him at all or read over to him or read over to you?—No; only this one constable.

9125. You do not remember any statement by the Inspector in charge being read over to you?—No.

9126. Was anything said to you at that inquiry about the result? I suppose nothing was said to you about it?—No, not there.

9127. Did you hear anything more after that?—No.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) May I say, Sir, I am in a difficulty, because we only had notice of this case, I understand, yesterday, and the solicitor instructing me has got reports that he was only able to hand me as I came into this building. Of course, I can ask some questions, but I would ask that a further opportunity should be given to us, if it is possible to do so, of knowing what cases are coming on, in order that we may be really prepared. It places us in a great difficulty.

(Chairman.) I can understand your personal difficulty in the matter, but I do not see how there can be any substantial difficulty in dealing with this case. What happened to the constable?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I understand from these reports that he was dealt with by the Commissioner.

(Chairman.) Was he dismissed?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I really do not know yet. I have not got to the end of the reports, but my client tells me that he was dealt with by the Commissioner. What the form of dealing with him was I have not arrived at yet, but I can deal with it, as all the reports are before me. As to asking this lady any questions, I am in a difficulty. There are a few questions I should like to ask, but, with submission, it would seem to be easy to give us two days' notice of a case instead of one. If the cases are in the possession of the Secretary of the Commission I would ask that we have more than one day's notice.

(Chairman.) There is very considerable difficulty in getting the witnesses together, I understand.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) If the Commission are in possession of any number of cases that are going to be brought before them, if they will only intimate them to us, whether they eventually come before them or not, we can get the materials.

(Chairman.) I thought you had more than one day's notice of this case?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) No; I am told we were informed yesterday when it was mentioned in court.

(Chairman.) There is not the least reason why your clients should be prejudiced in any way. If you do not want to cross-examine now, I daresay Mrs. Braham will come here again.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I do not want to inconvenience the lady, and may I take this course? I should like to ask a few questions on the materials which are in my possession, and if it is really necessary I should ask that she should come back.

(Chairman.) Certainly.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I do not desire to make any complaint, but I do ask for fuller facilities than have hitherto been accorded to us.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It is only in respect to this case that you have been placed in any difficulty. I thought every facility had been given to you, and every adjournment has been given you that you have applied for hitherto.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I was not here yesterday, but I had no notion personally that Platt was coming before the Commission yesterday.

(Chairman.) There is no machinery provided in the case of a Royal Commission for the Commissioners getting up or preparing the case. Mr. Platt came forward and voluntarily tendered his evidence, and we have taken it.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I am quite aware of that; but I was here on Thursday, and I understood then that you were going to give Platt notice when you desired him to come again. Personally I did not hear that he was coming yesterday or know of it. I am told there is another case of Andrews to be gone into to-day, of which notice was only given yesterday. I say again I am not here to make a complaint; I am only asking for further facilities if it is in the power of the Commissioners to give them.

(Chairman.) We will take the evidence of Mrs. Braham, and if you are not ready to go on we will give you a further opportunity of cross-examining her, but I understand that in this case there ought to be no difficulty at all.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I quite understand you are willing to give further facilities if I ask for them in this particular case. I have already said there are a few questions I should like to ask the lady on the materials I have been able to look at.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) As I understand, except what you have said with reference to Platt's case, you have had ample notice of every case except the ones which we are going to deal with this morning, as to which you are making a specific statement. With regard to Platt's case there was an application for an adjournment, which was granted you at once. The only difficulty that has arisen apparently is that you personally do not seem to have understood that Platt's case was to be gone into yesterday if we got to it. I do not think there ought to be any question—not of any grievance, because you have not made one.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I am making no grievance. I am merely asking with regard to any further cases which are to be brought forward that we may have a little more notice than was given us with regard to these two.

(Chairman.) You will have what notice is possible, but Mr. Muir cross-examined Platt yesterday, and at twenty minutes past four he said he was not prepared to go on with the cross-examination further then, and asked if he might break off, and we said yes.

9128. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I have no grievance, and I do not want to start any grievance. I am only asking in certain events to have a little further opportunity of inquiring into the cases. (To the Witness.) I see by the reports with which I have been furnished that you did give evidence before the Magistrate?—Exactly—of what was done.

9129. And you afterwards made a statement, did you not, when the Inspector asked you to come to the police station in order that your statement might be taken some time later?—Yes, at Brixton.

9130. The name of the constable who arrested you was Atkinson?—Yes.

9131. And the other constable who came up and helped take you to the station was named Allen?—I do not remember his name, but I have no complaint to make against him—certainly not.

9132. And I see from something that your husband wrote you have no complaint to make against the police generally?—Certainly not.

9133. But only against this particular constable?—Certainly.

9134. Would you mind telling me exactly what it was that took place between you and Atkinson. It was in the South Lambeth Road, was it not?—Yes.

9135. Were you walking on the south side of the road?—If you are going from Stockwell it is on the left-hand side.

9136. Was Atkinson on the same side?—Yes, inside a large gateway.

9137. Standing in a gateway?—He was standing inside a gateway with another man.

Mrs. Louise Braham.

23 Oct. 1906.

9138. Was the other man in the gateway?—Yes. with him. They both came out.

9139. Was the other man a policeman?—No, he was a short man with a light brown suit.

9140. Do you know who he was?—No, because the policeman said something to him and he went. I said to this man, "You see this constable has touched me, will you come to the station?" But the constable said something to him, I do not know what it was, and he went away.

9141. Had you passed the gateway before Atkinson came out or not?—I was passing it.

9142. Then what happened?—He took hold of me.

9143. Do you mean that he walked out of the gateway and took hold of you?—Yes.

9144. Did he take hold of you by the arm?—Yes.

9145. It was by the arm?—Yes.

9146. Did he touch your neck at all, or was it here, he caught hold of you. (Pointing on the arm near the shoulder)?—Yes.

9147. Did he touch your neck at all?—He came out with a rush at me, and I could not remember whether he touched my neck. Anyhow, I looked at him and said, "How dare you do such a thing?" and he took me away.

9148. Did he take hold of you or only touch you?—He took hold of me when he came out of the gateway.

9149. Did you think then that he was arresting you for behaving improperly?—I did not know he was arresting me.

9150. Then you said, "How dare you take hold of me"?—Yes.

9151. What did he say then?—"I will show you what I dare do," and he took me.

9152. And then?—Then we went to the police station. Whichever road it was we were on the left-hand side, and he called a constable off the right-hand side.

9153. Did he take hold of you by the arm to go to the police station?—Yes, and held my arm the whole way.

9154. Would that be your right arm or left arm?—My left arm.

9155. Did any number of people collect?—No, there was no one there.

9156. On the way did he call another constable?—Yes, we were on the left-hand side of the road, and he called a constable from the right. He came over and took hold of this arm and went to the station.

9157. Could you suggest why he did that?—No, I cannot. I have no idea.

9158. Were you going quite quietly?—Of course.

9159. The other man came and he took hold of your right arm?—Yes.

9160. You have no complaint to make against him at all?—No, not at all, nor of anyone at the police station. They were all exceedingly nice there.

9161. Your husband, in a letter which I have partially read, said that the Inspector behaved in a very gentlemanly way, or words to that effect?—Decidedly he did.

9162. You have no complaint to make at all of what took place in the police station?—No, not at all.

9163. You say that the Inspector and the constable went into another room?—Yes.

9164. Did you hear the constable make a charge against you of being drunk and disorderly?—No.

9165. Did you ask that a doctor might be sent for?—I did.

9166. And was that in order that he might say that you were not drunk?—Certainly not. I had no idea of such a thing.

9167. Why did you want a doctor?—Simply because I wanted a man of higher education who would be able to understand and do something.

9168. I suggest that the constable made a charge against you of being drunk and disorderly, and that you applied to the Inspector to send for a doctor to say you were not drunk?—That is an untruth. He did not say a word before me. He went out of the room. What they said there, of course, I cannot say.

9169. It is a fact, is it not, that he did not take any charge of being drunk?—Yes.

9170. And the charge which he entered against you was of being disorderly?—That was what was said in court, but I knew nothing about the charge.

9171. Was it not read over to you?—No; nothing was said to me.

9172. At that time you were rather excited?—I was crying, naturally, but not excited.

9173. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You said just now to the witness: "The fact is that he did not take the charge." Did you ever know that you were charged, or that a charge had been made against you of being drunk?—Certainly not.

9174. Have you ever heard of it before till to-day?—No.

9175. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I am suggesting to you what I gather from these reports, and I think I am accurate, that what the constable charged you with was being drunk and disorderly; and it was then, when you heard the word "drunk," that you asked for a doctor to be sent for?—I did not hear such a word.

9176. The Inspector said you were not drunk, and refused to take the charge, and the charge was entered against you of being disorderly?—The Inspector was exceedingly kind. He said nothing at all to me, but gave me a chair and told me to go into the other room, and then he gave me a chair afterwards in the other place. If one is speaking the truth one cannot go wrong.

9177. That is very true. I have a report here of what you said before the Magistrate. This is a report of the case which your husband sent to the Commissioner, and which he said was substantially accurate except in one particular.

(Earl Russell.) Which letter of Mr. Braham's is this enclosed in?

9178. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) It is enclosed in the letter of 9th June: "Police-constable Atkinson deposed that at 12.15 the accused, proceeding along the pavement, stopped opposite to him. He moved on one side, and then she said 'Why do you interfere with me?' He replied 'You had better go on!' The defendant then alleged that he had assaulted her, and became very excited, shouting, and refusing to go. He took her into custody, and on the way to the station she said she was sorry, and asked him to let her go?"—The whole thing is an untruth.

9179. Is that what Mr. Atkinson said at the police-court?—Yes.

9180. "Police-constable 749 W said that he met the last witness bringing the accused along Larkhall Lane. When she saw witness she asked him to let her go. She appeared as if she did not wish to go to the station." Is that what the second constable said—right or wrong?—Yes.

9181. Then you said the police-constable's story was a fabrication: "She had been to see some friends in South Lambeth-road, and remained somewhat later than she thought. She was making her way as quickly as she could to get to her home at Balham, when the policeman looked at her and took hold of her shoulder in a most offensive way. When she indignantly resented the insult, he said 'I will show you!' and then he took her up." That is the evidence you gave, and that is substantially correct?—Yes.

9182. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Does not this follow on in your copy:—"Mr. Shiel: Did you complain to the Inspector?" I think that had better be read.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes. "Mr. Shiel: Did you complain to the Inspector?—Yes, I did. The constable said she made no complaint." There appears to be a difference of recollection between you and the officers. I suggest to you that at the station you did not make any complaint?—I thought I complained when I told them where I had been and what happened on the way from there.

(Chairman.) Mr. Braham is here, is he not?

9183. (Earl Russell.) Yes. (To the Witness.) This is a report from the "Sun" of June 10th—that is the day your case was heard. Is this correct, and is this what you said at the police station: "One of my friends was ill, so I stayed with her some time, leaving at 12 o'clock." One of your friends was ill?—Very ill—an old lady.

9184. "I saw the car which I was going to catch to take me home. I was hurrying along the pavement when a policeman suddenly caught hold of my shoulder. He appeared to me to have sprung out of the gateway"?—Decidedly.

9185. You stated that to the Magistrate?—Yes.

9186. Then did you say this: "At the police station she complained to the Inspector, and asked to see a doctor. 'I wanted to see someone in a more responsible position,' she explained"?—I did say that at the station.

9187. (Chairman.) I understand you to say the constable sprang out. Do you mean by that that he jumped out or walked rapidly?—I could not tell you whether he walked rapidly or not, but he came out of the gateway very quickly.

9188. He came suddenly upon you?—He came suddenly upon me as I was passing the gateway.

9189. I see that in your evidence you said that he behaved in an offensive way. Do you mean that he did something more than seize you by the arm?—He held my arm down by the side of me in a way that was not necessary.

(Earl Russell.) I am acquainted with the actual facts of the case; but the witness could hardly be expected to go into these details before such a large assembly.

9190. (Chairman.) Do you suggest that he did not simply take hold of your arm as if to arrest you?—No.

9191. But he took hold of your arm, and used your arm in such a way as to be indecent and offensive?—Yes.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) There is no suggestion of that kind in these documents.

(Witness.) I said "In a most offensive manner," which should be sufficient.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) The lady has said that he took hold of her in an offensive manner. Stated generally, any lady might say she was taken hold of roughly by a constable; but there was no charge brought before the Magistrate of anything approaching an act of indecency, otherwise, no doubt, that would have been investigated separately.

9192. (Chairman.) You say you went to the police station at Brixton?—Yes.

9193. Did your husband write down something for you there?—No; my husband wrote nothing.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) She wrote her own statement.

9194. (Chairman.) Did you ever write any note as to the offensive conduct?—No; he took hold of my arm in a most offensive manner.

9195. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) How long were you in the dock at the police station?—Not many minutes, only during the time they went into the other room and came back again.

9196. You were placed in the dock when you got there?—Yes.

9197. Then it was Atkinson who went into the other room?—Yes.

9198. And was away some few minutes?—Yes.

9199. Then he came back with the Inspector?—Yes.

9200. Then did the Inspector order you to be released from the dock?—Yes.

9201. And gave you a chair?—No. I went into the officers' room, as I believe it was, but anyhow, there was a cloth on the table. Then I was given a chair in the first room.

9202. How long have you been married?—Twenty-two years.

9203. Have you any children?—Yes, three, two sons and a daughter.

9204. How long have you lived at the address which you gave at the police station?—We had been a year there then.

9205. Had you lived in the neighbourhood before?—Oh, yes.

9206. For many years?—Yes.

9207. But you had moved, and had been living only for a year in this new house which was the address you gave?—Yes.

9208. That was quite close to where you had lived before?—Yes.

9209. How did your husband know you were at the police station?—Because I suffered terribly with my heart, and I also have fainting fits, and he telephoned, as I was so late, to find out where I was. I am suffering now through standing here.

9210. (Mr. Dickinson.) Did Inspector Billson ask you whether you had stopped a man?—No.

9211. I have here a statement which says that you denied having stopped a man, but said that several men had looked at you as you passed, which you considered offensive. Do you remember that conversation at the police station at all?—I cannot remember it, because it did not happen.

9212. It did not happen?—Certainly not.

9213. You told us just now that there was a man who came out with the police-constable and that you spoke to him. Can you remember what you said to him?—Yes. I said, "You see this constable is touching me, will you come to the police-station and see why he is doing it?"

9214. Did he give you no answer at all?—No, the policeman spoke to him at once, and he went. There was not a soul in the street.

9215. You did not hear what the constable said to him?—No, I did not.

9216. (Mr. Eldon Banks.) May I ask another question, sir, by your permission? (To the Witness.) Did you tell your husband, after you had left the police station, all the details of what had taken place between Constable Atkinson and yourself?—No. I said that he had taken hold of me in a most offensive manner, and it is a most delicate thing to have to say before anyone in court.

9217. I am not pressing you, but did you tell your husband in private the details?—Yes.

9218. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Earl Russell has shown me the lady's statement, and what she complains of. I do not in the least want it to be made public, but I should ask the Commissioners to see it, because I want to found a question upon it. (To the Witness.) Are you quite sure you told your husband the details?—Yes, certainly.

9219. You are quite sure of it?—Yes.

9220. Will you look at the statement that I have seen and let me know if that is the complaint?——

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Is that the note at the end of the letter to the Home Secretary?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I do not know, Sir.

(Earl Russell handed the document to the Witness.)

(Witness.) Yes, that is quite right.

9221. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Let me ask you a question upon this. This took place on the 6th June, did it not?—I rather fancy it was the 8th June, but I am not certain.

9222. Did you tell your husband immediately after you got home the details of what had happened?—Yes.

9223. Including the details that appear on that paper you have seen?—Yes.

9224. I should like to call your attention to this: Here is a letter of the 9th June, which your husband wrote to the Chief Commissioner, "Herewith I beg to hand you the report of a case heard before Mr. Shiel at the Westminster Police Court, Saturday last. The facts are shortly these: My wife, who is tall and good-looking, had left some friends' house in the South Lambeth Road shortly after 12 on the night of Friday, and was hurrying along to catch a car in order to meet me at Balham Station, when a constable suddenly stopped in front of her and placed his arm on her neck in a most offensive manner. She was naturally indignant, and demanded his number. He replied that she had evidently been drinking, and he should 'lock her up,' to which my wife replied, 'You dare not.' 'Oh, daren't I,' said the constable, and he took her by the arm and into the road to the Larkhall Road Station at Clapham, calling the assistance of another constable on the way, although my wife accompanied him quietly. On the whole route the first constable was pinching her arm in a most rude manner." Of course, your husband knew nothing about this matter except what you had told him?—Yes.

9225. And that is what he writes on the 9th. Now, the next passage I will ask you about is this: "Arrived at the station, my wife was charged with 'Disorderly conduct' alone, and through the kindness of the Inspector in charge was allowed to sit in the waiting room until I discovered her whereabouts." Did you tell your husband that you were charged with disorderly conduct alone?—I did not know what I was charged with.

9226. How did he know it unless you told him?—Perhaps he asked the Inspector there. I do not know.

(Chairman.) This was written after the police court proceedings.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I was only asking the lady when she told her husband.

(Chairman.) He knew all about what the charge was by that time.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) That may be the explanation, but my object in reading this passage was to read the husband's account of the constable's behaviour.

(Chairman.) I quite follow that part of your cross-examination.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I have not got the dates of the various incidents in my mind.

Mr. PHILIP BRAHAM, sworn.

Mr. Philip Braham.

(The Witness.) May I ask, sir, as I have come forward on public grounds, that the Press should suppress our names and addresses. I should be very glad if that could be done. I do not see any reason why they should be made public after this lapse of time.

(Chairman.) It is a pity you did not ask Earl Russell to make that request earlier.

(The Witness.) I did not know the procedure.

(Chairman.) I see from the papers that Mr. Eldon Bankes has handed up that there were reports in the papers in 1903.

(The Witness.) That is three years ago.

(Chairman.) Surely, then, it can do no harm to you now. You are ready and willing to come forward?

(The Witness.) Very often people do not want these unpleasant things raked up. Of course, sir, I am in your hands.

(Chairman.) That I quite understand, and I need not say the Commission are indebted to you and Mrs. Braham for coming forward, whatever view they may take of the case. If I thought that any harm could come to you at all at this stage from your names being made public I would make an appeal to the Press present, but I do not see, as the matter has been fully reported in the papers before, how it can possibly injure you in any way.

(The Witness.) Very well, sir, I will be guided by you.

9227. (Earl Russell.) You are managing clerk to a firm of ship owners, and you live at the address given by your wife, with your wife and family?—Yes.

9228. Do you remember the night of the 6th June, 1903?—If the 6th of June was a Friday, that was the date.

9229. You were waiting at Balham Station for Mrs. Braham?—Yes, waiting for the car.

9230. You knew where Mrs. Braham was that night?—I knew where she had gone.

9231. You were expecting her to meet you?—I was expecting her to meet me.

9232. She did not come, we know, when you expected her?—No.

9233. What did you do then?—I waited till the last car had come, and then, getting anxious, as I knew she had a weak heart, I was afraid something had happened. I asked a policeman which was the nearest police station, and he told me Cavendish Road. I went down to Cavendish Road with the intention of asking them to telephone to the various hospitals, because my wife is subject to faints.

9234. You got to Cavendish Road, and you started doing that?—I spoke to the Inspector there and asked him to do it. He said to me "We cannot do this; we cannot telephone." I said "Well, I think my wife is taken ill, and I think you might do it." He did not do it.

9235. Anyhow, did you learn anything about her while you were there?—Yes, just before I was leaving at that very moment a message came through on the telephone. The Inspector called me back as I was going out, and these are the words he said: "Your wife is detained at Larkhall Police Station for disorderly conduct"—not drunk and disorderly, but disorderly. That was the charge. That is how I knew it.

9236. You then went to the station?—I then took a cab and went down to the station, and found her there.

9237. And you went bail for her?—Yes, I bailed her out, and took her away.

9238. What condition was your wife in when you found her?—Very excited—crying and very nervous, but otherwise—if you mean to imply it—perfectly sober.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Nobody suggests that she was not.

(The Witness.) I thought Mr. Bankes did suggest it.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) No, pardon me.

(The Witness.) Then I beg your pardon.

9239. (Earl Russell.) Were you told anything about what the charge was?—No, nothing at all.

9240. You were not shown the charge sheet?—The Inspector gave me a book to sign, the bail book, but I never read anything, and I signed it. The Inspector said "£2," and I said "I will give it to you now," but he would not take it. I never read anything at all.

9241. Then you were told you would have to attend the police court the next morning with your wife?—Yes.

9242. When you left did your wife make a statement to you as to what happened?—You can understand at a time like that, when a person is very excited, and naturally I was very annoyed, that you do not appreciate the words as put to you. She told me that this constable had taken hold of her neck, which I understood to be in an offensive manner.

9243. She told you what had happened to her when you went home?—She told me the general details.

9244. Next day were you there when the case came before the Magistrate?—Yes.

9245. And on the adjournment when he dismissed it?—Yes.

9246. Did you make any application to the magistrate after the case was over?—Yes, I said "I wish to have a summons against the constable for perjury and assault. Can you grant it me, or shall I go to the Commissioner?" He said, "Go to the Commissioner."

9247. Then you wrote some letters?—Yes, I wrote to the Home Office and the Commissioner.

9248. The first letter was the 9th June?—Yes, that would be the Monday.

9249. I need not read again the part that Mr. Bankes has read to you, but I will go on from there: "It was then about 2 o'clock, when I signed the necessary recognisance and took my wife away in a cab to her home. We were ordered to attend the police court at 10 o'clock the next morning, which we did—the magistrate arrived about 11, and our case came on about 11.30. The first constable, on oath, failed to establish any 'disorderly conduct.'" Did you hear anything about a charge of drunkenness at the police court?—No.

9250. Or at the police station the night before?—No, nothing was said at the police station. Not a word was said at the police station, and certainly not at the court.

9251. "Yet in spite of my offering to produce witnesses to respectability we were ordered to return at 3 o'clock. On our return, the Magistrate dismissed the charge, remarking, 'There is nothing against her.'" Do I understand from that that there was no further evidence taken when you came on again in the afternoon?—When we went back in the afternoon we were a little late, and the Magistrate had left the Court House, but was in the precincts of the building. The Clerk or somebody there, as far as I could see, did not want us to see the Magistrate, but another Clerk took a great interest in us and said, "Oh, yes, I will call him back. You wait." After he had come back the Magistrate came into court, and my wife went into the box again, and all that the Magistrate said to her was: "The charge is dismissed. There is nothing against her."

9252. There was no further evidence given of any sort or kind?—Not to my recollection.

9253. No complaint made as to the action of the policeman at that stage?—Certainly not.

9254. At the hearing in the morning was the Inspector who took the charge there?—That I could not say. I should not know the Inspector myself, so I could not tell you.

9255. Did you make any inquiries afterwards as to what the Inspector had done that morning?—No. We were simply told in court by somebody. I suppose they called for the Inspector and somebody answered, I could not say who, "He has gone for his holidays," and which seemed to me rather strange that a man should go for his holidays between 3 o'clock at night and 10 the next morning without anybody knowing it. That occurred to me to be strange at the time, but I have since heard that is frequent.

9256. You sent a copy of that same letter to the Home Office that you sent to the Chief Commissioner?—Yes, an identical copy.

9257. In sending it you sent this covering letter with a copy of your letter to the Chief Commissioner. There is no date upon this, and it is written to Mr. Akers-Douglas, Secretary of State for the Home Department: "Sir, herewith I beg to hand you copy of a letter I have addressed to the Chief Commissioner of Police with respect to the wrongful arrest of my wife, and I shall be obliged if you will kindly have full inquiry made into the case. I may say that, thanks to the publicity given to the matter by the Press, which clearly exonerates my wife in the eyes of the world, I have no desire to instigate any vindictive proceedings, but I most certainly demand that the constable in fault be suitably punished and a public apology given to my wife. Awaiting the honour of your reply, I beg to remain, Sir, your obedient servant, P. Braham." It was after you had written those letters that they held an inquiry at Brixton Police Station, was it not?—Yes.

9258. Were you at home when the mounted Inspector called on the morning of the inquiry?—I was not actually at home, but I met him coming up the road as I was leaving home.

9259. You did not hear any conversation?—No, I was not at home.

9260. You went to this inquiry at Brixton Station?—Yes.

9261. Did you hear the statement that Atkinson made?—I heard everything.

9262. Was the statement of Atkinson reduced to writing and read over to you?—The Commissioner—I do not know which one it was—who was there took everything down in writing, and he wrote very slowly and pulled us up sometimes, but I know he took every word, because I corrected him several times.

9263. What I asked you was whether, after Atkinson's statement was written down, it was read over to you?—As far as my recollection goes, the whole statement was not read over to us, because I said, "Can I have a copy of this?" and I think had it been read over I should not have asked for a copy. Taking down the statement a portion would be read as one goes on, but I do not think the whole of it was read out at the end at all.

(Mr. Dickinson.) Who was presiding at this inquiry?

(Earl Russell.) I have no copy of any of these documents.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I am not sure whether it was the Superintendent or the Commissioner, but I will inquire.

9264. (Earl Russell.) Do you remember what Atkinson said in his statement?—He had leading questions put to him by the Commissioner, and his answers were just practically Yes or No.

9265. Was anything said then about your wife being drunk at all?—No, not a word.

9266. Did you hear a statement made by the Night Inspector in charge of the police station?—At this inquiry do you mean?

9267. Yes?—No, not anything vital.

9268. But the man who took the charge was there?—So my wife tells me. I did not know him, but she said, "That is the Inspector."

9269. Did you hear him make any statement?—No, as far as I recollect he did not say anything. He seemed to have nothing to say.

9270. Then it was after that inquiry that you received a letter from New Scotland Yard?—Yes.

9271. 23rd June, 1903: "Sir, with reference to your letters of the 9th and 18th instant, I am directed by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to acquaint you that he has previously made every possible inquiry, which has, however, failed to throw any fresh light upon the case. It is unfortunate that the Inspector who took the charge, and whose testimony the Magistrate required, should have absented himself on leave instead of being present in court when the case was called on for hearing. In view of the Magistrate's decision in the case, the Commissioner feels it incumbent on him to express his regret for any inconvenience that may have been caused to you or Mrs. Braham by police action, I am, Sir, your obedient servant, Lewis J. Fry, Acting Chief Clerk." That represents the apology you got?—The so-called apology, but had I read that letter in the light I look upon it now I should have called it an insult instead of an apology.

9272. Was anything written to you about anything being done to the constable?—No, we never heard anything more.

9273. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) After the hearing at the police court you wrote to the Chief Commissioner on the 9th June?—Yes, I wrote him a report of what had taken place.

9274. And in the letter you ask: "I shall therefore be obliged if you will be good enough to have a full inquiry made into the case, as it is intolerable that respectable people should be exposed to malicious prosecution on the part of the police"?—Those are the identical words.

9275. That is what you wanted, a full inquiry by the Commissioner?—Yes, that was it.

9276. Upon that you were asked to attend at the police station, and your wife's evidence was taken, and the evidence of the constable was taken?—Yes, all parties concerned were there.

9277. You have no complaint to make about that, have you. The person in charge of that seemed desirous, did he not, of getting a full statement from everybody?—Do you mean the Commissioner?

9278. It was not the Commissioner. I am told it was Acting-Superintendent Taylor?—It was conducted in a fair manner. The only thing I say was that leading questions were put and we were not allowed to examine the witnesses, otherwise it was conducted fairly.

9279. You thought it was conducted fairly?—Certainly.

9280. You made no complaint then and do not now as to the way that inquiry was conducted?—With that reservation that we should have been allowed an opportunity of examining the witnesses.

9281. Did you ask permission to ask questions?—I think I began to ask something, and I was politely shut up, as far as I recollect.

9282. Do you remember?—Yes. My nature is rather aggressive, and I should certainly begin to ask questions.

9283. Now you are arguing about your nature, but I am asking about your recollection?—My recollection is that I began to ask one or two questions, and when I found I was not allowed to, I desisted.

Mr. Philip Braham.

23 Oct. 1906.

9284. Will you swear you did, or is it only your impression?—I will not swear, but it is my strong impression.

9285. And I suppose your impression is somewhat flavoured by your argumentative disposition?—To a great extent.

9286. After that inquiry was held you wrote on the 18th June to the Chief Commissioner:— "Sir,—With reference to my letter of the 9th instant, my wife received a visit on the 16th from an official whom we understood represented both yourself and the Home Office, and he expressed his regrets at the occurrence, requesting our attendance the same evening at the Brixton Station." I suppose you had been told that by your wife?—My wife told me when I came home.

9287. Your wife has told us to-day that this gentleman came and he said that the one thing he would not do was to express his regret.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) No, that is not quite accurate. Was it not that she said she wanted a public apology, and he said, "That is a thing you will never get"?

9287*. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Then I misunderstood the lady. However, this correctly represents what your wife told you, does it, this gentleman "Expressed his regrets at the occurrence, requesting our attendance the same evening at the Brixton Station. We accordingly attended at that station, when we were confronted with the constable and the various police officers interested in the case, and both my wife's and the officers' evidence was taken by the official in charge. This evidence was practically the same as was given before the Magistrate, and the constable again failed to establish any charge whatever against my wife. I have seen my solicitor, and whilst I am perfectly satisfied as to our legal position in the matter, I would gladly (taking into consideration the publicity given to the case by the public Press, which clearly exonerates my wife from any imputation against her character), avoid the necessity of taking proceedings against the constable in fault. I shall be glad, therefore, to hear from you what steps you propose to take in the matter to protect the public against any repetition of such annoyance in the future, which is my sole object in pursuing the matter further. Please understand that we have no cause for complaint against the Police Force in general." That is so, is it not?—Yes.

9288. Your complaint is against the particular constable?—Certainly; it is not as a body; it is only this particular man.

9289. "Owing, however, to the anxiety and worry my wife has suffered, I find it necessary to take her abroad for a while, and I shall be glad, therefore, to have your reply before we leave within the next few days. I take it you have no objection to my publishing this letter. Awaiting the honour of your reply." Then the answer was the one that Earl Russell has read, and I do not think I need read that again, in which "The Commissioner feels it incumbent on him to express his regret for any inconvenience that may have been caused to you or Mrs. Braham by Police action." The matter closed by your letter of the 25th:—"Sir,—I am in receipt of your letter of 23rd inst., and am perfectly willing to accept the apology offered to my wife and myself, and I feel sure I can now safely leave the matter in the Chief Commissioner's hands to deal suitably with the constable at fault," and there the matter rested, as far as you were concerned?—There the matter ended.

(Mr. Dickinson.) Will you kindly tell me, Mr. Bankes, with regard to these notes on pages 32 and 33 of the document before us, whose initials they are. I suppose "E. R. H." means Sir Edward Henry?

(Mr. Eldon. Bankes.) Yes.

(Mr. Dickinson.) The second, I suppose, is addressed to Major Wodehouse, and signed by Sir Edward?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Initialled by the Commissioner. I have no doubt they are his notes of instructions to those who had to deal with the matter.

(Mr. Dickinson.) Then at the bottom of page 33 what do letters "A.C.A." mean, and who is that document signed by?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) That is Major Wodehouse, and "A.C.A." stands for Assistant Commissioner Administrative.

(Mr. Dickinson.) Who is that signed by "W. E. G."?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Major Gilbert, one of the Chief Constables.

(Mr. Dickinson.) And the next one?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) "F. W" would be Major Wodehouse.

(Mr. Dickinson.) What about these three subsequent ones: "Please see decision of Commission carried out"?

(Mr. Eldon. Bankes.) That is Major Gilbert.

(Mr. Dickinson.) There is no decision of the Commissioner here. On page 34 there is a recommendation that he should be strictly cautioned, and that was recommended by Major Wodehouse.

(Chairman.) I understand it is more than a recommendation. That is the final decision.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes.

(Mr. Dickinson.) The result of Major Wodehouse's inquiry.

(Chairman.) "Inspector Billson clearly failed to use proper discretion in dealing with the charge, and showed negligence in not attending the court. He will be strictly cautioned. The police-constable may, in the first instance, have been guilty of an error of judgment only, but his subsequent action in preferring a charge of drunkenness against a sober person looks as though he sought to make the case stronger. He will also be strictly cautioned. Mr. Henry to see."

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Then Mr. Henry does see, because he initials it, "E. R. H., 2/7/06."

(Chairman.) That is confirming the decision arrived at.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes.

(Mr. Dickinson.) That, I presume, is the interview the Chief Commissioner had with this constable.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes) No, it is Major Wodehouse's memorandum.

(Mr. Dickinson.) Then what is the signature "E. R. H." immediately underneath?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) It is the Chief Commissioner's signature indicating that he has seen Major Wodehouse's report, and approves of it.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I do not follow this. Major Wodehouse's decision is, according to the copy you have given us, the 1st July, 1903, and the initials of "E. R. H.," as I follow it, are the 2nd July, 1906

(Chairman.) It is here, "2/7/06," and underneath is "Superintendent Doyle,—Please forward decision of Commissioner, and carry out."

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) We must look at the original. It must be a mistake.

(Chairman.) It may be a mere clerical error, because all the other dates are 1903 on that same page.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I should imagine it is, but I want it cleared up.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Sir Edward Henry did not put the year. He only put the figures, "2/7/."

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) And somebody has added the "06."

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes.

(Mr. Dickinson.) On the 3rd July, "W. E. G.," that is, Major Gilbert, instructed Superintendent Doyle to see that the decision of the Commissioner is carried out. That decision we have not seen.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) The decision of the Commissioner is that the constable should be strictly cautioned. Major Wodehouse in his memorandum gave his reasons for thinking that the charge against the constable was a serious one, and he says he is to be strictly cautioned. Then he says Mr. Henry is to see that.

(Mr. Dickinson.) Does that mean Mr. Henry is to see the man, or see the letters?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) No, he is to see the recommendation.

(Mr. Dickinson.) Then Mr. Henry sees the recommendation, and signs it with his approval. Then Major Gilbert instructs Superintendent Doyle to caution him.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That is not only as to the constable, but that applies equally to the Inspector, does it not? I do not see why it is limited to the constable.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) No; I think it applies to both.

(Mr. Dickinson.) Then what is the next one, "Report submitted"?

(Chairman.) That is, Superintendent Doyle's report is submitted, showing that he had carried out the decision of the Commissioner.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I think that is what that means—the 4th July.

(Mr. Dickinson.) Then Major Gilbert says that it is registered.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I suppose that means that he has had submitted to him the memorandum of Superintendent Doyle, showing him that it has been done.

(Mr. Dickinson.) Then what are the initials "P.A."

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) "Put away." Then Superintendent Doyle's report is on page 39, and is dated the 4th July, 1903: "Referring to attached, I beg to report having strictly cautioned Inspector Billson and Police-constable 800 W. Atkinson, as directed."

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That is the report which was submitted, I suppose.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) No doubt.

(Mr. Dickinson.) Doyle being the Superintendent of that Division.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Yes.

(Earl Russell.) Those are all my witnesses. May I ask to be allowed to have a copy of those documents before any police witnesses are called? I should like to have them before me.

(Chairman.) I will hand you my copy.

(Mr. Dickinson.) Have you the notes of the inquiry at Brixton Station?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) The statements of the witnesses are before you. It was not an inquiry of the same nature. At page 23 you will find the Inspector's report, and on page 25 there is the lady's statement.

(Chairman.) We do not want to read this at the present moment, but whatever statements were taken down are contained in the book which has been handed to us.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) They are.

(Mr. Whitmore.) It is a full report of the proceedings.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Apparently.

(Mr. Dickinson.) There is no note of what was said verbally at that inquiry.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Yes; on page 25 there is the lady's statement and the questions which the constable put to her.

(Mr. Dickinson.) That is all.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I do not see the constable's statement at the moment.

(Mr. Dickinson.) What I want is what the police constable said when he appeared before Major Wodehouse. He said nothing, according to this.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I have asked for information about that.

Mr. Philip Braham.

23 Oct. 1906

(Chairman.) Was the inquiry at Brixton before Major Wodehouse?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) No; it was before Superintendent Taylor.

(Chairman.) Did he take notes, and get them signed by the various witnesses?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I cannot tell you.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Is the constable going to be called?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I should like to ask your direction about this, sir. I am not defending the action of the constable, because he has been severely reprimanded for what he did. If you wish to know what course the Commissioner took or caused to be taken upon that, I will give you every information in my power, but of course the position of the Commissioner in a case such as this is that he investigates the matter, and there is the statement by the woman and the statement by the constable directly in conflict as to what took place on the pavement. The point upon which the constable is clearly in fault is preferring a charge of drunkenness, and for that he is punished. I do not suppose the Commissioner could decide which of the two were telling the truth on the other part of the case, but the part of the case which he does deal with apparently is the part which is plain, namely, that the police constable preferred a charge of drunkenness when no such charge at all ought to have been preferred.

(Chairman.) Then what you call the letter of apology is written.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Certainly.

(Chairman.) In that letter the Commissioner does not withdraw the charge, but he accepts the decision of the Magistrate.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) The Magistrate dismissed the charge, and I submit the Commissioner is quite right in accepting that as a decision, which he does accept with respect.

(Chairman.) As I read the letter, the Commissioner does not say that he believes the policeman was in fault, and he does not withdraw the accusation. Whether the Commissioner is bound to do it is quite another question, but that is not what I should call an apology.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) So far as the form of the document is concerned, the husband accepted it, and you will recognise the difficulty that the Commissioner or anyone in his position has in dealing with such a matter upon written reports, because where two people are directly in conflict it is a very difficult matter, upon a report where people's characters are at stake, to decide at all one way or the other; but if there is a point upon which a man is obviously in fault it is his duty to act, and he did act.

(Chairman.) We think that the constable ought to be called.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Certainly, sir. Every witness you desire to have shall be called before you.

Police-Constable Walter Atkinson, sworn.

P.C. W. Atkinson.

9290. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Your number is 800 W?—Yes.

9291. How long have you been in the Force?—Fourteen years and three months.

9292. Have you ever had any complaint made against you of any sort except this before?—No.

9293. Are you married or single?—Married.

9294. Have you got a family?—Two children.

9295. Where do you live?—366, Wandsworth Road, Clapham.

9296. Were you on duty on the night of the 6th June, 1903?—Yes.

9297. Just tell the Commissioners in your own way what happened with reference to this lady on that night?—About a quarter past twelve I was on duty in South Lambeth Road. I saw the lady coming along in the opposite direction to me on the opposite side of the road. When within about forty yards I noticed her stop in front of a man. The man passed along. I crossed the road opposite the Presbyterian Church. When I got to the kerb the lady came up to me and stopped in front of me, saying: "What are you interfering with me for?" I said: "I have not interfered with you. You had better get along home." I walked to the church gate, and she said: "How dare you assault me!" At the same time a man whom I do not know came up to us. I said: "Have you seen me interfere or assault this lady in any manner?" He said: "No." The lady then appealed to the man herself, and he gave her the same answer.

9298. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You say she appealed to him. Tell us what she said?—She said: "Did you not see this constable assault me?" The man said: "No." She then became very excited, started shouting, and said that she would take my number and go to the station to report me. I told her to get along home and keep herself quiet, otherwise I should take her to the station. She still persisted in shouting, was greatly excited, and smelt strongly of drink. I took her into custody. She was struggling all the way, and whilst going down Lansdowne Road she asked me to let her go, as she was sorry. I said: "I cannot do that." When in Larkhall Lane we met Police-Constable 749 (Allen), and she appealed to him to let her go, and struggled to get away from me. I called him to my assistance. With his assistance we got her to the station.

9299. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) When you got to the station what happened?—I preferred a charge of drunk and disorderly against the lady.

9300. To whom did you make that charge?—Inspector Billson.

9301. What happened when you made that charge?—The Inspector came up to the dock rail, had a look at the lady, and walked back into the office, and called me into the office.

9302. You mean that is his office?—The Inspector's office.

9303. What took place there?—He said to me: "The lady is not drunk, but she has been drinking, and I will put her on for disorderly conduct alone."

9304. Then did you go back into the charge room?—Yes.

9305. Had you told the Inspector what you have told the Commissioners now?—Yes.

9306. You had told him that before you went into his office?—Yes.

9307. When you went back into the charge room what took place then?—The Inspector entered the charge on the charge sheet, and the lady asked to see a doctor. The Inspector said: "There is no occasion to see a doctor, as you are not charged with drunkenness." He entered the charge of disorderly conduct on the charge sheet.

9308. Did he read it to the lady?—Yes.

9309. Did the lady say anything at the station besides saying that she wanted to see a doctor?—No.

9310. Did she tell the Inspector where she had come from, or what she had been doing?—Not in my hearing.

9311. Then I think she stayed there for some time, and her husband came and she was bailed out?—I believe so. I went back out on duty.

9312. You went back out on duty, did you, leaving the lady there?—Yes.

9313. The lady says that you were standing with a man under an archway, and that you darted out upon her?—There is no archway in the road.

9314. She says now, or suggests, that you acted in some manner in an indecent way in the way in which you held her. Is there any foundation for that?—No; I only caught hold of her arm.

9315. Later, I think you attended before the Magistrate and gave evidence?—Yes.

9316. Then later an inquiry was made at the police station by Inspector Taylor, was it?—Yes.

9317. What took place then so far as you were concerned? Did you make a statement then?—The lady made a statement, and I was asked if I had any questions to ask the lady. I asked her two or three questions. I cannot exactly call to mind the questions I asked.

9318. These appear to be the questions you asked her: "Question by P.-C. 800—You say I seemed to dart out of a gateway? (A.) Yes. (Q.) Did you stop about forty yards away, and stop in front of a man? (A.) No, certainly not. (Q.) Did you stop in front of me when you came up to me? (A.) Certainly not, no. (Q.) Did you ask me what I was interfering with you for? (A.) No. (Q.) Did I not say 'I am not interfering with you,' and requested you to go on, and I moved into the church gateway. (A.) No, and you did not move. (Q.) As I went to go into the gateway did you not say 'What are you assaulting me for?' (A.) I did not say such a word. (Q.) Did I not ask a man if I had interfered or assaulted you in any way? (A.) No, you did not." Were those the questions you asked?—Yes.

9319. I asked you about an archway, and you said there is no archway. Is there a church gateway there?—A church gateway.

9320. What sort of a gateway is that?—An iron gateway.

9321. Is there an arch over it, or is it an open gate?—An open gate.

9322. Those are the questions you asked?—Yes.

9323. What did you do?—Did you make a statement there before them, or was your report read, or what happened?—My report was read to them.

9324. That was the report you originally made out? Yes.

9325. Did the Inspector ask you any questions about your report, do you remember?—No; I cannot say that he did.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) The report is at page 5, and it is signed by Inspector Hamilton.

9326. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) It is dated the 10th June. Here is the original (producing). That is the report you made (handing)?—Yes.

9327. Is that the one that was read at that time?—Yes.

9328. (Earl Russell.) Do not let us have any confusion about this gateway. In the statement which Mrs. Braham made at the police station she stated, did she not, "The constable seemed to dart out from a gateway"?—She stated that at the station.

9329. Your first question is: "You say I seemed to dart out of a gateway." That is what you mean by the church gateway?—Yes.

9330. You spoke several times about a church gateway?—I did not speak many times about a church gateway—only once.

9331. Just now?—Answering the question that there was no archway.

9332. But there is a church gateway there. Did you not call it a gateway?—Yes. There is a forecourt in front of the church.

9333. There is not anything about an archway here in the report. It is "gateway"?—Yes.

9334. You begin by saying that you saw Mrs. Braham, when she was about 40 yards from you, stop in front of a man?—Yes.

9335. What do you mean by that exactly?—She seemed to stop dead in front of this man as he was going in the opposite direction to her. That is what made me cross the road to see what she was doing.

9336. What do you suggest she was doing?—Well, at the time the road was infested with prostitutes, and I thought, when I crossed the road, that she was one of those unfortunate creatures.

9337. Did you notice any conversation between her and the man?—No.

9338. Did you see the man himself?—Only in the distance.

9339. Not so that you could recognise him?—No.

9340. You say, when you first crossed the road, she spoke to you first. Is that right?—Yes.

9341. Before you had touched her, or said anything to her?—Yes.

9342. She said, "What are you interfering with me for"?—Quite right.

9343. Why should a respectable woman say that to you?—I do not know any more than you do. They were the words she used to me as I stepped on to the kerb and stopped to let the lady pass.

9344. You know now that Mrs. Braham is a respectable married woman?—Yes.

9345. Tell me why a respectable married woman should say that at mid-night to a constable—"What are you interfering with me for"?—Goodness knows.

9346. You cannot suggest any reason?—No, I cannot.

9347. What did you understand her to mean by interfering with her?—I understood her to mean by interfering with her my stopping to let her go past.

9438. You did not understand her to mean anything by way of an assault?—No.

9349. Or in laying hands on her indecently, or otherwise?—No. I stepped on to the kerb and stopped to let her go by. That was when she spoke to me first.

9350. It was at that moment the stranger passed by?—Not exactly at that moment.

9351. How long afterwards?—When I said to her, "Go along home." I walked to the church-gate, when she accused me of assaulting her.

9352. That was your answer to her that she was to get along home?—Yes.

9353. What did she say to that?—She accused me of assaulting her at once then.

9354. At once. That was the answer. Had you touched her?—No.

9355. You had not laid a finger on her?—No, not until I took her into custody.

9356. What did she say when she accused you of assaulting her?—"How dare you assault me in that manner."

9357. Without any provocation?—Without any provocation.

9358. Without any reason?—Without any reason.

9359. Then there was a passer-by?—Yes.

9360. You did not know him?—No.

9361. You were not in conversation with him beforehand?—No.

9362. Ever seen him again?—No.

9363. According to your story you both asked this passer-by whether he had seen any assault?—Yes.

9364. You recognised that it was rather a serious charge to be made against a constable on his beat, that he should have assaulted a woman, did you not?—I did.

9365. Why did you not take the name and address of this passer-by?—I asked him to accompany me to the station when I took the lady into custody, and he said he could not. The lady was struggling when I got hold of her arm, and it was an impossibility to take his name and address. I had either to take his name and address and let her go, or take her and lose him.

9366. Did you think there would be any difficulty in getting hold of her again?—Probably so.

9367. How many other people were there in the road at the time?—None at all.

9368. Have you taken any step to find this man since?—No, I have not.

9369. He did answer you, you say, that he had not seen you assault her?—Yes.

9370. You recognise that he would have been a useful witness?—He would have been.

9371. Mrs. Braham is right in saying that you spoke apart with him for a moment?—Yes, but not apart.

9372. That was when you were asking him. Did she hear you ask him whether he had seen you assault her?—(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) He did not agree with your question that he took him apart.

9373. (Earl Russell.) No, I gather that. Was this stranger present when you actually arrested Mrs. Braham?—Yes.

9374. How long did he stop there altogether?—A minute or a couple of minutes.

9375. He stood by and looked on at the scene?—Yes.

9376. Up to the time when you had arrested her?—Yes.

9377. And started marching her away?—Yes.

9378. How far off was the nearest constable on duty?—The nearest one to me was about a quarter of a mile away in Larkhall Lane, the first constable I came to, but had the constable on the next beat to me been near, he would have been within 50 yards.

9379. If you had blown your whistle, you would have had another constable there within a few minutes?—Yes.

9380. You could have handed the lady over to his custody while you asked the gentleman for his name and address?—Yes.

9381. After you had had a conversation with this stranger as to whether he had seen you assault her, what was your conversation with Mrs. Braham. You told her to go home again, did you?—Yes. I told her to keep herself quiet, and go along home, otherwise I should take her into custody.

9382. Then she said she would take your number?—She said that before I said I should take her into custody.

9383. Did she ask for your number?—No.

9384. She did not ask you for your number?—No.

9385. She said she would report you?—Yes.

9386. So far you had done nothing?—No.

9387. You had said nothing to her you should not?—No.

9388. You had not done anything to her you should not?—No.

9389. And yet she asked you why you were interfering with her, and told you she would take your number and that she would report you?—Yes.

9390. You told her to get along home after that again?—Yes.

9391. Why did you take her into custody when she said she would take your number?—I told her to get along home or I should take her into custody, and as she still persisted in shouting, I took her into custody.

9392. You say she persisted in shouting?—Yes.

9393. What kind of things was she shouting?—She was very excited, and shouted very loudly. She said she would have my coat off, and that she was a respectable woman.

9394. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Are you repeating the words she used to you?—Yes.

9395. Do you mind putting them into her words so far as you remember? She said what?—"I will have your coat off. I am a respectable woman."

9396. (Earl Russell.) You did not, at that time, believe she was a respectable woman, of course?—Not when I first noticed her, on the opposite side of the road—I did not. But when she came up to me I thought she was a respectable woman. That is why I did not stop her.

9397. You believed her to be respectable before you arrested her?—Yes.

9398. In what way did she show her excitement besides shouting?—She appeared to be intoxicated, to my idea.

9399. Nothing less than being drunk would account for what you have told us, would it?—No.

9400. Then you say you did lay hands on her in a proper way, and took her into custody?—Yes.

9401. Taking her by the arm in the ordinary way?—Yes.

9402. Then she began to struggle?—Yes.

9403. Instantly?—Instantly.

9404. Did she throw herself about?—No; she struggled to get away from me, and appealed to this man to assist her.

9405. The stranger?—Yes.

9406. He was still there?—He was still there.

9407. Was she shouting out anything after you had arrested her?—No.

9408. Did not say a word?—No—only that she was sorry for what she had done.

9409. That was later. But at the time, in this street where you arrested her, she did not continue to shout?—No.

9410. She did not try to throw herself down on the pavement, or anything of that sort?—No.

9411. That is what drunken women do sometimes, is it not?—Frequently.

9412. The struggle was to get away from you simply?—Yes.

9413. In the Lansdowne Road—was that where you met Police-constable Allen, 749 W?—Larkhall Lane.

9414. He was a police-constable in uniform?—Yes.

9415. She knew at once that he was a police-constable?—Yes.

9416. You say she appealed to him, and struggled to get away from you. Is that right?—Yes.

9417. To get away from you to another policeman?—Yes.

9418. What did you think was the reason for that?—She wanted me to let her go, and appealed to him to let her go.

9419. But if her objection was to being arrested, why did you think she preferred one policeman to another?—I think she thought Allen was a sergeant, and that is why she appealed to him to let her go.

P.C. W. Atkinson.

23 Oct. 1906.

P.C. W. Atkinson. Oct. 1906.

9420. She appealed to him to take her away from you?—No. Her words were "Will you let me go?"

9421. To Allen?—To Allen.

9422. He was not holding her?—I asked him to catch hold of her other arm and take her to the station with me.

9423. I thought you said she struggled with you and tried to get to another policeman?—Yes.

9424. Before he had taken hold of her arm?—Yes.

9425. What did she say to Allen—"Will you take me away?"—No. "Let me go."

9426. "Let me go from this man"?—Not "from this man" at all. "Let me go."

9427. But from whom—from you or from him?—They were the words she used.

9428. Before he got hold of her?—Yes.

9429. You think she thought Allen was a sergeant?—Yes.

9430. He is of the same rank as yourself?—Yes.

9431. You got to the police-station, and you put her in the dock in the ordinary way. Did you start by charging her in the usual formal way before the conversation with the Inspector, or did you have a conversation with the Inspector first?—I gave the Inspector the details of the case, with the charge of drunk and disorderly.

9432. What exactly did you say to him? Did you say "Here is a woman I have brought in drunk and disorderly"?—No. The Inspector said "What is this charge?" I said "Drunk, and behaving in a disorderly manner in South Lambeth Road." He asked me what the disorder was. I told him that I saw the woman coming along—saw her stop in front of a man. I crossed the road, and when she got in front of me she stopped dead in front of me, and she accused me of interfering with her and assaulting her. I told her to get along home. She began shouting, and would not go away, and I took her into custody. I think that is word for word what I said to the Inspector. Then he said "Come into the office." We went into the office, and he said "The woman is not drunk, but she has been drinking. I will put her on for disorderly conduct alone."

9433. The disorder that you complained of was shouting in the streets. Is that so?—Yes.

9434. Not accosting the man?—No.

9435. You do not suggest now that she did accost a man?—No; I did not say that she had accosted a man at all. She appeared to stop in front of this man.

9436. But at the time, from the other side of the street, I thought you told me, you thought she was accosting him?—That is what I thought at the time. That is what made me cross the road.

9437. But you do not say so now, and you did not say so at the station?—No.

9438. Then the disorderly conduct was the shouting?—Yes.

9439. When the Inspector took you into his office he told you that, although she had been drinking, she was not drunk?—Yes.

9440. Was anything said to the lady herself, Mrs. Braham, about being drunk?—No.

9441. Was she told she was charged with being drunk?—No.

9442. Why did she ask to see a doctor?—Because she thought she was charged with being drunk.

9443. She guessed it?—Yes. The Inspector said "There is no occasion to see a doctor, you are not charged with being drunk."

9444. How came she to guess that?—That I do not know.

9445. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Do you mind telling us what she did say when she asked for a doctor? You have told us what you thought, but what did she say?—She said she wanted to see a doctor.

9446. (Chairman.) What were the words she used?—"I want to see a doctor."

9447. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You think she thought she was charged with being drunk, and that is why she wanted to see a doctor?—Yes.

9448. That is not what she said?—No

9449. What we want you to tell us is what she said——

9450. (Earl Russell.) To whom was it she made her request to see a doctor?—Inspector Billson.

9451. You were present?—Yes.

9452. Did you hear her say anything about wanting a more responsible person?—No.

9453. Nothing of the kind?—No.

(Chairman.) I do not think she said she used those words.

(Earl Russell.) I am not quite certain.

(Chairman.) "I asked about the doctor because I wanted somebody of more responsibility." She did not tell us to-day she had used those words at the police station. It is an explanation of her request for a doctor.

(Earl Russell.) The question I put to her was whether it was accurate that at the station she complained to the Inspector, and wanted to see a doctor—"I wanted to see someone in a more responsible position." I admit it is not clear whether she said that at the station or afterwards.

(Chairman.) I understood her evidence in the box to be this, that the words "I wanted somebody of more responsibility," were used in explanation of her request for a doctor.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) She would not be likely to say before the Inspector, before whom the charge was made, that she wanted to see somebody of more responsibility.

9454. (Earl Russell.) No; I think perhaps it is a mistake of the newspaper reporter.

9455. Was the charge read over to her after it was written down?—Yes.

9456. Of disorderly conduct only?—Yes.

9457. Did she say anything in answer to it?—She did not say anything.

9458. Was she still excited at this time?—Yes.

9459. Crying?—Yes.

9460. Very much upset?—Appeared so.

9461. Are you perfectly clear you heard her say nothing to the Inspector in explanation of her being out so late?—No.

9462. Not a word?—Not in my hearing.

(Earl Russell.) I do not know whether there is here a note of the evidence taken at the police court. I have not got it.

(Chairman.) We have not had a copy of the depositions.

(Earl Russell.) I have not got them either. If any question should arise when I do see them, perhaps I may be allowed to ask other questions later.

(Chairman.) Yes.

9463. (Earl Russell.) The next day, when she came before the Magistrate, you were in court?—Yes.

9464. Was Allen in court too?—Yes.

9465. Did Allen give evidence?—Yes.

9466. You both gave evidence?—Yes.

9467. And you said the same as you have said now?—Yes.

9468. Is it entirely false to say that the first thing you did was to put your arm round her in an affectionate manner?—Yes.

9469. Not a word of truth in it?—Not a word.

9470. You say it is also entirely false that on the way to the station you treated her improperly?—Yes.

9471. You first made a written report on this case on the 10th June, I suppose—four days afterwards?—Yes; I think it was about three or four days. I cannot exactly tell you the date.

9472. You gave evidence at the police court, of course, the next day, and two or three days afterwards you made a written report?—Yes.

9473. Have you made any written reports since this one?—No.

9474. You did not make any fresh one at the inquiry at Brixton Police Station?—No.

9475. Now, I want to know about what happened in Lansdowne Road when she asked you to let her go.

What were the exact words she said?—"Let me go; I am sorry."

9476. Did you understand what she was sorry for?—No, only for being taken into custody.

9477. It was not anything that she had done that she was sorry for?—No.

9478. When you gave your evidence at the police court did you say this lady smelt strongly of drink?—No.

9479. You did not say it in the report you wrote on the 10th June?—No.

9480. Did you say so to the inspector when he took the charge?—Yes.

9481. You said she smelt of drink?—Yes.

9482. But you did not mention it at the police court because she was not charged with being drunk?—Quite so.

9483. You have been punished for making a charge of drunkenness as a false charge. Is that so?—I was strictly cautioned.

9484. I mean the reason for that punishment was for making that false charge of drunkenness?—I do not know whether it was a false charge of drunkenness, or whether it was disorderly behaviour. I was strictly cautioned.

9485. You mean you are not quite sure what you were punished for?—I took it I was punished for both the original charges that I preferred first. I think, if I can remember, the words were that the constable was a little bit too hasty in the first onset, and what made the charge worse was preferring a charge of drunkenness against a sober and respectable woman, and I was to be strictly cautioned.

9486. The sentence read out was that the constable might in the first instance have been guilty of an error of judgment only, but his subsequent mistake in preferring a charge of drunkenness against a sober person looks as though he sought to make the case stronger?—Yes.

9487. To what extent did you prefer this charge of drunkenness. You simply went to the Inspector and said "The charge is drunk and disorderly." Is that so?—Yes.

9488. When the Inspector looked at the woman and said: "I do not agree she is drunk," you at once withdrew it?—No.

9489. You did not insist on his taking the charge of drunkenness?—No.

9490. This charge of drunkenness on your part was never reduced to writing?—No.

9491. Was it because the charge was not a charge of drunkenness that you said nothing about it at the police court?—Yes.

9492. But it would have been an explanation or an aggravation of the charge of disorderly conduct, would it not?—Yes.

9493. But still you said nothing?—No.

9494. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I want to ask you one question about when you first saw the woman. I understand what first drew your attention to her was you saw her stop opposite a man?—Yes.

9495. You thought that might or might not be a case of a person accosting?—Yes.

9496. So you went across to see?—Yes.

9497. Did you walk sharply across?—I walked in the ordinary way across the road.

9498. How near to her were you when you stepped on to the kerb?—About a yard.

9499. Was she coming in this direction?—Coming up towards Stockwell.

9500. And you were coming up across like this?—Yes.

9501. You stepped on to the kerb about a yard from her?—Yes.

9502. And she saw you coming across?—Yes.

9503. As you stepped on to the kerb I understand you stopped to let her pass?—Yes.

9504. Then it was she said "What are you interfering with me for?"?—Yes.

9505. It is possible she saw you coming?—She must have done.

9506. You were coming straight to her?—Yes.

9507. The first thing that happened, according to you, was this—she said "What are you interfering with me for?"?—Yes.

9508. (Chairman.) Had you ever seen Mrs. Braham before?—Never.

9509. I understand that simply because she stopped in front of a man you crossed over the road?—Yes.

9510. Why?—At the time I thought she was one of these unfortunate women accosting men. That is what made me cross the road to see. But when she came up to me I could see she was a respectable lady, and I stood still to allow her to pass.

9511. When you say she stopped before the man, do you mean he was walking in one direction and she was walking in the other?—In opposite directions.

9512. And she stopped?—She appeared to stop directly in front of this man.

9513. Instead of stepping aside?—Yes.

9514. Were they walking so that one would have come against the other if one had not stopped?—No, the lady was coming up from Vauxhall towards Stockwell, and the man was walking towards Vauxhall from Stockwell, and as they got within about 40 yards, as near as I can guess, the lady stopped like that, right in front of the man, otherwise if they had both continued walking——

9515. There would have been a collision?—Yes.

9516. When she stopped the man passed, I understand you?—Stepped on one side and went along.

9517. It was from that incident alone you inferred she was accosting him, do I understand?—Yes.

9518. Did she appear to speak to him?—No, I could not say.

9519. Everything that you have told me is quite consistent with her having stopped to allow him to pass?—Yes. I came to that conclusion myself when I first saw what sort of a lady she was.

9520. But you crossed the road pretty briskly towards her, did you not?—No, in a leisurely way. By the time I got across the road I judged she would get up to me.

9521. You are certain she simply stopped?—Yes.

9522. The man moved aside and passed?—Yes.

9523. No conversation?—Not that I know of; I did not hear anything. I could not hear anything because I was too far away.

9524. On that, what made you think the stopping was of any significance or had any meaning?—I cannot say.

9525. It was all over in a moment according to your account, I suppose?—Yes.

9526. A couple of seconds?—Yes, no longer.

9527. Do you mean to say that her stopping was a slow, deliberate meaning kind of stopping?—She was walking rather briskly, and she seemed to stop dead all at once.

9528. Do you mean that the stopping was such that it had any meaning apart from what I have suggested—that she was walking briskly, and stopped to let the man pass her?—No.

9529. That is all you suggest by mere stopping?—Yes.

9530. Then why did you say before, I think it was Superintendent Taylor, that you saw the woman deliberately stop a man?—In front of the man.

9531. Did you not say before the Superintendent "I saw the woman deliberately stop a man"? "P.C. 800 W stated that he saw the woman deliberately stop a man, evidently a stranger, who was proceeding in an opposite direction; but the man stepped aside without holding conversation with her"?—That is quite right.

9532. Is that what you said?—Yes.

9533. That is not quite what you have told me today, is it?—I think so, as far as I can recollect.

9534. You told me a few minutes ago, I thought, that the only thing you saw was a man and a woman approaching, that there would have been a collision if one of them had not stopped; that the woman stopped and that the man passed on; and that it only took a couple of seconds?—Stopped dead in front of the man.

9535. That is all that took place, you say?—Yes.

9536. You crossed over the road. Who first spoke—you or Mrs. Braham?—Mrs. Braham.

9537. Were you walking towards her then as though you were going to speak to her?—I walked across the road. As the lady came along here I walked across the road here. Just as I got my foot on the kerb she stopped in front of me, and said, "What are you interfering with me for?"

9538. After the man had gone on did she walk on briskly in the direction in which she was going?—In the ordinary way of a female.

9539. When you got on the pavement she stopped dead before you?—Yes.

9540. Why did you think she did that?—I could not make it out at all.

9541. You are perfectly certain the word she used was "interfering"?—Perfectly.

9542. Did you think she meant interfering with her business?—I did not know what she meant.

9543. You have described to me what had taken place. You told the Superintendent that you had seen the woman deliberately stop a man who was proceeding in an opposite direction and then she comes up to you, stops dead, and says, "What are you interfering with me for"?—Yes.

9544. You are certain she used the word "interfering"?—Quite.

9545. And you had not interfered with her?—No.

9546. Except by crossing the road?—That was the only thing.

9547. Did you think, when she used the word "interfering," she meant interfering with her business?—No, I did not.

9548. How far off from where you arrested her was it that you met Allen?—About a quarter of a mile.

9549. Do you say that she had then expressed regret to you and that she had used the words "I am sorry"?—"I am sorry."

9550. Before you met Allen?—Yes.

9551. After she had said that did she become quieter?—Yes, until she saw P.C. Allen, and then she struggled to get away from me.

9552. The moment she saw Allen she struggled to get away from you?—Yes, and she asked him to let her go.

9553. What did she mean by that, according to your view?—She wanted to get out of custody.

9554. Out of your custody?—Yes.

9555. She seemed glad to meet Allen?—I do not know whether she was glad to meet him.

9556. You say she had been going quietly up to that time, but the moment she saw another constable she struggled to get away, and, to use your own words, appealed to him?—Yes.

9557. That was to get out of your clutches, I suppose?—Yes. She said "There is another one over there; he will let me go."

9558. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) From the first I suppose you realised that this was a very serious matter for you?—I did.

9559. When the Inspector refused to take the charge of drunkenness you quite appreciated, I suppose, that that was rather important to you?—Yes.

9560. I suggest this to you, and let us see if it is right. From your point of view your story is incomprehensible unless she was drunk?—Yes.

9561. That is so, is it not?—Yes.

9562. You cannot give any explanation of her conduct except you thought she was drunk?—Quite so.

9563. When the Inspector refused to take the charge of drunkenness did you realise that you were left in rather a difficult position?—Yes.

9564. Did you remonstrate with the Inspector about not taking it?—No.

9565. Perhaps it is too strong an expression to use to your superior, but did you tell him what you relied upon as showing that she was drunk?—No.

9566. What passed exactly about it. You have told us that when you came in he asked you the charge and you said "Drunk and disorderly."?—Yes. Then he asked me what the disorder was, and I told him I saw the woman stop in front of a man in South Lambeth Road, I crossed the road to her, and when I got on to the kerb she stopped in front of me, and asked me what I was interfering with her for, and that she started shouting, and accused me of assaulting her, and as she would not go away I took her into custody.

9567. Did nothing else pass about the drunkenness. Is that all that happened?—Yes.

9568. I rather understood you before to say that the Inspector took you into a room?—After I had preferred the charge of drunkenness and disorderly he took me into the office and he said, "The woman is not drunk, but she has been drinking, and I shall only put her on for disorderly conduct."

9569. You said nothing?—No.

9570. I want to put this to you quite plainly with regard to your story about her coming up to you and saying to you, "What are you interfering with me for?" or some such words. Once you admit that you were not thinking she was a prostitute it is difficult to explain, is it not?—I said at the first onset that I thought she was one of these low creatures.

9571. Just follow. When she came up to you and stood in front of you, and used the expression you have told us of, "What are you interfering with me for?" did you think she was referring to her business of a prostitute?—No.

9572. Did you still think that she was a prostitute?—No.

9573. Then what did you think she meant by saying "What are you interfering with me for"?—I could not make out.

9574. You could not understand it at all?—No.

9575. You cannot make it out now?—No.

9576. She charged you very quickly. She stated to you that she should take your number and report you?—Yes.

9577. That was quite early in the conversation that took place?—Yes.

9578. So far from what you have said she had done nothing for which you could arrest her, had she?—No, only she began shouting after I told her to go home.

9579. She began shouting?—Yes, and she was excited.

9580. You cannot arrest persons because they are excited. That is not enough, is it?—No, not for being excited alone.

9581. You say she began shouting after this, and you told her to go home. Do I understand that the shouting began after you told her to go home and keep quiet?—Yes.

9582. That was when she first shouted?—Yes.

9583. Until she told you that she would take your number and report you she had not shouted?—No.

9584. Then she had done nothing, so far as I can understand you?—No.

9585. And you told her to go home?—Yes.

9586. Why did you not give your number?—She did not ask me for it.

9587. Apparently she said she would take your number when you told her if she did not go home quietly you would take her to the station?—I told her if she did not keep quiet I should take her to the station, where she could get my number.

9588. Do you mean she would have to go to the station to get your number?—Yes.

9589. Do you mean if she had asked you in the street for your number, and there had been the conversation which you have deposed to, you would not have given her your number unless you took her to the station?—Yes, I should.

9590. Then I cannot understand why you did not give it to her?—She never asked me to give her my number.

9591. She said she would take your number and report you, and you told her that if she did not go home and keep quiet you would take her off to the station?—Yes.

9592. Do you not think that would be enough to prevent her from asking you for your number after that?—No, I do not see that it would. If she had said, "If you will give me your number I will go," I should have given her my number.

9593. Does it not occur to you that saying a thing like that to a lady, supposing you had been making a mistake, and she had said to you she would take your number and report you, and you then told her that if she did not go home and keep quiet you would take her to the station, would be the very thing that would prevent her from asking you for your number? Does not that occur to you now?—Yes, it does.

9594. Why should you up to that time threaten to take her to the station?—I did not threaten to take her to the station until she began shouting about my assaulting her, and she would have my coat off.

9595. Now, just think for a moment. I want you to be careful about that. Do you want us to understand that she said both those things before you told her to go home and keep quiet or you would take her to the station?—Yes.

9596. She said to you that you had assaulted her?—Yes.

9597. And that she would have your coat off?—Yes.

9598. What did you understand her to mean by that?—Goodness knows. I could not say what she meant by it.

9599. Do you mean that?—Yes.

9600. You do not know at the present time what the meaning of saying to you "I will have your coat off" is?—No.

9601. Not at the present moment? Do you mean that?—Yes.

9602. Just follow for a moment. Are you telling the Commissioners that when a person says to you "I will have your coat off" you do not know what that means?—A person saying "I will have your coat off" means that you have done something to them for them to say it.

9603. Do you not know what it means?—I cannot say that I do.

9604. No notion?—No.

9605. Have you ever heard the expression before?—It is frequently said in the streets by low class people.

9606. Is it frequently said in the streets by low class people, and it is frequently said by people who come into collision with the police?—Yes.

9607. You have heard it often?—Not to me.

9608. No, but you have heard it said to others?—Yes.

9609. It is the sort of expression that is often used to a constable—"I will have your coat off"?—Yes.

9610. When a man is arrested he often says it?—Yes.

9611. You are quite used to hearing it?—Yes.

9612. And you do not know what it means?—Only "I will try to get you the sack."

9613. Why did you not tell us that before? You know quite well that that is what it means, and that is what people use it to mean?—Yes.

9614. Why did you not tell us that?—I did not grasp the question properly.

9615. Now you tell us that she used that expression, do you?—Yes.

9616. Have you ever, before making that statement in the witness-box to-day to Lord Russell, made that statement before?—Only what I wrote down two or three days before the charge was preferred.

9617. Think?—Only in the report there is not quite so much as what I have said this morning.

9618. In the report which you made a few days after?—Yes.

9619. I will ask you about that in a minute; but I want you to think about this before you answer. Have you ever before you made the statement in the witness-box to-day said that Mrs. Braham said to you, "I will have your coat off"?—No.

9620. The incident we are dealing with took place on the 6th June, 1903?—Yes.

9621. So far as you are concerned, at an early stage you knew that complaint was made, and that it was a serious matter to you?—Yes.

9622. You were anxious to tell everything that had taken place?—Yes.

9623. To make a full and true disclosure, and to state exactly, so far as you could, without colour what had happened?—Yes.

9624. Why did you not, then, make that statement to the Commissioner?—I put the brief facts down.

9625. Does it not occur to you that a statement of that kind would be of extreme importance? It is not the kind of statement which a respectable married woman would be likely to use to you, is it?—I should not think so.

9626. And therefore it is a statement to which you would attribute importance, and would put in your report, is it not?—Yes.

9627. Now you are telling us in October, 1906, for the first time of that statement. I want you to explain, if you can, how it is that in all the inquiries there have been with reference to this matter you have never made that important statement before to-day?—I never gave it a thought—not that statement alone. I have not given it a thought.

9628. Not that statement alone; but you did give a thought to what she said to you, did you not?—I bore it in my mind.

9629. I want you to consider carefully when making the answer. Are you quite clear that she ever said that to you at all?—Yes.

9630. Has it always been present to your mind that she said that to you?—Yes, I have always borne it in mind since that case. I have been very careful ever since in dealing with females.

9631. You mean since that event?—Yes.

9632. Have you always borne in mind that statement since it took place according to you on June 6th that Mrs. Braham said to you "I will have your coat off"?—Yes.

9633. Do you not see now that it is a statement of considerable importance so far as your account of it is concerned as to what she said to you before you told he to go home or you would take her to the station. You see now that it is an important statement?—Yes, I can.

9634. Did it never occur to you as being an important statement before?—No.

9635. A matter of no consequence?—No.

9636. After that she began shouting you have told us. Did she make much noise?—A pretty considerable noise.

9637. What did she shout?—That she was a respectable woman, and that I had no business to interfere with her.

9638. That is what she said?—And that she would have my coat off.

9639. Again?—Only the once.

9640. Either you are not quite following or I am not quite appreciating your evidence. As I understood you before (I put it to you two or three times) she said to you that she would charge you with assaulting her, that she would have your coat off, and she would take your number and report you, and on that then you told her to go home and keep quiet, or to be quiet, or something to that effect, or you would take her to the station, and then she began shouting, and you told me that she had not shouted till then?—She started shouting when I told her to go home, otherwise I should take her to the station.

9641. That is what I understand you to say. You did not tell her to go home or you would take her to the station until she said she would take your number and report you?—No.

9642. Then we have got to it again that she did not begin shouting until after that?—No.

9643. That is right, is it?—She did not shout any more after I took her into custody.

9644. I understand that, but we have not got so far as taking her into custody yet. What I want to know is this. Up to this moment you have told me she then began shouting. That is right, is it not?—Yes. She accused me of assaulting her.

P C. W. Atkinson.

23 Oct. 1906.

9645. You told her to go home or you would take her to the station?—Yes.

9646. So far she had done nothing for which you were justified in arresting her in your view, had she?—Except shouting. I cannot call to my mind the words she used when she was shouting.

9647. To say a woman is shouting is a general term which does not convey very much. What I want to know is this. What sort of thing was going on? What sort of things was she shouting?—She was apparently hysterical.

9648. Did you think she was hysterical?—She seemed so.

9649. You thought so?—Yes.

9650. Did you think she was shouting because she was hysterical?—I did not know what to think she was shouting for.

9651. You gave me an explanation just now that you thought she was hysterical?—She appeared to be hysterical by her shouting. A person in drink does seem to be hysterical.

9652. Did you tell the inspector she appeared to be hysterical to you when she was shouting?—No, I cannot say that I did.

9653. But does it not seem strange. If she had done nothing up to then, why should you arrest her because she was shouting and hysterical?—Because she would not go home. That is why I arrested her.

9654. You arrested her because she would not go home and leave you alone?—Yes.

9655. You gave an explanation to Lord Russell about this man who was present, that is to say, you said you could not let go of Mrs. Braham in order to take his name and address in the book?—Yes.

9656. Why did not you ask him for his name and address without writing it in the book. I suppose that is a thing you could carry?—I did not give it a thought at the time.

9657. Although you were being charged with having assaulted this lady?—I was not being charged. I was accused.

9658. You are quite right. You were dealing with it in the street. She was charging you, or accusing you, of having assaulted her, and you had a witness present?—Yes. I asked him to accompany me to the station.

9659. Why, when he would not accompany you to the station, did you not ask him for his name?—I did not give it a thought.

9660. Now, what sort of street is this?—A main road.

9661. With houses on either side?—Yes.

9662. Are you often there?—Not very often.

9663. I suppose sometimes you come to it on your beat in your Division?—I am frequently round there at times, but sometimes I would not see that part of the road for six months.

9664. You have told us about her shouting. Is there any person, so far as you know, who was disturbed in the street by her shouting?—No.

9665. As far as I understand, there was nobody in the street at all except this one person who would not go to the station with you?—That is all.

9666. And Mrs. Braham and yourself?—That is all.

9667. You were the only occupants of the street?—Those were all I could see.

9668. Nobody opened a window to see what was the matter or anything of that kind?—No.

9669. (Mr. Dickinson.) You say you asked the man whether he would go to the station with you?—Yes.

9670. And she did, too?—She did not ask him to go to the station.

9671. What did she ask him?—She said to him "Did you see this officer interfering with me." He said "No." She said "Did you see him assault me." He said "No."

9672. She appealed to the man; she said "I have not done anything; will you come to the police station with me." I understand you to say that is not so?—No.

9673. At any rate she appealed to this man?—I appealed to the man.

9674. She also did according to you. You first of all said, "A man whom I did not know came up to us. I said 'Have you seen me interfere or assault this lady in any manner?' He said 'No.' The lady then appealed to the man herself, and he gave her the same answer." That is what you said?—Yes.

9675. Then she appealed to this man?—That was about my interfering or assaulting her.

9676. You looked upon her as a respectable woman at that time?—I did.

9677. What did this man do?—When I asked if he would come down to the station he said he could not; he had to go to work, and he went along up the road.

9678. You made no effort to keep him?—No.

9679. Tell me exactly how you held Mrs. Braham?—Under her arm.

9680. With which hand?—With my right hand I held her left arm.

9681. What did you do with your left hand?—When she struggled to get away from me then I caught hold of her wrist with my left hand; then when she went more quietly I let go my left hand, and only held her with my right.

9682. When she became quieter. How long did the struggle in which you had to use both hands go on?—For a distance of about 50 yards.

9683. Do you mean to say you had to drag her along? Not drag her. She was struggling to get away from me.

9684. You held her by one arm?—Yes.

9685. What did you ask this other constable to do when he came up?—To assist me to the station.

9686. Why did you want assistance?—Because she was trying to get away from me. She appealed to him to let her go.

9687. You did not meet him for a quarter of a mile?—No. Until we met him she was coming along pretty quietly.

9688. Until you met him you were holding her with one hand I suppose?—With one hand. That was from the corner of Lansdowne Road.

9689. Then you say she began to struggle?—When she saw him.

9690. For what purpose did she appeal to him?—She only appealed to him to let her go.

9691. She struggled to get away from your two hands, knowing there was another policeman close by?—She wanted him to let her go.

9692. She wanted him to deliver her from you?—Yes.

9693. Then you asked him to help you along with her. How did he hold her?—He caught hold of her right arm with his left hand.

9694. Did you both hold her the whole time until you got to the station?—Yes.

9695. She was struggling all that time?—No, not when he caught hold of her; she became quieter again.

9696. I see you said that you thought she had been drinking?—Yes.

9697. What made you think that?—She smelt strongly of drink—of some spirit or other.

9698. When did you first notice that she smelt of some spirit?—When I took her into custody—coming down Lansdowne Road her breath came in my face.

9699. When you were coming down Lansdowne Road. That was after you had had her for what distance—a quarter of a mile?—Fifty yards.

9700. That was the first time you noticed it?—Yes.

9701. Then before that you only thought she was drunk because of her behaviour?—That is all I thought from the way she carried on when she stopped in front of me.

9702. Did you tell the Inspector that she smelt of drink?—No.

9703. You did not tell him?—No.

9704. You told him you thought she had been drinking?—I preferred the charge of drunkenness against her.

9705. And he told you, after looking into the matter, that he did not think she was drunk?—But that she had been drinking.

9706. You say you did not tell him that you had smelt the smell of drink?—No.

9707. Surely that was a very important thing. If she had been drinking, and you smelt the smell of drink, was it not important for you to tell the Inspector that? Why did not you tell him?—I did not think it was requisite.

9708. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I want you to explain this matter to me. There is nothing in the report which you made on the 10th which would show that you had charged her with being drunk?—No.

9709. When you arrested her did you think she was drunk?—I did.

9710. Supposing you arrest a person on the two charges of being drunk and of being disorderly, and then the Inspector refuses to take your charge of drunkenness and only takes the charge of disorderly conduct, when you make a report is it your practice never to refer to the fact that you have preferred a charge which the Inspector would not accept?—Yes.

9711. That is the practice?—Yes.

9712. Is that the usual practice amongst constables?—I do not know whether it is usual amongst everyone, but I never have done it myself. It is the first case I have had of preferring a charge against anyone where one charge has not been entertained.

9713. How long had you been in the force when this happened?—Nearly 12 years.

9714. You had never had any difficulty of this kind before?—Never.

9715. I do not know whether I caught what you said correctly, that you had never preferred a charge——?—I have never preferred a charge against anybody before that has not been entertained.

9716. You do not mean in which a person was acquitted?—No.

9717. You have preferred charges against persons who have been acquitted, I suppose?—Yes.

9718. Do you mean it was the first case which you have ever preferred which the Inspector has refused to take?—Yes.

9719. I do not understand why you should not state in your report when you are stating the facts and the reasons for arresting a person what had actually happened?

(Chairman.) Upon that I am going to ask a question, because I have what he stated before me.

9720. Are you quite certain you did not tell Inspector Billson that she smelt of drink? Did you tell Inspector Billson that she smelt of drink?—So far as I remember I do not think I did.

9721. My reason for asking is to give you an opportunity of stating so if you did. I find it in Inspector Billson's own statement in the following terms: "When at the station the woman was rather excited, but I considered that she was not drunk, and told the P.C." (that was yourself, and Inspector Billson spoke to you outside, you told us) "so. He informed me he thought she was drunk because she smelt strongly of liquor." That is Inspector Billson's statement?—They were Mr. Billson's words to me.

9722. Inspector Billson did not tell her that you had said she smelt strongly of drink, I suppose?—No.

9723. Is Inspector Billson's statement correct. What Inspector Billson says is this: "I told the P.C. I did not consider she was drunk." Did he tell you that?—Yes, but that she had been drinking. P.C. W. Atkinson. 23 Oct. 1903.

9724. Did you then inform him, or had you informed him before, that you thought she was drunk because she smelt strongly of liquor?—I cannot say that I did.

9725. Inspector Billson says that you did say so?—Probably I may have done, but I have forgotten.

9726. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I just want to finish what I was putting to you on the report. At the time you made the report on the 10th of June you knew that a complaint had been made against you, did you?—No.

9727. You knew that Mrs. Braham's case had been dismissed and you knew that a report was called for about Mrs. Braham's case?—Yes.

9728. Why was it called for?—On the dismissal of the case by the court.

9729. Do you mean that whenever a case is dismissed at the court, as a matter of practice, you then write a report?—When the husband applied to the Magistrate or applied to the court for a summons.

9730. You knew she was making a complaint against you?—Yes.

9731. Then you had to state the facts so as to have them on record?—Yes.

9732. Did it not occur to you as being very important that you should have stated then that when you arrested her you thought she was drunk?—No, it did not.

9733. Does not it strike you now?—I see it now.

9734. Except upon the assumption that this woman was drunk, do you suggest that there was any justification for your arresting her? I could quite understand your doing it if you thought she was drunk?—Only by the way in which she carried on. When I crossed the road she accused me of interfering with or assaulting her.

9735. I do not want to go through it again, but I have pointed out to you that if she was drunk there was some possibility of understanding that, but if she was not drunk I suggest to you it is very difficult of explanation?—Yes.

9736. You agree?—Yes.

9737. So that drunkenness became a very important element in what had affected your mind in arresting her?—Yes.

9738. It was?—Yes.

9739. Why did not you mention it in the report?—I did not give it a thought of mentioning it in that report. I told the Sub-divisional Inspector I had preferred the charge.

9740. The Inspector had refused to take the charge. I only want to know this from you. When you make a report of this character, in which a woman is preferring a complaint against you, and the question is which of you is telling the truth with regard to it, does it not occur to you as important that your superior officers should know that you had been under a mistaken impression as to her condition, and that you had made a charge which the Inspector had refused to take?—I only made the report out with reference to the evidence which I gave on the disorderly conduct.

Police Constable Albert Allen, 749 W, sworn.

9741. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Are you Police Constable 749 of the W Division?—Yes.

9742. Do you remember, on the night of the 6th June, 1903, being on duty in Larkhall Lane?—Yes.

9743. When Police Constable Atkinson was bringing Mrs. Braham towards the station?—Yes.

9744. What did you notice about them when you first saw them? Did you notice anything at all?—Nothing out of the ordinary way.

9745. Both walking quietly along?—Coming towards the station.

9746. Did Atkinson speak to you or you to him?—The lady spoke first. As soon as she saw me she asked me to let her go.

9747. Were you at that time holding her or not?—No, I was standing on the footway.

9748. Close by where they were?—Yes. P.C. A. Allen.

9749. What did you say?—I said, "I cannot let you go, madam; you are in custody. You must go to the station"; and assisted Police Constable 800 with her.

9750. Why did you assist him?—She stopped and tried to get away.

9751. And you assisted. How did you assist?—I just took hold of her arm, and we walked to the station quietly.

9752. When you took hold of her arm she walked quietly on?—Yes.

9753. At the station did you hear the charge preferred by Atkinson before Inspector Billson?—Yes.

9754. And did you hear what the lady said in answer?—She made no reply.

9755. Did she say where she had been?—When

P.C. A. Allen.
28 Oct. 1906.

Inspector Billson and Police Constable 800 went into the office she said: "I have been to see some sick people in South Lambeth, and was late in leaving there."

9756. Was that before she was charged, or after she was charged, that she said that?—Before she was charged, while they were in the office.

9757. (Chairman.) You remained in the room where she was?—I stood by the side of the dock.

9758. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Did you hear her ask for a doctor?—Yes.

9759. When was that—before she was charged or after, do you remember; it is some time ago now?—I could not say whether it was before or after.

9760. But you heard her ask for a doctor?—I heard her ask for a doctor.

9761. Who did she ask to send for a doctor?—Inspector Billson.

9762. What did the Inspector say?—I believe he said it was not necessary to send for a doctor; she was not charged with being drunk.

9763. Was she satisfied with that?—I believe she was.

9764. (Chairman.) She did not persist in her application for a doctor after that?—No, not to the best of my knowledge.

9765. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Did she make any complaint in your hearing against Atkinson?—No.

9766. Or you?—No.

9767. Were you there all the time she was there, or when did you go out?—I went out as soon as she was taken out of the dock. I went back to my beat.

9768. Up to that time had she made any complaint in your hearing against Atkinson or against you?—No.

9769. (Earl Russell.) About how long before Mrs. Braham spoke to you was she in sight?—A matter of 10 or 15 yards.

9770. Did they come into the street where you were by turning a corner?—No; the road slightly bends, that is all. I was standing about the middle of the road.

9771. And you sighted them when they came round the bend?—Yes.

9772. At that time you noticed nothing out of the ordinary about her?—No, they were coming along together.

9773. You saw Atkinson taking the woman to the station in the ordinary way?—Yes.

9774. Nothing unusual?—Nothing unusual.

9775. Any struggling of any sort?—No, not until she stopped against me.

9776. When they got opposite you you say the lady spoke first. What exactly did she say?—She said: "Let me go. Oh, let me go."

9777. Was she speaking to you or speaking to Atkinson?—To me.

9778. You had not got hold of her?—No.

9779. Can you be quite sure that she did not say, "Let me go from this man," or anything of that kind?—I do not remember her saying that.

9780. You explained to her that, being in custody, she could not be allowed to go, and that she must go to the station?—Yes.

9781. Did she say anything further on that?—No.

9782. Did she begin to struggle when you said that?—No.

9783. Did she try, while you were there, to drag herself away from Atkinson?—When she stopped opposite me she tried to pull her arm away from Police Constable Atkinson as she asked me to let her go. She seemed to think that I could make him release her—that was my opinion.

9784. After she had pulled away from him like that did she try to get nearer to you or further from you as well as further from him?—I stepped towards him.

9785. But was the direction she pulled herself away from Atkinson towards you or going away from you?—Towards the other side of the road.

9786. Away from both of you?—Yes.

9787. After she had pulled herself away did she continue to struggle in any way?—No.

9788. After this conversation you had did she begin struggling?—No.

9789. What did Atkinson say to you? Did he ask you to help him?—He asked me to help him to the station with her.

9790. Did you see any reason for being asked for that help?—I did not know whether he had had any previous trouble with her in getting along the road.

9791. I want to know what you saw yourself. You did not see anything?—No.

9792. But, being asked, you took hold of her other arm?—Yes. I was on the beat against the station.

9793. But you saw nothing yourself that made it necessary for two constables to take her?—No.

9794. Did she say anything more that you remember on the way to the station?—No.

9795. Did Atkinson tell you anything about what had happened?—No.

9796. You had no conversation about what the charge was?—No.

9797. When did you first learn what the charge against this woman was?—When I arrived in the station.

9798. When you heard him tell the Inspector?—Yes.

9799. When you got to the station was Mrs. Braham taken to the dock at once?—I think she was put straight into the dock.

9800. Did Atkinson then and there make the charge?—Yes.

9801. What did he say—"I charge this woman with being drunk and disorderly"?—Yes, in the usual manner.

9802. Before her?—Yes.

9803. You cannot say for certain whether she heard it or not?—I expect she heard it. She was within a very reasonable distance.

9804. Was she excited and upset by this time?—A trifle. She was pretty quiet, but I could see she had been a trifle excited. She was pretty well exhausted and breathing fast. She smelt of drink.

9805.—Was she crying?—No, I do not think she was crying.

9806. Did she behave in any way like a drunken woman after the time you came to help Atkinson to take her to the station?—No.

9807. When she spoke to you did her voice sound like the voice of a drunken person?—No, she spoke pretty clearly, but I could smell her breath when she spoke and put her face to mine.

9808. I am told in the case of a person who has even had one glass of beer you could smell the breath. Is not that true?—I could not say. You might if you smelt him directly after he had drunk it. We very often smell a prisoner's breath.

9809. Then, except that she dragged herself away from Atkinson when she first appealed to you, you would not say that she struggled to get away from him, or continued to struggle?—No.

9810. You do not agree with Atkinson about that?—No, she did not struggle—not after I came on the scene.

9811. Immediately that Atkinson said he charged her with being drunk and disorderly, did the Inspector then and there take him away to his office?—Yes, after he had looked at the woman a matter of a few seconds.

9812. Your account of what happened is that the woman was put in the dock, the Inspector said "What is the charge," and Atkinson said "Drunk and disorderly"?—Yes.

9813. Then you say the Inspector looked at the woman and beckoned Atkinson into his private office?—Yes.

9814. Did you go with him?—No.

9815. Then you do not know what happened?—No.

9816. Did you hear any fresh or different charge made when they came back?—I heard the Inspector say "She will be charged with disorderly conduct."

9817. Did you hear the charge read over to Mrs. Braham?—No, I had left the station then.

9818. After they came back from the Inspector's office?—I left the station when she was charged.

9819. You did not have to sign the charge sheet yourself?—No.

9820. When she was charged the second time you were not there you say, if she was charged the second time?—I was there when it was put on the charge sheet, but I was not required any more, and I left the station.

9821. Do I understand it was not written on the charge sheet when Atkinson first said "Drunk and disorderly." That was not written down?—No.

9822. Instead of that the Inspector took him away and had a conversation with him?—Yes.

9823. Which you did not hear?—No.

9824. Then the Inspector came back and then the charge was put on the charge sheet?—Yes.

9825. And you heard the Inspector say "She will be charged with disorderly conduct"?—Yes.

9826. Did you hear that charge read out to Mrs. Braham then?—Yes.

9827. You heard it read out to her?—Yes.

9828. What answer did she make?—I do not think she made any reply at all.

9829. No reply whatever?—Not that I can remember.

9830. You heard her make a statement about having been to see some sick people and staying late with them?—Yes.

9831. At what stage did she make that statement?—When Inspector Billson and Police Constable 800 were in the office.

9832. To you alone?—I stood by the dock there, with the reserve man with me.

9833. She did not say that in answer to a charge from the Inspector?—No, she may have done afterwards.

9834. Will you just look at your report of the 10th June. You wrote a report on this case on the 10th June, and you say there "At the station in answer to the charge she said she had been to see some sick people"?—It is some time ago.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Just look at your report. (Document handed to witness.)

9835. (Earl Russell.) That was the report you wrote a few days afterwards?—Yes.

9836. You have looked at that. Do you think she said that in answer to the charge or that she said it to you alone?—I think she must have said it in answer to the charge now that I have seen the report.

9837. You think you were mistaken?—I do.

9838. I do not want to be unfair to you. You think you were mistaken in saying you were alone with her, and that she said this while the Inspector was in the office with Atkinson?—Yes.

9839. Then if she said it in answer to the charge Atkinson was there when she was charged?—Certainly.

9840. And must have heard it?—Certainly.

9841. And the Inspector must have heard it?—I should say so.

9842. He was the person who charged her, and he read over the charge to her?—Yes.

9843. You agree now you think that she said that in answer to the charge?—Yes, I made that report out a few nights afterwards, and I could remember it better then than I can now.

9844. Did you hear Mrs. Braham give her evidence to-day?—I heard a little bit of it.

9845. Can you remember now whether what she said about the sick people was practically what she said to-day—that is to say, that she had been staying with this lady and that a constable had run her in when she was doing nothing but going to catch a tram to join her husband?—No, I do not remember her saying all that.

9846. All you remember is about the sick people?—Yes.

9847. During the time you were in the company of this prisoner and Atkinson you did not see any disorderly conduct?—No.

9848. Did you consider yourself that the woman was drunk?—She had been drinking.

9849. So I have heard you say. She was not asked that herself, but do you consider now that she was drunk or was not drunk?—No.

9850. You think she was not?—No.

9851. When you were asked to make this report can you remember being asked to make it? Were you asked by Inspector Hamilton or by Superintendent Doyle, or whom?—The Station Inspector I believe to the best of my knowledge. It was in the middle of the night when I was called to the station to make that report out.

9852. The report of the 10th June was made in the middle of the night?—About three in the morning, if I remember rightly.

9853. Were you told what it was wanted for?—Yes.

9854. What were you told?—Concerning Louise Braham.

9855. I quite understand who you were told it was about, but were you told what it was the Commissioner wanted to be informed about?—No.

9856. You were simply told to report what you knew about Louise Braham?—Yes, about that case.

9857. Everything or part of it?—To report all the facts.

9858. Without any exceptions?—Certainly.

9859. Everything you could remember at that time?—Yes.

9860. You knew at that time, did you not, that Atkinson had charged the woman with being drunk?—He had preferred the charge of being drunk.

9861. And that the Inspector had not taken it?—Yes.

9862. You did not mention that in your report, did you?—No, I should have done if she had been charged with being drunk.

9863. Because the Inspector did not take the charge you thought it was not necessary to mention it?—Yes.

9864. That is why I began by asking you whether you were to report all the facts or only some of the facts. Did you understand when the report was asked for that you were asked to report simply on the charge of disorderly conduct that came before the magistrate or on everything that happened that night in connection with this woman?—Everything that happened, but as she was not charged with being drunk I did not think it was necessary to state that.

9865. And you did not state either in this report at the time that her breath smelt of drink?—I might not have done.

9866. You may as well look at the report?—(Mr. R. D. Muir.) No, he does not state it.

9867. (Earl Russell.) You were present at the police court the next day?—Yes.

9868. You gave evidence then?—Yes.

9869. What did you say about disorderly conduct in giving that evidence?—I never witnessed any disorderly conduct.

9870. You stated that. Is that what you told the Magistrate?—He did not ask me for it.

9871. You were put in the witness box at the police court after Atkinson had given his evidence?—Yes.

9872. What did you tell the Magistrate? Did you tell him just what is in your report, that you were called by this constable and assisted to take her to the station?—Yes, and that she asked me to let her go.

9873. Did you tell the Magistrate that you saw any disorderly conduct?—No.

9874. Did you tell him that she smelt of drink at that time?—I am not aware that I did.

9875. Have you made any other written report besides the one I have here, that I have just given you to look at?—No.

9876. When did you first state to anybody that this woman smelt of drink?—The next morning to Police-constable Atkinson, when we came off duty.

9877. You told Atkinson that?—Yes.

9878. Discussing it between you?—Yes.

9879. Did you discuss the action of the Inspector in refusing to take the charge?—No.

9880. But you thought he was right in not taking the charge, did you not?—Yes.

P.C. A. Allen.

23 Oct. 1906.

9881. (Chairman.) How long had you been in the Force at that time?—Four years last June.

9882. At that time you had only been two years?—Barely that—about eighteen months, I think.

9883. Did you know Atkinson at all personally?—No, not personally.

9884. Did you come across him officially before this?—Occasionally.

9885. Were you at the same police court in the same case with him?—No.

9886. You say it was about ten or fifteen yards off that you first saw Atkinson and Mrs. Braham, I understand?—Yes.

9887. How was he bringing her along?—Holding her arm.

9888. Show me where he was holding her arm?—About here. (Pointing to the middle of the arm.) I could not say whether he was holding her left arm or her right arm now.

9889. When she saw you did she rush forward?—No.

9890. Or struggle to get away from him?—She just pulled herself on one side.

9891. From the police-constable?—Yes.

9892. Did she seem glad to see you?—Yes.

9893. And ask you to let her go?—Yes.

9894. Did you understand by that that she thought you had the power to order Atkinson to let her go?—That was my belief at the time.

9895. When you answered her, as you have told us, she went quietly, I understand?—Yes.

9896. And you did not put your hand upon her at all?—I took hold of the other arm.

9897. Why?—Police-constable 800 asked me to assist him to the station with her.

9898. She was not resisting?—No, but I did not know whether she had been struggling.

9899. She was not struggling then. You have told me she was not struggling then?—No, only when she pulled herself on one side when she saw me.

9900. And then she appealed to you—to use Atkinson's words?—Yes.

9901. You told her you could not let her go?—Yes.

9902. Did she struggle still to get away?—No, she stood still.

9903. Why did you catch hold of her arm?—She seemed as if she did not want to go any further.

9904. I thought you told me a moment ago that she went quietly?—After I took hold of her arm and persuaded her to go.

9905. Do you mean to say she stopped and resisted?—She stood still when I asked her to go to the station, as she was in custody.

9906. What did she say then?—She said, "Oh, let me go."

9907. Once more she said that?—Yes, two or three times, and I believe, to the best of my knowledge, she was saying it before she came up to me.

9908. You thought it was necessary to take hold of her arm?—I did, sir, and as soon as I did she walked quietly to the station.

9909. (Mr. Dickinson.) A question about these reports. I think you said you were told to write your report late at night?—Yes.

9910. What day was that?—I could not tell you the exact day; it may have been two or three nights afterwards.

9911. It is dated the 10th June, and the event happened on the 6th June?—Yes

9912. How did it come about that you were told to write this report at that time. Is it a usual thing?—I was on duty.

9913. You happened to be on duty?—Near the station.

9914. Who else was on duty at that time at the station?—Police-constable 133.

9915. Who is that?—Police-constable Gribble.

9916. Who else?—Police-constable Varney—I forget his number now.

9917. Who else?—I could not tell you who the station officer was now. I do not remember.

9918. Was Atkinson there?—No, I did not see him there.

9919. Were Varney and Gribble also asked to write a report?—I believe they were, but not while I was doing mine.

9920. You say you believe they were. What makes you believe they were?—I heard afterwards that they had to make out reports as well.

9921. Are you sure they did not make them at the same time they were on duty at the station?—They were on duty at the station.

9922. Were they not asked to make a report then?—I could not say. I went into the library and made mine.

9923. Do you know where they made theirs?—No, I made mine, and went back out on my beat again.

9924. How do you set about writing reports like this? This one you have written here is very neatly written. Is that the first bit of paper you wrote on, or did you write it out in pencil before?—I wrote it out roughly with a piece of pencil on paper beforehand.

9925. Do you know if they wrote out theirs roughly on a piece of paper?—I could not say.

9926. (Chairman.) Is that your handwriting?—Yes.

9927. (Mr. Dickinson.) You had no consultation with them?—No.

9928. And you did not see their reports?—No.

9929. Do you know at all whether they saw your report?—That I could not say. I handed it to the officer inside.

9930. I see that both you and these other constables refer specially to the fact that Mrs. Braham said she wanted to see a doctor when the Inspector said it was not necessary, as she was not charged with being drunk. When did it first occur to your mind to put down that statement—when you were writing the report, or had you talked it over before?—Whilst I was making my report out.

9931. Do you always write these reports quite on your own account?—Yes.

9932. Without any advice?—Yes.

9933. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You have told us Mrs. Braham said, when she saw you, a good many times, "Let me go"?—Yes.

9934. That is all she said?—That is all.

9935. Did you know what Atkinson had arrested her for?—No.

9936. You did not know one way or the other?—No.

9937. Have you ever said that she said "Let me go; I am sorry"?—I may have done.

9938. You have told us a good many times what she said, which is "Let me go." There is all the difference in the world, is not there, in the addition of the words "I am sorry"? Let me call attention to your own report. In your own handwriting, when you put down the words, there is nothing about "I am sorry." The words are "Let me go." You wrote that on the 10th June—that is, four days after the event, and that is what you recollected of it then?—Yes.

9939. That is, I suppose, what she said?—Yes.

9940-1. That is your recollection of what she said at this date?—Yes.

9942. There is nothing about being sorry?—I think that is about right.

9943. I want you to tell me, if you can, what is the meaning of it? I see from Inspector Billson's report, which is made on the 16th June, he says: "The latter Police-constable," that is you, Allen, "was not a witness of the disorderly behaviour, but both said," that is you and Atkinson, "that the woman requested them to let her go as she was sorry." As far as you are concerned that appears to be a mistake, does it not?—It may have been; she may have said she was sorry in the station after I had gone.

9944. As far as you personally are concerned, have you ever said to the Inspector that she said she was sorry?—No.

9945. When he said they both said it, you think he is making a mistake?—He may have done.

9946. You could not have been making a mistake. You could not have said that, could you?—Not that I am aware of. She may have said it in the station in my hearing.

9947. What do you mean by "She may have said it in my hearing"? If she had said it in your hearing, I suppose you would have remembered it?—There may have been a lot of things you might miss in such a long time.

9948. But you would not miss them four days afterwards?—You might.

9949. I can quite understand your missing them now, but I am speaking of your report of the 10th June, 1903, four days afterwards. You could not make a mistake as to an expression of that kind, could you?—Mistakes do happen, sir.

9950. A mistake of that kind in making a statement of what happened four days before? Do you appreciate the importance of it, because by the addition of the words "I am sorry" it suggests that she was admitting she had been doing wrong, and that she was sorry for it. In the story you have told us again and again, and in your report of the 10th June, you never state anywhere the words "I am sorry," but only state as what she said "Let me go." The reason I am putting it to you is that I find in the Inspector's report of the 16th June that statement that you and Atkinson had said that she was sorry. I am putting to you, so far as you are concerned, did you ever say that she said she was sorry?—I may have done. I may have forgotten to put that in the report.

9951. You may have forgotten. Which do you think it is now?—I think I forgot to put that in the report.

9952. You think now that she did say it?—I do.

9953. And when you have been telling us all she said again and again, until I had reminded you of what the Inspector says you said, you had forgotten those important words?—All I remembered was the facts in my report.

9954. I agree. That is what I should have thought you would have remembered. That report is what you wrote as a statement of fact that you remembered at the time?—Yes.

P.C. A. Allen.

23 Oct. 1906.

9955. You did not remember at the time you wrote that report that she had used the expression, "I am sorry"?—No.

9956. Does it not occur to you that if you did not remember it at that time—an important statement as it is—that she did not make it to you in your hearing?—She may have done, and she may have not.

9957. Or somebody may have told you that she did afterwards?—Not that I am aware of.

9958. Do you not think that that is what might have happened?—No.

9959. How did you get to those words to the Inspector? If you say you used them to the Inspector, how did you get to them?—I do not remember using them to the Inspector.

9960. If the thing had taken place, you would have used them, and you would have told him. If she had said it, you would have told him?—Yes, if I remembered all the facts.

9961. And all you remembered at the time was that she had used the expression, "Let me go"?—Yes.

9962. In fact, from what you have told the learned Chairman, she was appealing to you to let her go as if you were in authority, and could order Atkinson to let her go?—Yes.

9963. And that is how you understood it?—Yes.

9964. There was no admission in any way on her part of any offence?—No.

9965. And you never understood that she was admitting anything?—No.

9966. Therefore, there was nothing for her to say she was sorry for?—No.

9967. And at that moment you do not remember that she actually did say it?—No; I do not know whether she did or whether she did not.

9968. (Mr. Whitmore.) Do you think you did say to the Inspector that she had said she was sorry?—I do not remember saying so at all.

9969. Not to the Inspector?—No.

Inspector William Billson, sworn.

9970. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) You are an Inspector of the W Division, and on the 6th June, in the early morning, you were in charge of the station at Clapham when Louise Braham was brought in by Police Constable Atkinson and Police Constable Allen?—Yes.

9971. What charge was preferred against her?—Drunk, and behaving in a disorderly manner.

9972. Who preferred that charge?—Police Constable Atkinson.

9973. What did you do upon that?—I said, "What was the disorder?"

9974. To Atkinson?—Yes. Atkinson said that he had seen her stop a man or men in the South Lambeth Road, that he crossed the road to speak to her or caution her, but as she was apparently a respectable woman he did not speak, but allowed her to pass, and stood on one side to allow her to pass. I forget the exact words, but I believe at that time she said something about "Why" or "What are you interfering with me for?"—some such words. The lady at that time said to him, "Why are you interfering with me?"

9975. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) He said she had used those words to him?—Yes. Atkinson replied he was not interfering with her, and requested her to go home quietly; that she had then raised her voice and commenced shouting, and at that time a gentleman was passing, and the lady at that time accused him of assaulting her. The police constable again requested her to proceed home quietly, but she continued shouting about taking his number and being interfered with by him, and by her shouting, as she was disturbing the public, the police constable took her into custody. At the station I considered the woman was not drunk, and told the police constable so.

9976. Where did you tell him that?—At the office door. He had explained to me when I asked him the question, "What was the disorderly behaviour?" I went into the office to fetch the charge-sheet I had in the office, and called Atkinson to me. I said, "I consider the lady or woman is not drunk, and I shall not take the drunkenness, but I shall simply charge her with being disorderly." Nothing was said. When the charge was read over to Mrs. Braham, she said, "I want to see a doctor." I said, "Do you complain of illness?" She said, "No; I am not ill or drunk." I said, "You are not charged with being drunk, so I consider a doctor is unnecessary," and no doctor was fetched. The police constable at that time said, before he had met the second witness Allen, she had asked him to let her go, saying she was sorry, and also she repeated that when they met Allen. I asked Allen if that was so—whether he witnessed any disorderly behaviour, and he said, "No," but it was so that she had said that at the time. A document was then sent to the husband, residing at Balham, and she was fetched out between one and two.

Inspector W. Billson.

9977. 1.50 is the time the husband arrived?—Yes; she was allowed to occupy a chair in the charge-room at that time, and she was not detained in the cells.

9978. Did she at that time, in your hearing, say where she had been and how it was she was out so late?—Yes, but I forget whether it was before or after the charge was taken. She had been to see some relatives or some sick person in South Lambeth Road.

9979. She stated that in your hearing?—Yes.

9980. And you were satisfied she was not drunk?—I considered she was not drunk, but I think she had been drinking. I think so.

9981. You were satisfied she was not drunk?—She was not drunk.

9982. There was no justification for making that charge, and accordingly you did not take it?—No.

9983. Did the lady make any complaint about her treatment by the constables?—I asked her to explain

Inspector W. Billson.

23 Oct. 1906.

what she meant by "being interfered with," and she said the constable had assaulted her by taking hold of her, but on investigating the charge I found it was when he took her into custody when he put his hand upon her. She said nothing further than that had taken place. Nothing further with regard to any assault or any kind of assault was mentioned at the station beyond the police constable taking her into custody.

9984. Atkinson had said to you that the lady complained to him about his interfering with her?—Yes.

9985. You thereupon asked the lady what she meant by that?—Yes; she meant by that when he stood in front of her. She considered he crossed the road and stood in front of her.

9986. What did she say further about that—anything?—No.

9987. You said something about his taking hold of her?—She meant the time that she was taken into custody.

9988. (Chairman.) I took down a moment ago that she said the constable had assaulted her?—I meant to convey by that that the assault was when he put his hand on her taking her into custody.

9989. In answer to Mr. Muir you said most distinctly that she said the constable had assaulted her?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Then you said you investigated it. What was it passed about the assault? Who said it first—the constable, the lady, or you?—As far as I can recollect it was the lady.

9990. What did she say about it, and how was it she came to mention it?—I forget the exact words now, but it dwindled down to the statement that it was simply when he took hold of her.

9991. Then the lady did say something about an assault?—Yes.

9992. By the constable upon her?—Yes.

9993. And you investigated that by asking questions?—Yes.

9994. And in the result what did you find she meant by the assault?—Simply that the police constable put his hand on her to arrest her.

9995. Did she make any further complaint of any assault other than that?—No.

9996. When did you see your own report last—I suppose some time ago?—I had a glance at it last night.

9997. Will you look at it now. (Report handed to witness.) "Mrs. Braham said she had been visiting friends"—now read on?—"Mrs. Braham said she had been visiting friends, and while on her way home the police constable, 800 W, roughly pushed by her. Resenting such conduct, she asked him why he had assaulted her in that manner."

9998. Do you remember now that that was the nature of the assault that she complained of?—Yes.

9999. Beyond that charge of assault did she make any other charge of assault of any other nature than the pushing by her which you mention in your report?—Also that he had caught hold of her.

10000. Anything further in the nature of an assault?—No.

10001. You were due for your leave on that very morning?—Yes, I commenced on that morning.

10002. When did you go off duty?—At 6.

10003. You went for your holiday, I think to Westgate?—That is so.

10004. What train did you take?—A very early one I think it was, or I may have gone by the boat.

10005. At any rate, had you left the station before the telegram requesting your attendance at the police court was received there?—I do not think I received one respecting my attendance at the police court.

10006. There was a telegram sent to your station requesting your attendance at the police court—that was at 11.45?—It was not transmitted to my address at Westgate.

10007. Had you left the station at the time that telegram arrived?—Yes.

10008. (Chairman.) But you knew the case would come on in the morning?—Exactly.

10009. I am not suggesting any blame to you for going off duty at 6 o'clock and going on your holiday, but is that customary although you know a case in which you are a necessary witness is coming on?—If we think we shall be required certainly we should remain and go to the police court.

10010. Your view was that being simply the Inspector who had taken the charge you would not probably be called for the prosecution?—Certainly.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) The telegram is marked as received 11.45 a.m.

10011. (Earl Russell.) I do not want to go into the matters which concern yourself and which have been dealt with by the Commissioner, but you were cautioned on the ground that, there being a question about this charge, you should have taken more care about it. That was one of the grounds on which you were cautioned?—No, I think not.

10012. (Chairman.) There need be no question about this, because we have got it in writing: "Inspector Billson clearly failed to use proper discretion in dealing with the charge, and showed negligence in not attending the court." Is that what you were cautioned for?—That is so.

10013. (Earl Russell.) I do not want to deal with your conduct now—the Commissioner dealt with that—but I want you to try and let us understand everything you can about Atkinson. You say when he came in he made the charge. In the first place, the woman was put into the dock?—Yes.

10014. And he said, "Drunk and disorderly"?—Yes.

10015. Then you say you asked for particulars of the disorder?—Yes.

10016. Were those particulars of the disorder given to you in the hearing of Mrs. Braham?—Yes.

10017. Whilst she was standing in the dock?—Yes.

10018. And before this interview in your private office?—Yes.

10019. This is what you say Atkinson said: "That he had seen her in South Lambeth Road stop a man or men." You are not sure now whether he said one or more than one?—No.

10020. That he crossed the street in order to caution her, and that when he got there and saw she was a respectable woman he stood on one side and allowed her to pass, and she asked him why he was interfering with her. With one exception of his telling you that, seeing she was a respectable woman, he stepped on one side and allowed her to pass, that is exactly the sort of evidence that would be given in an ordinary charge of solicitation, is it not?—No, not hardly.

10021. Surely if a woman is seen speaking to a man or men, and when a policeman approaches her she says "Why do you interfere with me?" that is the sort of thing that might happen, is it not?—Partly, but not in a case like that. It is always the practice to give a caution to these women.

10022. (Chairman.) "To these women"?—Speaking of what the constable thought she was.

10023. In answer to Earl Russell's question I understood you to say that Police Constable Atkinson distinctly used language which suggested to your mind that when he crossed the road he thought it was a case of solicitation?—No. The words used were, "He saw her stop a man or men."

10024. You did not follow me. When he crossed the road he did so because he thought it was a case of solicitation?—He meant to convey that. I did not put that to him, but he meant to convey it.

10025. "Atkinson said he had seen her stop a man or men in South Lambeth Road, and that he had crossed the street to caution her, and seeing she was a perfectly respectable woman he did not do so?—Yes.

10026. (Mr. Dickinson.) That conveyed to your mind the impression that when he crossed the road he was doing so because he thought there was a case of solicitation which he might attend to?—Yes.

10027. (Earl Russell.) If this had been a case of solicitation in fact, there would have been sufficient in her soliciting several men to support a charge of disorderly conduct, would not there? That would be the sort of evidence you generally give?—It is generally a little stronger than that to make a charge of soliciting.

10028. You have to say something about the woman's character?—The character of the woman has nothing to do with it in a case of soliciting.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You are drawing a distinction between character and occupation, are you not?

10029. (Chairman.) What do you mean?—Married women—so-called respectable married women—have been charged and convicted for solicitation in addition to the unfortunates in the streets.

10030. Do you mean to say that, according to your version of the law, a constable has a right to stop a woman from speaking to a man in the street even though she is not a prostitute or a night walker?—No, I do not wish to convey that.

10031. What do you mean?—Lord Russell mentioned that the case would be strong enough for a charge of solicitation in addition if she belonged to the unfortunate class, I believe Lord Russell mentioned. I say it is not a question of the unfortunate class or a so-called respectable married woman.

10032. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Do you mean that the offence of soliciting has nothing to do with that, or the charge of disorderly conduct?—The question of a woman being an unfortunate or a married woman makes no difference to the charge of solicitation.

10033. (Chairman.) No. Do you mean that a married woman may come within the reach of the law of solicitation?—That is all I meant to convey.

(Chairman.) We are all agreed about that.

10034. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) She may be married and at the same time a night walker?—Yes.

10035. (Earl Russell.) Anyhow, up to the time that he had cautioned her there was nothing that would constitute disorderly conduct if she was not soliciting?—He had not cautioned her.

10036. Up to the time he had crossed the street to caution her and got out of her way?—No, nothing.

10037. Then he told you that instead of cautioning her he stood on one side to let her pass?—Yes.

10038. Apparently without putting himself in her way or anything of that sort?—Yes.

10039. And on his doing that she turned round on him and said "Why do you interfere with me?"—Yes.

10040. And he asked her to go home quietly, and instead of doing that she raised her voice and began shouting?—Yes.

10041. Was that conduct that you were able to understand when he told you on any assumption other than that the woman was drunk or not respectable?—I regarded it then that the woman had clearly committed herself as behaving in a disorderly manner in the street.

10041*. But did it seem to you like the conduct of a sane person?—The woman was sane enough.

10042. What I am asking you is whether respectable women do begin to shout to constables in the street when a constable stands on one side to let them pass?—Yes, in South Lambeth generally.

10043. It is the custom in South Lambeth?—Yes.

10044. (Chairman.) You say the police-constable told you, according to your own report, "On the police-constable's crossing, the woman came towards him, stopped in front of him, and said 'What are you looking at?' and 'Why are you interfering?'" Do you mean to say that you consider that, taking that statement to be literally true, to be disorder?—No.

10045. Or illegal. What has the woman done that is illegal up to that point?—Nothing at all up to that point.

(Earl Russell.) He did not say that. He said it was the custom in South Lambeth of women to do these things.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I do not think he meant quite that.

10046. (Earl Russell.) What do you mean?—Respecting what?

10047. I asked you whether you think the conduct which P.C. Atkinson had described to you was intelligible. Did it seem a reasonable or likely thing for a respectable woman to have done?—Yes, I think so. It seemed feasible at the time, and I still think so.

10048. A woman who was respectable and who was not drunk?—Yes.

10049. You think that was conduct which you might expect?—I took it as the conduct that was displayed.

10050. You found it possible to believe?—Yes.

10051. Then according to the story Atkinson told you she went on shouting, and she became more violent, and a gentleman passed.

(Chairman.) Do not put the thing too much against yourself, Earl Russell. The constable does not say she became violent. "The police-constable informed her that he was not interfering with her, and requested her to go home, when she became very excited and shouted that she would take his number for assaulting her."

10052. (Earl Russell.) That is a little later. What I have here is that she raised her voice and commenced shouting. That is what Atkinson told Inspector Billson as far as he is able to remember. At that stage Atkinson told you that a gentleman passed along the road?—Yes.

10053. Would you mind telling me if you understood what class of life this man was in. Do you mean a working man?—Which man are you speaking of?

10054. This gentleman who passed along the road at the time of this conversation. Did you understand from Atkinson what class of life he was in?—No.

10055. You did not understand whether he was a working man or what he was?—No, I did not.

10056. Did you never inquire from Atkinson what sort of person it was?—I may have done at the time.

10057. But you do not remember now?—I do not remember whether the question was put.

10058. And he told you that when this man appeared the lady accused him of assault, and the lady turned to this man and said "Did you see the constable assault me?" That is what Atkinson told you at the time, is it?—That is so.

10059. And thereupon he again requested her to proceed home quietly, and when he did that she commenced shouting again, and this is what you said: "Commenced shouting about taking his number and about being interfered with by him"?—Yes.

10060. Did that also seem to you a creditable story for a woman who was respectable and sober?—Yes, I think so under the circumstances.

10061. In South Lambeth. And then because she was shouting and disturbing the public peace he took her into custody?—That is so.

10062. You believed the whole of that story, and believing it you said that in your opinion that constituted disorder, and you would take the charge of disorderly conduct?—Yes.

10063. Now about the drunkenness. What opinion did you form exactly as to the woman being drunk?—I could see no evidence at all of drunkenness about the woman.

10064. Could you smell drink in her breath?—I do not think I was near enough for that.

10065. What you say in your report is that "I failed to observe any sign of drunkenness," and that is what you say now, I understand, that you failed to observe any sign?—Yes.

10066. You did not smell drink in her breath?—No.

10067. Or see any other signs?—No.

10068. You were told by the police constable, of course, that he thought she was drunk, because he charged her with it?—Yes.

10069. Did both Atkinson and Allen tell you that?—No, only Atkinson.

10070. Did Atkinson tell you that her breath smelt of drink?—Yes.

10071. Did Allen tell you that her breath smelt of drink?—He may have done. I would not say; I could not say.

10072. You did not think it worth while verifying that with your own nose?—No.

10073. Although they had told you that they thought the woman was drunk, and you might have smelt the drink, you made up your mind she was not drunk, and did not trouble to see whether her breath smelt yourself?—It would not be sufficient to charge her with drunkenness if her breath did smell.

10074. But you did not in fact do it?—No.

10075. Did you form the opinion that she had been

Inspector W. Billson.

23 Oct. 1906.

drinking?—She may have been drinking. Of course, she was very excited at the time.

10076. Did you form an opinion that she had been drinking?—I should say that she had.

10077. On what did you base that opinion. What facts did you observe that made you think that she had been drinking?—Excitability, and the way she had acted in the street.

10078. The way you had been told she acted?—Yes.

10079. I have already told you that part of that acting would only agree with the conduct of a drunken woman, but you have made up your mind that she was not drunk. You think she had lost all self-control, all the same?—There was no sign of drunkenness about the woman.

10080. On what did you form the opinion that she had been drinking? Was it simply on what the constable told you?—On her excitable manner. She was not exactly thick in her speech, but she did not speak so plainly as I thought she should have done.

10081. You know that neither Atkinson or Allen have said she was the least thick in her speech?—No.

10082. You tell us now you think she was rather thick in her speech?—Yes, I think she was.

(Chairman.) That is a sign of drunkeness, I suppose.

10083. (Earl Russell.) It was on that fact that you observed that you formed the opinion that she had been drinking?—Yes.

10084. Did you communicate that opinion to Atkinson, as he says? Did you say to him in your office "She is not drunk, but she has been drinking"?—Yes, I think I used those words.

10085. That is true?—Yes.

10086. You know now that Atkinson was punished for making a charge of drunkenness which he was not able to sustain?—It is not very clear about that punishment, I think.

10087. "The police constable may in the first instance have been guilty of an error of judgment only, but his subsequent action in preferring a charge of drunkenness against a sober person looks as though he sought to make the case stronger. He will also be strictly cautioned." Were you aware of that?—Yes.

10088. You know now, do you not, that Atkinson was punished for making a charge of drunkenness against a sober person?—Yes.

10089. Did you realise when you refused to take the charge of drunkenness that it might lead to Atkinson being punished, and that it might be a serious thing for him?—No.

10090. You did not appreciate that?—No.

10091. You did not think it of importance one way or the other?—Not the slightest.

10092. Did you realise that to a respectable woman it was rather an important thing to have a suggestion made that she was drunk if there was no ground for it?—If she had been charged with it she would have had every assistance.

10093. Atkinson brought the woman into the dock, and said, "I charge this woman with being drunk and disorderly." It is perfectly true that the Inspector would not take the charge of drunkenness, but at the time, to your knowledge, she was charged with being drunk, was she not?—That was the charge preferred.

10094. Why, when this lady asked for a doctor, did you not send for one?—I considered there was no necessity.

10095. If she wanted a certificate of her condition, and if she wanted somebody who would say she was not drunk. and possibly not smelling of drink, do you not think it would have been wiser to have sent for a doctor?—At that stage, no.

10096. It was entirely in your discretion, was it? You had power to send for a doctor or not to send for him?—Certainly.

10097. You asked her, according to her statement, whether she was ill?—Yes.

10098. She said, "No; I am not ill and I am not drunk, but I should like to have a doctor"?—No, at the time she did not. The doctor was not mentioned again.

10099. There was one stage at which she asked for a doctor?—That is so.

10100. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That was the answer given when the Inspector asked her "Did she want a doctor," and she said "I am not ill and I am not drunk." That is what you mean?—Yes.

10101. (Earl Russell.) This is according to your own report: "I informed her that if she felt ill I would send for one, when she replied, 'No, I am not ill, but he could tell that I am not drunk.'" So far as you remember, is that what she said?—Exactly.

10102. And she would like to have a doctor to make it perfectly certain by independent evidence that she was not drunk?—The lady thought at that time she was being charged with drunkenness.

10103. Whether charged officially or not charged officially, you understood that she would like to have a doctor to satisfy her as to her condition?—If she was charged with drunkenness. I took it like that.

10104. You mean to say when you told her that she was not charged with being drunk, because she did not persist, you did not send for a doctor?—The subject had been dropped.

10105. Would you have sent for a doctor if she had persisted?—Yes.

10106. You would?—Yes.

—10107. The only reason you did not send for him was because she only asked once, and you thought she was satisfied with your answer?—Yes.

10108. You had made up your mind when you took this charge that she was a respectable woman, and not a night-walker?—Yes.

10109. You were quite clear about that?—Yes.

10110. You saw her husband when he bailed her out?—Ys.

10111. Did you understand what station of life they were in before they left?—Roughly, but I could not say exactly.

10112. Roughly, you understood they were in a respectable position?—Yes.

10113. When you knew all that, did you still think Atkinson's story was a reasonable one?—Yes.

10114. Did you hear Mrs. Braham at any time protest that she had not done any of the things that she was charged with?—No. She made no reply to the charge.

10115. But surely she did tell you—and I thought I understood you to say she did tell you—the reason for her being out so late, did she not?—Yes, about the friends.

10116. And you did not see any reason to disbelieve it?—No.

10117. She made that much reply. Did she protest against being brought there by the police-constable at all?—No.

10118. She did not complain of his having brought her to the police station at all?—As far as I can recollect at the time, no.

10119. Had he told you about the shouting?—Yes, and she heard it at the time.

10120. Did she not say there was no truth in that?—I do not think so 10121. She remained quite silent?—Yes, I believe she did.

10122. The only thing you think she did was to explain why she was out late?—Yes.

10123. Did she protest at all against the charge that she had been speaking to men?—She said something about the men had spoken to her.

10124. That is not quite what I asked you. Atkinson said he had been attracted to her, and gone across the road to her because she stopped men. Did she hear him tell you that?—Yes.

10125. Did she protest against that, or deny it in any way?—I think it was at that time she said the men had spoken to her.

10126. Did she say that she had not stopped any men?—Yes, I believe she did.

10127. Did she say she had not spoken to any men?—No, she did not say that. I think she said she had—she had answered them when they spoke to her.

10128. This is what you say in your report, which you made ten days afterwards: "Mrs. Braham denied having stopped a man, but stated that several men had looked at her as she passed, which she considered very offensive." You do not say there that she had spoken to any men, or that any men had spoken to her?—But this is three years ago.

10129. That is why I am reading your report. You think that is more accurate?—Exactly.

10130. She did not deny the statement about the men?—Yes, in that way.

10131. But you say she did not deny any of the statements about the struggling?—I do not think struggling was mentioned.

10132. Did she deny any of the statements about shouting?—No.

10133. Did she did deny the statement about being drunk?—Yes, she said she was not drunk.

10134. Of course you are accustomed to taking night charges?—Yes.

10135. If a respectable married woman is arrested when she is on her way to her lawful husband, you would expect to find her a little excited when she got into the police station, would you not?—Certainly.

10136. Was the condition of Mrs. Braham the hysterical condition which I think Atkinson spoke of?—No.

10137. Was it consistent with this?—No; I could not regard it as hysterical in any shape or form.

10138. Was her condition of excitability consistent with the shock to a respectable woman at being arrested and dragged to a police station at midnight?—Yes, you could regard it as such.

10139. You say that you asked her questions about what she meant by the constable interfering with her. Is that so?—Yes.

10140. You put questions to her?—Yes.

10141. In answer to that she said he had assaulted her?—Yes.

10142. And that he had put his hand on her?—Yes.

10143. And that he had caught hold of her?—Yes.

10144. Do you say that after investigating all those statements the only impression left on your mind was that she was simply complaining of his action in arresting her?—And, in addition, since the report, it was pointed out to me she alleged that he had roughly pushed against her.

10145. But apart from the rough pushing against her, the handling, you understood it was merely laying his hand on the woman to arrest her?—Yes.

10146. Nothing more?—Nothing more.

10147. The words she said were he assaulted her, and put his hand on her, and caught hold of her?—Yes.

10148. It did not at that time convey to your mind the suggestion of anything else?—No.

10149. I think you say in your report that Allen was not a witness of the disorderly behaviour?—Yes.

10150. Are you quite clear still that Allen told you that the woman had said she was sorry in his presence. You remember Allen was asked about that, and thought you must be mistaken?—I think it is quite correct that the question was repeated in Allen's presence—the words used by her, "Let me go; I am sorry." It is clearly impressed on my mind that those words were used.

10151. According to the statement you took it that those words were used both to Atkinson and to Allen?—Yes.

10152. (Mr. Whitmore.) Did you ask Allen whether he heard the words used, "Let me go; I am sorry"?—That was the second question to him—yes, I did.

10153. He answered "Yes"?—Yes.

10154. Do you think it is possible he may have been thinking of the first half of the sentence and not the second half?—The first question I put to him was, Did he witness disorder? Did he hear the woman say this to Atkinson? The first answer was "No," and then it was "Yes."

10155. The second question was, "Did you hear the words 'Let me go; I am sorry'"?—Yes.

10156. To that he answered "Yes"?—Yes.

10157. (Earl Russell.) Did you see the written reports of Allen and of Atkinson?—No.

10158. You never saw them at all?—No.

10159. But still, to the best of your recollection now, Allen told you at the time he heard the woman say, "Let me go; I am sorry"?—Yes, to the best of my recollection.

10160. Did you understand what she meant by that?—I should regard it that she was sorry for having done what she had.

10161. Shouting?—Yes.

10162. I understand no effort was made at any time to find this stranger, or to trace him so far as you know?—The man?

10163. Yes?—No. I asked the police constable should he know him again. He said "No."

10164. You asked the police constable if he should know him again?—Yes.

10165. But without asking for any description of the man?—If he would know the man again.

10166. But you did not ask him for any description of the man yourself?—No.

10167. What did the police constable say?—I forget now whether he said he would know him or not.

10168. You had understood that these people were people in a respectable position, and you understood that the woman was charged with being drunk, and in your opinion she was not drunk?—Yes.

10169. And you understood that generally she denied being disorderly? You will go as far as that, will you not?—No.

10170. You thought she admitted being disorderly?—Yes.

10171. Did not you think, even so, something more might be heard of this case?—No.

10172. You did not think it worth making a note of, or staying in town for?—No.

10173. Nor even to send for a doctor to corroborate the statement of the woman to help you in any way?—No.

10174. Or to help her?—I do not see how it would help her.

10175. (Mr. Dickinson.) I want to understand this from you. After this lady had been brought in, I suppose the first thing you did was to ask for the name and address?—No; we investigate the charge first, and see if there is a charge.

10176. How long does that take?—Not long. We usually investigate the charge first. The first thing, after investigating the charge, is to take the name and address—after we have decided to take the charge.

10177. When did you first know this lady's address?—About ten minutes after she was brought to the station.

10178. What is your usual course when people are brought in to the station who give you a name and address? Do you take any steps to check it?—Yes.

10179. What steps did you take to check it?—We sent a wire to the husband's address.

10180. You sent a wire to the husband's address?—I sent a wire to Balham station to inform the husband, and if he would bail her out.

10181. But that wire to Balham station did not arrive until half-past one. When did you send it?—I could not say now.

10182. Surely you have a recollection what took place. The lady was brought there at 20 minutes past 12. How soon after that did you send a wire to the other police station?—I cannot say, but I should think it was sent before that, because the husband was there at 1.50.

10183. Among these reports we have the fact that he came to the station at half-past one?—The wire must have been received.

(Chairman.) It might have been a telephonic message.

Inspector W. Billson.
2 Oct. 1906

10184. (Mr. Dickinson.) Did you or not send a telephonic message?—No, a telegraphic message.

10185. Was that sent by ordinary post, or by ordinary wire?—A police wire.

10186. So that the moment you send it you know it arrives at the end of its journey?—Yes.

10187. Did you get any answer to that?—I think the answer to it was that Mr. Braham was at Balham station inquiring about his wife, and that he would come over.

10188. Have you no method of checking an address by means of books?—Yes; the local directory is in use.

10189. Does it never occur to you to look at the local directory? You are not very far from Balham?—No.

10190. Do you look at the directory?—We should send for the husband.

10191. I want to ascertain what steps you take. When a woman or a man comes into the station who is apparently respectable and gives you a name and address, do you take any steps at that moment to ascertain from the directory whether a person of such a name does live at that address?—Having no local directory of Balham, we sent a wire instead.

10192. Do you mean that at every police station you have not a directory?—No.

10193. (Chairman.) Have you not the Post Office Directory?—Balham would be out of the radius. I think at the present time there is a directory covering the whole of that district.

10194. (Mr. Dickinson.) It might have taken a long time to communicate with the husband. I should have thought the first thing you ought to have satisfied yourself upon was whether she was giving a right name and address, and whether that address was a house in a respectable neighbourhood. Did not that occur to you as being the first thing to do?—A wire was sent as soon as possible, but I cannot say now at what time the wire was sent.

10195. I should like to know at what time the wire was sent.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) I daresay we can get that for you, but we have not got it here.

(Mr. Dickinson.) In one of these statements at page 7 it states that Mr. Braham called at half-past one.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) It was at the place where she was charged. It does not appear when the wire arrived.

(Mr. Dickinson.) Either the statement was made verbally, or it is amongst these papers, that just as the husband arrived the message was coming in.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) That I have not got.

10196. (Chairman.) "I was fully two hours waiting for my husband; my husband arrived nearer 3 than 2." We know from Mr. Braham that he was at the police station near Balham Station when he was told that a message had been received saying that his wife was at Larkhall Lane station, and that then he took a cab and drove to the police station. How long would it take him to drive from one police station to the other?—About twenty minutes.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) There is a statement at page 24, but I do not think it clears it up, that a telegram was sent to her husband, Philip Braham. That is Inspector Billson's own report.

(Mr. Dickinson.) I only wanted to ascertain what steps this Inspector took.

10197. (Chairman.) Was it Mrs. Braham who gave you the information as to where to telegraph to?—Yes.

ELEVENTH DAY.

Wednesday, 24th October 1906.

PRESENT:

Sir David Brynmor Jones, K.C., M.P. (Chairman.)
Rufus Daniel Isaacs, Esq., K.C., M.P.
Willoughby Hyett Dickinson, Esq., M.P. (Barrister-at-Law.)
Charles Algernon Whitmore, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law.)
J. W. St. Lawrence Leslie, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law), (Secretary.)

Sergeant William Childs, 25 W, sworn.

Sergeant W. Childs.
24 Oct. 1906.

10198. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) You were station-sergeant at the Clapham station on the morning of the 6th June, 1903?—I was.

10199. And did you come in from your patrol about 2 in the morning?—Exactly.

10200. At that time was Inspector Billson there?—In the charge room.

10201. And was Mrs. Braham there also?—She was.

10202. And Mr. Braham?—Yes.

10203. How long did they remain in the station while you were there?—A matter of five or six minutes, I should think. A very short time.

10204. Was there anything in the nature of complaint made by them while you were in the station?—Nothing whatever.

10205. (Earl Russell.) Bail had been taken at that time?—I believe so.

Police-constable Samuel Gribble, 133 W, sworn.

P.C. S. Gribble.

10206. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Are you Police-constable 133 W, and were you on reserve duty in the Clapham station in the early morning of the 6th June, when Mrs. Braham was brought to the station by Police-constable Atkinson and Police-constable Allen?—Yes.

10207. Where were you when they came in?—In the charge room.

10208. Did you remain in the charge room while Mrs. Braham was there?—No.

10209. How long did you remain in the charge room?—About five minutes, and then I went out and came back again.

10210. During that five minutes had Mrs. Braham been charged?—No.

10211. Did she make any complaint during that five minutes?—No.

10212. Do you say you went out of the charge room?—Yes, out of the charge room.

10213. How long were you away?—A matter of three or four minutes.

10214. When you came back again what was going on?—Inspector Billson was taking the charge.

10215. Did you remain then in the charge room?—Yes.

10216. Up to the time that Mrs. Braham left, or did you leave before that?—Practically.

10217. Did you hear any complaint made by Mrs. Braham as to the conduct of the constables?—None whatever.

10218. (Earl Russell.) You made a written report on this on the 10th June, did you not?—About the 10th June, I believe.

10219. Will you just look at it. (Report handed to the Witness.) "I beg to report that I was on reserve duty when the above was brought to Clapham Station by Police-constable 800 W. Atkinson. She was charged with behaving in a disorderly manner, and when the charge was read over to her she said 'Why, I have been to see some sick friends,' and also asked to see a doctor, but when told by Inspector Billson that she was not charged with being drunk, she made no other remark or any complaint. I was within hearing all the time"?—That is so.

10220. But you have told me that you were away for five minutes?—But that was before the charge was taken.

10222. Between the time that she was brought in and the time that the charge was read over to her you were away for five minutes?—That is so.

10222. But you say in this report that you were on reserve duty "when the above was brought to Clapham station"?—Yes.

10223. Then you go on to speak about the charge?—Yes.

10224. You finish the report by saying "I was within hearing all the time"?—I meant by that that I was within hearing all the time when the charge was being taken while she was in the dock.

10225. Can you tell me how anybody reading that report is to understand you were away for five minutes?——

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Is that a question for the witness? I may tell you I read it in that way: "She was charged with behaving," and so on. "I was there all the time."

10226. (Earl Russell.) I shall be very glad to have his explanation. It begins, "I beg to report that I was on reserve duty when the above was brought to Clapham Station"?—That is so.

10227. That means, does it not, when she was first brought into the station in custody?—That is so.

10228. Then you go on in the next sentence and say, "She was charged with behaving in a disorderly manner, and when the charge was read over to her"——?—That is so, she was charged.

10229. You finish your report by saying, "I was within hearing all the time"?—Yes. When Atkinson brought Mrs. Braham to the station she was put straight into the dock. I went from there then outside. I came back and the charge was taken, or being taken, at the time. Inspector Billson had come out of the office with the charge sheet and commenced taking the charge. I never left the charge room then.

10230. But it is not true that you were within hearing all the time from the time she was brought in till the time she was finally charged?—No, not from the time she was brought in.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It is capable of being read in the way the constable says he meant it. I should think, literally, your criticism, Earl Russell, is just, but the constable's view is one that he might easily have held.

P.C. S. Gribble.
24 Oct. 1906

(Chairman.) If Earl Russell's suggestion is accepted, it amounts to this, that the police-constable ought to have said after the first sentence, "I then went away for about five minutes. I came back and she was charged." Then it would be perfectly clear.

(Earl Russell.) I am merely putting to him the effect it would have on the mind of his superior who read this as a report of what he heard.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) He is dealing with the charge of disorderly conduct, and that is the thing his attention is directed to. He does not attach importance at the time to the fact that he was out of the room for five minutes.

10231. (Earl Russell.) Did you hear Mrs. Braham say she had been visiting?—Yes.

10232. Did you hear her say that Atkinson had roughly pushed against her?—No.

10233. Did you hear her say she had resented his conduct, and asked him why he had assaulted her?—No.

10234. This is in the report of Inspector Billson, who took the charge?—I never heard it.

10235. (Mr. Dickinson.) I want to know when you wrote this report?—I cannot exactly say; a few days after.

10236. It is dated the 10th June. What time of the day did you write it, do you know?—Half-past ten in the evening. When I say half-past ten, it was shortly after I came on duty.

10237. Where do you write these reports?—I wrote my report in the library.

10238. What rooms are there in this police station?—The charge room, the office, the single men's kitchen, the cook's kitchen, the library, bedrooms upstairs, and several rooms downstairs.

10239. I suppose you have to write your reports in the library?—No.

10240. Where else do you write them?—In the charge room.

10241. Had you refreshed your memory at all about this before you wrote this report?—I only had a glance at that report yesterday morning.

10242. I do not mean now, but before you wrote this report at half-past 10 in the evening on the 10th June, had you refreshed your memory about what happened on the 6th?—No—as to the time I had.

10243. Will you tell me what you had done?—I looked at the charge book and saw the time the woman was brought to the station.

10244. That was all you did?—Yes.

10245. You did not ask any other constables about it?—No.

10246. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Did you speak to anybody at all before you wrote the report?—No.

10247. You wrote it as you recollected it at the time?—Yes.

10248. Various other matters had, of course, come between that time and the 6th June?—Yes.

10249. You had not taken any prominent part in this matter at all?—No.

10250. You wrote down what you recollected?—Yes, I was called upon to report, and I put it down just as I thought.

Police-constable HARRY VARNEY, 190 W, sworn.

10251. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) You are Police-constable 190 of the W Division, and were you on reserve duty in the station at Clapham in the early morning of the 6th June when Mrs. Braham was brought there?—Yes.

10252. Did you hear the charge preferred against her?—I was present the whole time.

10253. What do you mean by the whole time?—From the time she was brought in to the time she was bailed out.

10254. Did you hear her make any complaint of the conduct of the police-constables towards her?—Not actually against the constables.

P.C. H. Varney.

10255. You say not actually. What did you hear her say about the constables?—I heard her tell Inspector Billson that the constable had taken hold of her, and Inspector Billson had elicited the fact that that was in the act of arresting her.

10256. Did she make any other complaint with regard to the conduct of the constables?—Not that I heard.

10257. (Earl Russell.) Did you hear everything that went on?—Yes, everything.

P.C. H. Varney.
24 Oct. 1906.

10258. Did you hear her say the constable had pushed roughly against her?—I might have heard that, but I have forgotten it now.

10259. Did you hear her say that she had resented his conduct?—No, I did not hear her say so.

10260. And that she had asked him what he meant by insulting her like that?—I heard the constable say that.

10261. Did you hear Mrs. Braham say that?—No, Mrs. Braham did not say it. The constable said it.

10262. Do you say she did not say it, or you do not remember?—I do not remember her saying it. I heard the constable saying it in his evidence to Inspector Billson.

10263. You would rather say you do not remember?—Yes, I would rather say I do not remember.

10264. (Mr. Dickinson.) What time did you write this report on the 10th June?—I believe I came back from Brixton at one o'clock.

10265. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) One a.m. or one p.m.?—It would be one a.m. on the 10th.

10266. (Mr. Dickinson.) One a.m. on the 11th?—According to the date on the report that was the day.

10267. It would have been on the night of the 10th?—Yes.

10268. Allen said that you were at the office at the same time that he was?—That is quite right.

10269. Did you have any communication with Allen about the form of the report?—No. I sat down at the table in the charge room and made my report out.

10270. Did you write out this report in the form we see it here or in pencil?—I wrote it straight on to the paper.

10271. That is the only paper you wrote?—Yes.

10272. Allen told me he wrote it first of all with pencil?—Probably he did.

10273. I only want to put it to you. Allen's account of this event is this: "She then asked to see a doctor to certify if she was drunk. The Inspector said it was not necessary as she was not charged with that offence." You say, "She also asked to see a doctor to certify that she was drunk, and she made no other complaint. The Inspector told her it was not necessary to see a doctor as she was not charged with being drunk"?—I used the Inspector's words as nearly as I could, and probably Allen did the same.

10274. How did you refresh your memory about what the Inspector's words were?—I did not need to be refreshed. I remembered.

10275. Are you quite sure she did ask for a doctor to certify that she was not drunk?—She asked for a doctor for that purpose—to certify that she was not drunk.

10276. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Do you mean she said that?—She said that was the reason she required a doctor.

10277. (Chairman.) What were her words?—I cannot exactly remember her words, not word for word.

10278. (Mr. Dickinson.) Are you sure you never talked it over with Allen to see what really you remembered jointly about this?—I never saw Allen—not before that time.

Chief Inspector JAMES TAYLOR, sworn.

Chief-Insp. J. Taylor.

10279. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Are you a Chief Inspector?—Yes.

10280. On the 16th June, 1903, were you acting as Superintendent at the Brixton Police Station?—Yes.

10281. By directions from headquarters did you take the statements of Mrs. Braham and her husband and a lady, Miss Marion Young?—I took Mrs. Braham's statement.

10282. The husband and Miss Marion Young being present?—Yes.

10283. You made a report about this matter on the 16th June?—Yes.

10284. Would you like to refresh your memory with it as to what took place?—It is a long time ago, but I will try to tell you to the best of my ability.

10285. You had better have it before you. (Report handed to Witness.) Is that a correct report of what took place?—Yes.

10286. We need not trouble you to go through it as far as I am concerned?—It was a covering report with Mrs. Braham's statement.

10287. The second paragraph begins: "Mrs. Braham with her husband and the lady she had visited on night of 5th instant attended here to-day, 16th instant, and I took her statement in presence of the police concerned. There are variations in the statement from the letter of complaint." The letter of complaint had been forwarded to you, had it?—Yes, through the Home Office. Mr. Braham had written to the Home Office.

10288. "I explained to Mr. Braham that it was the Inspector who took the charge that had gone on leave and not the police-constable preferring the charges as stated in his letter. Mr. Braham said the only thing he wanted to know was whether it was suggested by police that his wife was soliciting. I told him no, there was no such imputation or suggestion. Miss Marion Young, the lady friend, where Mrs. Braham had been visiting, only knows that she left about 12 midnight after paying a visit to her; she knows nothing more. Inspector Billson's explanation as to the private conversation detailed in letter is that Police-constable Atkinson had at that time stated the charge he had preferred, in the presence of the accused, and he went purposely from the charge room into the Inspector's office—out of the woman's hearing—to tell the police-constable she was not drunk, and he should not entertain that part of the charge; also asked the police-constable whether, when he crossed the roadway, did he think the woman was a prostitute. As to the charge itself, there is no corroboration; it is the word of Mrs. Braham against the police-constable. The man"—was that "the man" or "the men"?—They both spoke of one man.

10289. "Neither know, so he cannot be found and his version taken of what occurred. It is a pity that Inspector Billson did not attend the police court at the hearing of the charge. Mr. and Mrs. Braham wish to say that she received every kindness when at the police station. Mr. Braham has not decided upon his subsequent action in this matter; it is in the hands of his solicitor, and he shall act on his advice." Then on page 25 is the statement by Mrs. Braham. "About 12 night 5th instant I left my friends, 4, Victoria House, South Lambeth Road, the daughter, Miss Marian Young, accompanied me to Tate's Library, South Lambeth Road. She left me there; I hurried along to catch the tramcar at Stockwell to Balham. I had passed all the shops where the lights were on, and there were only houses on either side, when the constable seemed to dart out from a gateway (P.C. 800 W). There was a man there. He seemed to come on the scene at almost the same time that P.C. 800 W did. I appealed to the man, saying 'You see I have not done anything; will you come to the police station with me?' He did not answer me. The constable then took hold of my shoulder and I looked at him and asked his number. He refused his number and again took hold of my shoulder. I was indignant, and said, "How dare you!' He told me he would show me what he dared to, and took me to the police station. He held my arm the whole of the way. I asked him to let my arm go, but he did not. On the way to the station he called another constable. I don't know what he said—I think it was 'Come here,' That P.C. 749 W took my right arm, then we arrived at the station. I then complained to the Inspector there. That complaint was exactly the words you have written down here." That was signed by Mrs. Braham. Then question by Atkinson: "You say I seemed to dart out of a gateway. (A.) Yes. (Q.) Did you stop about forty yards away and stop in front of a man? (A.) No, certainly not. (Q.) Did you not stop in front of me when you came up to me? (A.) Certainly not; no. (Q.) Did you ask me what I was interfering with you for? (A.) No. (Q.) Did I not say I am not interfering with you and requested you to go on, and I moved into the church gateway? (A.) No, and you did not move. (Q.) As I went to go into the gateway did you not say, 'What are you assaulting me for?' (A.) I did not say such a word. (Q.) Did I not ask a man if I had interfered or assaulted you in any way? (A.) No, you did not." That is signed by the lady and by Atkinson and by yourself?—Yes.

10290. You forwarded that to headquarters with the remarks that I have read?—Precisely.

10291. And I think a covering letter which does not add anything to it at all?—Yes.

10292. (Earl Russell.) You were in charge of this inquiry at Brixton station?—I had the papers sent to me.

10293. You conducted the inquiry?—I made an appointment with them to attend there.

10294. You were the person who conducted the inquiry and called the witnesses and had the notes taken, and so on?—Yes.

10295. You have already seen written reports in connection with the case?—Yes; they had been previously submitted, and were sent back with the papers from the Home Office with Mr. Braham's letter of complaint.

10296. Were the witnesses freshly examined at this inquiry and their answers written down?—No. I asked them if they wanted to supplement their reports after hearing what Mrs. Braham said, and they did not wish to do so.

10297. You took Mrs. Braham's evidence first?—In their presence.

10298. I understand that everybody concerned was present at Brixton station when you were in charge?—Precisely.

10299. Then you took Mrs. Braham's statement first?—Exactly.

10300. That is the one your learned counsel has just read, and the one we have?—The first and the only statement.

10301. With the questions and answers, and at the end the date the 16th June?—Yes.

10302. That was the one made in your presence?—Yes.

10303. Then did you take any other statement and reduce it into writing?—No.

10304. Did you take a statement from this lady whose house she had been at?—No.

10305. You took no written statement from her?—No.

10306. You took a verbal statement from her?—Yes. She said Mrs. Braham had been there and left at about 12 o'clock at night.

10307. She confirmed Mrs. Braham's statement to that extent?—Oh, yes.

10308. But you did not reduce what this lady said to writing except to the extent of incorporating it in this paragraph in your covering letter?—Yes, that was all there was to say.

10309. I only want to get at the way in which these things are done. This paragraph, "The lady friend only knows she left at 12 midnight. She knows nothing more." That is the only written statement you made of what she said?—Precisely.

10310. Then with regard to the constables concerned, Atkinson and Allen, and Inspector Billson, you put to them the reports they had already written on the 10th June?—Billson I had wired for. He was away.

10311. Atkinson had written a report on the 10th June?—Yes.

10312. What you did was to show him that report and say, "Do you desire to supplement it or add to it in any way?"—Hardly in that way. I had their reports, and I said, "Do you want to supplement anything in your report after hearing Mrs. Braham's complaint?" Each one said "No."

10313. So that the report which they had already written was taken as the evidence they had given?—Precisely.

10314. And on that date, the 16th June, they found nothing to modify or nothing to alter in their reports?—Yes.

10315. Does the same apply to Allen as to Atkinson?—It applies to all of them.

10316. No. Inspector Billson, I thought you said, made a fresh one?—Except Inspector Billson, as I have said.

10317. Mr. Braham was present?—Yes.

10318. Was an opportunity given to Mr. Braham or to Mrs. Braham to put questions to the constables?—No.

10319. No opportunity?—No.

10320. Is that the usual practice?—They did not ask to.

10321. They did not wish to ask any questions at all?—No.

10322. Either of Atkinson or Allen?—No, not to the best of my recollection. It is three years ago, and I am speaking to the best of my recollection.

10323. Would you say to them in the ordinary course, "Is there any question you wish to put to the constable on his report?"—No.

10324. Did you say that to the constable about Mrs. Braham's report?—Yes.

10325. Because at the end of Mrs. Braham's report we find a cross-examination and a few questions by the constable and the answers?—Yes.

10326. You said to him, "Is there anything you wish to ask Mrs. Braham on this report?"—That is in accordance with our general orders.

10327. You did not say to Mrs. Braham after reading the constable's report, "Is there any question you wish to put to the constable on his report?"—No.

10328. You say they made no attempt to ask questions?—Yes, I do, to the best of my recollection.

10329. If they had attempted to ask questions in the nature of cross-examination of the constable you would have allowed them?—I think I should have put it down.

10330. And the answers?—Yes; I think that would have been fair.

10331. Any question they thought useful to get at the truth?—Yes, I think so.

10332. Did you know any similar inquiry in which questions by the public have been put to a constable and put at the end of the report? Have you conducted any?—No.

10333. You have conducted several of these inquiries?—No.

10334. Half a dozen?—I should not like to say—oh, yes, I have taken several statements.

10335. Will you go so far as this, that it is not the usual practice to invite members of the public or allow members of the public to cross-examine constables at these inquiries?—Yes, I will go that far.

10336. It was stated earlier in this case that no accusation of improper conduct or indecent conduct had been made until now. You were aware at this time you conducted this inquiry that there was a statement of that sort, were you not?—What do you mean?

10337. Did you not know that the accusation made by Mrs. Braham against Constable Atkinson was not merely that he had assaulted her, but that he handled her in an indelicate manner?—I did not know anything of that. I go by her statement to me.

10338. What is the meaning of this last sentence in Mrs. Braham's statement: "I then complained to the Inspector there. That complaint was exactly the words you have written down here." What are those words?—The lady's words. That is her statement, not mine.

10339. You mean the complaint she made to the Inspector was exactly the words of this statement written out now?—It is what she means. It is her statement.

10340. Yes, but that is what you understand that to mean. The words written down here are the words in this statement?—I understand it as it is. I really cannot tell you what was in my mind then.

10341. When you conduct an inquiry of this sort do you go down to the station and start the inquiry more or less as if you were a judge, or do you have any conversation with the people?—What people?

10342. With the police constables concerned. Do you try and get at the facts first in an unofficial way, or do you simply go down there and start the inquiry in public without any previous communication with them?—I had got the reports in this case except Inspector Billson's.

Chief-Insp. J. Taylor.
24 Oct. 1906.

10343. Had you seen any of the men personally?—The Superintendent had dealt with the previous reports.

10344. Superintendent Doyle?—Yes.

10345. You had no conversation with Atkinson?—No.

10346. Or with Allen?—No.

10347. Or with Inspector Billson?—No.

10348. You came fresh to it at this inquiry?—Yes.

10349. When you came to this inquiry had you heard anything at all about a charge of drunkenness?—I must have seen that in reading the papers.

10350. You said that she asked for a doctor to certify that she was not drunk, or do you mean you saw it in the reports?—In the reports.

10351. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You saw what in the reports?—With regard to a doctor—that she mentioned it when she was taken to the police station.

10352. I do not think that that was Lord Russell's question. He asked you about the drunkenness?—Of course, I had nothing to do with that. I was not dealing with that.

10353. (Earl Russell.) Let me take the statements which you had seen and which I think you enclose. You asked no questions about the charge of "drunk and disorderly"?—No.

10354. You had seen Inspector Billson's report, had you not?—Yes.

10355. He mentions in his report that Atkinson had preferred a charge of being drunk which he had refused to take. Let me read you the words: "When at the station the woman was rather excited, but I considered she was not drunk, and told the police constable so, who informed me that he thought she was drunk because she smelt strongly of liquor. I failed to observe any signs of drunkenness, and as the evidence of the police constable clearly showed that she had been guilty of disorderly behaviour I entered it on the charge-sheet as such." That was one of the reports that you had before you when you were making this inquiry?—Yes, he was directed to make a full report of the whole of the circumstances. I was dealing with the complaint against the police.

10356. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Just look at that report before you answer, because it bears the same date as your own report?—Yes, it does.

10357. You had it before you embarked on your own inquiry. Inspector Billson's report was written on the same day as your inquiry?—I had to send a telegram for him to come from Chatham, where he had been, because there was no report in the original papers.

10358. You had that report before you before Mrs. Braham made her statement?—I cannot say.

10359. That is the foundation of Earl Russell's question?—I cannot say. I cannot charge my memory with everything.

10360. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Look at them both, and see whether they will not help you to say something about it. The question that Earl Russell is putting to you is whether you had this statement of Inspector Billson's before you when you were conducting the inquiry at the station?—I could not say whether he made that before I conducted the inquiry or afterwards. I would not be sure.

10361. (Earl Russell.) Was he present at the inquiry?—Yes.

10362. Then in any event he would have made it during the inquiry. That would have been the latest time?—Yes, either before or after.

10363. Either it was handed to you before you began the inquiry or it was made by him in the course of the inquiry?—Not in the course, because he could not make the report when I was making the inquiry—not when all the witnesses were there.

10364. I thought I understood that in a case where reports were not already furnished the evidence was taken down in longhand by a clerk?—No, I did not do that. He had to answer them himself.

10365. Can you charge your memory at all as to how and when exactly this report of Inspector Billson's came into existence?—No, I cannot.

10366. But Inspector Billson was at this inquiry?—Yes.

10367. What did you do about Inspector Billson's evidence in connection with the matter?—Submitted his report.

10368. But while you were holding the inquiry what did you treat as his evidence—did you treat the report that was in existence as his evidence, or did you take fresh evidence, or was this report not in existence till after the inquiry was closed?—I simply submitted the report with Mrs. Braham's statement.

10369. Do you think it possible that this report of Inspector Billson's was written after the inquiry was closed?—I tell you I cannot say. I cannot charge my memory with that.

10370. Inspector Billson was considered so important a witness that he had been recalled specially for this purpose?—Certainly.

10371. You would not have conducted this inquiry without taking what Inspector Billson's version of the occurrence was, would you?—It was a complaint against the police. I do not know why I should not. He could have been called on to report afterwards.

10372. You did not think it was necessary when you conducted the inquiry to know what Inspector Billson said?—I do not know what was in my mind, but he could have reported afterwards just as well as he could before.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Inspector Billson's reports are attached to the letter which is the report of Acting-Superintendent Taylor, dated the 16th June. "I beg to report that Inspector Billson was wired to on his return to Chatham and his report is attached." That is dated the 16th June, and Inspector Billson's report is dated the 16th, so it is clear from that that Superintendent Taylor had the report in his possession at the time that he reports.

(The Witness.) At the time I submitted that Report, oh yes, there is no doubt about that. It is very difficult to remember these things three years afterwards.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Yes, that is why I called attention to the Report.

10373. (Earl Russell.) I only want you to remember what you can. Can you remember apart from the question of Inspector Billson's report whether, when you were holding this inquiry, you knew as a fact that there had been a charge of drunkenness preferred by the constable, and not taken by the Inspector?—I am not sure.

10374. If I understand the procedure you were not to adjudicate or pronounce a decision upon these papers, but to send them on to your superiors?—That is right—to get the facts.

10375. And, I suppose, as far as you could get at them, the whole of the facts of the case?—Exactly.

10376. In a case of that sort, if you get a report from two different people, I do not care whether they are two constables or a member of the public, but if you get a report which was quite inconsistent from two different people would you ask any questions to attempt to reconcile them or explain them?—This is their version.

10377. You would send it on exactly as it is sent in?—Yes.

10378. You would not ask any questions to try and see how near you could get them together, or where the truth was?—It is their version of what transpired. I do not think it would be right on my part to question them on that.

10379. I understand you were holding this inquiry not in order to pronounce a decision, but in order to get all the facts for your superiors?—Yes.

10380. It might be possible if A tells one story and B tells another that by asking some questions you would get considerably nearer the actual facts?—I took Mrs. Braham's story, and the Inspector was directed to report fully what transpired, and he did so, and I submitted them both.

10381. And in the case of Mrs. Braham, you did try to get near the actual facts by having supplementary questions?—That is in accordance with our orders, that if a complaint is made against a police officer it shall be made in his presence, and he shall have an opportunity of questioning the complainant.

10382. I should be right in saying you took the practice to be that you would say, "This is their version of the occurrence," and even if it was obvious that they could not both be true you would send them both on without comment and without asking further questions.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Not without comment?

10383. (Earl Russell.) Without asking further questions to try and reconcile them?—Every case is different. In that case I submitted it with a covering report.

10384. You had before you, at any rate, the reports of Atkinson and Allen?—Yes.

10385. In neither of those reports is anything said about a charge of drunkenness having been preferred against the woman and refused by the Inspector. Do you remember that, or would you like to look at them?—I heard it yesterday.

10386. If you knew at the time that a charge of drunkenness had been preferred against the woman and not taken by the Inspector, did you not think their reports wanted supplementing in that respect?—I did not labour that question.

10387. Were you sending on to your superior a full account of the case if you did not know that that fact existed?—She was not charged with that. There was no charge of drunkenness.

10388. I quite agree, but if a constable is found to make a mistake in one case it may have some influence on your judgment as to whether he has made a mistake in another. Do not you think the superiors should have had that information?—She was not charged.

10389. That is what you say, that she was not charged before the Magistrate?

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I do not think that is quite right, because Inspector Billson's report is sent at the same time as he is making his report, and Inspector Billson's statement does contain it.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) And this officer's report at the bottom of page 21 comments on it.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It does not state it in such precise terms as Inspector Billson's report does. But he does refer to it.

10390. (Earl Russell.) My suggestion is not that he was not informed at all of that fact, but he should have been given whatever explanation was available from the constable who is said to have made a mistake. I will tell you exactly what I suggest, that you should have asked Police-constable Atkinson and Police-constable Allen at the time what the foundation was, or Atkinson at any rate—for his making a charge of drunkenness, and have noted the statement which he made here that she smelt of drink. You did not ask that?—No.

10391. You tell us as there was no charge of drunkenness before the Magistrate you thought it of no importance?—I do not know what I thought. I tell you I cannot remember what was in my mind then.

10392. Inspector Billson reports it at that date, and Police-constable Atkinson was cautioned in the end, as I understand, almost entirely, if not entirely, on the ground that he had preferred this charge, which could not be supported?—Both of them were cautioned.

10393. But that was the ground on which Police-constable Atkinson was cautioned?—I did not deal with those papers. The Superintendent dealt with him.

(Mr. Dickinson.) Can you tell me, Mr. Muir, what those initials on page 19 signify. It is Mr. Braham's letter of the 9th June?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) It is a Minute apparently on Mr. Braham's letter, acknowledged the 11th June: "To Superintendent for report, through Chief Constable." That means the papers are to be sent to this officer for him to report.

(Mr. Dickinson.) There is a query there.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) "F. H." makes a suggestion, and there was a query upon it.

(Mr. Dickinson.) Who is "F. H."?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Mr. Underwood is one of the clerks, and "F. W." is Major Wodehouse, who apparently accepts the clerk's suggestion, and that was acted on, and the papers sent to this officer.

10394. (Mr. Dickinson.) Who would get the report through the Chief Constable?—That is the report I submitted.

10395. Who would be the Chief Constable?—Major Gilbert.

10396. (Earl Russell.) May I take it generally, without going into details further, that you had the statements of this policeman before you, and you did not think it any part of your duty to ask questions to elucidate them further?—No.

10397. You let them lie as they were, unexplained or incomplete?—Yes.

10398. Except you said to the man himself, "If you wish to add anything you may do so"?—Yes.

10399. Thereupon you did not think it your business to make any further inquiry or cross-examination about the statements in any way?—That is right.

10400. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) May I ask a question to clear up something which I think is a little in confusion. (To the Witness.) When you took this statement from Mrs. Braham the constables were the accused persons?—The complaint was against them.

10401. The constables were the accused persons?—Yes.

10402. Mrs. Braham was the accuser?—Exactly.

10403. You took the accuser's statement as she gave it?—Exactly.

10404. You gave the accused persons an opportunity of asking their accuser questions?—Precisely.

10405. Is that the method in which you take such complaints?—Yes.

10406. You then forward the result of that statement and the questions put by the accused persons to headquarters to be dealt with?—Yes.

10407. You also give the accused persons an opportunity of adding anything to their original statements if they desire to do so?—Certainly.

10408. That is the inquiry you were holding?—Yes.

10409. A complaint against the constable, not any re-hearing of the original charge against Mrs. Braham?—That is so.

10410. But the complaint against the constable?—That is so.

10411. That is the sole issue before you?—That was the whole of the matter that I was dealing with.

10412. (Chairman.) Do you remember what hour in the day this inquiry commenced?—I do not.

10413. In what room in the station did it take place?—In the Superintendent's office.

10414. I should like to know a little how it was conducted. Did you sit down during it?—Yes; I sat at the desk.

10415. You have just told the learned counsel that in a proceeding of this kind the police are deemed to be the accused persons?—Yes.

10416. All those who are accused are present, I presume?—Yes.

10417. And in this case that was so?—That was so.

10418. Police-constable Atkinson was there?—Yes.

10419. Police-constable Allen was there?—Yes.

10420. What other constables?—Gribble and Varney and Inspector Billson.

10421. Inspector Billson had by that time come back?—Yes, I telegraphed to him.

10422. And he was in the room at the time that you commenced this inquiry?—Yes.

10423. And Mr. and Mrs. Braham and Miss Young were there?—Precisely.

10424. How did the proceedings begin?—The complainants took a seat, and the officers were standing in front of me. I was seated at the desk, and I told Mr. Braham and Mrs. Braham that I had received their letter of complaint. It had been transmitted from the Home Office, and I said it was in accordance with our Regulations that if a complaint was made by the public it should be made in the presence of the officers complained of; it should be reduced to writing, and an opportunity given to the officers to put any questions to them. I think—I would not say now for certain—that she asked me to write it down,

Chief-Insp. J. Taylor.

24 Oct. 1906.

but whether she did or did not I could not say. At all events, I wrote it down. When it was written down the statement was read by her or to her before she signed it. She then signed it, and Police-constable Atkinson, 800, then asked her certain questions. After those questions were taken down, and the answers thereto, Mrs. Braham signed it, and Police-constable Atkinson signed it again, and I believe I countersigned it.

10425. Had you, when this was done by Mrs. Braham, had any conversation with Inspector Billson about the case?—I cannot say, but at one portion of the case I had directed him to make a full report of the circumstances in connection with the charge.

10426. Had you seen Inspector Billson before you commenced the inquiry and Mrs. Braham gave her statement?—I would not like to say at this time. The interval is too long to remember every little incident—I mean to say, in its sequence. I could not say.

10427. Was Inspector Billson required to make a statement in your presence, as the other constables were?—No. As I have told you, I directed him to make a full report of the whole of the particulars in connection with the charge.

10428. Was that done at the inquiry?—Oh, yes, on that day—the 16th.

10429. After you had commenced the inquiry or before?—I cannot charge my memory with that.

10430. Do you not think it was likely that you saw Inspector Billson, who had returned from his leave, before commencing the inquiry?—I do not know, because I had sent Sub-divisional Inspector Hamilton to see the Brahams, and whether I had seen Inspector Billson before they arrived to make their statement or not I really cannot say now. He might have been warned to attend at the same time as them.

10431. I rather gathered from your report that Mr. Braham asked you a question. Do you remember what it was?—Yes, about the soliciting.

10432. He did ask you that?—Yes, he asked me that question.

10433. Was that before or after Mrs. Braham had finished and signed her statement?—I think she had made her statement then. I think so, I believe so.

10434. Did you make any answer to Mr. Braham when he asked about the solicitation?—Yes; I said there is no such imputation or suggestion. I remember that.

10435. Was that, in fact, a true answer to Mr. Braham's question?—I think so, sir.

10436. Was it, in fact, true from what you know now? You have heard all the evidence yesterday, for instance?—Yes. I think that was transient, if I may use that expression, in the constable's mind, as he told you yesterday. He thought so before he stopped her, and then he altered his mind when he got to the woman. Therefore, I say we had no right to say there was anything. It was dropped undoubtedly.

10437. In the report you say, "Mr. Braham said the only thing he wanted to know was whether it was suggested by the police that his wife was soliciting"?—Yes.

10438. But in fact it had been suggested, had it not?—Soliciting.

10439. Yes?—Not that I am aware of.

10440. Inspector Billson, when you gave that answer to Mr. Braham, had not written his report, as I understand from your evidence?—I tell you I really cannot say. If I could commit myself I would, but I cannot.

10441. I do not want you to commit yourself in any way. I only want to get at the facts?—I cannot say now.

10442. Inspector Billson was present at this inquiry. You have told me that?—Yes.

10443. He did come back from his leave?—Yes.

10444. We know he has made the statement. Was that statement in writing in existence at the time that you commenced this inquiry, and Mr. Braham asked you this question in the course of it?—As I told you before, I really cannot say when Inspector Billson made that report. It is made on the 16th, but I cannot tell you what portion of the day it was, and whether before I commenced the inquiry or when I finished it.

10445. Do you know Police-constable 800 W, according to Inspector Billson's report, said that he saw the woman deliberately stop a man, evidently a stranger?—Yes.

10446. Police-constable Atkinson in the box yesterday admitted that, reading that, he might think it meant that she had been accosting him—"deliberately stop a man, evidently a stranger, who was proceeding in the opposite direction?"—Yes.

10447. When Mr. Braham asked the question did you know that P.C. Atkinson had said that to Inspector Billson?—I had not a copy of the notes at the police court, but of course that is ten days afterwards, and I evidently had it in my mind and knew it was not so.

10448. You had it in your mind and knew it was not so?—The allegation—that there was no truth in it. There was no question about it. We dropped every suggestion of solicitation.

10449. You told Mr. Muir that it was customary at these inquiries to give the complainant an opportunity of enlarging or amending the charge against the constables. At the time the inquiry commenced there had been a letter to Scotland Yard and to the Home Office, and those letters were before you, I understand?—Yes.

10450. You told the learned counsel, Mr. Muir, that it was customary to allow the complainant to add to or amend the charge against the constables?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) I am afraid, sir, I did not make my question clear. What I asked was whether it was usual at those inquiries to allow the accused persons, the constables, to amend their evidence. That is the question I put.

(Chairman.) There was another question about what the complainant was allowed to do.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) To take her statement as she gave it. That was the form of the question. It is all set out on page 33 of the White Book.

10451. (Chairman.) But Mr. Braham said that was the only thing he wanted to know, and he asked the question?—He asked me that question.

10452. Did you invite him to ask any further questions?—No, I did not invite him.

10453. That was his interposition?—Yes, he had no statement to make. He was not there. He never saw his wife locked up or anything.

10454. But he was at the inquiry. Did he volunteer that and say "The only thing I want to know is," and so on, or did you ask him the question whether he wanted to know anything more?—No, I do not know how it arose now, but that was all that he did want to know as a fact.

10455. At the time you gave your answer to him am I to understand that you did not know in the least that P.C. Atkinson had given the evidence about Mrs. Braham stopping a man, a stranger?—I do not know what I heard in the interval from the 6th to the 16th. I could not say, but I was satisfied that there was no suggestion or imputation against his wife soliciting, and I told him so.

10456. But in fact there was an imputation—not in the charge room, but in the evidence that had been given and in the statements made by the police-constable?—I never saw a copy of the notes of evidence.

10457. (Earl Russell.) It is not in the evidence?—I never saw a copy of them.

10458. (Chairman.) You yourself, later in this report of the 16th June, say "Inspector Billson's explanation as to the private conversation detailed in letter"—that is, I think, a letter to the Home Office, but I am not sure?—You are quite right, sir, there was a letter sent there.

10459. "P.C. Atkinson had at that time stated the charge he had preferred, in the presence of the accused, and he went purposely from the charge room into the Inspector's office—out of the woman's hearing—to tell the police constable she was not drunk, and he should not entertain that part of the charge, also asked the police-constable whether when he crossed the roadway, did he think the woman was a prostitute"?—Yes, that is what transpired in the charge room when the charge was taken.

10460. You knew, then, when you wrote those words, at any rate, in your report that P.C. Atkinson had made a statement that he had crossed the road to approach the woman?—Oh yes, certainly.

10461. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Do you say that took place in the charge room?—Yes.

10462. That that question was asked. Just think?—Yes, that is what Inspector Billson told me.

10463. (Chairman.) "And they went purposely from the charge room"—they were out of the charge room?—Yes, because I will tell you how that arose so far as my memory charges me, that in one portion of the letter Mr. Braham complained that the Inspector and the constable had left the charge room and gone into the Inspector's office and had a private conversation.

10464. Then the words "whether, when he crossed the roadway, did he think the woman was a prostitute." Was that part of the conversation out of the charge room?—Exactly, in the Inspector's office.

10465. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I asked you the question, and you said that you could not swear that that took place in the charge room. That was the answer you gave?—I was not thinking.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) I think he meant on the occasion of the taking of the charge.

(The Witness.) Yes, that is what I mean. It was on the 6th, not the 16th. That is what I meant to convey.

10466. (Chairman.) In the light of that do you think it was in fact a true answer to Mr. Braham to say that there had been no imputation upon his wife as to soliciting?—Undoubtedly on the 16th. This is on the 16th when I am asked that question, and I maintain that now.

10467. I do not know exactly the words Mr. Braham may have used?—Neither do I.

10468. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I want to understand what your practice is in these matters, not in reference to this particular case, but I wish to know generally how these inquiries are conducted. First a direction is given to you, assuming that you are the officer to conduct the inquiry, to conduct it?—To inquire and report generally.

10469. Is the object of that inquiry and report that you should report to your superiors who will have to deal with the case your view of the statements which are made in your presence—the verbal statements?—The idea is to get both statements communicated to them in writing, and then, of course, for my superiors to deal with it.

10470. That is the part that is not clear to me?—I was not dealing with it.

10471. I quite understand you were not dealing with the matter, but when you had reported it was to be dealt with by your superiors?—Precisely.

10472. But your superiors never call the witnesses before them again?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Unless required by the person accused.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) He may require it?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Yes.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) In this particular case we are dealing with I think I am right in saying no statement was ever made in their presence, and that the only statements that were verbally made were those made before you at this inquiry?—I am sorry I do not quite follow.

10473. The complaint is made, and an inquiry is to be held?—Yes.

10474. The inquiry is held?—Yes.

10475. One person saying one thing and the other saying the other?—Yes.

10476. You then make a report to your superiors, who have to deal with it. I have no doubt your superiors have power, if they choose, to call upon the persons to come before them, but in this particular case you were to report after hearing the statements and questions put upon the statements by the accused, were you not?—They were sent to me for inquiry and report, and I took Mrs. Braham's statement and submitted the reports to each officer in the case, so that both sides of the case were represented there to the Commissioners.

10477. But both sides of the case would be represented if both sides sent their statements in to the Commissioner. You have something more to do than merely take the statements, have you not?—Of course, you express an opinion. Chief-Insp. J. Taylor. 24 Oct. 1906.

10478. That is the first thing I have been seeking to get from you. You express an opinion. Your opinion is expressed to the Commissioner as the result of the inquiry which has been conducted before you?—Yes.

10479. Your view, I suppose, is not necessarily final?—Oh, no.

10480. But it is your view?—It is my view.

10481. Right or wrong, it is your impression of the case as presented before you?—Precisely.

10482. In order to arrive at that expression of opinion, it is necessary that you should form an opinion as to which side is telling the truth, is it not?—Yes.

10483. I should have thought so?—You can form your opinion.

10484. That is what I am trying to get at. But that is the object of your inquiry?—Yes.

10485. So that when two persons are making directly conflicting statements, you, with the assistance of the reports and such assistance as you may get from a question, then report to your superiors your opinion of which side is right?—Yes.

10486. And thereupon your superiors, having the advantage of your view as to the result of the inquiry which has taken place before you, deal with the offender, if offender he be, according to their views?—Yes.

10487. They deal with it according to their views of the punishment which should be inflicted upon the man in reference to the report you have made?—As to whether he should be made a defaulter or not. If I considered the evidence was sufficient, if I was Acting Superintendent, if I considered the evidence was convincing, and that the officer should be made a defaulter, I should place him on the morning report and deal with him as a defaulter, and send it to the Chief Constable to deal with.

10488. When you say a defaulter, you mean he has done wrong?—Yes, when I was convinced it was so; if I thought the evidence was sufficiently strong. If I did not I should not put him on the defaulters' sheet.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) The defaulter is placed on the defaulters' sheet and is treated as an accused person and suspended from duty. In such a case an inquiry must be held by the Superintendent, and must be by an officer. As I understand, the inquiry here was for the purpose of sending it to the office, but putting a man on the defaulters' sheet is as to whether he should be made a defaulter or not. In this particular instance, the man was not treated as a defaulter. In the case we have already dealt with of the man Murray, he was treated as a defaulter at once by the Superintendent and treated as such, and his papers were sent up to Scotland Yard.

10489. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I understand that. I did want to know what the technical meaning of "defaulter" was. Supposing at an inquiry such as this it had been admitted by the policeman that he was wrong, and that the complainant was right, then I quite follow if you had not been told to make an inquiry and report, you would then put him on the defaulters' sheet?—This case had been before the Magistrate; there had been no comment on the evidence there that I knew of.

10490. I do not quite follow what that answer means?—I mean this, that it had been the subject of judicial inquiry before I had to deal with it. If the Magistrate had made any adverse comments on the constable's evidence at the time, then that would have been dealt with.

10491. But it was just in consequence of the matter, as far as I follow it, being left in a state of doubt that you were called upon by your superiors to inquire and report?—I was called upon by my superiors to make a report in consequence of the letter from the Brahams.

10492. I follow that—a complaint made by them, and your superiors sent you down to inquire and report upon it. You then did inquire and report, and sent it to your superiors, who then say how the man should be dealt with?—Yes, the officer was subsequently dealt with.

10493. From whatever point of view you take that, it follows, from what you have told me before, that this inquiry which you were to hold was for the purpose of arriving at the facts to report to your superiors?—Yes.

10494. That is what I understood before. Now I want to see how you arrive at the facts which are in dispute between the two persons. The charge is made by a letter which is before you?—Yes.

10495. Is the first thing you do to call upon the complainant to make a statement to you in your presence?—It all depends on what the nature of the complaint is; I mean the gravity of it.

10496. It is a grave charge?—Certainly.

10497. You looked upon it as such?—Yes. You know the way I looked upon it.

10498. This was an important matter between these two persons?—Decidedly.

10499. Therefore it was a serious matter on which you had to get a statement. Then you get the statement from her first?—Yes, I get the statement from her.

10500. Would she make it in your presence?—Yes.

10501. And it is taken down as she makes it. Is that it?—Yes, in her own language.

10502. Then she signs it?—She reads it over, or I should read it over, either one or the other. Before it is signed it is read over to know that it is literally true.

10503. Upon that, if I follow correctly, what happens (I am now only dealing with your practice); what takes place is the accused constable has the right to put questions to her?—Yes.

10504. That is according to your general order?—Yes. The paragraph is there.

10505. I have it before me. If I follow your practice, the person making the complaint has not a right to put questions to the accused?—There is no order on that subject that we are to do that.

10506. Therefore, if I follow you correctly, you say if they had asked to put questions you think you would have allowed them to do it?—I might have done in this case.

10507. You might or might not?—I might or might not.

10508. I rather follow that in this case you think you would have allowed them to put questions?—Yes.

10509. That would have been a matter of indulgence?—Indulgence, if you like. If I had thought it would have cleared it up I should have allowed it, certainly. I mean there is no reason why I should not.

10510. Not at all. I am only trying to get at what the practice is of ascertaining the facts. So far as the complainant or the husband is concerned, if I follow correctly what you said in answer to Lord Russell, no intimation is given to them that they have the right to ask questions?—That is so.

10511. It was never suggested to them that they should put questions to the constable after the constable had put questions to Mrs. Braham?—Just so.

10512. That is the usual practice?—Yes.

10513. Upon that statement, if you have to make a report to the Commissioner upon the facts, it seems very difficult for you to arrive at the facts unless there is some kind of examination on both sides?—There is an examination on both sides, because there is the statement of the person complaining, and there is the officer's report submitted. You have both answers; you have the accusation, and you have the answer to it.

10514. What do you mean—in the form the questions are put?—No, in the form of the report of the incident.

10515. If that is so, you might just as well leave out the questions altogether. The object of putting the questions is to arrive at the facts, and to give a man the opportunity of testing the truth of the statement which is made by the accuser?—To give the constable an opportunity—that is so.

10516. If you have to get at the truth, what is puzzling me is to know how you can arrive at it if you have questions put by one side and no questions put by the other side?—The truth is in a very deep well, and we get at it in the best way we can; I mean they do not always speak the truth. I am afraid it is the same now as when that Big Book was written. What St. Paul said is true to-day.

10517. If you have to make a report it seems all the more desirable that there should be an opportunity given for the purpose of testing the truth of the statements made by the accused?—I see what you mean.

10518. I can appreciate the justice of giving a man who is accused an opportunity of putting questions, but if you are trying to arrive at the facts I want to understand how you could get at the facts unless you gave an equal opportunity to the person who is accusing a constable of putting questions?—I quite follow what you mean.

10519. I am not asking you to commit yourself, but there does not seem to be any difficulty, or does there seem to be any difficulty to you, in so altering the practice as to allow a person who is making a charge to put questions in your presence?—There might be some difficulty. Of course, every case is different. If subsequent proceedings by summons are taken against a policeman in which one of these initial inquiries have been held, and he has committed himself in those papers, it would scarcely be fair, I think.

10520. It would scarcely be fair to him, do you mean, because he had made an exact statement on the inquiry before you?—If subsequently the person took out process against him. Of course, you never know. I mean to say, dealing with generalities, I think the present procedure works very well. I have never heard a hitch against it.

10521. That may depend upon the point of view from which you are looking at it?—I am looking at it from my experience.

10522. That is from the point of view of doing justice to the man who is accused?—Yes, exactly.

10523. What I am putting to you is the other point of view of doing justice to the person who has made a charge, and whose character is involved in the questions that are before you?—I think if a person makes a charge he ought to be able to sustain it. I think if persons bring an accusation against a policeman they ought to be able to sustain it.

10524. That is perfectly right. That applies to a policeman just as much as to anybody else?—Yes.

10525. In order to sustain it, it would be necessary, in order to arrive at the facts, that that person should have the right of putting questions to the constable?—Yes.

10526. That is what I am suggesting to you?—Yes.

10527. Except for what you have said to us, which, for my own part, I shall consider carefully in view of what you have said, do you see any objection to the right of a person making complaint, and not as a matter of indulgence, putting questions to the accused constable in the presence of the person holding the inquiry. Please understand that I am not finding fault with anything?—No, I quite understand that; only you want an expression of opinion from me.

10528. Yes. You have had a large experience?—I have always found the present order work very well, and I am rather reluctant to express an opinion on what you say.

10529. (Chairman.) I understand you to say in substance that you think a complainant ought not to be allowed to cross-examine a policeman on an inquiry of this kind lest that process should be used for making a complaint against a policeman?—Exactly. No two cases are alike. You never know what subsequent action the complainant is going to take. They may make an allegation that is absolutely groundless.

10530. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I told you when I put that question to you that I would give every consideration, speaking for my own part, to that view which you have expressed, which deserves the fullest consideration, but, leaving that apart for the moment, is there any other reason that occurs to you?—Not that I am aware of, but I should think that is more a matter for legal opinion than for me to answer.

10531. I was trying to get from you the experience of a practical man as to whether you could suggest to us any objection to it. That is all. Nothing occurs to you except what you have already told us?—No.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) May I make a suggestion?

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) No; I want the Inspector's opinion. The legal opinion we will supply.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) The system set out here is the English system.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I do not agree. I thought the English system was to give each party an equal right.

10532. (Chairman.) Do you not think discipline might be better administered in the police if you gave a complainant the right to ask questions before you as superior, because you would then be in a better position to report to your superior? If the complainant in this case, for instance, had asked Atkinson and the other constable some questions, you, speaking as the constables' superior officer, and the tribunal being a kind of domestic police tribunal, do you not think you would have been in a better position to report to your superior on the conduct of these officers?—No, I do not. I did not see so then, and I do not see so now.

10533. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You would have allowed them to do so if they had asked?—I might.

10534. I thought you said you would have done?—If I did—goodness only knows—I might.

10535. Why might you?—I do not know. I might.

10536. But what would induce you?—This did not arise.

10537. What would induce you to allow them to put questions except your desire to get at the truth, so that you might report?—Nothing else.

10538. The point of allowing them to put questions would be in order to get at the truth?—Yes.

10539. That is the only reason that would influence you in giving a decision as to whether they should put questions?—Certainly.

10540. All I put to you is that that which you think would help to elucidate the truth should be the practice?—I think I gave you the answer.

10541. You did, and it was one which, as I say, is worthy of every consideration. I want you to consider one further aspect of it. In this particular case there was this difficulty, that the only person who apparently could corroborate by testimony could not be produced?—Quite so—that man.

10542. You had a complaint made by this lady against the policeman and no corroboration?—That is right.

10543. I suppose what you mean by no corroboration is that there was no evidence available so far as you knew which would assist?—Exactly.

10544. What rather troubles me about this report of yours, which is sent to your superior, is what is your finding. Was it your intention to report the result of the facts, or did you simply leave the thing where it was?—To report that that was all that I could find out—all that I knew. I do not know any further facts to lay before the officer who was going to deal with it.

10545. You do not express any opinion one way or the other?—Only in this part about Inspector Billson: I said it was a pity he did not attend the police court. That is all I said as an expression of opinion.

10546. That was a matter of duty as far as he was concerned. It was not a matter of whether he ought to have attended or not. It does not throw any light upon the facts?—Not upon the inquiry.

10547. The result of that seems to be, as you express no opinion one way or the other, when it gets to the Commissioner who has to deal with it, he cannot express an opinion one way or the other?—I did not see the papers afterwards. They came back afterwards.

15048. There was no further inquiry?—Not that I know of.

10549. You may take it we have all the papers?—I think you may take it that is so.

10550. And there was no further inquiry?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) There was no further inquiry There was an inspection of the papers. That was all 10551. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) There was an inspection of the papers, but no further inquiry, and no examination of the witnesses beyond what had taken place before you?—Exactly. I could get no more.

10552. You transmitted all that you had?—I transmitted all that I could get. I mean to say the facts spoke for themselves, I thought.

10553. Did you not attribute some importance to the charge of drunkenness being preferred, which charge had been refused by the Inspector?—I cannot tell you what was in my mind then, but the primary thing in my mind was that the woman was not charged with it. This thing was never expressed in the police court that I know of.

10554. That is quite right. The charge was refused by the Inspector. That we know. But I want you to follow this?—The charge of drunkenness was not entertained. I mean to say that is what Inspector Billson said.

10555. I said it was refused. You mean it was not taken?—That is right.

10556. But Atkinson arrested Mrs. Braham on the charge of being drunk and disorderly?—Yes.

10557. And he preferred that charge when he got to the station?—Yes.

10558. The Inspector then refused to take the charge of drunkenness because he said he saw no evidence at all of drunkenness?—That is right.

10559. What I want to ascertain from you is this: Did not that, in your view, throw some light upon the matter so far as you could judge as to which side was telling the truth?—No. There was nothing striking in that. I mean to say a policeman can very easily make a mistake about a question of sobriety; it is really very difficult. There is no question of that. I mean to say doctors disagree. It is a question of degree very often in drunkenness.

10560. So far as you are concerned, I understand you thought nothing of it?—No.

10561. You thought nothing of his having preferred a charge which was not taken?—No.

10562. And of which the Inspector said he saw no evidence?—Just so. I was not dealing with that. I was dealing with the complaint.

10563. I quite understand; but what I am suggesting to you is that the fact that the charge had been made and not accepted was some evidence which you should or would have considered in sending your report to the Commissioner. You say not?—What I say is it is a thing as to which a policeman might easily be mistaken as to a question of drunkenness in the street.

10564. (Chairman.) But not as to being disorderly?—No, but a combination sometimes.

10565. Quite. You mean the question of whether a person who is disorderly in the street is or is not drunk is a difficult question?—It is so.

10566. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Apparently that was not the view of the Commissioner. The view I am putting to you is somewhat the view that the Commissioner took. The Commissioner seems to have thought that the action in preferring a charge of drunkenness against a sober person looks as though he sought to make the case stronger. I am not going to ask you questions on your superior's report, but that is the view that Major Wodehouse took?—Yes.

10567. These questions that are asked in the inquiry before you are not on oath, I understand?—No.

10568. So that when the Commissioner adjudicates upon the charge which is made no statement has been made by the persons on oath with regard to the complaint?—No.

10569. That never is asked for?—I never knew a case, speaking from my own knowledge.

10570. The person merely makes a statement?—Yes.

10571. (Earl Russell.) Might I ask the learned Commissioner to call Inspector Taylor's attention to a paragraph in the letter of complaint of the 9th June which begins: "My wife is tall and good-looking." I ought to have put that to him. He did not seem to be quite sure whether there was any charge made of impropriety or improper conduct.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I did not so understand the Inspector. With regard to that, I understand the husband asked if there was any suggestion or imputation against him.

Chief-Insp. J. Taylor.

24 Oct. 1906.

(Earl Russell.) I am not talking of an imputation.

10572. (Chairman.) I read it the other way. The way I looked at the report was this: Mr. Braham knew what he had written to the Chief Commissioner on the 9th June. There he made the very complaint which Mrs. Braham made in the box yesterday. When I read in the Inspector's report the passage relating to Mr. Braham's question I thought Mr. Braham was asking the question with regard to his wife?—No. You may take it there was no suggestion of soliciting.

10573. It is ambiguous. I thought Mr. Braham's question was: "Have the police at any time alleged that my wife was soliciting?"—No, it was not so direct as that. Of course, I am charging my memory three years ago.

10574. I know, and we are making every allowance for that?—I feel that you would do so.

10575. We are not making any complaint.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) The passage is this: "Mr. Braham said the only thing he wanted to know was whether it was suggested by the police that his wife was soliciting. I told him no, there was no such imputation or suggestion."

10576. (Chairman.) If the words "had been" had been used there that would have related strictly to the past tense?—He asked only in the present tense. There is no doubt about that.

10577. Lord Russell is quite right in pointing out that in the letter of the 9th June Mr. Braham had alleged offensive conduct on the part of the policeman, and publicly had been making the suggestion?—That might be so; but I do not think in Mrs. Braham's statement there is anything of that kind—in the statemen that I took.

10578. I do not think there is ——

10579. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I understood what you meant to say by this (I quite appreciate what the Chairman has said) was that Mr. Braham asked you whether the police did suggest that his wife was soliciting?—Yes.

10580. You said there was no imputation, I suppose?—Yes, there was no imputation or suggestion of the kind. With regard to a man and his wife I think it is a very proper thing that I should have relieved his mind when there was no suggestion of that kind.

(Chairman.) I rather thought Mr. Braham said something about it in his evidence yesterday, but I do not think it is important.

10581. (Mr. Dickinson.) I understand that when you held that inquiry you only concerned yourself with the statement which had been made by Mrs. Barham before you at that moment?—Quite right.

10582. Of course, what is referred to you is the letter of the 9th June?—I do not know; you have the original.

10583. The letter of the 9th June was referred to the Superintendent to report to the Chief Constable?—That, you see, is dated on the 12th June. At that time it was pointed out that Inspector Billson was away on leave.

10584. Is that the letter that was sent to you (handing)?—Yes, the document was sent to me.

10585. Therefore it was the complaint in the letter that was referred to you?—Yes. Then, you see, on that the Commissioner directed that Inspector Billson should be recalled, and a further report submitted. Then he was recalled. He came from Chatham and he made his report on the 16th. Then I took Mrs. Braham's statement and submitted the former papers—Mrs. Braham's statement and Inspector Billson's report.

10586. Then you based your inquiry, I understand, solely on what she said at that time?—Yes.

10587. You did not think it was your duty to go into the general statement made in the letter?—This was her statement. She was the party that was there, and knew all about it.

10588. I quite understand that, but you did not deal with the letter at all. You simply asked her to make a statement, and then you dealt with that statement?—Yes.

10589. You had on that occasion all the various reports?—All except Billson's.

10590. That is to say, the reports of the three constables, Atkinson, Allen and Varney?—Yes.

10591. Those you had read, I suppose?—Yes.

10592. I do not quite understand how you came to say that you are not to ask the accused any questions. The rule says: "The accused officer is to submit his reply to any complaint in writing." That he did not do?—Yes, Billson did submit his reply to the complaint in writing.

10593. After this statement had been made by Mrs. Braham in your presence he did not submit his answer?—He had already submitted his answer in writing.

10594. That was your view of the case?—Yes, he did not wish to supplement his original report.

10595. You asked him that, did you?—Yes.

10596. And any verbal statements made by him in reply to questions. Would you take that to mean that you were not to ask him questions? You were inquiring into it?—I know, but he had nothing to add. I did not ask him any questions further than that.

10597. You did not try to test his accuracy?—No.

10598. You did not think that was your business?—No, I did not do it.

10599. What is your position exactly. You are Chief Inspector of the W Division?—Yes.

10600. Is that a position subordinate to the Superintendent?—Yes, the Superintendent went on leave on the 15th, and I took charge of the Division during his absence.

10601. You are his second to act as Superintendent, are you?—Yes.

10602. In the ordinary course the Superintendent would have made this inquiry?—He would have made the inquiry, or given it to another person. I do not know which he would have done; of course, it is quite optional.

10603. Did you have this report by Inspector Castle before you or not?—Yes, the papers would be attached; but then those papers had been submitted to the Commissioner. That is the report of the 6th June.

10604. The report of the 6th June is made by Inspector Castle, which gives an account of this case?—Yes.

10605. Did you see that?—It would be attached to the papers. I ought to have seen it.

10606. I suppose when a case is sent down to you the first thing you do is to see all the papers?—Yes.

10607. You cannot make an inquiry without you read all the papers?—No.

10608. So that you would see this report?—The report would be attached.

10609. Can you tell me what this report is which is signed by Inspector Castle, Sub-Divisional Inspector Cousins and Superintendent F. Beard, dated the 6th June, from Rochester Row Police Station?—No, I cannot tell you what it was now. The Assistant Superintendent dealt with the papers first of all. I do not say that I did see them or not.

10610. You saw those reports, and I suppose they must have made some impression on your mind. You would not read the reports without being impressed by them, would you?—I really do not remember what it was now. I do not want to keep repeating myself.

10611. In this report it is stated that she became very excited, commenced shouting, and as a number of people got round her and she would not go away, the police-constable took her into custody. If you knew that, would it not occur to you to ask if there were any other persons in the street?—It evidently did not, because I did not ask the question.

10612. You did not ask that question?—No, I do not think I did. I do not think I should ask the question.

(Mr. Dickinson.) I should like to know, Mr. Muir, how this report comes forward?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) There is always an Inspector on duty at each police court, and when anything takes place which he thinks it is the duty of his superiors to know he reports upon it, and in this case, as you know, Mr. Braham had asked for summonses against the police for perjury and assault, and he had been referred to the Commissioner of Police. Inspector Castle, apparently upon his own initiative, thought that that was a matter which he ought to report upon, and this is the report. That is quite a usual practice.

(Mr. Dickinson.) He had been in attendance at the police court?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Yes. There is always an Inspector on duty at each police court, and it is his duty to report upon accusations made against police officers and other things.

10613. (Mr. Dickinson.) You had been acting as Superintendent of this division. I asked the Inspector yesterday whether there were no means in the office by which he could have at once tested the accuracy of the name and address of the person brought up?—That has been remedied since 1903. At that time there was not any directory.

10614. What is there now?—There are local directories at every station, and the Suburban and Post Office Directories at the chief station, where they can get information at once by telegraph or telephone.

10615. Where this gentleman and his wife resided, and where she was charged, are in the same division?—Yes, but of course in a different section.

10616. They had no means then of ascertaining. Would they have means now of ascertaining anywhere in London?—Yes.

10617. Immediately?—Immediately.

10618. ((Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I should like to ask one question, not on this case at all, but dealing with the system. As I understand, under Rule 60 the accused officer is called upon to submit his reply to the complaint, and that he has to make in writing?—Yes, you have got it.

10619. Suppose questions are being put by a policeman, does he put the question direct to the witness, or is it put through you?—It is put through the inquiry officer.

10620. He would have to say to you what it is he wants to ask, and then you put the question?—There it is. The question is put.

10621. Sometimes you do not go through the form of having it translated, do you?—If it was an improper question I should not allow it.

10622. Are you supposed to question him at all?—If I thought it was a case which wanted elucidating I should question him.

10623. You would take down his answers?—I should express myself in my report.

10624. I say you would take down his answers?—I should express myself in my report.

10625. Would you not take down any verbal statement which he made to you?—Yes, I should make a note of it, and show it in my report. I mean to say he would make his own report.

10626. I do not care for the moment about the report. You put questions to him for the purpose of elucidating the case?—Yes.

10627. That is your duty?—Yes. If I put a question to him then I should put it down.

10628. And you would put down his answer?—Yes.

10629. That takes place sometimes?—Yes.

10630. Then you have got the very thing which I was suggesting might be put to him, only it is done by the police officer holding the inquiry, instead of being done by the person who is complaining?—Yes.

10631. Equally that might be used against him?—Yes, it might.

10632. Please understand I am not finding fault with you. I am only trying to get at your view. So that you see all that would be of no avail against him in the event of a prosecution against him too?—Yes, it could be used in evidence. Chief-Insp. J. Taylor. 24 Oct. 1906.

10633. If the questions are supposed to be put through you—as they are, according to the rule—any questions which he, the accused, may put through you, or which you, the officer holding the inquiry, may put to him, and the answers would all be noted down?—Yes.

10634. So that, as I follow from what you say now, the only distinction in what I was suggesting to you merely for the purpose of hearing your view about it, and not in the slightest degree committing myself or anybody else to any such view, which you draw is between you, the person holding the inquiry, putting the question, and the complainant being allowed to put the question. That is the only distinction, as far as I follow you?—It is narrowing the limits, of course.

10635. That is what I mean. You have the right clearly, and you do, as you tell me, put the questions and you do take answers?—Yes.

10636. And answers which may incriminate him, or does a constable never give answers which may incriminate him?—I am afraid they do.

—10637. They do give answers which may incriminate them?—I mean to say a constable is the same as everybody else. Just taking a policeman's coat and donning or doffing it, does not make a difference, does it?

10638. The result is he does sometimes make answers, I suppose, which may incriminate him?—I suppose he does.

10639. And they would be taken down. Exactly the same result would happen supposing the complainant put the questions, if the constable had to admit something which incriminated him. It would be exactly the same thing, would it not, except that it would be done through the complainant instead of through the police officer? Let me follow it out for a minute. If the complainant had in the same way to put the questions through you as the accused police officer has to do—technically, that is, leaving you supreme control as to whether the questions should be put or not—then the complainant and the police officer would be in the same position for the purpose of putting questions?—Yes.

10640. And you, as the police officer holding the inquiry, would be entitled to say whether or not either of them should put a particular question which is put forward?—I should only put proper questions.

10641. That is what I mean to infer. Any improper question would be ruled out by you?—Yes.

10642. Any question which was relevant to the inquiry, and which would help to elucidate the facts so that you might report, you would presumably allow, unless for some reason or another, which we need no discuss now, you nevertheless thought it was an improper question?—Yes.

10643. My only object in putting those questions to you was to follow out the objection which you had very properly pointed out as to what might be the result of questions being put to the police-constable. What I wanted to point out with reference to the rule was that exactly the same thing happens now, the only difference being that the questions would be put by you instead of by the complainant?—Quite so.

Superintendent Charles Doyle, sworn.

10644. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) You are a Superintendent of Police of the W Division?—Yes. Supt. C. Doyle.

10645. Have you got there a copy from the telegram book of the Clapham Station?—Yes.

10646. Does that show that the telegram was sent out at one o'clock?—One o'clock.

10647. Would you read the telegram which was sent out, please?—It is from Clapham Station to Tooting Station, and it was forwarded at 1 a.m.: "Please inform Philip Braham, of 7, Culverden Road, Tooting, that his wife is charged here with disorderly conduct, and wants bail. Will he attend? Bring receipts. Reply, or whether she resides there.—Signed W. Billson, Inspector."

(Chairman.) To what police station was that sent?—Tooting.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Do you desire the result of his inquiries to be given?

(Chairman.) No. The material thing is the time.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) An officer was at once sent to the address?—Yes. The officer who received the telegram at Tooting is present in Court. He sent a constable to the address with a copy of the telegram. The officer who received the telegram went out patrolling at half-past one. He informs me that he subsequently met the constable returning from the address, who informed him that he could make no one hear at the house. The sergeant directed him to go back and make further inquiry.

Supt. C. Doyle. 24 Oct. 1906.

10648. Then, does it appear that not till six o'clock the next morning, or thereabouts, were they able to get anybody to answer at the house?—Then a telegram was sent from Tooting Station to Clapham Station at 6.35 a.m. on the 6th June, 1903 "Mrs. Braham at home on arrival of message." You may recollect Mr. Braham went to Balham Police Station.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) He was there at 1.30, and he went to the other station at 1.50, and Mrs. Braham was bailed out.

10649. (Mr. Dickinson.) That is the nearest to the address given by Mrs. Braham?—The address is situated in the Tooting section of the W Division.

10650. The telegram left your station at 1 a.m.?—Yes.

10651. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) You, on the 11th June, submitted a report by Sub-divisional Inspector Hamilton with reference to Mrs. Braham's case?—Yes.

10652. On page 4 of the papers there is this. You say: "No complaint has yet been received from Mr. or Mrs. Braham. Possibly they will let the matter rest." Then you speak about Mr. Crabb. You say Inspector Billson is away, and that a report will be obtained from him on his return as to what transpired at the station. Then you say: "So far as I can ascertain at present, Mrs. Braham made no complaint there." After the matter had been finally dealt with by the Commissioner of Police the matter was sent to you with their decision upon it?—Quite so.

10653. You reported on the 4th July, sending the papers back to the head office: "Referring to attached, I beg to report having strictly cautioned Inspector Billson and P.C. 800, W. Atkinson, as directed"?—Yes.

10654. (Earl Russell.) What is the meaning of "strictly cautioned"? Does it mean you gave the man a verbal admonition?—Yes.

10655. Is he reduced in rank in any way?—No.

10656. Is his pay affected?—No.

10657. (Chairman.) Is the fact of his having been cautioned, or severely cautioned, entered in any book?—On the papers—on the correspondence. Of course, the report is kept in the Report Book, but it is not entered on the Officers' Defaulters' Sheet.

10658. A verbal caution is not entered on the Officer's Defaulters' Sheet?—No.

10659. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Is this the lightest form of punishment there is, if punishment it be, to the officer?—Yes.

10660. The lightest thing there is?—Yes.

10661. You gave him a strict caution?—A strict caution.

10662. Which means, I suppose, that you tell him he is to be very careful, and that this sort of thing is not to happen again?—Just so, but if he does he will get into trouble.

10663. Can you tell me in your experience whether you have had similar instances in which similar punishment has been meted out to a man with regard to whom a similar report was made. I am not speaking of Inspector Billson?—I cannot recall any case to mind.

10664. What I mean is this: Major Wodehouse in his decision, which is what you act upon, says this: "The police-constable's subsequent action in preferring a charge of drunkenness against a sober person looks as though he sought to make the case stronger." That was his view?—Yes.

10665. Have you known any other case in which with such an expression of opinion from the Commissioner the punishment has only been this caution you have told us of?—I cannot recall any particular case to mind.

10666. I do not know whether in your experience you can recall any case in which a similar statement has been made?—The officer's character is taken into consideration.

10667. That means, I understand, his character was very good?—Very good. During the whole of his career he had only had one minor report against him for discipline. That occurred in the X Division. Upon that report he was sent to me. That was nothing of importance. That was in March, 1903.

10668. What sort of thing was it?—It was a squabble he had in one of the section houses with another constable.

10669. That was the only thing there was against him during the whole of the time?—That was all.

10670. Would you, for example, as Superintendent, look upon it as a very serious thing if a constable sought to make the case stronger against a person by giving evidence which was not correct?—Certainly, it would be a serious matter.

10671. Or equally without giving evidence. If he makes statements which are incorrect that involves him in the risk of coming in conflict with the law?—Yes.

10672. But, apart from that altogether, suppose he makes statements—not sworn statements in the witness box—to support a charge before the Inspector taking the charge which are not true, and the Inspector thinks he is trying to support a charge by making statements which are not true, what in the ordinary course, happens?—If it was proved against him he would be dealt with.

10673. I must ascertain exactly what is meant by "dealt with." Have you known such cases happen?—I cannot recall any case to mind.

10674. I suppose the fact must happen sometimes?—If a man brings a prisoner to a station and the charge is not entertained, or there is insufficient evidence, or a constable is considered to be wrong in bringing the accused person to the station, as a rule the constable is dealt with as a defaulter, and is dealt with by the Chief Constable, or in some cases reports are submitted to the Chief Constable, and the constable may be treated as a defaulter, or he may be cautioned, or strictly cautioned, to be more careful in the future.

10675. You have had a large experience?—Yes.

10676. You understand I am not asking you about this case?—I have known men placed on the Defaulters' Report for bringing an improper case to the station.

10677. I suppose equally it has happened amongst the very large number of police that there are that a policeman has made a statement in preferring a charge which was not true to support a charge which he was making?—Yes.

10678. Perhaps I ought to ask you this. Are those instances rare?—Yes, they are.

10679. When a policeman does make such a statement then he is dealt with. Would he be reported upon by the Inspector?—Yes, the Inspector dealing with the case at the station would report, and the constable would report, and in due course the reports would reach the Superintendent.

10680. It would be looked upon as a very serious matter?—Yes.

10681. You would agree with me it is an extremely serious matter for a constable to make false statements before an Inspector who has no means of ascertaining whether they are true or not. He has to take the statements of the officer in the ordinary course which he would believe?—Yes.

10682. Then if he finds out that the statements are untrustworthy it would be looked upon by the Inspector in charge as a very grave matter?—Yes.

10683. I am drawing every distinction, and I understand you would, between a man who is making a mistake, which must happen, of course, to everybody, and a man who is seeking to bolster up a charge by making a false statement. Of course, a man may make a mistake, and in that case it would not be looked upon, I suppose, as a serious matter?—No.

10684. It is only if you think he is seeking to bolster up a case by telling untruths about it?—Yes.

10685. I suppose it does sometimes happen that a man makes a mistake as to whether a person is drunk or not?—Yes.

10686. It is with that object that the Divisional Surgeon Rules are made, so that you may have medical testimony at once?—Yes. The station officials have liberty to call in the doctor in any case they choose.

10687. (Mr. Dickinson.) When a charge is brought before the Magistrate and dismissed do you take any notice of that at all from the point of view of ascertaining for your own satisfaction whether the constable was justified in making the charge or not?—No, not unless there is some comment by the Magistrate.

10688. You say it is only when the magistrate comments on the action of the police-constable, that you would take any action?—Yes; or, on the other hand, when the prisoner is put up and the officer is not present, then I should get a report from the Inspector attending the police court for his Superintendent.

10689. On what?—On the officer's absence. A prisoner might be put up and the officer might not be in attendance.

10690. Merely on the question of why he was not in attendance?—Yes.

10691. But with regard to a question of whether or not the man's accusation is groundless, that you do not inquire into at all?—No.

10692. Unless the public take it in their own hands and bring an accusation against the police-constable?—That is so.

10693. (Chairman.) Mr. Rufus Isaacs asked you some questions as to the meaning of the words "severely cautioned," and you told us that was the lightest punishment, if punishment it be, that is meted out to constables?—Yes.

10694. I want you to give me your opinion about Major Wodehouse's judgment, if I may call it so. "The police-constable may, in the first instance, have been guilty of an error of judgment, but his subsequent action in preferring a charge of drunkenness against a sober person looks as though he sought to make the case stronger." Did you understand him to mean by that that in arresting Mrs. Braham, Atkinson may have been guilty of a mere error of judgment as to arresting her?—Yes.

10695. That is to say, that her conduct may not have been so disorderly as to justify the arrest?—That is how I take it.

10696. What Major Wodehouse is really censuring is the discipline, and he says that the police-constable having been guilty, really, of an error of judgment, proceeded to strengthen his case by alleging drunkenness?—Yes.

10697. So as to make the offence not one of disorder in the street, but one of drunkenness and disorder?—Yes, the two combined.

10698. The censure on Atkinson was for preferring the charge of drunk and disorderly when he ought to have preferred the charge merely of disorderly?—Yes.

10699. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) This is the charge sheet which you sign, is it not?—Yes. I take charge of it when it is complete before it goes to Scotland Yard.

10700. This is the only point I want to know about. There is a column here for "Charge: How disposed of by Magistrate," and "What offence proved." With regard to this particular case, it is "Dis."—dismissed?—That is, discharged.

10701. Who would put that on?—That would be the magistrate's clerk, or possibly the Inspector on duty at the court. In some courts the Inspector marks the sheets so used, but in other courts it is done by the magistrate's clerk.

10702. I read that to mean "Insufficient evidence"?—Yes.

10703. Apparently, that at some time has been written over?—That would be done at the court. It might have been a bad pen. It is rather smudgy.

10704. I am not attaching importance to it?—It is quite clear there were two "f's"—"Insfft. evidence."

10705. I want to know who put this as the reason?—The clerk.

10706. The clerk at the court?—Yes, I should say it was the clerk. There is not a hard and fast rule. I have marked sheets when I have attended courts. In other courts it is done by the clerk himself.

Supt. C. Doyle.

24 Oct. 1906.

10707. What I was trying to ascertain was, who is responsible for saying that the charge was dismissed by reason of insufficient evidence?—I think the clerk at the court.

(Chairman.) He has added something which is not required by the direction "Charge: How disposed of by Magistrate," and "What offence proved."

10707.* (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Can you tell me whose writing it is in?—No.

(Chairman.) The evidence before us is that the Magistrate said, "Charge dismissed—not a word against her."

10708. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It seems to me that somebody has put that in afterwards. It is not of very great importance, but I want to understand what it means?—We will find out and let you know.

10709. When you signed that charge sheet had it those words on it that it has now?—It is impossible for me to say now. During the last three years I have signed thousands of papers.

10710. Whose signature is that?—That is the signature of the Sub-divisional Inspector. He initials the sheet before it reaches me.

10711. Who is he?—R. H. Hamilton. He is here.

10712. I only wanted to know whether it was the Sub-divisional Inspector Hamilton's writing?—No, that is not his writing.

10713. (Mr. Dickinson.) You said just now that it might be the Inspector who would write this. How is it possible for the Inspector to do it?—He would get it from the clerk.

10714. Is this a copy?—No. That is the original sheet.

10715. When would he have found out?—It might not be for a week afterwards. I have sheets up, perhaps, twice a week from the station. They keep the sheets.

10716. There is a charge on the 2nd, there is a charge on the 3rd, and then there is one on the 6th. Do you say this paper is brought away from the police-court and put on your desk?—No, it would get to the station where the charges are taken. It would not reach me, possibly, for four or five days; it might be a week.

10717. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Do you mean the station or the court?—The police-station.

10718. (Mr. Dickinson.) That is where the Inspector is. But there are different stations for one court, are there not?—Yes. They send the charges to various stations.

10719. These all came from the same station?—Yes. The charge was taken at Clapham Police Station.

10720. Who fills this up?—The officer taking the charge.

10721. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) The original sheet as he enters it when the charge is taken?—Yes.

10722. Where is this paper when he enters it?—Before him.

10723. I do not quite understand it. There was a case which was tried on the 2nd June?—Yes, that is entered by an Inspector named Smith.

10724. Where does he enter it—in the station or in the police court?—In the station when he is investigating the case.

10725. Then he takes this paper to the police court?—No, the papers are sent to the police court the following morning.

10726. And the case is heard?—Yes.

10727. Then what happens? Is it sent back to you from the court?—Yes, when they finish with it at the court they send it back.

10728. It goes backwards and forwards from the station to the police court?—Yes.

10729. The cases are on different days, and therefore it goes backwards and forwards?—Yes.

10730. Therefore those are really the property of the police?—Yes.

10731. Therefore you think in that case it might have been done by the police?—That was done by the

Supt. C. Doyle.

24 Oct. 1906.

Clerk, I should think. You see the writing on the following day is somewhat different.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Will you look at it?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) I only want to know if you can tell us whose handwriting it is.

(Chairman.) At the top of the column you will see the words "Charge—how disposed of by Magistrate."

10732. (Mr. Dickinson.) Is there any note taken of what is done with the charge?—The Clerk takes a note and the Magistrate takes a note.

10733. Therefore the Inspector would only get from the Clerk's book what was in the Clerk's book?—I should say from that writing it was done by the Clerk.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Mr. Muskett and the Inspector both know the writing. It is the handwriting of Mr. Titterton, the Chief Clerk at the Westminster Police Court.

10734. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That is the entry he makes with regard to what has been done with the charge?—Yes.

(Chairman.) In this case it was quite an incorrect entry, because the Magistrate says "Charge dismissed—not a word against her."

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) "Discharged" might mean that you had not properly proved the case, but you tell us it was written by the Clerk, and it is his view.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) It is correct as far as it goes.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It is correct in every case where the prisoner is discharged.

10735. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) Supposing an Inspector taking a charge thinks that the constable preferring it is giving improper evidence, or untrue evidence, the Inspector would report to you in your division?—Yes.

10736. In writing?—In writing.

10737. You would consider his report?—Yes.

10738. If you took a clear view of it then you would on your own initiative place the constable or accused on the defaulters' sheet that morning?—On the defaulters' report.

10739. He would be dealt with as a defaulter in the ordinary course?—Quite right.

10740. But supposing you were in doubt as to whether it was a perfectly clear case, do you in some cases simply forward the Inspector's report to the Chief Constable?—Yes, with my report upon it.

10741. And the Chief Constable then has the decision of whether that accused person shall be placed on the defaulters' sheet or not?—Yes.

10742. Or whether he should be strictly cautioned, as was done in this case?—Yes.

10743. In this case the man was never placed upon the defaulters' sheet at all?—No.

10744. He was merely strictly cautioned?—Yes

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Would you draw the distinction the learned Chairman drew my attention to when I was putting questions relating to this point. You put it as evidence?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) I beg your pardon. I had a good precedent for making a mistake.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You must not assume it is a mistake, but it does not cover the whole ground.

10745. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) It is in the nature of evidence, although not on oath?—Quite so.

10746. Because the Inspector has put it as evidence on which he has to act as to whether he will take the charge or not?—Yes.

10747. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) The same thing would apply if it was a statement made, although not a statement made on oath?—Yes.

(Chairman.) That finishes your evidence, Mr. Muir?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Yes.

(Earl Russell.) Is Inspector Castle not to be called?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) He is not here.

(Earl Russell.) I do not press to have him called if I can refer to his report which is at page 11. Perhaps I might take his report as in. Then I can refer the Commissioners to the points I want to refer to?

(Chairman.) Yes. These are the police reports and documents.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It is obvious, whatever it may be, we have the report from him which is all he can tell us.

(Earl Russell.) This, I understand, is his own impression of what he heard in court. The first point I want to call the attention of the Commissioners to is the one which has been already mentioned, that she commenced shouting, and that a number of people got round her; the second point is, that the constable took hold of her shoulder in a most offensive way and pushed her; and the last point is that a summons was applied for, and the Magistrate said, "If you have any complaint to make, make it to the Commissioner," and he declined to grant a summons. Might I ask again that the Commissioners at least should have before them the Clerk's notes of the proceedings at the police court?

(Chairman.) There were depositions, no doubt.

(Earl Russell.) They have not been produced.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) We have notes of evidence in the Clerk's book.

(Chairman.) The witnesses were called and sworn, and the case was dismissed. There was a formal trial before the Magistrate?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Yes.

(Chairman.) Then we can get the depositions?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) "Notes of Evidence" they are called. Throughout this inquiry by everybody the report in "Lloyd's News" has been treated as correct, and it is for that reason we do not think it necessary to get a copy.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It has been referred to several times.

(Chairman.) I have treated it as a true report.

(Earl Russell.) That may be. We can see when we get the notes.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Do the Commissioners desire the notes to be obtained?

(Chairman.) I think we ought to have them in all the cases we inquire into.

(Chairman.) We will now take Andrews' case.

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) There were two cases before the magistrate, all arising out of the same incident, which were taken separately at the wish of the defence, but I have no doubt they will be taken together here. There was Andrews against Manning, and Andrews against Peck and Dawson.

(Chairman.) Do you appear for Andrews?

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) Yes.

(Chairman.) And you apply for liberty to examine the witnesses, do you?

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) Yes, sir.

(Chairman.) Then let Andrews come forward, and we will hear his complaint.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) This particular case has been the subject of recent judicial investigation, and the whole matter is on record, and, of course, can be utilised by the Commission if they wish it.

(Chairman.) We will hear what Andrews has to say, and hear what his complaint is.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) What do you say, Mr. Bankes, has been the subject of judicial investigation?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) In this case summonses were taken out before the magistrate, Mr. Biron, and both these charges were fully investigated and dealt with by him. That is what I meant by "judicial investigation," but I only made the observation for the purpose of informing you that all the proceedings are on record, as far as I know.

(Chairman.) Very likely that will shorten our inquiry very much, but I think our duty is to hear what Andrews has to say.

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) These are only notes of evidence, not full depositions.

WILLIAM HENRY ANDREWS, sworn.

Mr. W. H. Andrews.

24 Oct. 1906.

10748. (Mr Schultess-Young.) What are you?—A french-polisher.

10749. How long have you been engaged in your last employment?—For the last two years.

10750. Will you recall your mind back to the 28th and 29th July this year, at midnight, and will you tell the Commissioners what happened then? What were you doing about half-past eleven?—On the 29th July I was having a drink in the "Antelope" at Phipp Street, Finsbury.

10751. You came out of there?—Yes.

10752. What next?—I was proceeding up Luke Street towards home. That would be about five minutes past twelve—it was on a Saturday night, and the public-houses close at 12 o'clock—and I got part of the way up Luke Street, and I passed some people who were a bit noisy. I think they had had a little drop to drink, and one of them made an offensive remark to me. I walked on and took no notice, and then one of them came forward and attempted to strike me. I baulked the blow and struck at him, but he neither struck me nor did I strike him. Then his missus, who was with him, came forward and threw the contents of the can they were taking some beer home in for supper, and threw the beer in my face, but she never lost hold of the can, and the can never left her hand.

10753. She gave evidence before the magistrate, and is a witness here to-day?—Yes, she is a witness on my behalf.

10754. What took place then?—One constable came up first, and then another constable came up. The first constable who came on the scene there is no doubt would not have arrested me at all if the second one had not come up, but the second one happened to have a bit of a grudge against me, and he arrested me. There was no necessity to arrest me whatever, because I had done nothing wrong.

10755. With regard to that point, had you been taken before to the station and the charge refused?—Yes, I have been interfered with several times by the police at Old Street Police Station.

10756. Have you reported them?—Yes, I have reported them on two or three occasions. Two occasions on which I have reported them I can call to mind.

10757. What took place next after the constable arrested you?—My hat was knocked off, and I asked them to pick my hat up off the ground, and then I would go to the station, and I also asked them what they had arrested me for, and why they should wish to charge me. My hat was not found, so they took me to the station, and on the way to the station they twisted my arms up my back very much as high as they could get them, and caused me a great deal of pain, and eventually they got me to the station.

10758. What took place there?—They took me in the station, and when I was taken into the charge-room there were two young fellows standing in the dock being charged.

10759. Were they Obeney and Bassett?—Yes, they had been taken in just before me.

10760. You were present in court the next day when Obeney and Bassett were brought before Mr. Cluer, and the charge against them dismissed?—Yes.

10761. What took place with regard to you in the station?—The sergeant in charge of the station, as soon as I was taken into the charge-room, said, "Downstairs with him!" There were several constables in the station at the time; twelve to fourteen constables were in the charge-room at the time, on account of the charges being taken before me, and I should think quite a dozen of them closed round me, and I was taken through a door down a flight of steps into a basement. All the way going down the steps the two constables who had taken me in charge were holding my arms behind me, and the other constables who were following behind me downstairs were kicking and punching me from behind, and as soon as I reached the bottom of the stairs the constables holding my arms let me go, and as soon as they did that the constable on the right-hand side of me, who was holding my right arm, struck me with his right fist, and caught me on the jaw, and he kicked me. I should think there were five or six who were left below with me in this basement, and they all set about me and knocked me about something shocking.

10762. Was there any reason which you know of why you should be sent down those stairs?—No reason whatever—in fact, a prisoner has no business downstairs in the basement.

10763. Were there any cells there that you saw?—No. I never saw any cells. There was only one gas-light down there, and that was turned down very low.

10764. Did you, at the magistrate's request, describe this underground passage?—Yes, he asked me to describe it.

10765. Did the magistrate say he had been to see it?—Yes.

10766. Was any question raised as to the accuracy of your description?—No question whatever.

10767. Was it also denied by the police that you had been taken there?—Yes; they denied that they took me downstairs.

10768. Was it suggested that you could have had any access to the place, or knowledge of the place?—No.

10769. Did you see any constable you knew on the steps of the station when you were taken in?—Yes.

10770. Who was that?—I saw Police-constable Manning standing on the steps in private clothes as I was taken into the station.

10771. I think, when the case came before the magistrate, you were the only witness who testified to having seen him?—Yes, I was the only witness there.

10772. He was said by the police to be in bed?—Yes, they said he was in bed.

10773. Have you witnesses in court now who saw him on the steps of the station on that occasion?—I have.

10774. What took place after you were knocked about, as you have described, in this underground passage. Were you brought up again?—Yes, after about a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes the sergeant who had ordered it called out, "Bring him up." He had finished the charge he was taking when they took me in, and the young men had been taken to the cells, and he called out, "Bring him up," and they then caught hold of me and brought me upstairs into the charge-room.

10775. Did you hear the constable say anything when you were taken into the station?—No, I cannot say I did.

10776. When you were brought up into the charge-room what took place?—I was placed in the dock and charged.

10777. What were you charged with?—I was charged with disorderly conduct and using obscene language.

10778. And something else, were you not? You were charged with having assaulted the police?—Yes; I was charged with assaulting the police.

10779. What took place then?—The charge was booked, and I was then taken to the cells.

10780. Did you make any complaint?—Not at that time, because I was almost unconscious. I was very much confused.

10781. Then you were taken to the cells?—Yes.

10782. How long were you in the cells before you were bailed out?—I was in the cells three and a quarter hours.

10783. You were brought upstairs afterwards when you were bailed out?—Yes.

10784. Did you make any complaint then? Did you say anything then?—When I was bailed out, certainly.

10785. What did you say, and to whom?—To the sergeant who ordered it I said: "You coward, what did you tell them to do this for? He said: "Nonsense; you had that when you came in."

10786. Had you, so far as you know, any mark or wound upon you of any kind when you went into the station?—I had no marks on me whatever.

10787. Then I think you left the station with the

Mr. W. H. Andrews.

24 Oct. 1906.

persons who bailed you out?—I left the station with the people who came and bailed me out.

10788. Where did you go?—They accompanied me to St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

10789. And what was done there?—I had a cut over the eye that they had done to me down in the basement, and the doctor sewed that wound up.

10790. Have you the scar of it still?—I have a scar still. (The witness pointed out the scar.)

10791. I do not know what would be the opinion of the Commission as to this, but I submit it is a proper question. Did you make a statement to the doctor directly you got to the hospital?—I did.

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) I suggest I am entitled, as part of the res gestæ, to ask what that statement was.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Are you going to call the doctor?

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) Yes.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Then I shall not have any objection at all if you call the doctor.

10792. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) What did you say to the doctor?—I complained to the doctor about it, and told him where it had been done, and that the police had done it.

10793. You accounted for the wound?—Yes, I accounted to the doctor for the injuries that I had.

10794. What did you say to him?—I told him I had been arrested, and the constables had set about me in Old Street Police Station.

10795. Then you went away?—Then I went home.

10796. You were brought up before Mr. Cluer the next day?—Yes.

10797. Charged with assaulting the police and with being drunk and disorderly?—Yes.

10798. I think you were bound over to keep the peace?—Quite right.

10799. Mr. Cluer remarking that the assault must have been a very trifling one? Is that so?—Yes.

10800. Did you make any complaint to Mr. Cluer then about what took place?—I did. I told Mr. Cluer everything that had taken place in the station.

10801. Did Mr. Cluer suggest a remedy?—Yes.

10802. Did he say he would deal with the case if you did something?—I asked Mr. Cluer what steps I should take about it, and he said: "If you take out a summons at the proper time I shall be only too pleased to hear it. I have heard of similar things occurring at this station before."

10803. That appears in the "Daily Telegraph" report?—Yes.

10804. Then I think you did take a summons out?—Yes.

10805. Against one man, Police-constable Manning?—Yes, I summoned Police-constable Manning first.

10806. Had you known him by the name of Manning?—No; I had not known him by that name.

10807. What name had you known him by?—I had known him by the name of "Charley Wood."

10808. Do you know why he was called "Charley Wood"?—Yes.

10809. Why?—Because he is in the habit at every opportunity he has of resorting to his truncheon. He has been known, on two or three occasions, to pull his truncheon out if he sees anybody walking about, and telling them if they do not clear out they will get some of "Charley Wood," alluding to his truncheon; and that is the reason that he is nicknamed "Charley Wood."

10810. Then I think you took out a summons against him?—Yes, I did at first.

10811. Several days afterwards were you called upon to pick him out?—I went to the station and asked for a parade, so that I could pick him out. I said: "I know him quite well, and if you parade them I will pick him out," and the Inspector in charge of the station said: "If you come up at three o'clock in the afternoon I will have one parade, and if the man is not there I will have another parade, and he is almost sure to be amongst the two parades." I went up at three o'clock, and I should think there were 80 or 90 police-constables and detectives in private clothes—every one was in private clothes—paraded in the charge room, and I picked Police-constable Manning out.

10812. I think your feeling mostly was against Manning more than anybody else?—Yes, because it was him who inflicted most of the injuries upon me. It was him who did the cut over my right eye.

10813. Did you afterwards summon Peck and Dawson?—I did.

10814. I think that summons was also heard by Mr. Biron?—That summons was heard by Mr. Biron.

10815. Were they two of the constables who were down in the underground cellar with you?—Yes; they were the men who took me in charge.

10816. This is rather difficult to understand—how that arose. A man named Stevenson took you in charge, did he not?—Yes; but Stevenson left me on the way to the station and handed me over to Peck, and then Stevenson went back to his point. Stevenson never escorted me to the station at all.

(Chairman.) What became of the summonses before Mr. Biron?—The summonses were all dismissed.

(Mr. Whitmore.) Against Peck and Dawson?—Against Manning first, and then the summonses against Peck and Dawson.

10817. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) The same Magistrate heard them all three?—The same Magistrate heard them all three.

10818. (Chairman.) Were they two distinct trials, or was the case all one case?—No, there were two separate cases. I summoned Manning alone, and then I took out a summons against Peck and Dawson, and Peck and Dawson's cases were heard together.

10819. Evidence was taken in Manning's case?—Yes.

10820. And evidence was also taken in Peck and Dawson's cases?—Yes.

10821. And the Magistrate dismissed both summonses?—Yes; he dismissed all the three summonses.

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) I tried to get the summonses heard together, and the defence objected, and the Magistrate said he had no option but to take them separately. Costs were asked for, but Mr. Biron refused to grant costs.

(Chairman.) Were there two summonses?

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) One summons first, and then Dawson and Peck appeared on another summons.

(Chairman.) There were two summonses. First of all, Manning alone was summoned, and then Peck and Dawson were summoned on the second summons?

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) Yes.

(Chairman.) There were, therefore, two trials?

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) Yes. Costs were asked for, but the Magistrate refused to grant them.

(Mr. Dickinson.) On separate days?

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) Yes. There were six hearings altogether. In consequence of the repeated adjournments there was a great difficulty in getting our witnesses together, so that only a very small proportion of the witnesses were really heard, the most important ones being entirely left out.

10822. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) How old are you?—I am 29 next June.

10823. And a considerable part of your life you have either spent in prison, have you not, or in industrial homes?—No, not a considerable portion.

10824. You are making this serious charge against these men, so I must ask you this. On the 24th December, 1891, you were sent for two years to an industrial school for stealing coke?—Yes, that is right.

10825. On the 6th January 1896, you were sentenced to fourteen weeks' imprisonment, at North London Sessions, for stealing butter?—Yes.

10826. On the 2nd February, 1897, you were sentenced to six months' imprisonment for housebreaking?—Yes.

10827. That also was at North London Sessions?—Yes.

10828. On the 24th February, 1898, you were sentenced to five years' penal servitude for shop-breaking?—Yes.

10829. And on the 18th August, 1903, you were sentenced to four months' imprisonment for being a suspected person?—Yes, that is quite right.

10830. Then, on the 30th June, 1904, you were sentenced to one month for attempting to obtain 10s. by false pretences?—Yes.

10831. Then, on the 5th September, 1905, you were charged with shop-breaking, and acquitted?—Yes.

10832. And, on the 8th May, 1906, you were fined 40s. for an act of indecency with a female in the streets?—Yes.

10833. Those convictions were under the names of Anderson, Jones, Martin, Chapman, and Roberts. Are those names under which you have passed at different times in your career?—I have never been convicted in the name of Roberts.

10834. You were charged in the name of Roberts, and acquitted?—Yes.

10835. But you were convicted twice under the name of Anderson, once under the name of Martin, and once under the name of Chapman, and twice under the name of Andrews. Are those all names under which you have been passing?—Yes, that is quite true.

10836. This night, I understand, was Saturday night?—Yes, it was Saturday night.

10837. And had you been about in different public-houses?—No.

10838. How many had you been in that you can remember?—I could not say to be sure; I daresay I had been in a few, but I could not give you the number. That is impossible. Nobody could do that. Going about for three or four hours I do not suppose anybody could tell you how many public-houses they had been into.

10839. If in three or four hours you go into as many as you can in the time, it amounts to a good number, and you may forget them; but you cannot remember how many that night?—No.

10840. I suppose you had something to drink in each one, if you could get it?—I do not suppose I should go into public-houses if I did not go in for something to drink.

10841. How long had you been in and out of the public-houses? We have now got to midnight. Had you been at it since six o'clock?—No.

10842. What time did you begin?—I cannot now tell you what time I really came out of doors that night; but I know I had not had many drinks.

10843. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Can you give us any idea of what that means? What do you call many?—It is a difficult thing to recollect, but I should think I had perhaps half-a-dozen.

10844. (Chairman.) What did you drink?—"Pony" bitters, or stout-malt liquor.

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) He is not charged with being drunk.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) No.

10845. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) You are a man who can stand a great deal of drink, are you not? You can take a great deal without getting drunk?—Yes, I can.

10846. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You used an expression I do not understand—"pony bitters"?—It is a small bitter.

10847. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) "Pony" as opposed to a horse—the diminutive. Where were you going to when you were going up Luke Street?—Home.

10848. Was that in the direction of your home?—Yes.

10849. You did not start to go home until you were turned out of the public-house? You stayed there as long as you could?—I had not been there very long, but I was only a few yards from home, and I generally have the last drink there before I go home.

10850. You stayed in the public-house until you could stay there no longer?—Yes.

10851. And then you started to go home?—Yes.

10852. In the street there were a number of people congregated, who were the worse for drink?—No, there were no people congregated there at all.

10853. Who were there?—Everybody who was there was on the walk. There were several people who came out of the public-house with me at the same time, and I passed some people going up Luke Street towards home; they had had a drop, and they were singing a little, but they were not congregating. They were walking.

10854. Was there a number of them together?—Yes.

10855. One of them used an offensive term to you as you passed?—Yes.

10856. Do you know who that was?—Yes, I do know now.

10857. Is he here?—I do not know whether he has arrived yet.

10858. What is his name?—Mr. Webster.

10859. He used an offensive term?—Yes.

10860. Was it very offensive?—No.

10861. It annoyed you?—Yes.

10862. And you struck at him?—He struck at me first.

10863. And you struck at him?—I struck at him back.

10864. It is true to say, then, that you started fighting?—Oh, no.

10865. If a man strikes at you, and you strike at him, is not that starting fighting?—But it ended there.

10866. And then up came Mrs. Webster?—Yes.

10867. Was she one of the jovial party?—She was with her husband and two or three more people.

10868. Did she seem as jovial as her husband, or less jovial, or about the same?—Just about the same as one another.

10869. She had taken the precaution to take some beer home with her?—Yes.

10870. She had got it in a pewter pot?—No, in a beer can.

10871. When you were trying to strike her husband she was trying to bash you in the face with a can?—Nothing of the sort.

10872. We will see. Did she throw the can at you?—No, the can never left her hand.

10873. Will you swear that?—Yes, I will swear that.

10874. You gave evidence before the Magistrate?—Yes.

10875. Did you say this in cross-examination: "My face was not marked when I went into the station. The woman threw a can at me, but it missed me"? Did you say that?—Where was I supposed to say that?—

10876. At the police court on the first occasion when you were charging Manning with assaulting you. Did you tell the Magistrate, "My face was not marked when I went to the station. The woman threw a can at me, but it missed me"? Did you say that?—No, certainly not. She threw the beer at me, not the can. The can never left her hand. The beer went over me.

10877. At the moment that this was going on the police came up?—Yes.

10878. When they came up were you attempting to strike the woman, or did you strike her?—Yes, I did strike her.

10879. Were you then using very violent language?—No, I was not.

10880. I suppose when you are angry you do not mince words, do you? You say the woman did not strike you, and it never left her hand. We will hear about that in a moment, but, at any rate, the beer went all over you?—Yes.

10881. And you were attempting to strike her. What the policeman says is that at that time there was a large crowd of people, and fighting between man and woman, and making use of very obscene language. Does that correctly describe what took place when the constables came?—No, that is untrue.

10882. What part of it is untrue?—I did strike at Mrs. Webster, and I hit Mrs. Webster on the mouth, and she threw the can of beer over me.

10883. And that was the time the constable came up?—Yes.

Mr. W. H. Andrews.

24 Oct. 1906.

10884. Did he ask you to go away?—No.

10885. And you allege that at once, while this was going on, he took you into custody?—Yes.

10886. Now, from the time that he took you into custody to the time that he got you to the station were you resisting?—No; I never resisted at all on the way to the station.

10887. How many constables had got hold of you?—Two.

10888. Are their names Dawson and Peck?—No. In the first place, their names would be Dawson and Stevenson.

—10889. Stevenson stayed behind and Peck took you?—Oh, no. Stevenson met another constable—that was Constable Peck—and Stevenson handed me over to Constable Peck, and Stevenson went off to his duty.

10890. So the two men who actually took you to the station were Dawson and Peck?—Yes.

10891. Do you tell the Commissioners you were not struggling and fighting all the way?—Yes.

10892. When you got to the station the usual course would be to go into the charge-room, would it not?—Yes.

—10893. You know enough about a station to say that?—Yes, certainly.

10894. When you got there there was a considerable number of people already in the charge-room, was there not?—There was Obeney and Bassett in there, and the sergeant was booking that charge.

10895. Supposing you were making a great noise and were very violent, the charge-room would not be a proper place to keep you in while other charges were being taken, would it?—Most decidedly. I should say a prisoner should not be taken out of the charge-room till he is charged.

10896. You think if he is very violent, and making a great noise, so that other people cannot hear what is going on, that that is the best place to keep him, from your wide experience of police stations?—They had better keep him there than take him where they took me.

10897. Is there a passage between the cells and the charge-room in this police station?—Yes, there is.

10898. Is that where you were taken?—No. Do you mean when I was taken to the basement?

10899. I have a body of people who will speak about this. Do you tell these gentlemen on your oath that you ever went down into anything that can properly be called a basement?—I do.

10900. I suggest to you that where you were taken was the passage between the charge-room and the cells, and that there are two steps down to it, and that is all?—Nothing of the sort.

10901. Have you ever been in this police station before?—Yes, I have once.

10902. This basement that you speak of used in old times to be the passage by which prisoners were taken to the prisoners' room?—I could not answer you that question, because I have never been taken from there to the prisoners' room yet.

10903. When were you at the police station before?—When I was there before I had my own young lady with me, and that was the person I was charged with acting indecently with.

10904. And convicted?—I was fined, and she was taken to the cells with me.

10905. So that on that occasion you went to the charge-room, and you went from the charge-room to the cells?—On that occasion.

10906. In that way would you pass or go near this basement that you are now describing?—No.

10907. You were charged—at any rate, you were brought back from this place that you say you were taken to and assaulted. How many constables do you say actually hit you?—There was quite a dozen, I should think who closed round me; but all the time going downstairs I received kicks and punches from behind.

10908. Can you suggest any reason why any number of constables should have come round you except and unless you were very violent?—Oh, yes; most decidedly I can.

10909. What for?—On account of reporting constables at this station on two or three occasions.

10910. You mean to say they crowded round you in order to punch you?—Yes. In fact, as soon as the sergeant said "Downstairs with him" I understood what was going to be done.

10911. You understood he had sent you down there on purpose?—Yes, for that purpose.

10912. That they might kick you and hit you as much as ever they liked?—That is the reason he gave the order.

10913. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) What was the order?—"Downstairs with him." That was the order.

10914. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Then you came back. When you came back the charge was written down by the sergeant in charge in the book?—Yes.

10915. You knew what was going on. He read it over to you, did he not? Now, think. When you came back from this awful basement the sergeant wrote the charge down in the book?—Yes.

10916. And he read it over to you?—I cannot say for sure whether he did read it over to me.

10917. Just think. Is it not a fact that you made no reply and no complaint at all?—Not then I did not, because I was all but unconscious.

10918. And then you walked by yourself straight from the charge-room into the cell?—Yes, I did walk to the cell.

10919. In this unconscious condition. How did you know which way to go?—The constables escorted me to the charge-room.

10920. You were quiet after the charge, were you not?—When I was in the cell.

10921. No, before. After the charge was recorded against you you then walked quietly to the cell, did you not?—Certainly.

10922. You required no support?—No, I had no support. I could manage to do that.

10923. And you perfectly well understood the charge that the sergeant had read out against you?—I could not answer that question whether the charge was read out to me or not. I do not suppose it made much difference to him whether he read it out or not.

10924. Do you say that this assault by this number of men was of a violent character?—Most decidedly it was.

10925. Severe kicks and real hard blows?—Certainly.

10926. On what parts of the body were the kicks?—received kicks going down the stairs in the back and punches in the back of the head, and when I got to the bottom of the stairs I received the injury to my face.

10927. In the eye?—Yes.

10928. There is no doubt about that that they were real hard knocks?—If you had seen me you would have said so.

10929. We have got the doctor coming who examined you. Now that happened on the 29th July?—Yes.

10930. And you were bailed out?—I was.

10931. Did you come to the station on the 31st July and make a complaint against the police. You had been up before the magistrate on the 30th?—On the 1st it was when I made the complaint. It was on a Wednesday that I made the complaint.

10932. We will get the thing in order of sequence. It was the 29th on Saturday night or the Sunday morning that you were arrested?—Yes.

10933. On Monday you came before the magistrate?—Yes.

10934. And then you were bound over?—Yes.

10935. On the sworn evidence of the police that you had assaulted this policeman?—Yes.

10936. Then Mr. Cluer suggested if you had got a complaint against the police you had better take out a summons?—Yes.

10937. Before taking out the summons did you go round to the station and make a complaint against a particular policeman?—After I applied to Mr. Cluer as to what I could do, and understanding from him what

I could do to take steps to get justice for what was done to me, I went to the station and I asked the Inspector in charge of the police station——

10938. Inspector Allison?—Yes.

10939. Do you know him?—I did not know his name.

10940. Just listen to this. You made a definite complaint to him against a policeman?—Yes.

10941. Is this what you said: that while you were being brought into the station in custody, and when on the station steps, you were assaulted by a constable in plain clothes, who struck you on the face with his fist and kicked you on the leg. Is that what you said to the Inspector?—No, that is what Inspector Allison said that I said, but he detailed a conversation in the police court in the evidence that he gave that never took place between me and him.

10942. I will ask you again, because I want you to realise the importance of it. Did you tell the Inspector that the place where the assault had taken place was on the station steps?—I did not.

10943. You deny that?—I deny that. You mean the steps leading to the station?

10944. Yes?—No, I never received a blow there.

10945. But did you tell the Inspector so?—No, I did not.

10946. You realise, do you not, that if you had been assaulted there you would have had the cut on your face when you got into the charge-room?—It all depends if I had been struck there.

10947. If you had been, you realise that point. Did you tell him that you knew the constable's nickname but not his real name, and that he was wearing a ring at the time, and that is how it was he did the injury?—Yes.

10948. And you told him that his nickname or what you knew him as was Charley Wood?—Yes.

10949. Did you ask for a parade of all the constables so that you might identify the man you knew as Charley Wood?—I did.

10950. And did they, in accordance with your request, parade a number of constables?—Yes, I was told to call again in the afternoon, and I went up in the afternoon.

10951. And how many men were paraded for you to select your man from?—I should think eighty or ninety in private clothes. It is a big charge-room, and they were packed together right round the charge-room, as close as they could get.

10952. You knew your man quite well?—Yes.

10953. They happened to be there because it was the time when they were going out, was it not? You were told to come at the time when the greatest number were there?—They were all in private clothes. I think they had been called in on purpose for it.

10954. There was no difficulty about it, because you had only got to see your man and you would recognise him?—Yes.

10955. You do not suggest there was an attempt to confuse you. You knew the man quite well?—Certainly I did.

10956. You saw him there?—Yes.

10957. And you said, "That is the man"?—Yes.

10958. And that man was Manning?—Yes.

10959. Was Dawson, the man whom you afterwards charged with this assault, amongst those men?—Yes, Dawson was amongst those men.

10960. And you did not say anything about him on that occasion?—Not on that occasion, but he fully expected to be picked out.

10961. Did you tell the Inspector you did not know any of the other constables who had assaulted you except Charley Wood?—No, I did not say except Charley Wood. It stands to reason I must have known the constables who arrested me, because they gave evidence against me in the police court.

10962. No, I am not asking you about the constables who arrested you, but about the constables who assaulted you. Did you say to the Inspector you knew Charley Wood, but that you did not know any of the other constables who assaulted you?—No, I did not.

10963. Having picked out Manning, the charge that you preferred against him was heard before the Police Magistrate?—Yes, it was heard before Mr. Biron.

10964. And you gave evidence?—Yes, I did.

10965. And all the witnesses you wanted to call were heard by the Magistrate?—Yes, on the first occasion.

10966. And then a number of police-constables were called to prove that Manning was not there at the time at all?—Yes, they were all police-constables.

10967. And the Police Magistrate believed them and did not believe you?—Yes.

10968. So that was the end of that. It was on the 12th September that it was dismissed. There were three hearings, and it was heard at great length. You did not yourself take out the summons against the other constables, but it was taken out by some society?—I took the summons out against the other two constables.

10969. But the society helped you or suggested that you should, did they not. I see a reference in your evidence to a society?—The society read the report of my case in the papers, and they sent an envelope on to me with a pamphlet inside, and when I opened the envelope and read it I sent on word to them and asked them whether they could assist me in any way to get justice, as I meant to summon them for it.

10970. Was that after the summons against Manning was dismissed?—No, before.

10971. Was this the same society we have heard of before. What was the name of it?—The Police and Public Vigilance Society.

10972. You got into communication with them?—Yes.

10973. And as a result of that, two summonses were taken out against Dawson and Peck for assaulting you?—I then applied for two more summonses against Dawson and Peck.

10974. And, of course, by that time the Police Magistrate had heard the evidence which the police were giving with regard to Manning not being there at all. He had heard a great deal of the police evidence before you took out this second summons?—Yes. I think there had been one hearing.

10975. You knew pretty well what his decision would be before he gave it?—No, I did not.

10976. Did not you anticipate his decision?—I thought—in fact I knew as well as the police did what they were going to say to get Police-constable Manning out of it a month before.

10977. So this second summons was taken out, and that was heard also before Mr. Biron?—Yes.

10978. And he heard you and all your witnesses?—Oh, no.

10979. All that you chose to call?—They had been there the time before, and the case was not called on. They could not take the case then, and on the next occasion several of my witnesses were not there, and nine or 10 of my witnesses had not arrived.

10980. He heard all the witnesses that you tendered?—There were very few there, and he heard those few, and heard them very quick, and then he got on to the other side of the case.

10981. Let us see how many you did call?—I think there were five called.

10982. That charge against those constables was dismissed?—Yes.

10983. Amongst other witnesses, did you call a Mr. Belcher?—Mr. Bletcher.

10984. Was he one of your witnesses?—He was.

10985. Is he here now?—Yes, I believe he is.

10986. You are going to call him?—Yes.

10987. Were you asked before the Magistrate whether the night previously you had not been obliged to help that particular witness of yours into a cab because he was so drunk that he could not walk?—No, the man was not drunk. I certainly put him in a cab.

10988. I am not saying which hearing it was, but at one of the two hearings, did you tell the Magistrate you had unfortunately been obliged to put your witness Bletcher in a cab the night before and take him home because he was so drunk, because he could not walk—or words to that effect? Is that what you said to the Magistrate?—No, I never said he was so drunk he could not walk. He was not drunk. I put him in

Mr. W. H. Andrews.

24 Oct. 1906.

a cab because he was surrounded by eight constables. and I could see what they were going to do. They were signalling to one another, and they knew he was a witness of mine, and they were going to arrest him, but I called a cab and cheated them. I put him in a cab. I admitted all that in front of the Magistrate the next day when I was asked.

10989. There was nothing to admit according to you, because he was doing nothing except running away from the constables?—I was asked the question you have just asked me about Mr. Bletcher and the cab, and I admitted all that when it was asked of me in the court.

10990. "All that" included the question as to whether you did not put him in a cab because he was too drunk and could not walk?—Oh, no.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It is at the end of the cross-examination of this witness in the case of "Andrews v. Dawson and Peck." I presume this is what you mean "I never knew Bletcher till I was arrested. I know him now pretty well. I was with him last night. He had a little more drink last night than was good for him, and I put him in a cab."

10991. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) That is it. Perhaps my language was more familiar than you used in the police court, but was it not the fact that he was so drunk that he could not walk?—No, nothing of the kind.

10992. A little more drink than was good for him, so you put him in the cab?—That was not the reason I put him in the cab. If I had not put him in the cab he would have been in the police station before another quarter of an hour was over.

10993. Was that because he was so drunk?—No, it was because he was a witness of mine, and not a police witness. In fact, one of the constables was concerned in it, and was with him who I summoned, and that was Constable Dawson.

10994. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) You have been asked about your previous convictions. How long have you been in your present situation?—Two years.

10995. I think your employer's son came up to give evidence on your behalf?—He did.

10996. Have you been convicted, or been accused of doing anything dishonest for the last two years anyhow?—I was acquitted last September on a charge. I was proved to be innocent of it, and I was acquitted at Clerkenwell Sessions.

10997. A question has been asked you in respect of what the Inspector or sergeant in charge of the station said—"Take him downstairs." You informed this man at the station—is that when you made a complaint to him, "You coward, look at what they have done to me"?—That was when I was bailed out when I said that.

10998. Was that why you did say it, because you believed he did it on purpose?—Yes. No doubt he must have done it on purpose, because I have known one or two cases when men have been taken to the same station and have gone in with nothing the matter with them, and have come out with black eyes, and there have been two or three cases since my case.

10999. You knew Manning by the name of Charley Wood?—Yes.

11000. Did you know Dawson and Peck at all?—No, I never knew either of their names.

11001. That is what you mean when you say you did not know them at the station?—Yes, I knew them by sight well, but I never knew their names.

11002. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Do you know Obeney and Bassett?—No, I never saw them before in my life.

11003. The two persons who were being charged when you came in?—No, I never saw them in my life; in fact, I never noticed them that night in the dock.

11004. Was there anybody else in the charge room?—I believe there was another case dealt with—a burglary charge.

11005. There were three persons being charged at that time when you were brought in, or waiting to be charged?—Yes, Obeney and Bassett were there, and I believe there was another charge being booked for burglary.

Mrs. Annetta Chapman, sworn.

Mrs. A. Chapman.

11006. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) Are you a widow living at 3, Alexandra Buildings?—Yes.

11007. Do you remember midnight on the 29th July?—Yes, distinctly.

11008. Are you a stranger, or were you then a stranger, to Andrews?—Yes, I was a perfect stranger to him.

11009. Did you see what took place with regard to him and the police on this occasion?—No, I did not.

11010. Tell us what you did see?—I saw him first of all in company with an old friend of my husband's, and this man had had a glass, and he spoke to me as he always did when he saw me, and this man Andrews was standing on one side. I did not know he was with the other man at that time. He had had a glass to drink, and he made use of a word he ought not to have done, and this man said to him "Joe, you are in the presence of a lady, don't use that talk," and he said "It is getting late Joe, come home." I was waiting for a neighbour outside "The Antelope," and as soon as she came out we went round, and as we went I said "Wait a moment, there is a row here," and almost as soon as I said the words I saw this man being pulled back by a constable without his hat. He stopped deliberately in front of my window where I live, and where there is a lamp they came to a stop, the man being pulled along by the arm by the constable.

11011. Was he resisting at all?—No, he was not. The policeman held him just as if he had just caught hold of him, and I said "Whatever are you taking that man for, he has not been out of my company five minutes, he could not have done anything?" He said "I want my hat." I said "Do not resist for the sake of your hat; it is no more disgrace to go without your hat than it is to go with it." I said "I will come up and speak as a witness for you that you could not have done anything in the time you have been out of my company." He said "No, that is what I want to know what I am being locked up for; and you ought to have taken up the people who interfered with me." I turned round to the policeman and said "I want to know what he is taken up for," and he said "That is my business," and then a second afterwards he said "If you want to know what you are taken up for it is for striking me in the mouth." Andrews said "I shall not go without my hat," and the policeman beckoned to the other policeman on point duty facing where I live, and said "Come along," and they both took him by the arm and went away.

11012. Did he resist at all?—No.

11013. He was without his hat?—Yes.

11014. Was there a good light there?—Yes, it was right facing the lamp.

11015. Had he any marks on his forehead or face at all?—No.

11016. If he had a cut on his forehead an inch and a half long would you have seen it?—I should have seen a scratch if he had one, but I never saw one. The policeman pointed to his mouth and said "He struck me in the mouth," but I saw no marks of any blood or anything. I was quite upset that the man was taken. I did not know the man. On the next day somebody who knew me told me that they would not be mixed up in the case if it was them because the man was such a bad character. I said "Whether a bad character or not, the man ought to have justice done and ought not to be taken up for nothing."

11017. Did you give evidence before the Magistrate, Mr. Biron?—Yes, at the latter end of the case.

11018. You did not give evidence in the first part?—I gave evidence when they summoned me and asked me to go.

11019. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) What is the name of the house you live in?—It is a building—model dwellings.

11020. What is the name of it?—Alexandra Buildings.

11021. Is that in Luke Street?—It is called Luke Street now, but it was called Phipp Street. It is on a bend from Luke Street.

11022. What is your occupation?—I sell perfumery and toilet soaps since my husband has been dead. I have three children to provide for.

11023. But what is your business?—I sell perfumery and toilet soaps.

11024 Where?—In my own place. I sell it to friends who know me and respect me and help me. They are private customers really, and they recommend other customers.

11025. On this night where were you coming from?—First of all I came out, as the policeman on duty can prove, from my house about half-past eleven.

11026. Where did you go?—To Pitfield Street, and bought a joint of meat, and then I was coming home. I hurried out and hurried back.

11027. You passed this man and went past him to your own house?—No, I came through a turning with my neighbour who was with me. She went in to get her husband's supper, and I waited outside while she was inside, and I saw this gentleman who was with Andrews, and he spoke to me.

11028. He was then standing in the street?—Yes.

11029. You did not see any of the bother between him and the woman?—No, I did not.

11030. You did not see beer thrown?—No.

11031. You did not see him strike the woman in the mouth?—No.

11032. Because you had passed on?—No, he passed on and I waited for my neighbour.

11033. Then when you saw him in custody you thought he had been very badly treated because there was not time for him to do any mischief?—Yes.

11034. He did hit the woman in the mouth?—I am not aware of that.

11035. You know now that he had been doing mischief?—It did not look as if he had.

11036. You realise now that there was some time for him to do mischief?—I realise it has been said he had done so.

11037. You heard him say so?—Yes.

11038. Do you believe him?—I believe my own eyes.

11039. So, in spite of what he said you still think he was not there a sufficient time to do any mischief?—I do not think it was possible for such a thing to happen in the time.

11040. You think he invented this story about the beer?—No, I think other people have invented a lot of stories.

11041. You heard him say so?—Yes.

11042 Was there any time for anybody to throw beer?—I suppose there was.

11043. He could do a lot of mischief in that time?—It seems like it, according to this case. Mrs. A. Chapman

11044. I suppose you talked to your neighbours about this?—No, I do not talk to my neighbours very much at all. I am too much occupied with my own business. 24 Oct. 1906.

11045. But when you do get on the talk you can say a good deal in five minutes?—Yes.

11046. When this man came along in custody of the policeman, you must have talked to somebody about that?—Yes, I talked to the policeman Stephenson when he came back.

11047. You were busy talking there?—I was not busy. I spoke to him and said, "Surely they have not locked that man up for nothing."

11048. Were you looking at the policeman at the time you were talking to him?—Yes.

11049. You were occupied in looking at the policeman?—I was not occupied in following the man up.

11050. Then a crowd of people got round?—Not round us.

11051. Round the man who was in custody?—They had gone away before I saw the policeman.

11052. You talked after they had gone away?—Yes.

11053. When the man was close to you in custody of the two policemen there was a large crowd?—The people came round then.

11054. There were a lot of people between you and the policeman?—No.

11055. You were standing up against your door?—No, I was standing in the road.

11056. Where were they?—In the road also.

11057. And a crowd of people all close round there?—No, they came round afterwards, but when I first spoke to the policeman there was the policeman and Andrews and nobody else for a few minutes.

11058. How many minutes?—Not many.

11059. It is not many minutes before there is a crowd in Luke Street when a bobby has got a man?—I suppose not, but there was not in that case.

11060. All you can say is you did not see any marks on his face?—There were no more marks on his face than there are on yours at the present time.

11061. There is a very bad mark on my face unfortunately. You had not noticed that?—But there is no blood on your face.

11062. (Mr. Schultess Young.) You were closer to Andrews than you were to the learned counsel?—Yes, much closer. I was closer than I am to this gentleman (about a foot).

11063. You had more chance of seeing him?—Yes; besides, the light was direct on their faces, both the policeman's and the man's too.

ANNE WEBSTER, sworn.

11064. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) You are a married woman, living at 23, Granville Buildings?—Yes. Anne Webster.

11065. Before this occurrence, did you know anything about Andrews?—No, I never saw him in my life.

11066. Will you tell the Commissioners what took place on the 28th July?—Me and my husband were coming from market. I had a market bag in this hand, and a can in this hand. When I got to the lamp-post, which is about a quarter of the length of the street, and I live nearly at the bottom of the street, there were a few people in the road. It appears that two old men were having a few words. My husband was really singing, or saying something, and as we crossed like to go across the road, there was a policeman standing on duty like at the corner, only a few yards from this lamp-post. As I crossed the road with my husband Andrews was standing by the lamp-post talking to these two old gentlemen. Me and my husband crossed the road and my husband seemed like a few steps behind me. I turned round to see where he was, and as I did, I saw Andrews strike my husband a blow.

11067. Did he actually hit him?—No, he went to make a blow at him. I had the can in this hand, and the bag in this hand, and I put the can up like that (illustrating), as Andrews made the blow, and he upset all my beer.

11068. Did this can hit him?—No.

11069. Are you sure the can did not hit him?—Quite sure.

11070. You were close to Andrews, of course, then?—Yes.

11071. Was there a good light there?—Yes, there was an incandescent light.

11072. Had he any marks or cuts on his forehead at all?—I never saw any.

11073. Do you think you would have seen them if he had?—Yes.

11074. Had he any bruises on his face, did you notice?—No.

11075. What took place after that? Did you notice?—A crowd got round and I persuaded my husband to go home, and as I did the constable took Andrews into custody.

11076. Did you see whether his hat was on or off?—I did not notice.

Anne Webster.

24 Oct. 1906.

11077. Did Andrews resist at all?—I did not see him at all. I went home with my husband.

11078. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Andrews has said that your husband was merry-making?—I see.

11079. Was that the result of drink?—He may have had a glass.

11080. Had you been with him?—Yes.

11081. You had been in public-houses, too?—No, I had not. My husband came and met me. I had gone on marketing previously to that.

11082. However, he was merry?—Yes.

11083. He called Andrews an offensive name?—I never heard my husband do so.

11084. Never heard your husband use an offensive word?—Never.

11085. Not even when he is tipsy?—Me and my husband have quarrels indoors if we have one.

11086. He started striking at Andrews, and Andrews started striking at him?—I had my arms full, and I went like that (illustrating), and in doing so I put up the can.

11087. You have twice given evidence, have you not?—No, once.

11088. Are you Anne Webster, of 23, Granville Buildings?—Yes.

11089. Your present story is that you put up the can to protect your husband, and this man ran against it?—The can never touched the man.

11090. How could he knock the beer out of the can if he did not touch the can?—Only by his hand spilling my beer.

11091. How could he spill the beer if he did not touch the can?—I never put the can to touch the man.

11092. We will go by steps. Your present story is that you put the can up to protect your husband?—Yes.

11093. And somehow the beer slopped out of it?—Yes.

11094. Somebody must have touched it?—I do not know how that was.

11095. Suppose he hit the can of beer with a good knock that would have slopped the beer out of it?—I may have spilt the beer by putting the can up.

11096. Did you say this: "I had a dispute with the complainant," that is Andrews. Did you say that?—No.

11097. "And some beer was thrown over him"?—No.

11098. You did not say that?—No.

11099. Did you hear Mrs. Withey give evidence?—No.

11100. Were you in court when Mrs. Withey gave evidence?—No.

11101. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) All witnesses were ordered out of court?—My husband drank the remainder of the beer.

11102. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Did Andrews hit you on the nose and make your nose bleed?—As he went to hit my husband he might have just touched my nose.

11103. A little touch, but it made your nose bleed?—It never hurt me.

11104. Did he hit you on the nose?—As he went to hit my husband he caught me like by the side of the nose, but he never hurt me.

11105. It was a blow on your nose?—You could not call it one.

11106. Did he stroke your nose in this way before you poured the beer over him?—No.

11107. When did the beer go over him—after he stroked your nose?—The beer was spilt on him.

11108. So that when he ventured to stroke your nose you ventured to throw the beer over him?—No, I tried to get my husband home.

11109. I suppose you were more occupied with your husband and your marketing than with this?—Yes.

11110. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) You were both going home?—Yes.

11111. Your husband was doing the merry-making and you were doing the marketing?—Yes, he met me half way.

11112. You had not been frequenting public-houses?—I had not, but my husband had been, I believe.

11113. This blow that my learned friend refers to 'eft no mark I understand?—No, I never had no mark. He just caught my nose, and the beer was spilt. That was all.

11114. Did you happen to notice whether any person did anything to Andrews after that with regard to a handkerchief?—No.

11115. You went away home with your husband?—Yes.

11116. Except what you have told us you had no dispute with Andrews at all?—No, none.

11117. I understand you never saw the man before?—I never saw the man in my life.

11118. Do you mean he was a perfect stranger to you?—I never had seen the man before.

11119. You were not paid anything for giving evidence before the Magistrate?—I have never had one penny piece.

(Chairman.) I think you said you had got the doctor here, Mr. Schultess-Young. You had better call him and release him.

ROLAND DOBSON sworn.

Mr. R. Dobson.

11120. (Chairman.) Your qualifications, please?—I have no medical qualifications.

11121. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) I think on the night of the 29th July you were on duty as house surgeon at St. Bartholomew's Hospital?—I was not house surgeon, but I was on duty that night.

11122. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) At the hospital?—Yes.

11123. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) Do you remember Andrews coming to you?—Yes.

11124. Did you do anything to him?—I put some stitches in a wound over his forehead.

11125. Will you just indicate with your finger to the learned Commissioners how long that wound was?—I should think about as long as that, as far as I can remember (illustrating).

11126. (Chairman.) An inch and a half?—I should say about that.

11127. A cut?—Yes.

11128. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) A cut that would leave a scar?—Yes, it would leave a scar.

11129. I do not know whether you have seen Andrews to-day. Was that the scar left by the cut?—Yes, I had a look at it this morning.

11130. Did Andrews make any statement to you as to how he arrived by that cut when you treated him?

11131. (Chairman.) What time did he arrive at the hospital?—It was between midnight and 8 o'clock on the 29th.

11132. 8 a.m.?—Yes.

11133. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) Can you tell us more closely than that the time?—As far as I can remember, it was between 12 and 3. I do not think it was later than 3. Probably it was about 2 o'clock.

11134. (Chairman.) Did you make any note of his coming to the hospital?—There was an entry made in a book there—simply "Cut head."

11135. Would not that book show the time at which he came to the hospital?—It would only show that the case had come in between midnight and 8 o'clock the next morning.

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) He could not get there before 3 o'clock, because he was not bailed out until after that time.

11136. (Chairman.) It may have been long after that time so far as you know?—There were a few cases, and he came towards the beginning of the cases during that time.

11137. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) Did any person come with him, do you know?—I think a police-constable came with him.

11138. Did he make a communication to you as to how he got that cut?—He yarned about something, but I do not generally listen to that.

11139. Tell the Commissioners what it was he yarned about?—He said something about being set on in the cell.

11140. Meaning the police cell?—I suppose so.

11141. He told you he had got the cut by being set on in the cell?—He did not say he got the cut in that way, so far as I can remember. He said he had been set on.

11142. That was the explanation he gave to you as to his condition?—Yes.

11143. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I think you were examined at the police court before, were you not?—I was.

11144. Were you examined once or twice?—Once.

11145. I understand that you have no very definite recollection of this case because the dresser did not call your special attention to it, and he would have done so if it had been serious. Is that right?—I attended to the case myself.

11146. I have got a note of what you said. Just see if this is accurate: "I am house surgeon at St. Bartholomew's Hospital"?—No, I did not say that.

11147. This is the evidence of Mr. Bazette Butcher?—I am not Mr. Butcher.

11148. Did Mr. Butcher give evidence?—I think Mr. Butcher came up on a previous occasion.

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) We have not called Mr. Butcher, but we have called Mr. Dobson.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) It was Mr. Butcher's evidence that I wanted to put before the Commissioners.

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) Mr. Butcher said he did not know anything about it.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I have here the evidence of Mr. Butcher: "The cut might have been caused by a sharp instrument or a blunt instrument—not, I should say, from a fist."

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) Mr. Butcher said he did not see the cut, did not see Andrews, and knew nothing about him. Therefore I did not call him.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I have the deposition in Mr. Muir's copy of Dr. Dobson.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) The undertaking I got was that Dr. Butcher should be called. Dr. Butcher examined the man's head in court, and after examining it he gave evidence to the Magistrate, and that is the evidence I want to put before the Commission. I shall ask to be allowed to read the deposition of Dr. Butcher, if you are not going to call him.

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) We did not call him before the Magistrate. We found he had not seen Andrews. Mr. R. Dobson. 24 Oct. 1906.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) If you look at Dr. Dobson's evidence I am not sure that that is not much the same.

11149. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) You say it was not serious?—I should not consider it serious.

11150. In answer to the Magistrate, did you say, "It is possible it might have been caused by a flint"?—By a fist I meant.

11151. "I remember no other injuries to him. I should have noticed if he had a swollen or put-out jaw. He had not a black eye—not a bad one, any way." Is your recollection that the only complaint he made was with reference to this cut on the eye?—I think so.

11152. He made no complaint about cuts or bruises anywhere else?—Not that I recollect.

11153. With regard to that cut, is a cut like that such a one as you would expect a man to get from a fist, or is it more likely to come from some blunt instrument such as a beer can, or something like that?—I could not say.

11154. It might come from either?—I should think it might very well come from either.

11155. Do you get that shape of cut from a naked fist?—I am afraid I have never seen a cut from a fist.

11156. This is the first cut from a fist you have ever seen?—I do not know whether it was done by a fist.

11157. Would you from your experience expect that shape of cut to be made from a blow from the fist?—I should think it would be quite possible.

11158. (Chairman.) When you say "cut," do you mean something more than a mere abrasion of the skin?—Yes.

11159. The flesh had been cut into?—Yes.

11160. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) It was, I understand, a cut in the skin about this length?—Yes, about that length.

11161. Was it bleeding much?—No, it was not bleeding much at the time.

11162. (Chairman.) Have you ever known a cut of that kind being caused by a fist?—No, I do not think I have seen one definitely caused by a fist.

11163. (Mr. Dickinson.) How deep was it?—Probably about one-eighth of an inch.

11164. (Chairman.) All along?—Yes.

11165. At least one-eighth of an inch all along?—Yes, just the same.

11166. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) You understand why I am asking the question. I understand Dr. Butcher is a fully qualified surgeon. Is that so?—That is so.

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) I think there is a little mistake. Dr. Butcher examined another cut altogether by mistake—a cut he had had from a fender.

Eliza Lowis, sworn.

11167. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) You are a married woman, I think, living at 40, Granville Buildings?—Yes. Eliza Lowis.

11168. At this time had you known Andrews at all?—I never saw him before in my life.

11169. Will you tell the Commissioners what you saw at midnight on the 29th July?—I was coming along with my friend and my husband. I saw a crowd in the road, and when we went to look what it was it was two constables had got Mr. Andrews. When we went he seemed to be without his hat, and he complained, and said, "Will someone give me my hat? I will go if they only give me my hat." Nobody did not seem to get him his hat. When I looked at him the man was completely covered in beer—beer all over his face.

11170. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) When you first saw him?—Yes, when I came up with my friend and my husband.

11171. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) Did you lend him your handkerchief?—Yes, I spoke to the constable, and I said, "Can I lend that gentleman my handkerchief?" It was only a small one. He allowed me to lend it to him. He gave it to me back. My friend, Mrs. Gibbs, was with me, and my husband.

11172. You lent the man your handkerchief to wipe his face of the beer?—Yes.

11173. Had he any cut on his forehead then?—No, nothing whatever. He had nothing on his face at all, only this beer.

11174. Did you see Andrews arrested?—No; I came up after his arrest.

11175. Did he struggle at all?—No. All he kept asking for was his hat; he wanted his hat. He had no hat.

11176. Did the police take him away?—Yes. I followed him right to the bottom of Luke Street, because we missed my friend's husband, and we were really looking for him.

11177. What attracted your attention to Andrews?—Through there being a bother in the road, and seeing two constables had hold of him.

Eliza Lewis. 24 Oct. 1906.

11178. How close were you to him?—I was pretty close to him.

11179. As close as you are to me?—Closer than that.

11180. You were so close to him that you were still surrounded by part of the crowd, no doubt?—Yes, we were in the crowd.

11181. Could you see him clearly?—I was so close that I lent him my handkerchief.

11182. He had no cut?—He had no cut.

11183. He did not resist the police?—No, he did not.

11184. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Were there thirty or forty people round him?—I should think more.

11185. Should you think one hundred?—Not so many; but there were a great many.

11186. I suppose they were all pushing?—Yes.

11187. All shouting?—No, they were not making much of a commotion.

11188. But just having a talk about it?—Yes; a lot of them were wondering why he was taken.

11189. And they were all pushing in to see?—Yes.

11190. And asking each other what was the matter?—I do not think they were.

11191. There was a good deal of pushing and talking?—There was not so much pushing.

11192. There was a great deal of excitement?—No doubt there was.

11193. Was it beer or porter that this man had on his face?—It was black beer.

11194. Was there a good deal of froth in it?—I do not know; I did not see anything of it. I simply saw it over the man's face.

11195. Was he holding his head down and shaking it off?—He held his head up and asked for his hat.

11196. The beer was on his face?—It would be more in his eyes than anywhere.

11197. Were his eyes shut?—No.

11198. You gave evidence before the Police Magistrate, did you not?—Yes, I did. I was asked to. I went away on my holidays, and I was out——

11199. Never mind about your holidays. You gave evidence?—It was only the night before—he came on the Monday.

11200. You were there in time?—Yes.

11201. You were not one of those who were late?—Why should I be late?

11202. I cannot imagine. You did not notice he had anything the matter with his face?—I am sure he had nothing on his face I can be on my oath the man never had a cut.

11203. Did you see the lady throw the beer at him?—No.

11204. You were not there then?—No.

11205. Did you see the lady who owned the beer-can?—Yes, after Andrews had gone away I saw them with the next lot talking.

11206. Had she got the beer-can back again?—I do not know; I did not notice what she had.

11207. Did you not see them talking about its hitting a window?—No, I went upstairs.

11208. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) By the way, were you paid a single penny for giving evidence before the Magistrate?—No, I have never received anything yet.

GEORGE OBENEY, sworn.

G. Obeney.

11209. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) I think you are a cabinet maker, living at 55, Brunswick Street, Hackney Road?—Quite correct.

11210. I think you were charged at Old Street about 12.15 on July 29th?—Yes.

11211. You were brought before Mr. Cluer the next day and discharged?—Yes.

11212. Did you see Andrews brought into the police station?—Yes.

11213. Were there policemen in the station when he was brought in?—Yes, several constables in plain clothes came in with me.

11214. What did they do?—They rushed to the door.

11215. Did they gather round Andrews, or did they keep away from him?—Yes, they all got round Andrews when he came in.

11216. They seemed to know him.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) That is hardly a fair question.

11217. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) What was the sergeant doing?—The sergeant was booking our charges.

11218. What did the sergeant say to the constable with regard to Andrews?—He distinctly said, "Take him below," or to that effect—I could not be sure.

11219. Did you hear the constable say something then?—The constable turned round to the sergeant and said, "Sergeant, I am not answerable." One of the constables said it.

11220. Do you know whether Constable West was present then?—I do not know.

11221. Do you remember Mr. Cluer the next day making a remark about the evidence of Constable West?—I think he did.

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I object to that.

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) I asked West that question in cross-examination, and he admitted it.

(Chairman.) I think it will not do. Of course, we are not bound by the strict rules of a court of justice, but we had better adhere to them as nearly as we can.

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) I did ask West about it.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) But you are asking the other witness now.

11222. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) But I may not get West here. You say you heard the sergeant say, "Take him below." What happened then?—Then the constable turned to the sergeant and said he was not answerable.

11223. What took place then?—He took him through the door on the left. It was on my right.

11224. (Chairman.) You were in the dock?—Yes.

11225. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) Could you see Andrews plainly?—When he came in?

11226. Yes?—We were standing face to face.

11227. Had he any cut on his forehead?—None whatever.

11228. You are perfectly sure?—I am perfectly sure.

11229. Had you ever seen him before to your knowledge?—Never.

11230. Had you ever spoken to him before?—I have never spoken to him before.

11231. You are a respectable cabinet-maker, and there is nothing against you?—I am.

11232. When Andrews was taken out of the room, what did you hear?—I heard him groaning like a dog being knocked about—holloaing and shouting.

11233. You heard that distinctly?—Distinctly.

11234. Blows followed by groans?

(Mr. Eldon Bankes.) "Blows" did he say?

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) He has not said that. He said he heard him groaning.

11235. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) What else did you hear?—I did not hear much more. I was removed to the cell.

11236. What was his condition next day at the police court?—The man was standing next to me as we were waiting to go into the court, and I did not know the man—not by the condition of his face.

11237. What was his condition?—He had a lot of strapping over one eye—I could not exactly tell you which eye it was—and he had, I think it was, a collar in a bag—a neck collar—that he was wearing on the night.

11238. What was the condition of his face?—All covered with the strapping.

11239. Did you see anything about his eyes?—I did not notice his eyes.

11240. You say you would not have known him because of the strapping over his face?—Yes.

11241. Did you see any other marks upon him?—No.

11242. You never noticed any other marks?—No, not that I am aware of.

11243. I think you were discharged?—Yes.

11244. You are perfectly sure that when you saw him face-to-face in the charge-room there was no mark on his forehead?—Sure. I looked at the man directly he came in, and more so than I did anybody there.

11245. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) You gave evidence before the Magistrate?—Yes.

11246. Twice, did you?—Once, I think; it might have been twice.

11247. Had you ever been taken into custody before?—No.

11248. Being put into the dock was quite a novel experience to you?—It was.

11249. I suppose you were pretty well occupied in thinking about what was going to happen next to yourself?—That is so. That is quite the thing.

11250. So I should imagine?—Considering the way I got served coming to the station.

11250*. A man who is taken up and put into the dock for the first time does not trouble himself much about the countenances of the other people who are brought in. He thinks more about himself, as a rule?—I do not know about other people.

11251. You told me you were fully occupied in thinking about yourself?—Did I?

11252. Yes?—I was thinking both about myself and about this man when he came in.

11253. Was he brought in in charge of two or three police-constables?—I could not say.

11254. You said this before the Police Magistrate, did you not: "He was brought in by three police-constables"?—They all went to the door when he was coming in. I could not exactly say how many were there.

11255. When they were bringing him in to the charge room the first time, how many brought him in?—I could not say.

11256. Did you tell the Magistrate, "He was brought in by three police-constables, I think, in uniform, and there were others in plain clothes"?—Yes, I might have said it.

11257. Did you see him brought in by three police-constables, or did you not?—I could not exactly tell you now.

11258. How came you to tell the Magistrate you had seen him brought in by three police-constables?—I suppose I must have remembered it then when I do not now.

11259. You have forgotten it since?—Yes.

11260. Have you also forgotten that you saw a cut on his face?—No, I have not forgotten that.

11261. After he was brought in did the sergeant say something to one of the police-constables who were in charge of him?—Only "Take him below."

11262. Did he say, "Take him below"? Just think?—I could not exactly tell you whether it was "below" or where.

11263. How came you to tell these gentlemen that he said "Take him below" unless you were sure?—I thought it was "below" by there being a door there.

11264. Did you tell the Police Magistrate "The sergeant might have said 'Take him outside'"?—Well, I might have said that.

11265. What business have you to tell these gentlemen that he said "Take him below" when you believe he might have said "Take him outside"?—I thought it was "below" at the time. I was being charged. I told my own father when he came to bail me out that they said "Take him below."

11266. You told him they said "Take him below," not taking much notice of what was going on around you?—That is it. G. Obeney. 24 Oct. 1906.

11267. Now you are not prepared to say whether it was "Take him below" or "Take him outside"?—I think the words I said were, "Take him out of the door."

11268. The next thing you heard was an awful row?—Yes.

11269. You described it as "groaning like a dog"?—Yes.

11270. Do all dogs groan in the same way?—All mine do.

11271. Have you a very musical lot?—One or two.

(Chairman.) He said at the police court "howling and groaning like a dog."

11272. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) What I mean is this. Did you hear a man kicking up a great row and shouting?—Yes.

11273. Dogs do not shout, do they—not even your dogs?—They kick up enough row.

11274. There is a distinction between groaning and shouting. Did you hear a man shouting?—He was shouting.

11275. Shouting in the same way that violent people do shout if they want to get away?—I do not know about violent people. I have not had much to do with them.

11276. You confine your attention to dogs and dogs' noises?—Yes.

11277. Do you think you are a reliable witness to describe what noise this man made?—I do not think I am.

11278. (Mr. Schultess Young.) Was this man howling like a dog having a cheerful or a bad time of it?—Like a dog being knocked about.

11279. Where did the noise seem to come from—from above or below?—It seemed from below.

11280. The noise seemed to come from below?—Yes.

11280*. (Chairman.) Did you hear any other noise besides the noise made by the man below or outside?—None whatever.

11281. Nothing at all?—No.

11282. No shuffling of feet?—No.

11283. (Mr. Schultess Young.) What kind of a holloaing was it?—Like a man being knocked about.

11284. Before he was taken below, was he making any noise or shouting?—No.

11284*. When he was brought in, was he obstreperous, obstructing the police, or howling in any way?—No.

11285. What did you mean answering my friend by referring to the way you got served being taken to the station? What did you mean by that?—They trod on my heels all the way to the station.

11286. So as to hurt you?—They hurt me, and they twisted my arms.

11287. That is the way they took you to the station?—Yes.

11288. You never resisted?—Never moved.

11289. If that is the way they took you to the station you were excited when you got there?—Yes.

11290. Did you refuse to go to the station?—No.

11291. My friend suggests to me that they trod on your heels because you did not move along?—I turned round and distinctly asked the men to keep off my heels, and let my arms go. I was smoking a cigarette at the time, and when I would not take the cigarette out of my mouth they shoved my arms higher up to my shoulders.

11291*. Do you know what you were charged with doing?—I do not know whether the constable himself knew what he was charging me for.

11292. (Chairman.) What were you charged with?—Disorderly conduct, I think.

11293. On this very evening?—On the same evening.

11294. (Mr. Schultess Young.) The learned magistrate, having heard the case, discharged you?—Yes.

G. Obeney. 24 Oct. 1906.

11295. That was the first time you had ever been taken to any station, or charged at all?—Never been inside a station before in my life.

11296. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) What did you understand the constable to mean when he said to the sergeant, "I am not responsible"?—What made him say that was the constable thought if anything was done below he was not to blame.

11297. You thought that showed that he knew they were going to take this man downstairs to thrash him?—Yes.

11298. Therefore that was a very important statement which you heard the constable make to the sergeant?—It was.

11299. You recognised that?—I did.

11300. Can you tell me why you never said a word about that in the inquiry before the magistrate?—I did.

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) It is in my proof before the Magistrate.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I do not find it in the depositions. Mr. Schultess-Young, I do not think you are entitled to make that observation in answer to the questions I put. I did not ask what was in the proof. I asked whether he stated it to the Magistrate. What is in a witness's proof is often very different to what his statement is before the Court.

11301. What I was asking was this: If it was an important statement how did it come about that you did not make that statement to the Magistrate? According to you it was a most important observation?—Yes.

11302. (Chairman.) Do you say you did mention it to the Magistrate or not?—I think I did. I am almost sure I did.

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) I think these are not depositions. They are only notes. They are not at all full. I am told he did say so.

(Chairman.) They are notes taken down, as we know, by the clerk in court, but they are not signed by the witnesses and they are not called depositions. If this had been an indictable offence the witness would have been asked to sign them.

(Mr. Schultess-Young.) In my experience and in yours, and in that of the learned counsel, these notes are not so full as depositions always are.

(Chairman.) That is true. I think that is so.

11302*. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That does not seem to me to meet the point I am putting to the witness.

11303. Just follow me. At the station, according to this, "the sergeant entering the charge made an observation, and Andrews was taken out of a door, and I afterwards heard him howling and groaning like a dog." Do you remember that?—Yes, after the sergeant had told him to take him out of the door, or below, the constable turned round and said "I am not answerable."

11304. That is what you are telling us now?—And what I told him there. I meant to say it if I did not.

REUBEN HUGHES, sworn.

R. Hughes.

11305. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) I think you are a printer?—Yes.

11306. Do you live at 9, Granville Buildings, Luke Street?—Yes.

11307. They are large buildings, are they?—They are.

11308. Did you know Andrews before that time?—Only by sight—never spoken to him.

11309. Do you remember being in Luke Street about midnight on the 29th July?—Yes.

11310. Tell the Commissioners what you saw?—I was in Luke Street at the time I saw Andrews in custody. They were just going to take him away. I followed them behind. They took him straight down Luke Street. I saw the two constables holding his hands behind him very tightly. When they got to Ravey Street another constable came across; he got hold of him, and one of the constables went to his beat again.

11311. Did you see the constables do anything to him?—Twist his arm round and hold him very tightly.

11312. You saw that?—Yes.

11313. Could you see Andrews' face?—I saw his face quite plain.

11314. Had he any marks on him?—Not at all.

11314*. You are quite sure of that?—I am.

11315. No cut on his forehead, or you would have seen it?—I should have seen it if he had any at all.

11316. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Were you in work at the time?—Yes.

11317. You did not see anything of the row?—No, I saw nothing of the row, only I saw Andrews in custody when I first came up.

11318. You followed him, I understand, behind the constables?—Yes, I followed up behind.

11319. Were you ever in front of him?—I passed him on the way. As he went across Old Street I passed him.

11320. For the greater part of the way you were walking behind him?—Yes.

11321. Some distance behind?—Walking behind, but not so very far.

11322. It was midnight?—Yes, about 20 minutes or a quarter past twelve.

11323. I mean there was no natural light at that time?—No. When he passed the electric light at Old Street Police Station I saw his face plain.

11324. How far were you from him then?—About as far as we are now.

11325. Did he pass before you?—I saw his face—what I could see of it.

11327. Which eye was it that was hurt afterwards, do you know?—I believe it was the right that was cut afterwards.

11328. You were standing on the right side of him when he passed?—Yes.

11329. Was there a constable between you and him?—Yes.

11330. I think at the police station you were asked whether you recognised any constable that was with him, were you not?—Yes, I think I was.

11331. You said you were not able to recognise him?—I could not recognise him.

11332. Because you had not been able to see him sufficiently to be able to recognise him?—I should not recognise the constable again.

11333. Because you had not been able to notice him sufficiently plainly?—Perhaps I never noticed him.

11334. The constable was between you and the man about whom you are speaking, and yet you did not see the constable sufficiently plainly to be able to identify him?—I might have noticed Andrews more, knowing him.

11334*. You might or might not. At any rate, the constable whom you could not recognise was between you and him?—Yes.

11335. And the constable is a pretty big chap, is he not—bigger than Andrews?—Not so tall as Andrews.

11336. But he had a hat on?—Yes.

11337. With a hat or helmet on he would be taller than Andrews?—He might be.

11338. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) If you saw two constables taking a man to the station, you would naturally look at the man rather than at the constable?—Ye

ELLEN GIBBS, sworn.

11339. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) You are the wife of Sidney Gibbs?—Yes.

11340. I have not your address?—17, Canton Terrace, St. John's Road, Hoxton.

11341. I think on this occasion you were with your husband and with a woman who has given evidence—Mrs. Lowis?—Yes.

11342. Will you tell the learned Commissioners what you saw on July 29th, at midnight?—I was passing through Luke Street with my friend and her husband. We were going home to her place, and I saw a crowd assembled. We had to go past that crowd to get to the house. That is how we got into the crowd. I saw Mr. Andrews in the custody of two constables. He had no hat on. He was frequently asking for his hat. He said, "I want my hat. I want to go along respectably, and not like this." "Very well," they said, "we will wait for your hat." They stayed there for a moment. We pitied him because he looked a respectable fellow, and my friend asked the constable whether he would allow her to let him use her handkerchief. He said, "Yes, certainly." He used the handkerchief, and it was returned to her. Of course we got carried on a little way with the crowd, being amongst them.

11343. What was the handkerchief used for?—To wipe his face.

11344. Why?—He had a lot of beer thrown upon him.

11345. You say he had not his hat on?—No, he did not have his hat on.

11346. Did you see his forehead?—Yes, I was close to the crowd. I could not get out.

11347. You were with your friend?—Yes.

11348. Your friend lent him her handkerchief, and therefore you must have been close?—Yes.

11349. There was no cut?—No.

11350. Nothing to attract your attention to his face at all?—No, nothing at all. If there had been a cut I should have seen blood on the handkerchief.

11351. What occurred then? Did you go away?—When the crowd followed I missed my husband. We went to the end of the turning to see if we could see him amongst the crowd. We returned back. We did not follow.

11352. Did you know Andrews?—I never knew that man before in my life.

11353. What attracted your attention to him?—He looked such a respectable young fellow. He had the appearance of it, and seeing constables standing there we did not know what was the matter.

11353*. He was apparently in custody?—Yes.

11354. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) I suppose you are telling us to the best of your recollection what you noticed?—Yes.

11355. I suppose there was a good deal of pushing in this crowd?—There was as it went on. The constables stayed there for a moment, and that caused the crowd to come round.

11356. There was a good deal of excitement among the people about?—Yes.

11357. They were pushing you about?—Yes, we all got pushed about.

11358. You had to look after yourself, had you not?—Yes, we were trying to get through the crowd to get home.

11359. I suppose you had your clothes to think of. It was rather awkward for your clothes?—No, it did not matter about my clothes—they are only working things.

11360. There were a good many things to think about besides Andrews' face, were there not?—There may have been.

11361. At that time you did not think it was at all important to notice whether his eye was hurt or whether it was not?—What made me notice his face was it being so wet.

11362. You did notice a great deal of beer about his face?—Yes, smothered in beer right down his shirt-front.

11363. The beer seems to have hit him principally in the lower part of the face?—The beer knocked his hat off.

11364. The beer knocked his hat off?—It looked as if it had been thrown at him.

11365. At that time you did not know that any importance was attached to it?—No, I never thought anything about it.

11366. To the best of your impression now, he had not got a cut?—I am certain.

11367. But you did not pay much attention to it at the time?—I did. I spoke of it in my firm where I work on the Monday.

11368. You spoke about the beer?—I spoke of seeing the young man. I read in the papers on the Monday night the way he was knocked about, and I spoke of it at my table before all the women. I said, "I know that man never had the marks on him when he was in Luke Street."

11369. That was on Monday?—Yes.

11370. You had a chat with your working friends?—Yes.

11371. You read the "Star" out loud?—We are not allowed to have newspapers.

11372. You read it outside. There was a violent article in the "Star"?—I mean on Monday in the shop I spoke about it, and when I got home it was in the paper.

11373. You had seen, had you not, before you began talking to your friends, what was stated at the police court?—No.

11374. How did you know in the morning that he had been abused?—In the morning?

11375. You were talking to your friends in the morning?—The papers were not published till Monday evening about this case.

11376. You were talking to your friends at the bench on the Monday?—I told them I saw an occurrence in my friend's turning, and that I saw a young fellow locked up. Then on Tuesday morning——

11376*. Now we have got to Tuesday morning?—I saw it in the paper, and I passed my comments on it in my firm.

11377. You did pass your comments on it after you read about it in the paper?—Yes.

11378. You read in the paper that the man said he had been hammered by the bobbies?—Yes, I did read it.

11379. You did pass your comments upon that?—Yes.

11380. You studied it very carefully?—Yes, I did. I reckon it is only right.

11381. When you began to think about it you thought he had not got a cut?—I was positive.

11382. And you are still positive?—Yes, I am certain.

11383. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) What attracted your attention was that it was reported in the papers that he had cuts on his face?—I read the report in the paper.

11384. Are you quite sure when you saw him he had not any cuts?—I am positively certain of it. I volunteered to come as a witness for him.

11384*. I think you have not been paid anything for coming up?—No, I have not. I have not had one halfpenny. I work as well as my husband.

CHARLES SPARKES, sworn.

C. Sparkes. 24 Oct. 1906.

11385. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) I think you are a show-case maker, living at 58, Granville Buildings?—Quite right.

11386. Do you know Andrews at all?—No.

11387. Never known him before or spoken to him?—No.

11388. Will you tell the Commissioners what took place at midnight on July 29th?—I was standing at the door with my wife, talking.

11389. Who were talking?—Me and my wife and somebody else in the Buildings—another woman who lives down below. This Mr. Andrews was about 15 yards from me. He was standing alone. All of a sudden men and women came along singing, and no sooner did they get up to Andrews than one man called him an abusive name, and with that the man made a blow at Andrews and missed him. With that he made a second blow, and Andrews baulked it off. With that a woman came and threw beer over the man. The beer went over him. She likewise made aim with the can to hit him, but she did not bring that off. No sooner was that done than a constable came, and the crowd holloaed out "Pinch him." With that the copper took hold of him and took him down.

11389*. Did she hit him with the can?—No, she did not.

11390. The crowd holloaed out "Pinch him," and then the constable arrested the man. I thought "Pinch him" referred to something else?—It means taking him in charge.

11391. You say the can did not hit Andrews?—The can never hit Andrews at all. Andrews baulked the blow off when the woman tried to hit him.

11392. Did you see the beer go over him?—I did.

11393. I suppose he was pretty well covered with beer?—He was.

11394. Could you see him well from where you were?—Yes.

11395. I want you to tell the Commissioners what you could really see. Could you see whether he had any marks on him at that distance?—None whatever 11396. Had he any marks?—No.

11397. If he had any on his forehead would you have seen it?—I am quite sure I would.

11398. What sort of light was it?—Outside a chandler's shop shows a light. The same people who interfered with Andrews interfered with my wife.

11399. I suppose they were merry?—I do not know about merry.

11400. They were singing?—The people coming along were singing.

11401. They were merry people, were they not?—The people who interfered with Andrews were singing.

11402. They were not singing doleful songs, but cheerful songs?—I did not take notice what they were singing about. I took notice of how the man was interfered with standing there doing nothing.

11403. You are quite sure he had not any marks on him when he was taken?—Certainly.

11404. I do not know whether you saw him afterwards?—No, I did not; I did not go further.

11405. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) You have no doubt the lady whose nose was touched tried to hit him with a can?—I do not know about the lady's nose being touched.

11406. You have seen her here. She first of all threw beer over him, and then tried to hit him with a can?—When she made aim at him he baulked it off.

11407. She tried to hit him with a can?—Yes.

11408. And tried her best?—Yes; but Andrews was too sharp, and stopped it.

11409. How far were you from him when the woman was jobbing at him with the can?—Ten yards.

11410. So whether she actually hit him or whether she did not hit him it is impossible for you to say?—I cannot say distinctly whether she did hit him at all. Andrews' arm went up, and the can went up in the air. No doubt the can did hit him on his arm, but not on his face.

11411. You were 10 yards off?—Yes.

11412. The woman struck at him with a can?—Yes.

11413. He put his hand up?—Yes.

11414. The result is he knocked the can out of her hand. Is that right?—I did not see the can go out of her hand. His arm went up and baulked the blow.

11415. Whether he was in time to prevent the can hitting his head or not, was it possible for you to see?—I saw Andrews when the constable took him in charge, after the can, and he had no marks.

11416. Is it possible for you to say, speaking from what you saw of the blow, whether it hit him or not?—I could not say. That is true enough.

11417. Then he comes nearer to you?—Yes, I went up.

11418. You joined in the crowd?—No; I went up and saw him being taken down. With that, a party came up and said the same people "interfered with your wife." I went to look after my own.

11419. You looked after your wife?—What would you do? I always look after my own.

11420. I am glad to say I do not live in that street?—You might live anywhere, and meet with the same thing.

11421. The can was empty?—Yes, the beer went out of the can first.

11422. So I suppose there was not very much time between the time you went up to see what was going on and the time when they said, "You had better look after your missus"?—It was my place to.

11423. Directly you heard there was anything the matter with the missus you went back?—I went back to look after her. I should not look after anybody else.

11424. Your opportunities of seeing what was the matter with the man's face were not very great?—When the constable took Andrews in charge he had no marks on his face.

11425. It was all beer?—Beer won't make a cut, will it?

11426. You are giving us the best of your impression?—Certainly; the only evidence I give is true.

11427. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) You did not see the can hit him?—No.

11428. As far as you know, it did not hit him?—No, it did not.

11429. Whatever it did, it had no result, for there were no marks on his face afterwards?—Certainly not.

11429*. You were close to him?—Yes.

11430. You were too far away at first?—Andrews baulked the can when the man tried to make the blow.

11431. Whether it hit him or not, there were no marks on his face when the constable took him?—No.

SUSAN WITHEY, sworn.

Susan Withey

11432. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) I think you are a married woman, and you live at 101, Longbourne Buildings, Mark Street?—Yes.

11433. At midnight on July 28th and 29th I think you were in Luke Street?—Yes.

11434. Did you see Andrews?—I did see him.

11435. Tell the Commissioners what you saw done?—We were coming out of a public-house soon after 12, me and my husband; we were going along together, and we saw a crowd in the road of about 40 or 50 people. While I stayed there I saw a can thrown, and as it was thrown Mr. Andrews' hat came off, and he got the contents of the beer-can over him.

11436. Did the can hit Andrews?—No; the can struck a shop window, and the woman came out and closed the shutters up.

11437. Did the can hit Andrews?—No, it did not.

11438. Are you quite sure it did not hit Andrews?—No, it did not.

11439. Could you see Andrews plainly?—He was not half a dozen steps away from me.

11440. Had he any marks on his face?—No, none at all. I noticed him so plainly because he had no hat on.

11441. You are quite sure he had not any marks on his forehead?—Certain.

11442. Are you quite sure there was no mark on his forehead at all?—No mark at all.

11443. Did you see him in the custody of the police?—Yes, I saw two policemen take him.

11444. Did he resist them at all?—He did not. I followed him to the end of Luke Street, and me and my husband went towards home.

11444*. Did he in any way resist the police?—Not so far as I saw him.

11445. I do not think you saw him after that?—I did not see him after.

11446. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) You have no doubt whatever that the woman who had the can threw it?—It was thrown; I could not say who threw it; it was thrown from the crowd.

11447. It left her hand; there is no doubt about that?—There might have been more people in the road with cans. There are more cans a little after 12—you take a drop home for supper.

11448. You heard her evidence that the can never left her hand?—I do not know the woman who threw it.

11449. Does not that indicate to you that it is easy to make a mistake when a row like this is going on?—In what way?

11450. She says the can never left her hand?—I cannot help what she says; I know what I saw. Susan Withey.

11451. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Somebody else might make a mistake?—I only speak what I know of myself. 24 Oct. 1906.

11452. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) From what you know of the neighbourhood, people get very excited when there is a row?—Almost all do.

11453. And when you are excited you do not notice things?—I noticed that much.

11454. When there is a crowd, do you notice whether every man has a cut on his forehead or not?—I do not take that much notice.

11455. You would not pay attention to that unless your attention was called to it?—I noticed when the constables took him he had not a hat on, and he had not a mark on his face.

11456. Were you in front or behind him?—About six steps in front of him.

11457. Looking straight at him?—Yes. This shop was open, and there was a full light in the window. You could see by that.

11458. We are told now that he has an old scar on his face from having fallen on a fender?—That may be. I do not know anything about the old scar.

11459. You did not see that?—I did not.

11460. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) Were you excited?—No.

11461. You had nothing to be excited about?—It did not concern me that much.

11462. You would not notice everybody, as learned Counsel says, but you noticed somebody in charge of the police?—I noticed him more because two policemen had got him; he stooped down to pick up his hat, and before he could get his hat they took him.

11463. How far was this man from the kerb?—Right in the middle of the road about half-a-dozen steps from the kerb.

THOMAS BLETCHER sworn.

11464. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) You are an engineer, living at 5, D'Arcy Buildings, London Fields?—Yes. T. Bletcher.

11465. I think on this occasion you, with your wife and daughter, had been to see friends?—Yes.

11466. About midnight you were coming home?—Yes.

11466*. Will you tell the Commissioners what you saw?—Just about where this incident happened I had been to see some friends in the buildings. I was just leaving them, and a bit of a disturbance took place outside. I know there were some people singing, but the origin of the disturbance I could not explain to you.

11467. Did you see Andrews?—I saw Andrews standing there. There was an aged gentleman mixed up in the affair, and I think the first remarks were passed about an elderly gentleman, and Andrews said: "Do not hit him; you must settle that with me," or words to that effect.

11468. Did you see anything about a can?—Yes, I saw the beer thrown. I do not know whether it was thrown or knocked. There was a bit of a melee going on.

11469. The beer went over him?—Yes.

11470. Did the can hit him in any way?—Not at all.

11471. Were you near Andrews?—Within three or four paces.

11472. Could you see plainly?—Yes. It is only a narrow thoroughfare.

11473. Had you ever spoken to him, or had you ever known him?—Never spoken to the man before in my life.

11474. I think you are an old Colonial, and have been over here for some little time?—Yes.

11475. Had he any cut or mark upon him of any sort?—None whatever—nothing visible.

11476. I am not referring to an old scar which may have been caused by a fender?—There was no mark visible.

11477. No blood?—No.

11478. He did not look like a man who had been knocked about?—No.

11479. I think you felt an interest in the man seeing policemen taking him to the station. Did you follow him up at all?—Yes.

11479*. Did you see what the police did on the way?—He was taken in charge by two constables—the elderly gentleman was on the right, and another on the left—and they went down the road a few yards towards Curtain Road. The constable was taking him round the turning, and then he was relieved by another constable. I think there was undue violence by the constable.

11480. In what way?—He had his left arm behind him, and he raised it upwards, which gave an appearance of resistance.

11481. Do you mean they were lifting his arm up behind him?—Yes.

11482. So as to give him pain do you mean?—Yes.

11483. Did you see him come out of the station?—Yes.

11484. You saw him go in?—Yes.

11485. You tell the Commissioners there were no marks on him then?—Absolutely none. I stood on the kerb and the man passed me. He passed my left with his right to me.

11486. Did you see him well?—Yes, with the light of the lamp outside.

11487. What was he like when he came out?—He seemed a bit dazed.

11488. What was his appearance?—He had a blood-stained handkerchief in his hand, and he said "This is what the cowards have done to me."

T. Bletcher.
24 Oct. 1906.

11489. Did you see his face then?—Yes.

11489*. What was the condition of his face?—His right eye was very much swollen, it was not blackened then, and partly closed. He had a severe cut over the right eye.

11490. Did you notice his hands at all?—Yes; his hands had dried blood between the fingers, and also between the finger nails.

11491. His handkerchief, I think, you said was covered with blood?—Partly covered. It was more red than white.

11492. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) What is your business?—An engineer.

11493. Are you in work?—Yes.

11494. You seem to hesitate?—I am in work.

11495. Who are you working for?—Mr. Allsopp, 22, Aldersgate Street.

11496. How long have you been with him?—I have known the man for many years.

11497. How long have you worked for him?—About eight or nine months.

11498. Regularly?—Yes.

11499. Continuously?—Yes.

11499*. Are you the gentleman who was helped into a cab by Andrews?—Let me say one word.

11500. Would you mind answering my question?—I will, but I must state my case first.

11501. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) I will ask you about it afterwards?—Previously to that I was for sixteen years a ratepayer in the City of London, in business on my own.

11502. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) What were you doing?—I was in business on my own, and had eight or nine men working for me as an engineer.

11503. You are not now in as good a position?—No; I have had reverses. We all do at times.

11504. What was the cause of your reverses?—Outside speculation.

11505. Not in beer. What was the business you had in the City?—19, Cloth Fair.

10506. What sort of a business was it?—General engineering.

11507. Are you the gentleman who was helped into a cab?—I was the gentleman who went in one.

11508. You heard what Andrews said about that at the police court, did you not, and about your condition?

11509. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) He was not in Court?—I did not.

11510. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) Were you the worse for drink then?—I was not.

11511. Had you had any drink?—I might have had a couple of drinks when I went to the Court.

11512. When you were helped into a cab?—I might have had one or two drinks. I was not the worse for drink. When I came out of the public-house there were seven or eight constables around. I had only seen Andrews about two minutes. He said: "Well, Bletcher, you had better get out of it." I said "What for?" He got a cab. I got in and went away. I thought it was advisable.

11513. Perhaps it was?—Perhaps it was.

11514. (Chairman.) I do not know exactly on what evening you got into the cab?—The night before I gave evidence at Worship Street on the second occasion.

11514*. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) You say on the night this happened there was a melee going on?—Yes.

11515. I suppose one of the persons concerned in that melee was Andrews?—Yes.

11516. Were you near enough to see what really happened?—I think so. I was within three or four paces.

11517. You said before the Magistrate, did you not, "A woman threw some beer over Andrews, and seemed to try to throw a can at him"?—The whole of the occurrence took place in so short a space of time that the whole incident from the time of the first disturbance to the arrest did not take 45 seconds.

11518. It was all over directly?—It was all over directly.

11519. You were not able to realise exactly what did happen?—I was a casual observer. There were people around there, and I could see over their heads.

11520. You said the woman seemed to try to throw a can at him?—No, throw the beer.

11521. No. I am reading from the evidence. Is this which you said to the Magistrate correct: "A woman threw some beer over Andrews, and seemed to try to throw a can at him"?—In the melee.

11522. First of all, is that correct?—You must let me qualify myself.

11523. Did you say that?—I may have said words to that effect. What I say is no different now.

11524. Did you say that the woman "seemed to try to throw a can at him"? Did she throw it?—It never left her hand.

11525. You are quite sure about that?—Absolutely.

11526. Why did you say she seemed to try to throw it?—The result of the action was to spill the beer. Whether she released the can or not rested with herself, but the can did not leave her hand.

11527. So the last witness, the lady, is quite wrong?—I cannot help the last witness.

11528. Your view is that she has made a mistake?—Yes.

11529. (Mr. Schultess Young.) I am not sure whether you went with Andrews to Bartholomew's Hospital. Did you do so?—No.

11530. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) You say you did not know Andrews before?—No.

11531. Did you see his face after the constables had taken hold of him, or were you behind him?—I went down with them. I passed and repassed as they walked along.

11532. Did you. Just think. Do you tell the Commissioners that as they went along you passed and repassed them? Now, be careful?—There is nothing to be careful about at all. The man was being escorted down to Old Street Station.

11533. Did you pass and repass the constable and Andrews?—When I was walking along with the crowd.

11534. Did you pass and repass him?—Yes, several times.

11535. Did you begin by walking behind him?—Yes.

11536. Did you pass them?—Then I walked up on the right of Andrews.

11537. Did you pass him?—I cannot say I passed him.

11538. Why did you tell the Commissioners a moment ago you passed him and repassed him?—I was down at the police station before he was there, so I must have passed him.

11539. You are sure about that?—Yes.

11540. Did you pass him once or more than once?—I could not say. It had no significance at the time. I did not take much notice.

11541. Were you under the influence of drink when you gave evidence before the Police Magistrate on either occasion?—No.

11542. Sure?—Absolutely.

11542*. Did you say on the first occasion "A woman threw some beer over Andrews and seemed to try to throw a can at him"? Did you say that, or the substance of it?—It may be the substance.

11543. On the second occasion did you say "I saw nothing of the beer throwing"? Did you say that?—I cannot say I did, because the beer was thrown, and it was on the man's collar.

11544. On the first occasion you said to the Magistrate "A woman threw some beer over Andrews and seemed to try to throw a can at him." On the second occasion you said "I saw nothing of the beer throwing." Now both those accounts cannot be true, can they?—No.

11545. Which is true?—My evidence was very brief. I saw the beer thrown standing behind the crowd.

11546. Never mind whether your evidence was brief or not. You follow that both the statements before the Magistrate cannot be true. In one you say you did see it, and in the other you say you did not see it.

Which is true?—The case was so short. I saw the beer thrown.

11547. Then what you said on the first occasion was not true?—When the beer was thrown I cannot say. The beer was thrown on account of the blow. I do not know whether the can was thrown at Andrews or whether he, striking out, hit the can himself.

11548. On the first occasion you said "A woman threw some beer over Andrews"?—It was in the melee that happened.

11549. "A woman threw some beer over Andrews?"—I cannot say they are the identical words.

11550. "And seemed to try to throw a can at him." On the second occasion you said "I saw nothing of the beer throwing"?—I saw the beer on the collar of the man.

11551. Were you sober?—Certainly.

11552. Can you account for giving the Magistrate a diametrically opposite account?—The case took so short a time.

11553. But it was long enough to tell the truth. It takes no longer to tell the truth than a lie?—The beer went over him. I cannot say whether the beer was thrown or not.

11554. Have you been constantly in Andrews company since this happened?—Certainly not.

11554*. How many times have you seen him?—I come through Shoreditch night and morning, sometimes twice a day, and occasionally I see him; perhaps twice or three times a week if I am passing through that way.

11555. Before this you never spoke to him?—Never.

11556. (Chairman.) What became of the handkerchief covered with blood?—When he was taken off by his friends to the hospital he took that with him.

11557. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) According to the documents I have, you said this: "I met the complainant coming out of the station with his handkerchief up to his face. It was saturated with blood, and he complained. It was fresh blood. His right eye was practically closed"?—Partially closed, it ought to be.

11558. "And there was a cut over his right eye." Did you say that?—Yes.

11559. Then, when you were cross-examined, did you say his face was not bleeding when he came out of the station?—Of course it was not. How do you expect an incised wound after three hours to be bleeding? His handkerchief was wet with blood.

11560. This is your evidence, that after he came out of the station his face was not bleeding?—Certainly not—not after three hours.

11561. (Chairman.) How came you to wait for three hours outside there?—I had my wife and family with me, and we were visiting a friend who was ill. I was down at the door with a friend, and my wife and children were upstairs, and we saw this disturbance take place. I thought it was very hard to see a respectable young fellow maltreated and taken down to the station for what I call absolutely nothing at all. I said, "He may be a stranger round here, and may require bail, and if he requires bail I will willingly go and get it." I followed him to the station, and some of his friends came along and got bail for him.

11562. You did not give your bail for him?—I did not; but I was prepared to do so.

11563. Did you wait outside the station for three hours?—Not outside the station. One of his friends said, "I will go and get bail," and I said, "If you like, I will go with you, and if you are not successful I will stand bail myself." That is why I went. Then I returned to my friends who live in the vicinity, and I took a cab for my wife and children.

11564. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) On the first occasion it is said you told the Magistrate the man seemed to challenge Andrews to fight. He made two attempts to strike Andrews, and Andrews seemed to strike at him. A woman threw the beer over Andrews, and seemed to throw the can at him?—I have said nothing contrary now.

11565. In your view is that a reason why Andrews should be arrested if he was fighting in the street with another man?—There was no fighting.

11566. One strikes and the other strikes back, and the woman throws beer. Is that a reason why the man should be arrested?—In Shoreditch if they arrested everybody like that the police station would not hold them.

11567. On the next occasion you told the Magistrate you saw no reason why he should be arrested?—No, I did not consider that was a ground for arresting the man.

11568. You think, in your opinion, in Shoreditch they ought to fight ad lib.?—No, they do—they ought not to.

11569. (Mr. Schultess-Young.) On this occasion there was no fight?—No, absolutely nothing.

11570. It has been suggested you have been with Andrews ever since. Is there any truth in it?—Nothing at all.

11571. You have been very carefully shadowed by the police since?—On several occasions. I am pretty well known in Shoreditch to the division down there. As I am passing or repassing they point their fingers at me.

11572. (Chairman.) The police-constables?—Yes. I am making new friends since I have been a witness.

11573. Do you mean while you are walking along the road in Shoreditch the police-constables point to you?—Yes, I have passed two, and I have seen one point to me and give a nod, and say, "That is the witness in the Andrews' case."

11574. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Have you heard them say that?—No, I have not heard them saying that, but I have noticed the insinuation.

11575. Because they point at you you mean you think that is what they are saying?—Yes. The thing I objected to most was when Andrews came up I was outside the court on the first occasion prepared to give evidence of the arrest. The constable who arrested him passed and repassed me, and I was not called as a witness. I was the only witness up there. Since that time if I pass or repass them I believe I am known by them, and when I left the court on the Monday I was followed from Old Street Police Court down almost to Beech Street by a plain clothes man. One man relieved the other following me down, and I did not think it right.

11576. (Mr. Whitmore.) Would you recognise them?—The man had a brown suit on, and he had a cap with a sort of a cycling badge in front of the cap.

11577. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) How do you know he is a constable?—He left the station after me—I am wrong there, I mean a man with a blue serge suit left the station. I watched him following me. He called a man from across the road and had a conversation, and then the other man followed me up.

11578. The man in the brown suit followed you up, and the man in the blue suit followed on?—Yes, when he saw that I had seen them.

11579. (Chairman.) With regard to this pointing. Do you say they have since then pointed at you?—I believe I am a known man to the police down there—not that I bear them any animosity.

11580. Do you mean to say that any constable has pointed at you in such a way that if a stranger were looking on he would notice the action of the policeman?—Perhaps he would not.

11581. Only you yourself did?—It may be my supposition, but I believe that to be the case.

11582. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You think that because you were a witness in the Andrews' case that they kept a special look-out for you?—There is no need for that in any way.

11583. I do not understand what your complaint is about it?—It is not a complaint, but I consider myself I have been partially shadowed since this case has been on. For instance, a policeman came down from the Hackney Division and inquired from the caretaker of the building where I live if I lived there. He said "No, he does not live here." He said I did not because he pronounced the name wrong. Then he rectified it, and he said, "That is the man." He said, "Does he live here?" "Yes." "Is he at work?" and so forth. I did not know the police in all these cases between the public and an ordinary defendant made inquiries as to the stability of the witnesses, and whether they did that in all cases in the police court, or only on their own behalf. I am not lodging this as a complaint.

11584. (Chairman.) There was a summons taken out against a policeman, and surely it was right to make inquiries about the witnesses for the prosecution?—I was wondering if when a private case was on between two parties whether the police would make inquiries on behalf of one side or the other as to the stability of the witnesses, or did they only do that in their own cases.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I do not follow your complaint.

11585. (Chairman.) I thought that while you were in the street the constables pointed to you in such a way as to become a nuisance?—It is not a nuisance, but it is noticeable.

11586. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It only shows that they knew you; but still many respectable people are known to the police?—That may be so.

11587. (Mr. Whitmore.) The only result of the shadowing is that they made inquiries as to where you lived and as to your stability?—That is all.

11588. You do not think it indicated any other object?—Oh, no.

11589. (Mr. Dickinson.) You said just now you were not called as a witness. What do you refer to?—Not in the first case when Andrews was bound over.

11590. That was on the Monday morning?—Yes.

11591. (Chairman.) You were not called as a witness on the question as to whether he was guilty of assault?—No, I was in the court, but was not called upon. I was in the court prepared to give evidence if I should be required.

11592. (Mr. Dickinson.) What do you mean by that? Did you go as a witness on behalf of Andrews?—Yes.

11593. He did not know you?—There was no necessity, really. Mr. Cluer tried the case so well that it was dismissed in a few seconds. As soon as Andrews lodged his complaint I believe Mr. Cluer made the remark that he would be only too pleased to grant a summons as he had heard of such occurrences happening before.

11594. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Andrews was bound over?—Yes.

FREDERICK JAMES LANG sworn.

F. J. Lang.

11595. (Mr. Schultess Young.) Are you one of those witnesses who did not come before Mr. Biron the second time, because you were not able to leave your employment?—I did give evidence on the first occasion and on the second occasion. When I was first wanted I could not get there because I was not supœnaed on the first case.

11596. You are an engineer's assistant and live at 38, Granville Buildings?—Yes.

11597. Do you remember midnight, July 28th and 29th?—Yes.
